☞ THE PRINTER of this Work returns Thanks to his SUBSCRIBERS for their Patronage, which, however inadequate to the Expence attending it, ſuppoſing the Subſcriptions had been regularly or fully paid, involved him in Difficulties which the Relinquiſhment of Half the Work * only extricated him from.† With JOHNSON he can feelingly ſay, the better Part of it was executed amidſt "Want and Diſtraction, in Sickneſs and in Sorrow."

He gives it to the PUBLICK free of ſome Errours which appear in all the Editions hitherto printed, and numerous others in the laſt London Edition. At the ſame Time let it be underſtood, he lays no Claim to Perfection; for, with POPE he is of Opinion, that

> "Whoe'er expects a faultleſs Piece to ſee,
> "Thinks what ne'er was, nor is, nor e'er will be."

HE gratefully acknowledges the Obligations he is under to his learned and worthy Friends, whom he had Occaſion to conſult on doubtful Matters, and which often occurred during the Proſecution of this Work. Their Attention was conſtantly marked with Politeneſs; and what would have been deemed troubleſome by ſome, was chearfully acceded to, and at all Times inſtantly complied with; particularly, Mr. WHYTE of Grafton-Street, who, in adjuſting the PRONUNCIATION, took the Trouble through the Courſe of the Work of reviſing the Sheets in that Particular, previous to their being printed; ſo, in that difficult and important Article alſo, as far as the Nature of the Circumſtances will rationally admit, it may be preſumed unexceptionally correct.

* To his true and tried Friend, Mr. WILLIAM GILBERT of South Great George's-Street, and his proved Friend alſo, Mr. JEREMIAH SULLIVAN of Lower Ormond-Quay.

† Eight Hundred Subſcribers were ſtipulated for in the Propoſals publiſhed, as abſolutely neceſſary to defray the Expences attending this Work—a Sum not leſs than 2500l.—but, alas! to the Diſgrace of Literature in this Kingdom!! two hundred and ſeventy-ſix only graced the Subſcription Boards whilſt the Work was printing, as appears by the foregoing Liſt, and the thirty-nine marked thus * became Subſcribers when it was finiſhed.

AN
LIFE AND GENIUS
SAMUEL JOHNSON, LL.D.

WRITTEN BY ARTHUR MURPHY, ESQ.

WHEN the works of a great writer, who has bequeathed to poſterity a laſting legacy, are preſented to the world, it is naturally expected, that ſome account of his life ſhould accompany the edition. The reader wiſhes to know as much as poſſible of the author. The circumſtances that attended him, the features of his private character, his converſation, and the means by which he roſe to eminence, became the favourite objects of enquiry. Curioſity is excited; and the admirer of his works is eager to know his private opinions, his courſe of ſtudy, the particularities of his conduct, and above all, whether he purſued the wiſdom which he recommends, and practiſed the virtue which his writings inſpire. A principle of gratitude is awakened in every generous mind. For the entertainment and inſtruction which genius and diligence have provided for the world, men of refined and ſenſible tempers are ready to pay their tribute of praiſe, and even to form a poſthumous friendſhip with the author.

In reviewing the life of ſuch a writer, there is, beſides, a rule of juſtice to which the publick have an undoubted claim. Fond admiration and partial friendſhip ſhould not be ſuffered to repreſent his virtues with exaggeration; nor ſhould malignity be allowed, under a ſpecious diſguiſe, to magnify mere defects, the uſual failings of human nature, into vice or groſs deformity. The lights and ſhades of the character ſhould be given; and, if this be done with a ſtrict regard to truth, a juſt eſtimate of Dr. Johnſon will afford a leſſon perhaps as valuable as the moral doctrine that ſpeaks with energy in every page of his works.

The preſent writer enjoyed the converſation and friendſhip of that excellent man more than thirty years. He thought it an honour to be ſo connected, and to this hour he reflects on his loſs with regret: but regret, he knows, has ſecret bribes, by which the judgment may be influenced, and partial affection may be carried beyond the bounds of truth. In the preſent caſe, however, nothing needs to be diſguiſed, and exaggerated praiſe is unneceſſary. It is an obſervation of the younger Pliny, in his Epiſtle to his Friend of Tacitus, that hiſtory ought never to magnify matters of fact, becauſe worthy actions require nothing but the truth. Nam nec hiſtoria debet egredi veritatem, et honeſte factis veritas ſufficit. This rule the preſent biographer promiſes ſhall guide his pen throughout the following narrative.

It may be ſaid, the death of Dr. Johnſon kept the public mind in agitation beyond all former example. No literary character ever excited ſo much attention; and, when the preſs has teemed with anecdotes, apophthegms, eſſays, and publications of every kind, what occaſion now for a new tract on the ſame threadbare ſubject? The plain truth ſhall be the anſwer. The proprietors of Johnſon's Works thought the life, which they prefixed to their former edition, too unwieldy for republication. The prodigious variety of foreign matter, introduced into that performance, ſeemed to overload the memory of Dr. Johnſon, and in the account of his own life to leave him hardly viſible. They wiſhed to have a more conciſe, and, for that reaſon, perhaps a more ſatisfactory account, ſuch as may exhibit a juſt picture of the man, and keep him the principal figure in the fore-ground of his own picture. To comply with that requeſt is the deſign of this eſſay, which the writer undertakes with a trembling hand. He has no diſcoveries, no ſecret anecdotes, no occaſional controverſy, no ſudden flaſhes of wit and humour, no private converſation, and no new facts to embelliſh his work. Every thing has been gleaned. Dr. Johnſon ſaid of himſelf, "I am not uncandid, nor ſevere: I ſometimes ſay more than I mean, in jeſt, and people are apt to think me ſerious."* The exerciſe of that privilege, which is enjoyed by every man in ſociety, has not been allowed to him. His fame has given importance even to trifles, and the zeal of his friends has brought every thing to light. What ſhould be related, and what ſhould not, has been publiſhed without diſtinction. Dicenda tacenda locuti! Every thing that fell from him has been caught with eagerneſs by his admirers, who, as he ſays in one of his letters, have acted with the diligence of ſpies upon his conduct. To ſome of them the following lines, in Mallet's Poem on Verbal Criticiſm, are not inapplicable:

> "Such that grave bird in Northern ſeas is found,
> "Whoſe name a Dutchman only knows to ſound;
> "Where-e'er the king of fiſh moves on before,
> "This humble friend attends from ſhore to ſhore;
> "With eye ſtill earneſt, and with bill inclin'd,
> "He picks up what his patron drops behind,
> "With thoſe choice cates his palate to regale,
> "And is the careful TIBBALD of A WHALE."

After ſo many eſſays and volumes of Johnſoniana, what remains for the preſent writer? Perhaps, what has not been attempted; a ſhort, yet full, a faithful, yet temperate hiſtory of Dr. Johnſon.

SAMUEL JOHNSON was born at Lichfield, September 7, 1709, O. S.‡ His father, Michael Johnſon, was a bookſeller in that city; a man of large athletic make, and violent paſſions; wrong-headed, poſitive, and at times afflicted with a degree of melancholy, little ſhort of madneſs. His mother was ſiſter to Dr. Ford, a practiſing phyſician, and father of Cornelius Ford, generally known by the name of PARSON FORD, the ſame who is repreſented near the punch-bowl in Hogarth's Midnight Modern Converſation. In the life of Fenton, Johnſon ſays, that "his abilities, inſtead of furniſhing convivial merriment to the voluptuous and diſſolute, might have enabled him to excel among the virtuous and the wiſe." Being chaplain to the Earl of Cheſterfield, he wiſhed to attend that nobleman on his embaſſy to the Hague. Colley Cibber has recorded the anecdote. "You ſhould go, ſaid the witty peer, "if to your many vices you would add one more." "Pray, my Lord, what is that?" "Hypocriſy, my dear Doctor." Johnſon had a younger brother named Nathaniel, who died at the age of twenty-ſeven or twenty-eight.— Michael Johnſon, the father, was choſen in the year 1718 Under Bailiff of Lichfield, and in the year 1725 he ſerved the office of the Senior Bailiff. He had a brother of the name of Andrew, who, for ſome years, kept the ring at Smithfield, appropriated to wreſtlers and boxers. Our author uſed to ſay, that he was never thrown or conquered. Michael, the father, died December 1731, at the age of ſeventy-ſix; his mother at eighty-nine, of a gradual decay, in the year 1759. Of the family nothing more can be related worthy of notice. Johnſon did not delight in talking of his relations. "There is little pleaſure," he ſaid to Mrs. Piozzi, "in relating the anecdotes of beggary."

Johnſon derived from his parents, or from an unwholeſome nurſe, the diſtemper called the King's Evil. The Jacobites at that time believed in the efficacy of the royal touch; and accordingly Mrs. Johnſon preſented her ſon, when two years old, before Queen Anne, who, for the firſt time, performed that office, and communicated to her young patient all the healing virtues in her power. He was afterwards cut for that ſcrophulous humour, and the under part of his face was ſeamed and diſfigured by the operation. It is ſuppoſed, that this diſeaſe deprived him of the ſight of his left eye, and alſo impaired his hearing. At eight years old, he was placed under Mr. Hawkins, at the free-ſchool at Lichfield, where he was not remarkable for diligence or regular application. Whatever he read his tenacious memory made his own. In the fields with his ſchool-fellows he talked more to himſelf than with his companions. In 1725, when he was about ſixteen years old, he went on a viſit to his couſin Cornelius Ford, who detained him for ſome months, and in the mean time aſſiſted him in the claſſics. The general direction for his ſtudies, which he then received, he related to Mrs. Piozzi. "Obtain," ſays Ford, "ſome general principles of every ſcience: he who can talk only on one ſubject, or act only in one department, is ſeldom wanted, and, perhaps, never wiſhed for; while the man of general knowledge can often benefit, and always pleaſe." This advice Johnſon ſeems to have purſued with a good inclination. His reading was always deſultory, ſeldom reſting on any particular author, but rambling from one book to another, and, by haſty ſnatches, hoarding up a variety of knowledge. It may be proper in this place to mention another general rule laid down by Ford for Johnſon's future conduct: "You will make your way the more eaſy in the world, as you are contented to diſpute no man's claim to converſation-excellence: they will, therefore, more willingly allow your pretenſions as a writer." "But," ſays Mrs. Piozzi, "the features of peculiarity, which mark a character to all ſucceeding generations, are ſlow in coming to their growth." That ingenious lady adds, with her uſual vivacity, "Can one, on ſuch an occaſion, forbear recollecting the predictions of Boileau's father, who ſaid, ſtroking the head of the young ſatiriſt, 'this little man has too much wit, but he will never ſpeak ill of any one'?"

* Boſwell's Life of Johnſon, Vol. II. p. 465.

‡ This appears in a note to Johnſon's Diary, prefixed to the firſt of his prayers. After the alteration of the ſtile, he kept his birth-day on the 18th of September, and it is accordingly marked September 7-18th.

On Johnſon's return from Cornelius Ford, Mr. Hunter, then Maſter of the free-ſchool at Lichfield, refuſed to receive him again on that foundation. At this diſtance of time, what his reaſons were, it is in vain to enquire; but to refuſe aſſiſtance to a lad of promiſing genius muſt be pronounced harſh and illiberal. It did not, however, ſtop the progreſs of the young ſtudent's education. He was placed at another ſchool, at Stourbridge in Worceſterſhire, under the care of Mr. Wentworth. Having gone through the rudiments of claſſic literature, he returned to his father's houſe, and was probably intended for the trade of a bookſeller. He has been heard to ſay that he could bind a book. At the end of two years, being then about nineteen, he went to aſſiſt the ſtudies of a young gentleman, of the name of Corbet, to the Univerſity of Oxford; and on the 31ſt of October, 1728, both were entered of Pembroke College; Corbet as a gentleman-commoner, and Johnſon as a commoner. The college tutor, Mr. Jordan, was a man of no genius; and Johnſon, it ſeems, ſhewed an early contempt of mean abilities, in one or two inſtances behaving with inſolence to that gentleman. Of his general conduct at the univerſity there are no particulars that merit attention, except the tranſlation of Pope's Meſſiah, which was a college exerciſe impoſed upon him as a taſk by Mr. Jordan. Corbet left the univerſity in about two years, and Johnſon's ſalary ceaſed. He was, by conſequence, ſtraitened in his circumſtances; but he ſtill remained at college. Mr. Jordan, the tutor, went off to a living; and was ſucceeded by Dr. Adams, who afterwards became head of the college, and was eſteemed through life for his learning, his talents, and his amiable character. Johnſon grew more regular in his attendance. Ethics, theology, and claſſic literature, were his favourite ſtudies. He diſcovered, notwithſtanding, early ſymptoms of that wandering diſpoſition of mind which adhered to him to the end of his life. His reading was by fits and ſtarts, undirected to any particular ſcience. General philology, agreeably to his couſin Ford's advice, was the object of his ambition. He received at that time, an early impreſſion of piety, and a taſte for the beſt authors ancient and modern. It may, notwithſtanding, be queſtioned whether, except his bible, he ever read a book entirely through. Late in life, if any man praiſed a book in his preſence, he was ſure to aſk, "Did you read it through?" If the anſwer was in the affirmative, he did not ſeem willing to believe it. He continued at the univerſity till the want of pecuniary ſupplies obliged him to quit the place. He obtained, however, the aſſiſtance of a friend, and returning in a ſhort time was able to complete a reſidence of three years. The hiſtory of his exploits at Oxford, he uſed to ſay, was beſt known to Dr. Taylor and Dr. Adams. Wonders are told of his memory, and, indeed, all who knew him late in life can witneſs that he retained that faculty in the greateſt vigour.

From the univerſity Johnſon returned to Lichfield. His father died ſoon after, December 1731; and the whole receipt out of his effects, as appeared by a memorandum in the ſon's hand-writing, dated 15th June 1732, was no more than twenty pounds.* In this exigence, determined that poverty ſhould neither depreſs his ſpirit nor warp his integrity, he became under-maſter of a grammar-ſchool at Market Boſworth in Leiceſterſhire. That reſource, however, did not laſt long. Diſguſted by the pride of Sir Wolſtan Dixie, the patron of that little ſeminary, he left the place in diſcontent, and ever after ſpoke of it with abhorrence. In 1733 he went on a viſit to Mr. Hector, who had been his ſchool-fellow, and was then a ſurgeon at Birmingham, lodging at the houſe of Warren, a bookſeller. At that place Johnſon tranſlated a Voyage to Abyſſinia, written by Jerome Lobo, a Portugueze miſſionary. This was the firſt literary work from the pen of Dr. Johnſon His friend Hector was occaſionally his amanuenſis. The work was, probably, undertaken at the deſire of Warren, the bookſeller, and was printed at Birmingham; but it appears in the Literary Magazine, or Hiſtory of the Works of the Learned, for March 1735, that it was publiſhed by Betteſworth and Hitch, Pater-noſter-row. It contains a narrative of the endeavours of a company of miſſionaries to convert the people of Abyſſinia to the Church of Rome. In the preface of this work Johnſon obſerves, "that the Portugueſe traveller, contrary to the general view of his countrymen, has amuſed his readers with no romantic abſurdities, or incredible fictions. He appears, by his modeſt and unaffected narration, to have deſcribed things as he ſaw them; to have copied nature from the life; and to have conſulted his ſenſes, not his imagination. He meets with no baſiliſks, that deſtroy with their eyes; his crocodiles devour their prey without tears; and his cataracts fall from the rock without deafening the neighbouring inhabitants. The reader will here find no regions curſed with irremediable barrenneſs, or bleſſed with ſpontaneous fecundity; no perpetual gloom, or unceaſing ſun-ſhine; nor are the nations, here deſcribed, either void of all ſenſe of humanity, or conſummate in all private and ſocial virtues; here are no Hottentots without religion, polity, or articulate language; no Chineſe perfectly polite, and completely ſkilled in all ſciences: he will diſcover, what will always be diſcovered by a diligent and impartial enquirer, that wherever human nature is to be found, there is a mixture of vice and virtue, a conteſt of paſſion and reaſon; and that the Creator doth not appear partial in his diſtributions, but has balanced, in moſt countries, their particular conveniences by particular favours." We have here an early ſpecimen of Johnſon's manner: the vein of thinking and the frame of the ſentences are manifeſtly his: we ſee the infant Hercules. The tranſlation of Lobo's Narrative has been re-printed lately in a ſeparate volume, with ſome other tracts of Dr. Johnſon's, and therefore forms no part of his works; but a compendious account of ſo intereſting a work as Father Lobo's diſcovery of the head of the Nile, will not, it is imagined, be unacceptable to the reader.

Father Lobo, the Portugueſe Miſſionary, embarked in 1622, in the ſame fleet with the Count Vidigueira, who was appointed by the King of Portugal, Viceroy of the Indies. They arrived at Goa; and in January 1624, Father Lobo ſet out on the miſſion to Abyſſinia. Two of the Jeſuits, ſent on the ſame commiſſion, were murdered in their attempt to penetrate into that empire. Lobo had better ſucceſs; he ſurmounted all difficulties, and made his way into the heart of the country. Then follows a deſcription of Abyſſinia, formerly the largeſt empire of which we have an account in hiſtory. It extended from the Red Sea to the kingdom of Congo, and from Egypt to the Indian Sea, containing no leſs than forty provinces. At the time of Lobo's miſſion, it was not much larger than Spain, conſiſting then but of five kingdoms, of which part was entirely ſubject to the Emperor, and part paid him a tribute, as an acknowledgement. The provinces were inhabited by Moors, Pagans, Jews, and Chriſtians. The laſt was in

* The entry of this is remarkable for his early reſolution to preſerve through life a fair and upright character. 1732, Junii 15. Undecim aureos depoſui, quo die, quidquid ante matris funus (quod ſerum ſit precor) de paternis bonis ſperare licet, viginti ſcilicet libras, accepi. Uſque adeo mihi mea fortuna fingenda eſt interea, et ne paupertate vires animi langueſcant, ne in flagitia egeſtas adigat, cavendum."

Lobo's time the eſtabliſhed and reigning religion. The diverſity of people and religion is the reaſon why the kingdom was under different forms of government, with laws and cuſtoms extremely various. Some of the people neither ſowed their land, nor improved them by any kind of culture, living upon milk and fleſh, and like the Arabs, encamping without any ſettled habitation. In ſome places they practiſed no rites of worſhip, though they believed that, in the regions above, there dwells a Being that governs the world. This Deity they call in their language Oul. The Chriſtianity, profeſſed by the people in ſome parts, is ſo corrupted with ſuperſtitions, errors, and hereſies, and ſo mingled with ceremonies borrowed from the Jews, that little, beſides the name of Chriſtianity, is to be found among them. The Abyſſins cannot properly be ſaid to have either cities or houſes; they live in tents or cottages made of ſtraw or clay, very rarely building with ſtone. Their villages or towns conſiſt of theſe huts; yet even of ſuch villages they have but few, becauſe the grandees, the viceroys, and the emperor himſelf, are always in camp, that they may be prepared, upon the moſt ſudden alarm, to meet every emergence in a country which is engaged every year either in foreign wars, or inteſtine commotions. Ethiopia produces very near the ſame kinds of proviſion as Portugal, though, by the extreme lazineſs of the inhabitants, in a much leſs quantity. What the ancients imagined of the torrid zone being a part of the world uninhabitable, is ſo far from being true, that the climate is very temperate. The blacks have better features than in other countries, and are not without wit and ingenuity. Their apprehenſion is quick, and their judgment ſound. There are in this climate two harveſts in the year; one in winter, which laſts through the months of July, Auguſt, and September; the other in the ſpring. They have, in the greateſt plenty, raiſins, peaches, pomegranates, ſugar-canes, and ſome figs. Moſt of theſe are ripe about Lent, which the Abyſſins keep with great ſtrictneſs. The animals of the country are the lion, the elephant, the rhinoceros, the unicorn, horſes, mules, oxen, and cows without number. They have a very particular cuſtom, which obliges every man, that has a thouſand cows, to ſave every year one day's milk of all his herd, and make a bath with it for his relations. This they do ſo many days in each year, as they have thouſands of cattle; ſo that, to expreſs how rich a man is, they tell you, he bathes ſo many times.

"Of the river Nile which has furniſhed ſo much controverſy, we have a full and clear deſcription. It is called by the natives, ABAVI, the Father of Water. It riſes in SACALA, a province of the kingdom of GOIAMA, the moſt fertile and agreeable part of the Abyſſinian dominions. On the Eaſtern ſide of the country, on the declivity of a mountain, whoſe deſcent is ſo eaſy, that it ſeems a beautiful plain, is that ſource of the Nile, which has been ſought after at ſo much expence and labour. This ſpring, or rather theſe two ſprings, are two holes, each about two feet diameter, a ſtone's caſt diſtant from each other. One of them is about five feet and a half in depth. Lobo was not able to ſink his plummet lower, perhaps, becauſe it was ſtopped by roots, the whole place being full of trees. A line of ten feet did not reach the bottom of the other. Theſe ſprings are ſuppoſed by the Abyſſins to be the vents of a great ſubterraneous lake. At a ſmall diſtance to the South, is a village called Guix, through which you aſcend to the top of the mountain, where there is a little hill, which the idolatrous Agaci hold in great veneration. Their prieſt calls them together to this place once a year; and every one ſacrifices a cow, or more, according to the different degrees of wealth and devotion. Hence we have ſufficient proof, that theſe nations always paid adoration to the Deity of this famous river.

"As the courſe of the Nile, its waters, after their firſt riſe, run towards the Eaſt, about the length of a muſket-ſhot; then, turning Northward, continue hidden in the graſs and weeds for about a quarter of a league, when they appear amongſt a quantity of rocks. The Nile from its ſource proceeds with ſo inconſiderable a current, that it is in danger of being dried up by the hot ſeaſon; but ſoon receiving an increaſe from the GEMMA, the KELTU, the BRANSA, and the other ſmaller rivers, it expands to ſuch a breadth in the plains of BOAD, which is not above three days journey from its ſource, that a muſket-ball will ſcarce fly from one bank to the other. Here it begins to run northward, winding, however, a little to the eaſt, for the ſpace of nine or ten leagues, and then enters the ſo-much-talked-of Lake of DAMBIA, flowing with ſuch violent rapidity, that its waters may be diſtinguiſhed through the whole paſſage, which is no leſs than ſix leagues. Here begins the greatneſs of the Nile. Fifteen miles further, in the land of ALATA, it ruſhes precipitately from the top of a high rock, and forms one of the moſt beautiful water-falls in the world. Lobo ſays, he paſſed under it without being wet, and reſting himſelf, for the ſake of the coolneſs, was charmed with a thouſand delightful rainbows, which the ſun-beams painted on the water, in all their ſhining and lively colours.* The fall of this mighty ſtream, from ſo great a height, makes a noiſe that may be heard a conſiderable diſtance; but it was not found, that the neighbouring inhabitants were deaf. After the cataract, the Nile collects its ſcattered ſtream among the rocks, which are ſo near each other, that, in Lobo's time, a bridge of beams, on which the whole imperial army paſſed, was laid over them. Sultan SEQUID has ſince built a ſtone bridge of one arch, in the ſame place, for which purpoſe he procured maſons from India. Here the river alters its courſe, and paſſes through various kingdoms, ſuch as AMHARA, OLACA, CHOAA, DAMOT, and the kingdom of GOIAMA, and, after various windings, returns within a ſhort day's journey of its ſpring. To purſue it through all its mazes, and accompany it round the kingdom of GOIAMA, is a journey of twenty-nine days. From Abyſſinia the river paſſes into the countries of FAZULO and OMBARCA, two vaſt regions little known, inhabited by nations entirely different from the Abyſſins. Their hair, like that of the other blacks in thoſe regions, is ſhort and curled. In the year 1615, RASSELA CHRISTOS, Lieutenant-general to the Sultan SEQUID, entered thoſe kingdoms in a hoſtile manner; but, not being able to get intelligence, returned without attempting any thing. As the empire of Abyſſinia terminates at theſe deſcents, Lobo followed the courſe of the Nile no farther, leaving it to range over barbarous kingdoms, and convey wealth and plenty into Ægypt, which owes to the annual inundations of this river its envied fertility.† Lobo knows nothing of the Nile in the reſt of its paſſage, except that it receives great increaſe from many other rivers, has ſeveral cataracts like that already deſcribed; and that few fiſh are to be found in it. That ſcarcity is to be attributed to the river-horſe and the crocodile, which deſtroy the weaker inhabitants of the river. Something, likewiſe, muſt be imputed to the cataracts, where fiſh cannot fall without being killed. Lobo adds, that neither he, nor any with whom he converſed about the crocodile, ever ſaw him weep; and therefore all that hath been ſaid about his tears muſt be ranked among the fables invented for the amuſement of children.

"As to the cauſes of the inundations of the Nile, Lobo obſerves, that many an idle hypotheſis has been framed. Some Theoriſts aſcribe it to the high winds, that ſtop the current, and force the water above its banks. Others pretend a ſubterraneous communication between the Ocean and the Nile, and that the ſea, when violently agitated, ſwells the river. Many are of opinion, that this mighty flood proceeds from the melting of the ſnow on the mountains of Æthiopia; but ſo much ſnow and ſuch prodigious heat are never met with in the ſame region. Lobo never ſaw ſnow in Abyſſinia, except on Mount SEMEN in the kingdom of TIGRE, very remote from the Nile; and on NAMARA, which is, indeed, not far diſtant, but where there never falls ſnow enough to wet, when diſſolved, the foot of the mountain. To the immenſe labours of the Portugueſe, mankind is indebted for the knowledge of the real cauſe of theſe inundations, ſo great and ſo regular. By them we are informed, that Abyſſinia, where the Nile riſes, is full of mountains, and, in its natural ſituation, is much higher than Ægypt; that in the winter, from June to September, no day is without rain: that the Nile receives, in its courſe, all the rivers, brooks, and torrents, that fall from thoſe mountains, and, by neceſſary conſequence, ſwelling above its banks, fills the plains of Ægypt with inundations, which come regularly about the month of July, or three weeks after the beginning of the rainy ſeaſon in Æthiopia. The different degrees of this flood are ſuch certain indications of the fruitfulneſs or ſterility of the enſuing year, that it is publicly proclaimed at Cairo how much the water hath gained during the night."

* This Mr. Bruce, the late traveller, avers to be a downright falſehood. He ſays, a deep pool of water reaches to the very foot of the rock; and, allowing that there was a ſeat or bench (which there is not) in the middle of the pool, it is abſolutely impoſſible, by any exertion of human ſtrength, to have arrived at it. But it may be aſked, can Mr. Bruce ſay what was the face of the country in the year 1622, when Lobo ſaw the magnificent ſight, which he has deſcribed? Mr. Bruce's pool of water may have been formed ſince; and Lobo, perhaps, was content to ſit down without a bench.

Such is the account of the Nile and its inundations, which, it is hoped, will not be deemed an improper or tedious digreſſion, eſpecially as the whole is an extract from Johnſon's tranſlation. He is all the time the actor in the ſcene, and in his own words relates the ſtory. Having finiſhed this work, he returned in February 1734, to his native city, and, in the month of Auguſt following, publiſhed Propoſals for printing by ſubſcription, the Latin poems of Politian, with the Hiſtory of Latin Poetry, from the Æra of Petrarch to the time of Politian; and alſo the Life of Politian, to be added by the Editor, Samuel Johnſon. The book to be printed in thirty octavo ſheets, the price five ſhillings. It is to be regretted that this project failed for want of encouragement. Johnſon, it ſeems, differed from Boileau, Voltaire, and D'Alembert, who have taken upon them to proſcribe all modern efforts to write with elegance in a dead language. For a deciſion, pronounced in ſo high a tone, no good reaſon can be aſſigned. The intereſts of learning require, that the diction of Greece and Rome ſhould be cultivated with care; and he who can write a language with correctneſs, will be moſt likely to underſtand its idiom, its grammar, and its peculiar graces of ſtyle. What man of taſte would willingly forego the pleaſure of reading Vida, Fracaſtorius, Sannazaro, Strada, and others, down to the late elegant productions of Biſhop Lowth? The hiſtory which Johnſon propoſed to himſelf would, beyond all queſtion, have been a valuable addition to the hiſtory of letters; but his project failed. His next expedient was to offer his aſſiſtance to Cave, the original projector of the Gentleman's Magazine. For this purpoſe he ſent his propoſals in a letter, offering, on reaſonable terms, occaſionally to fill ſome pages with poems and inſcriptions never printed before; with fugitive pieces that deſerved to be revived, and critical remarks on authors ancient and modern. Cave agreed to retain him as a correſpondent and contributor to the Magazine. What the conditions were cannot now be known; but, certainly, they were not ſufficient to hinder Johnſon from caſting his eyes about him in queſt of other employment. Accordingly, in 1735, he made overtures to the reverend Mr. Budworth, Maſter of a grammar-ſchool at Brerewood, in Staffordſhire, to become his aſſiſtant. This propoſition did not ſucceed. Mr. Budworth apprehended, that the involuntary motions, to which Johnſon's nerves were ſubject, might make him an object of ridicule with his ſcholars, and, by conſequence, leſſen their reſpect for their maſter. Another mode of advancing himſelf preſented itſelf about this time. Mrs. Porter, the widow of a mercer in Birmingham, admired his talents. It is ſaid that ſhe had about eight hundred pounds; and that ſum to a perſon in Johnſon's circumſtances was an affluent fortune. A marriage took place; and, to turn his wife's money to the beſt advantage, he projected the ſcheme of an academy for education. Gilbert Walmſley, at that time Regiſter of the Eccleſiaſtical Court of the Biſhop of Lichfield, was diſtinguiſhed by his erudition and the politeneſs of his manners. He was the friend of Johnſon, and, by his weight and influence, endeavoured to promote his intereſt. The celebrated Garrick, whoſe father, Captain Garrick, lived at Lichfield, was placed in the new ſeminary of education by that gentleman's advice. Garrick was then about eighteen years old. An acceſſion of ſeven or eight pupils was the moſt that could be obtained, though notice was given by a public advertiſement,* that at Edial, near Lichfield, in Staffordſhire, young Gentlemen are boarded and taught the Latin and Greek Languages, by Samuel Johnſon.

The undertaking proved abortive. Johnſon, having now abandoned all hopes of promoting his fortune in the country, determined to become an adventurer in the world at large. His young pupil, Garrick, had formed the ſame reſolution; and, accordingly, in March 1737, they arrived in London together. Two ſuch candidates for fame perhaps never, before that day, entered the metropolis together. Their ſtock of money was ſoon exhauſted. In his viſionary project of an academy Johnſon had probably waſted his wife's ſubſtance; and Garrick's father had little more than his half-pay. The two fellow travellers had the world before them, and each was to chuſe his road to fortune and to fame. They brought with them genius, and powers of mind, peculiarly formed by nature for the different vocations to which each of them felt themſelves inclined. They acted from the impulſe of young minds, even then meditating great things, and with courage anticipating ſucceſs. Their friend Mr. Walmſley, by a letter to the Rev. Mr Colſon, who, it ſeems, was a great mathematician, exerted his good offices in their favour. He gave notice of their intended journey. "Davy Garrick," he ſaid, "will be with you next week; and Johnſon, to try his fate with a tragedy, and to get himſelf employed in ſome tranſlation either from the Latin or French. Johnſon is a very good ſcholar and a poet, and, I have great hopes, will turn out a fine tragedy-writer. If it ſhould be in your way, I doubt not but you will be ready to recommend and aſſiſt your countrymen." Of Mr. Walmſley's merit, and the excellence of his character, Johnſon has left a beautiful teſtimonial at the end of the life of Edward Smith. It is reaſonable to conclude, that a mathematician, abſorbed in abſtract ſpeculations, was not able to find a ſphere of action for two men who were to be the architects of their own fortune. In three or four years afterwards Garrick came forth with talents that aſtoniſhed the publick. He began his career at Goodman's-fields, and there, monſtratus fatis Veſpaſianus! he choſe a lucrative profeſſion, and conſequently ſoon emerged from all his difficulties. Johnſon was left to toil in the humble walks of literature. A tragedy, as appears by Walmſley's letter, was the whole of his ſtock. This, moſt probably, was IRENE; but, if then finiſhed, it was doomed to wait for a more happy period. It was offered to Fleetwood, and rejected. Johnſon looked round him for employment. Having, while he remained in the country, correſponded with Cave under a feigned name, he now thought it time to make himſelf known to a man whom he conſidered as a patron of literature. Cave had announced, by public advertiſement, a prize of fifty pounds for the beſt Poem on Life, Death, Judgment, Heaven, and Hell; and this circumſtance diffuſed an idea of his liberality. Johnſon became connected with him in buſineſs, and in a cloſe and intimate acquaintance. Of Cave's character it is unneceſſary to ſay any thing in this place, as Johnſon was afterwards the biographer of his firſt and moſt uſeful patron. To be engaged in the tranſlation of ſome important book was ſtill the object which Johnſon had in view. For this purpoſe he propoſed to give the Hiſtory of the Council of Trent, with copious notes then lately added to a French edition. Twelve ſheets of this work were printed, for which Johnſon received forty-nine pounds, as appears by his receipt in the poſſeſſion of Mr. Nichols, the compiler of that entertaining and uſeful work, the Gentleman's Magazine. Johnſon's tranſlation was never completed; a like deſign was offered to the publick, under the patronage of Dr. Zachary Pearce; and by that contention both attempts were fruſtrated. Johnſon had been commended by Pope for the tranſlation of the Meſſiah into Latin verſe; but he knew no reproach to ſo eminent a man. With one, however, who was connected with Pope, he became acquainted at St. John's Gate; and that perſon was no other than the well-known Richard Savage, whoſe life was afterwards written by Johnſon with great elegance, and depth of moral reflection. Savage was a man of conſiderable talents. His addreſs, his various accompliſhments, and, above all, the peculiarity of his misfortunes recommended him to Johnſon's notice. They became united in the cloſeſt intimacy. Both had great parts, and they were equally under the preſſure of want. Sympathy joined them in a league of friendſhip. Johnſon has been often heard to relate, that he and Savage walked round Groſvenor-ſquare till four in the morning; in the courſe of their converſation reforming the world, dethroning princes, eſtabliſhing new forms of government, and giving laws to the ſeveral ſtates of Europe, till, fatigued at length with their legiſlative office, they began to feel the want of refreſhment; but could not muſter up more than four pence halfpenny. Savage, it is true, had many vices; but vice could never ſtrike its roots in a mind like Johnſon's, ſeaſoned early with religion, and the principles of moral rectitude. His firſt prayer was compoſed in the year 1738. He had not at that time renounced the uſe of wine; and, no doubt, occaſionally enjoyed his friend and his bottle. The love of late hours, which followed him through life, was, perhaps, originally contracted in company with Savage. However that may be, their connection was not of long duration. In the year 1738, Savage was reduced to the laſt diſtreſs. Mr. Pope, in a letter to him, expreſſed his concern for "the miſerable withdrawing of his penſion after the death of the Queen;" and gave him hopes that, "in a ſhort time, he ſhould find himſelf ſupplied with a competence, without any dependance on thoſe little creatures, whom we are pleaſed to call the Great." The ſcheme propoſed to him was, that he ſhould retire to Swanſea in Wales, and receive an allowance of fifty pounds a year, to be raiſed by ſubſcription; Pope was to pay twenty pounds. This plan, though finally eſtabliſhed, took more than a year before it was carried into execution. In the mean time, the intended retreat of Savage called to Johnſon's mind the third ſatire of Juvenal, in which that poet takes leave of a friend, who was withdrawing himſelf from all the vices of Rome. Struck with this idea, he wrote that well-known Poem, called London. The firſt lines manifeſtly point to Savage.

Johnſon at that time lodged at Greenwich. He there fixes the ſcene, and takes leave of his friend; who, he ſays in his Life, parted from him with tears in his eyes. The poem, when finiſhed, was offered to Cave. It happened, however, that the late Mr. Dodſley was the purchaſer at the price of ten guineas. It was publiſhed in 1738; and Pope, we are told, ſaid, "The author, whoever he is, will not be long concealed;" alluding to the paſſage in Terence, Ubi, ubi eſt, diu celari non poteſt. Notwithſtanding that prediction, it does not appear that, beſides the copy-money, any advantage accrued to the author of a poem, written with the elegance and energy of Pope. Johnſon, in Auguſt 1738, went, with all the fame of his poetry, to offer himſelf a candidate for the maſterſhip of the ſchool at Appleby, in Leiceſterſhire. The ſtatutes of the place required, that the perſon choſen ſhould be a maſter of arts. To remove this objection, the late Lord Gower was induced to write to a friend, in order to obtain for Johnſon a maſter's degree in the Univerſity of Dublin, by the recommendation of Dr. Swift. The letter was printed in one of the magazines, and is as follows:

"Sir,

"Mr. Samuel Johnſon (author of London, a ſatire, and ſome other poetical pieces) is a native of this country, and much reſpected by ſome worthy gentlemen in the neighbourhood, who are truſtees of a charity-ſchool, now vacant; the certain ſalary of which is ſixty pounds per year, of which they are deſirous to make him maſter; but unfortunately he is not capable of receiving their bounty, which would make him happy for life, by not being a maſter of arts, which, by the ſtatutes of the ſchool, the maſter of it muſt be.

"Now theſe gentlemen do me the honour to think, that I have intereſt enough in you, to prevail upon you to write to Dean Swift, to perſuade the Univerſity of Dublin to ſend a diploma to me, conſtituting this poor man maſter of arts in their Univerſity. They highly extol the man's learning and probity; and will not be perſuaded, that the Univerſity will make any difficulty of conferring ſuch a favour upon a ſtranger, if he is recommended by the Dean. They ſay, he is not afraid of the ſtricteſt examination, though he is of ſo long a journey; and yet he will venture it, if the Dean thinks it neceſſary, chuſing rather to die upon the road, than to be ſtarved to death in tranſlating for bookſellers, which has been his only ſubſiſtence for ſome time paſt.

"I fear there is more difficulty in this affair than theſe good-natured gentlemen apprehend, eſpecially as their election cannot be delayed longer than the 11th of next month. If you ſee this matter in the ſame light that it appears to me, I hope you will burn this, and pardon me for giving you ſo much trouble about an impracticable thing; but, if you think there is a probability of obtaining the favour aſked, I am ſure your humanity and propenſity to relieve merit in diſtreſs will incline you to ſerve the poor man, without my adding any more to the trouble I have already given you, than aſſuring you, that I am, with great truth, Sir,

"Your faithful humble ſervant, "GOWER.

"Trentham, Aug. 1ſt."

This ſcheme miſcarried. There is reaſon to think, that Swift declined to meddle in the buſineſs; and to that circumſtance Johnſon's known diſlike of Swift has been often imputed.

It is mortifying to purſue a man of merit through all his difficulties; and yet this narrative muſt be, through many following years, the hiſtory of Genius and Virtue ſtruggling with Adverſity. Having loſt the ſchool at Appleby, Johnſon was thrown back on the metropolis. Bred to no profeſſion, without relations, friends, or intereſt, he was condemned to drudgery in the ſervice of Cave, his only patron. In November 1738, was publiſhed a tranſlation of Crouſaz's Examen of Pope's Eſſay on Man; "containing a ſuccinct View of the Syſtem of the Fataliſts, and a Confutation of their Opinions; with an illuſtration of the Doctrine of Free Will; and an Enquiry, what view Mr. Pope might have in touching upon the Leibnitzian Philoſophy, and Fataliſm. By Mr. Crouſaz, Profeſſor of Philoſophy and Mathematicks at Lauſanne." This tranſlation has been generally thought a production of Johnſon's pen; but it is now known, that Mrs. Elizabeth Carter has acknowledged it to be one of her early performances. It is certain, however, that Johnſon was eager to promote the publication. He conſidered the foreign philoſopher as a man zealous in the cauſe of religion; and with him he was willing to join againſt the ſyſtem of the Fataliſts, and the doctrine of Leibnitz. It is well known that Warburton wrote a vindication of Mr. Pope; but there is reaſon to think, that Johnſon conceived an early prejudice againſt the Eſſay on Man; and what once took root in a mind like his, was not eaſily eradicated. His letter to Cave on this ſubject is ſtill extant, and may well juſtify Sir John Hawkins, who inferred that Johnſon was the tranſlator of Crouſaz. The concluſion of the letter is remarkable. "I am yours, IMPRANSUS." If by that Latin word was meant that he had not dined, becauſe he wanted the means, who can read it, even at this hour, without an aching heart?

With a mind naturally vigorous, and quickened by neceſſity, Johnſon formed a multiplicity of projects; but moſt of them proved abortive. A number of ſmall tracts iſſued from his pen with wonderful rapidity; ſuch as "MARMOR NORFOLCIENSE: or an Eſſay on an ancient prophetical Inſcription, in Monkiſh Rhyme, diſcovered at Lynn in Norfolk. By Probus Britannicus." This was a pamphlet againſt Sir Robert Walpole. According to Sir John Hawkins, a warrant was iſſued to apprehend the Author, who retired with his wife to an obſcure lodging near Lambeth Marſh, and there eluded the ſearch of the meſſengers. But this ſtory has no foundation in truth. Johnſon was never known to mention ſuch an incident in his life; and Mr. Steele (late of the treaſury) cauſed diligent ſearch to be made at the proper offices, and no trace of ſuch a proceeding could be found. In the ſame year (1739) the Lord Chamberlain prohibited the repreſentation of a tragedy, called GUSTAVUS VASA, by Henry Brooke. Under the maſk of irony Johnſon publiſhed, "A Vindication of the Licencer from the malicious and ſcandalous aſperſions of Mr. Brooke." Of theſe two pieces Sir John Hawkins ſays, "they have neither learning nor wit; nor a ſingle ray of that genius which has ſince blazed forth;" but as they have been lately re-printed, the reader, who wiſhes to gratify his curioſity, is referred to the fourteenth volume of Johnſon's works, publiſhed by Stockdale. The lives of Boerhaave, Blake, Barratier, Father Paul, and others, were, about that time, printed in the Gentleman's Magazine. The ſubſcription of fifty pounds a year for Savage was completed; and in July 1739, Johnſon parted with the companion of his midnight-hours, never to ſee him more. The ſeparation was, perhaps, an advantage to him, who wanted to make a right uſe of his time, and even then beheld, with ſelf-reproach, the waſte occaſioned by diſſipation. His abſtinence from wine and ſtrong liquors began ſoon after the departure of Savage. What habits he contracted in the courſe of that acquaintance cannot now be known. The ambition of excelling in converſation, and that pride of victory, which, at times, diſgraced a man of Johnſon's genius, were, perhaps, native blemiſhes. A fierce ſpirit of independence, even in the midſt of poverty, may be ſeen in Savage; and, if not thence transfuſed by Johnſon into his own manners, it may, at leaſt, be ſuppoſed to have gained ſtrength from the example before him. During that connection there was, if we believe Sir John Hawkins, a ſhort ſeparation between our author and his wife; but a reconciliation ſoon took place. Johnſon loved her, and ſhewed his affection in various modes of gallantry, which Garrick uſed to render ridiculous by his mimicry. The affectation of ſoft and faſhionable airs did not become an unwieldy figure: his admiration was received by the wife with the flutter of an antiquated coquette; and both, it is well known, furniſhed matter for the lively genius of Garrick.

It is a mortifying reflection, that Johnſon, with a ſtore of learning and extraordinary talents, was not able, at the age of thirty, to force his way to the favour of the publick. Slow riſes worth by poverty depreſs'd. "He was ſtill," as he ſays himſelf, "to provide for the day that was paſſing over him." He ſaw Cave involved in a ſtate of warfare with the numerous competitors, at that time ſtruggling with the Gentleman's Magazine; and gratitude for ſuch ſupplies as Johnſon received, dictated a Latin Ode on the ſubject of that contention. The firſt lines,

"Urbane, nullis feſſe laboribus,
"Urbane, nullis victe calumniis," put one in mind of Caſimir's Ode to Pope Urban:

"Urbane, regum maxime, maxime
"Urbane vatum."—

The Poliſh poet was, probably, at that time in the hands of a man who had meditated the hiſtory of the Latin poets. Guthrie the hiſtorian, had from July 1736 compoſed the parliamentary ſpeeches for the Magazines; but, from the beginning of the ſeſſion which opened on the 19th of November 1740, Johnſon ſucceeded to that department, and continued it from that time to the debate on ſpirituous liquors, which happened in the Houſe of Lords in February, 1742-3. The eloquence, the force of argument, and the ſplendor of language, diſplayed in the ſeveral ſpeeches, are well known, and univerſally admired. The whole has been collected in two volumes by Mr. Stockdale. That Johnſon was the author of the debates during that period was not generally known; but the ſecret tranſpired ſeveral years afterwards, and was avowed by himſelf on the following occaſion. Mr. Wedderburne (now Lord Loughborough) Dr. Johnſon, Dr. Francis (the tranſlator of Horace) the preſent writer, and others, dined with the late Mr. Foote. An important debate towards the end of Sir Robert Walpole's adminiſtration being mentioned, Dr. Francis obſerved, "That Mr. Pitt's ſpeech, on that occaſion, was the beſt he had ever read." He added, "That he had employed eight years of his life in the ſtudy of Demoſthenes, and finiſhed a tranſlation of that celebrated orator, with all the decorations of ſtyle and language within the reach of his capacity; but he had met with nothing equal to the ſpeech above-mentioned." Many of the company remembered the debate; and ſome paſſages were cited, with the approbation and applauſe of all preſent. During the ardour of converſation Johnſon remained ſilent. As ſoon as the warmth of praiſe ſubſided, he opened with theſe words. "That ſpeech I wrote in a garret in Exeter-ſtreet." The company was ſtruck with aſtoniſhment. After ſtaring at each other in ſilent amaze, Dr. Francis aſked, "How that ſpeech could be written by him?" "Sir," ſaid Johnſon, "I wrote it in Exeter-ſtreet. I never had been in the gallery of the Houſe of Commons but once. Cave had intereſt with the door-keepers. He, and the perſons employed under him, gained admittance: they brought away the ſubject of diſcuſſion, the names of the ſpeakers, the ſide they took, and the order in which they roſe, together with notes of the arguments advanced in the courſe of the debate. The whole was afterwards communicated to me, and I compoſed the ſpeeches in the form which they now have in the Parliamentary debates." To this diſcovery Dr. Francis made anſwer: "Then, Sir, you have exceeded Demoſthenes himſelf; for to ſay, that you have exceeded Francis's Demoſthenes, would be ſaying nothing." The reſt of the company beſtowed laviſh encomiums on Johnſon: one, in particular, praiſed his impartiality; obſerving, that he dealt out reaſon and eloquence with an equal hand to both parties. "That is not quite true," ſaid Johnſon, "I ſaved appearances tolerably well; but I took care that the WHIG DOGS ſhould not have the beſt of it." The ſale of the Magazine was greatly increaſed by the Parliamentary debates, which were continued by Johnſon till the month of March 1742-3. From that time the Magazine was conducted by Dr. Hawkeſworth.

In 1743-4, Oſborne, the bookſeller, who kept a ſhop in Gray's-Inn, purchaſed the Earl of Oxford's library, at the price of thirteen thouſand pounds. He projected a catalogue in five octavo volumes, at five ſhillings each. Johnſon was employed in that painful drudgery. He was likewiſe to collect all ſuch ſmall tracts, as were in any degree worth preſerving, in order to reprint and publiſh the whole in a collection, called "The Harleian Miſcellany." The catalogue was completed; and the Miſcellany in 1749 was publiſhed in eight quarto volumes. In this buſineſs Johnſon was a day-labourer for immediate ſubſiſtence, not unlike Guſtavus Vaſa working in the mines of Dalicarlia. What Wilcox, a bookſeller of eminence in the Strand, ſaid to Johnſon, on his firſt arrival in town, was now almoſt confirmed. He lent our author five guineas, and then aſked him, "How do you mean to earn your livelihood in this town?" "By my literary labours," was the anſwer. Wilcox, ſtaring at him, ſhook his head: "By your literary labours!—You had better buy a porter's knot." Johnſon uſed to tell this anecdote to Mr. Nichols; but he ſaid, "Wilcox was one of my beſt friends, and he meant well." In fact, Johnſon, while employed in Gray's-Inn, may be ſaid to have carried a porter's knot. He pauſed occaſionally, to peruſe the book that came to his hand. Oſborne thought that ſuch curioſity tended to nothing but delay, and objected to it with all the pride and inſolence of a man, who knew that he paid daily wages. In the diſpute that of courſe enſued, Oſborne, with that roughneſs which was natural to him, enforced his argument by giving the lie. Johnſon ſeized a folio, and knocked the bookſeller down. This ſtory has been related as an inſtance of Johnſon's ferocity; but merit cannot always take the ſpurns of the unworthy with a patient ſpirit.

That the hiſtory of an author muſt be found in his works is, in general, a true obſervation; and was never more apparent than in the preſent narrative. Every æra of Johnſon's life is fixed by his writings. In 1744, he publiſhed the Life of Savage; and then projected a new edition of Shakeſpeare. As a prelude to this deſign, he publiſhed, in 1745, Miſcellaneous Obſervations on the Tragedy of Macbeth, with Remarks on Sir Thomas Hanmer's Edition; to which were prefixed, Propoſals for a new Edition of Shakeſpeare, with a Specimen. Of this pamphlet Warburton, in the Preface to Shakeſpeare, has given his opinion: "As to all thoſe things, which have been publiſhed under the title of Eſſays, Remarks, Obſervations, &c. on Shakeſpeare, if you except ſome critical notes on Macbeth, given as a ſpecimen of a projected edition, and written, as appears, by a man of parts and genius, the reſt are abſolutely below a ſerious notice." But the attention of the publick was not excited; there was no friend to promote a ſubſcription; and the project died, to revive at a future day. A new undertaking, however, was ſoon after propoſed; namely, an Engliſh Dictionary, upon an enlarged plan. Several of the moſt opulent bookſellers had meditated a work of this kind; and the agreement was ſoon adjuſted between the parties. Emboldened by this connection, Johnſon thought of a better habitation than he had hitherto known. He had lodged with his wife in courts and alleys about the Strand; but now, for the purpoſe of carrying on his arduous undertaking, and to be near his printer and friend Mr. Strahan, he ventured to take a houſe in Gough-ſquare, Fleet-ſtreet. He was told that the Earl of Cheſterfield was a friend to his undertaking; and, in conſequence of that intelligence, he publiſhed, in 1747, The Plan of a Dictionary of the Engliſh Language, addreſſed to the Right Honourable Philip Dormer, Earl of Cheſterfield, one of his Majeſty's principal Secretaries of State. Mr. Whitehead, afterwards Poet Laureat, undertook to convey the manuſcript to his Lordſhip: the conſequence was an invitation from Lord Cheſterfield to the author. A ſtronger contraſt of characters could not be brought together; the Nobleman, celebrated for his wit, and all the graces of polite behaviour; the Author, conſcious of his own merit, towering in idea above all competition, verſed in ſcholaſtic logic, but a ſtranger to the arts of polite converſation, uncouth, vehement, and vociferous. The coalition was too unnatural. Johnſon expected a Mæcenas, and was diſappointed. No patronage, no aſſiſtance followed. Viſits were repeated; but the reception was not cordial. Johnſon one day was left a full hour, waiting in an anti-chamber, till a gentleman ſhould retire, and leave his Lordſhip at leiſure. This was the famous Colley Cibber. Johnſon ſaw him go, and, fired with indignation, ruſhed out of the houſe. What Lord Cheſterfield thought of his viſitor may be ſeen in a paſſage in one of that Nobleman's letters to his ſon.* "There is a man, whoſe moral character, deep learning, and ſuperior parts, I acknowledge, admire, and reſpect; but whom it is ſo impoſſible for me to love, that I am almoſt in a fever whenever I am in his company. His figure (without being deformed) ſeems made to diſgrace or ridicule the common ſtructure of the human body. His legs and arms are never in the poſition which, according to the ſituation of his body, they ought to be in, but conſtantly employed in committing acts of hoſtility upon the Graces. He throws any where, but down his throat, whatever he means to drink; and mangles what he means to carve. Inattentive to all the regards of ſocial life, he miſtimes and miſplaces every thing. He diſputes with heat indiſcriminately, mindleſs of the rank, character, and ſituation of thoſe with whom he diſputes. Abſolutely ignorant of the ſeveral gradations of familiarity and reſpect, he is exactly the ſame to his ſuperiors, his equals, and his inferiors; and therefore, by a neceſſary conſequence, is abſurd to two of the three. Is it poſſible to love ſuch a man? No. The utmoſt I can do for him is, to conſider him a reſpectable Hottentot." Such was the idea entertained by Lord Cheſterfield. After the incident of Colley Cibber, Johnſon never repeated his viſits. In his high and deciſive tone, he has been often heard to ſay, "Lord Cheſterfield is a wit among Lords, and a Lord among Wits."

In the courſe of the year 1747, Garrick, in conjunction with Lacy, became patentee of Drury-lane Playhouſe. For the opening of the theatre, at the uſual time, Johnſon wrote for his friend the well known prologue, which, to ſay no more of it, may at leaſt be placed on a level with Pope's to the tragedy of Cato. The play-houſe being now under Garrick's direction, Johnſon thought the opportunity fair to think of his tragedy of Irene, which was his whole ſtock on his firſt arrival in town, in the year 1737. That play was accordingly put into rehearſal in January 1749. As a precurſor to prepare the way, and awaken the publick attention, The Vanity of Human Wiſhes, a Poem in Imitation of the Tenth Satire of Juvenal, by the Author of London, was publiſhed in the ſame month. In the Gentleman's Magazine, for February 1749, we find that the tragedy of Irene was acted at Drury-lane, on Monday, February the 6th, and from that time, without interruption, to Monday, February the 20th, being in all thirteen nights. Since that time it has not been exhibited on any ſtage. Irene may be added to ſome other plays in our language, which have loſt their place in the theatre, but continue to pleaſe in the cloſet. During the repreſentation of this piece, Johnſon attended every night behind the ſcenes. Conceiving that his character, as an author, required ſome ornament for his perſon, he choſe, upon that occaſion, to decorate himſelf with a handſome waiſtcoat, and a gold-laced hat. The late Mr. Topham Beauclerc, who had had a great deal of that humour which pleaſes the more for ſeeming undeſigned, uſed to give a pleaſant deſcription of this Green-room finery, as related by the author himſelf; "But," ſaid Johnſon, with great gravity, "I ſoon laid aſide my gold-laced hat, leſt it ſhould make me proud." The amount of the three benefit nights for the tragedy of Irene, it is to be feared, was not very conſiderable, as the profit, that ſtimulating motive, never invited the author to another dramatic attempt. Some years afterwards, when the preſent writer was intimate with Garrick, and knew Johnſon to be in diſtreſs, he aſked the manager why he did not produce another tragedy for his Lichfield friend? Garrick's anſwer was remarkable: "When Johnſon writes tragedy, declamation roars, and paſſion ſleeps: when Shakeſpeare wrote, he dipped his pen in his own heart."

* Letter CCXII.

There may, perhaps, be a degree of ſameneſs in this regular way of tracing an author from one work to another, and the reader may feel the effect of a tedious monotony; but in the life of Johnſon there are no other landmarks. He was now forty years old, and had mixed but little with the world. He followed no profeſſion, tranſacted no buſineſs, and was a ſtranger to what is called a town-life. We are now arrived at the brighteſt period he had hitherto known. His name broke out upon mankind with a degree of luſtre that promiſed a triumph over all his difficulties. The life of Savage was admired as a beautiful and inſtructive piece of biography. The two Imitations of Juvenal were thought to rival even the excellence of Pope; and the tragedy of Irene, though unintereſting on the ſtage, was univerſally admired in the cloſet, for the propriety of the ſentiments, the richneſs of the language, and the general harmony of the whole compoſition. His fame was widely diffuſed; and he had made his agreement with the bookſellers for his Engliſh Dictionary at the ſum of fifteen hundred guineas; part of which was to be, from time to time, advanced in proportion to the progreſs of the work. This was a certain fund for his ſupport, without being obliged to write fugitive pieces for the petty ſupplies of the day. Accordingly we find that, in 1749, he eſtabliſhed a club, conſiſting of ten in number, at Horſeman's, in Ivy-lane, on every Tueſday evening. This is the firſt ſcene of ſocial life to which Johnſon can be traced out of his own houſe. The members of this little ſociety were, Samuel Johnſon; Dr. Salter (father of the late Maſter of the Charter-houſe;) Dr. Hawkeſworth; Mr. Ryland, a merchant; Mr. Payne, a bookſeller, in Paternoſter-row; Mr. Samuel Dyer, a learned young man; Dr. William M'Ghie, a Scotch phyſician; Dr. Edmund Barker, a young phyſician; Dr. Bathurſt, another young phyſician; and Sir John Hawkins. This liſt is given by Sir John, as it ſhould ſeem, with no other view than to draw a ſpiteful and malevolent character of almoſt every one of them. Mr. Dyer, whom Sir John ſays he loved with the affection of a brother, meets with the harſheſt treatment, becauſe it was his maxim, that to live in peace with mankind, and in a temper to do good offices, was the moſt eſſential part of our duty. That notion of moral goodneſs gave umbrage to Sir John Hawkins, and drew down upon the memory of his friend the bittereſt imputations. Mr. Dyer, however, was admired and loved through life. He was a man of literature. Johnſon loved to enter with him into a diſcuſſion of metaphiſical, moral, and critical ſubjects; in thoſe conflicts, exerciſing his talents, and, according to his cuſtom, always contending for victory. Dr. Bathurſt was the perſon on whom Johnſon fixed his affection. He hardly ever poke of him without tears in his eyes. It was from him who was a native of Jamaica, that Johnſon received into his ſervice Frank, the black ſervant, whom, on account of his maſter, he valued to the end of his life. At the time of inſtituting the club in Ivy-lane, Johnſon had projected the Rambler. The title was moſt probably ſuggeſted by the Wanderer; a poem which he mentions, with the warmeſt praiſe, in the Life of Savage. With the ſame ſpirit of independence with which he wiſhed to live, it was now his pride to write. He communicated his plan to none of his friends: he deſired no aſſiſtance, relying entirely on his own fund, and the protection of the Divine Being, which he implored in a ſolemn form of prayer, compoſed by himſelf for the occaſion. Having formed a reſolution to undertake a work that might be of uſe and honour to his country, he thought, with Milton, that this was not to be obtained "but by devout prayer to that Eternal Spirit that can enrich with all utterance and knowledge, and ſend out his ſeraphim with the hallowed fire of his altar, to touch and purify the lips of whom he pleaſes."

Having invoked the ſpecial protection of Heaven, and by that act of piety fortified his mind, he began the great work of the Rambler. The firſt number was publiſhed on Tueſday, March the 20th, 1750; and from that time was continued regularly every Tueſday and Saturday for the ſpace of two years, when it finally cloſed on Saturday, March 14, 1752. As it began with motives of piety, ſo it appears, that the ſame religious ſpirit glowed with unabating ardour to the laſt. His concluſion is: "The Eſſays profeſſedly ſerious, if I have been able to execute my own intentions, will be found exactly conformable to the precepts of Chriſtianity, without any accommodation to the licentiouſneſs and levity of the preſent age. I therefore look back on this part of my work with pleaſure, which no man ſhall diminiſh or augment. I ſhall never envy the honours which wit and learning obtain in any other cauſe, if I can be numbered among the writers who have given ardour to virtue, and confidence to truth." The whole number of Eſſays amounted to two hundred and eight. Addiſon's, in the Spectator, are more in number, but not half in point of quantity: Addiſon was not bound to publiſh on ſtated days; he could watch the ebb and flow of his genius, and ſend his paper to the preſs when his own taſte was ſatisfied. Johnſon's caſe was very different. He wrote ſingly and alone. In the whole progreſs of the work he did not receive more than ten eſſays. This was a ſcanty contribution. For the reſt, the author has deſcribed his ſituation: "He that condemns himſelf to compoſe on a ſtated day, will often bring to his taſk an attention diſſipated, a memory embarraſſed, an imagination overwhelmed, a mind diſtracted with anxieties, a body languiſhing with diſeaſe: he will labour on a barren topic, till it is too late to change it; or, in the ardour of invention, diffuſe his thoughts into wild exuberance, which the preſſing hour of publication cannot ſuffer judgment to examine or reduce." Of this excellent production the number ſold on each day did not amount to five hundred: of courſe the bookſeller, who paid the author four guineas a week, did not carry on a ſucceſsful trade. His generoſity and perſeverance deſerve to be commended; and happily, when the collection appeared in volumes, were amply rewarded. Johnſon lived to ſee his labours flouriſh in a tenth edition. His poſterity, as an ingenious French writer has ſaid on a ſimilar occaſion, began in his lifetime.

In the beginning of 1750, ſoon after the Rambler was ſet on foot, Johnſon was induced by the arts of a vile impoſtor to lend his aſſiſtance, during a temporary deluſion, to a fraud not to be paralleled in the annals of literature. One LAUDER, a native of Scotland, who had been a teacher in the Univerſity of EDINBURGH, had conceived a mortal antipathy to the name and character of Milton. His reaſon was, becauſe the prayer of Pamela, in Sir Philip Sidney's Arcadia, was, as he ſuppoſed, maliciouſly inſerted by the great poet in an edition of the Eikon Baſilike, in order to fix an imputation of impiety on the memory of the murdered king. Fired with reſentment, and willing to reap the profits of a groſs impoſition, this man collected from ſeveral Latin poets, ſuch as Maſenius the Jeſuit, Staphorſtius a Dutch divine, Beza, and others, all ſuch paſſages as bore any kind of reſemblance to different places in the Paradiſe Loſt; and theſe he publiſhed, from time to time, in the Gentleman's Magazine, with occaſional interpolations of lines, which he himſelf tranſlated from Milton. The publick credulity ſwallowed all with eagerneſs; and Milton was ſuppoſed to be guilty of plagiariſm from inferior modern writers. The fraud ſucceeded ſo well, that Lauder collected the whole into a volume, and advertiſed it under the title of "An Eſſay on Milton's Uſe and Imitation of the Moderns, in his Paradiſe Loſt; dedicated to the Univerſities of Oxford and Cambridge." While the book was in the preſs, the proof-ſheets were ſhewn to Johnſon at the Ivy-lane Club, by Payne, the bookſeller, who was one of the members. No man in that ſociety was in poſſeſſion of the authors from whom Lauder profeſſed to make his extracts. The charge was believed, and the contriver of it found his way to Johnſon, who is repreſented by Sir John Hawkins, not indeed as an accomplice in the fraud, but, through motives of malignity to Milton, delighting in the detection, and exulting that the poet's reputation would ſuffer by the diſcovery. More malice to a deceaſed friend cannot well be imagined. Hawkins adds, "that he wiſhed well to the argument, muſt be inferred from the preface, which indubitably was written by him." The preface, it is well known, was written by Johnſon, and for that reaſon is inſerted in this edition. But if Johnſon approved of the argument, it was no longer than while he believed it founded in truth. Let us advert to his own words in that very preface. "Among the enquiries to which the ardour of criticiſm has naturally given occaſion, none is more obſcure in itſelf, or more worthy of rational curioſity, than a retroſpection of the progreſs of this mighty genius in the conſtruction of this work; a view of the fabric gradually riſing, perhaps from ſmall beginnings, till its foundation reſts in the centre, and its turrets ſparkle in the ſkies; to trace back the ſtructure, through all its varieties, to the ſimplicity of the firſt plan; to find what was projected, whence the ſcheme was taken, how it was improved, by what aſſiſtance it was executed, and from what ſtores the materials were collected; whether its founder dug them from the quarries of nature, or demoliſhed other buildings to embelliſh his own." Theſe were the motives that induced Johnſon to aſſiſt Lauder with a preface: and are not theſe the motives of a critic and a ſcholar? What reader of taſte, what man of real knowledge, would not think his time well employed in an enquiry ſo curious, ſo intereſting, and inſtructive? If Lauder's facts were really true, who would not be glad, without the ſmalleſt tincture of malevolence, to receive real information? It is painful to be thus obliged to vindicate a man who, in his heart, towered above the petty arts of fraud and impoſition, againſt an injudicious biographer, who undertook to be his editor, and the protector of his memory. Another writer, Dr. Towers, in an Eſſay on the Life and Character of Dr. Johnſon, ſeems to countenance this calumny. He ſays, It can hardly be doubted, but that Johnſon's averſion to Milton's politics was the cauſe of that alacrity with which he joined with Lauder in that infamous attack on our great epic poet, and which induced him to aſſiſt in that tranſaction. Theſe words would ſeem to deſcribe an accomplice, were they not immediately followed by an expreſs declaration, that Johnſon was unacquainted with the impoſture. Dr. Towers adds, It ſeems to have been by way of making ſome compenſation to the memory of Milton, for the ſhare he had in the attack of Lauder, that Johnſon wrote the prologue, ſpoken by Garrick, at Drury-lane Theatre, 1750, on the performance of the Maſque of Comus, for the benefit of Milton's grand-daughter. Dr. Towers is not free from prejudice; but, as Shakeſpeare has it, "he begets a temperance, to give it ſmoothneſs." He is, therefore, entitled to a diſpaſſionate anſwer. When Johnſon wrote the prologue, it does appear that he was aware of the malignant artifices practiſed by Lauder. In the poſtſcript to Johnſon's preface, a ſubſcription is propoſed, for relieving the grand-daughter of the author of Paradiſe Loſt. Dr. Towers will agree that this ſhews Johnſon's alacrity in doing good. That alacrity ſhewed itſelf again in the letter printed in the European Magazine, January 1785, and there ſaid to have appeared originally in the General Advertiſer, 4th April 1750, by which the publick were invited to embrace the opportunity of paying a juſt regard to the illuſtrious dead, united with the pleaſure of doing good to the living. The letter adds, "To aſſiſt induſtrious indigence, ſtruggling with diſtreſs, and debilitated by age, is a diſplay of virtue, and an acquiſition of happineſs and honour. Whoever, therefore, would be thought capable of pleaſure in reading the works of our incomparable Milton, and not ſo deſtitute of gratitude as to refuſe to lay out a trifle, in a rational and elegant entertainment, for the benefit of his living remains, for the exerciſe of their own virtue, the increaſe of their reputation, and the conſciouſneſs of doing good, ſhould appear in Drury-lane Theatre, to-morrow, April 5, when COMUS will be performed for the benefit of Mrs. Elizabeth Foſter, grand-daughter to the author, and the only ſurviving branch of his family. Nota bene, there will be a new prologue on the occaſion, written by the author of Irene, and ſpoken by Mr. Garrick." The man who had thus exerted himſelf to ſerve the grand-daughter, cannot be ſuppoſed to have entertained perſonal malice to the grand-father. It is true, that the malevolence of Lauder, as well as the impoſtures of Archibald Bower, were fully detected by the labours, in the cauſe of truth, of the Rev. Dr. Douglas, now Lord Biſhop of Saliſbury.

"Diram qui contudit Hydram,
"Notaque fatali portenta labore ſubegit."

But the pamphlet, entituled, Milton vindicated from the Charge of Plagiariſm brought againſt him by Mr. Lauder, and Lauder himſelf convicted of ſeveral Forgeries and groſs Impoſitions on the Publick. By John Douglas, M. A. Rector of Eaton Conſtantine, Salop, was not publiſhed till the year 1751. In that work, p. 77. Dr. Douglas ſays: "It is to be hoped, nay, it is expected, that the elegant and nervous writer, whoſe judicious ſentiments and inimitable ſtyle point out the author of Lauder's preface and poſtſcript, will no longer allow A MAN to plume himſelf with his feathers, who appears ſo little to have deſerved his aſſiſtance; an aſſiſtance which I am perſuaded would never have been communicated, had there been the leaſt ſuſpicion of thoſe facts, which I have been the inſtrument of conveying to the world." We have here a contemporary teſtimony to the integrity of Dr. Johnſon throughout the whole of that vile tranſaction. What was the conſequence of the requiſition made by Dr. Douglas? Johnſon, whoſe ruling paſſion may be ſaid to be the love of truth, convinced Lauder, that it would be more for his intereſt to make a full confeſſion of his guilt, than to ſtand forth the convicted champion of a lye; and for this purpoſe he drew up, in the ſtrongeſt terms, a recantation in a Letter to the Rev. Mr. Douglas, which Lauder ſigned, and publiſhed in the year 1751. That piece will remain a laſting memorial of the abhorrence with which Johnſon beheld a violation of truth. Mr. Nichols, whoſe attachment to his illuſtrious friend was unwearied, ſhewed him in 1780 a book, called Remarks on Johnſon's Life of Milton, in which the affair of Lauder was renewed with virulence, and a poetical ſcale in the Literary Magazine 1758 (when Johnſon had ceaſed to write in that collection) was urged as an additional proof of deliberate malice. He read the libellous paſſage with attention, and inſtantly wrote on the margin: "In the buſineſs of Lauder I was deceived, partly by thinking the man too frantic to be fraudulent. Of the poetical ſcale quoted from the Magazine I am not the author. I fancy it was put in after I had quitted that work; for I not only did not write it, but I do not remember it." As a critic and a ſcholar, Johnſon was willing to receive what numbers at the time believed to be true information: when he found that the whole was a forgery, he renounced all connection with the author.

In March 1752, he felt a ſevere ſtroke of affliction in the death of his wife. The laſt number of the Rambler, as already mentioned, was on the 14th of that month. The loſs of Mrs. Johnſon was then approaching, and, probably, was the cauſe that put an end to thoſe admirable periodical eſſays. It appears that ſhe died on the 28th of March: in a memorandum, at the foot of the Prayers and Meditations, that is called her Dying Day. She was buried at Bromley, under the care of Dr. Hawkeſworth. Johnſon placed a Latin inſcription on her tomb, in which he celebrated her beauty. With the ſingularity of his prayers for his deceaſed wife, from that time to the end of his days, the world is ſufficiently acquainted. On Eaſter-day, 22d April 1764, his memorandum ſays: "Thought on Tetty, poor dear Tetty! with my eyes full. Went to Church. After ſermon I recommended Tetty in a prayer by herſelf; and my father, mother, brother, and Bathurſt, in another. I did it only once, ſo far as it might be lawful for me." In a prayer, January 23, 1759, the day on which his mother was buried, he commends, as far as may be lawful, her ſoul to God, imploring for her whatever is moſt beneficial to her in her preſent ſtate. In this habit he perſevered to the end of his days. The Rev. Mr. Strahan, the editor of the Prayers and Meditations, obſerves, "That Johnſon, on ſome occaſions, prays that the Almighty may have had mercy on his wife and Mr. Thrale: evidently ſuppoſing their ſentence to have been already paſſed in the Divine Mind; and, by conſequence, proving, that he had no belief in a ſtate of purgatory, and no reaſon for praying for the dead that could impeach the ſincerity of his profeſſion as a Proteſtant." Mr. Strahan adds, "That, in praying for regretted tenants of the grave, Johnſon conformed to a practice which has been retained by many learned members of the Eſtabliſhed Church, though the Liturgy no longer admits it. If where the tree falleth, there it ſhall be; if our ſtate, at the cloſe of life, is to be the meaſure of our final ſentence, then prayers for the dead, being viſibly fruitleſs, can be regarded only as the vain oblations of ſuperſtition. But of all ſuperſtitions this, perhaps, is one of the leaſt unamiable, and moſt incident to a good mind. If our ſenſations of kindneſs be intenſe, thoſe, whom we have revered and loved, death cannot wholly ſeclude from our concern. It is true, for the reaſon juſt mentioned, ſuch evidences of our ſurviving affection may be thought ill-judged; but ſurely they are generous, and ſome natural tenderneſs is due even to a ſuperſtition, which thus originates in piety and benevolence." Theſe ſentences, extracted from the Rev. Mr. Strahan's preface, if they are not a full juſtification, are, at leaſt, a beautiful apology. It will not be improper to add what Johnſon himſelf has ſaid on the ſubject. Being aſked by Mr. Boſwell,* what he thought of purgatory, as believed by the Roman Catholics? His anſwer was, "It is a very harmleſs doctrine. They are of opinion, that the generality of mankind are neither ſo obſtinately wicked as to deſerve everlaſting puniſhment; nor ſo good as to merit being admitted into the ſociety of bleſſed ſpirits; and, therefore, that God is graciouſly pleaſed to allow a middle ſtate, where they may be purified by certain degrees of ſuffering. You ſee there is nothing unreaſonable in this; and if it be once eſtabliſhed that there are ſouls in purgatory, it is as proper to pray for them, as for our brethren of mankind, who are yet in this life." This was Dr. Johnſon's gueſs into futurity; and to gueſs is the utmoſt that man can do. Shadows, clouds, and darkneſs, reſt upon it.

Mrs. Johnſon left a daughter, Lucy Porter, by her firſt huſband. She had contracted a friendſhip with Mrs. Anne Williams, the daughter of Zachary Williams, a phyſician of eminence in South Wales, who had devoted more than thirty years of a long life to the ſtudy of the longitude, and was thought to have made great advances towards that important diſcovery. His letters to Lord Halifax, and the Lords of the Admiralty, partly corrected and partly written by Dr. Johnſon, are ſtill extant in the hands of Mr. Nichols.‡ We there find Dr. Williams, in the eighty-third year of his age, ſtating, that he had prepared an inſtrument, which might be called an epitome or miniature of the terraqueous globe, ſhewing, with the aſſiſtance of tables conſtructed by himſelf, the variations of the magnetic needle, and aſcertaining the longitude for the ſafety of navigation. It appears that this ſcheme had been referred to Sir Iſaac Newton; but that great philoſopher excuſing himſelf on account of his advanced age, all applications were uſeleſs till 1751, when the ſubject was referred, by order of Lord Anſon, to Dr. Bradley, the celebrated profeſſor of aſtronomy. His report was unfavourable,† though it allows that a conſiderable progreſs had been made. Dr. Williams, after all his labour and expence, died in a ſhort time after, a melancholy inſtance of unrewarded merit. His daughter poſſeſſed uncommon talents, and, though blind, had an alacrity of mind that made her converſation agreeable, and even deſirable. To relieve and appeaſe melancholy reflections, Johnſon took her home to his houſe in Gough-ſquare. In 1755, Garrick gave her a benefit-play, which produced two hundred pounds. In 1766, ſhe publiſhed, by ſubſcription, a quarto volume of Miſcellanies, and increaſed her little ſtock to three hundred pounds. That fund, with Johnſon's protection, ſupported her through the remainder of her life.

During the two years in which the Rambler was carried on, the Dictionary proceeded by ſlow degrees. In May 1752, having compoſed a prayer preparatory to his return from tears and ſorrow to the duties of life, he reſumed his grand deſign, and went on with vigour, giving, however, occaſional aſſiſtance to his friend Dr. Hawkeſworth in the Adventurer, which began ſoon after the Rambler was laid aſide. Some of the moſt valuable eſſays in that collection were from the pen of Johnſon. The Dictionary was completed towards the end of 1754; and, Cave being then no more, it was a mortification to the author of that noble addition to our language, that his old friend did not live to ſee the triumph of his labours. In May 1755, that great work was publiſhed. Johnſon was deſirous that it ſhould come from one who had obtained academical honours; and for that purpoſe, his friend the Rev. Thomas Warton, obtained for him, in the preceding month of February, a diploma for a maſter's degree from the Univerſity of Oxford. Garrick, on the publication of the Dictionary, wrote the following lines:

"Talk of war with a Briton, he'll boldly advance,
"That one Engliſh ſoldier can beat ten of France.
"Would we alter the boaſt from the ſword to the pen,
"Our odds are ſtill greater, ſtill greater our men:
"In the deep mines of ſcience though Frenchmen may toil,
"Can their ſtrength be compar'd to Locke, Newton, or Boyle?
"Let them rally their heroes, ſend forth all their pow'rs,
"Their verſemen and proſemen, then match them with ours.
"Firſt Shakeſpeare and Milton, like Gods in the fight,
"Have put their whole drama and epic to flight.
"In ſatires, epiſtles, and odes, would they cope?
"Their numbers retreat before Dryden and Pope.
"And Johnſon well arm'd, like a hero of yore,
"Has beat Forty French, and will beat Forty more."

It is, perhaps, needleſs to mention, that Forty was the number of the French Academy, at the time when their Dictionary was publiſhed to ſettle their language.

In the courſe of the winter preceding this grand publication, the late Earl of Cheſterfield gave two eſſays in the periodical Paper, called THE WORLD, dated November 28, and December 5, 1754, to prepare the publick for ſo important a work. The original plan, addreſſed to his Lordſhip in the year 1747, is there mentioned in terms of the higheſt praiſe; and this was underſtood, at the time, to be a courtly way of ſoliciting a dedication of the Dictionary to himſelf. Johnſon treated this civility with diſdain. He ſaid to Garrick and others, "I have ſailed a long and painful voyage round the world of the Engliſh language; and does he now ſend out two cock-boats to tow me into harbour?" He had ſaid, in the laſt number of the Rambler, "that, having laboured to maintain the dignity of virtue, I will not now degrade it by the meanneſs of dedication." Such a man, when he had finiſhed his Dictionary, "not," as he ſays himſelf, "in the ſoft obſcurities of retirement, or under the ſhelter of academic bowers, but amidſt inconvenience and diſtraction, in ſickneſs and in ſorrow, and without the patronage of the great," was not likely to be caught by the lure thrown out by Lord Cheſterfield. He had in vain ſought the patronage of that nobleman; and his pride, exaſperated by diſappointment, drew from him the following letter, dated in the month of February, 1755.

"To the Right Hon. the Earl of CHESTERFIELD.

"MY LORD,

"I have been lately informed, by the proprietors of the World, that two papers, in which my Dictionary is recommended to the publick, were written by your Lordſhip. To be ſo diſtinguiſhed is an honour which, being very little accuſtomed to favours from the great, I know not well how to receive, or in what terms to acknowledge.

"When, upon ſome ſlight encouragement, I firſt viſited your Lordſhip, I was overpowered, like the reſt of Mankind, by the enchantment of your addreſs, and could not forbear to wiſh, that I might boaſt myſelf le vainqueur du vainqueur de la terre; that I might obtain that regard for which I ſaw the world contending. But I found my attendance ſo little encouraged, that neither pride, nor modeſty, would ſuffer me to continue it. When I had once addreſſed your Lordſhip in publick, I had exhauſted all the art of pleaſing, which a retired and uncourtly ſcholar can poſſeſs. I had done all that I could; and no man is well pleaſed to have his all neglected, be it ever ſo little.

"Seven years, my Lord, have now paſſed ſince I waited in your outward room, or was repulſed from your door; during which time I have been puſhing on my work through difficulties, of which it is uſeleſs to complain, and have brought it at laſt to the verge of publication, without one act of aſſiſtance, one word of encouragement, or one ſmile of favour. Such treatment I did not expect, for I never had a patron before.

"The Shepherd in Virgil grew acquainted with Love, and found him a native of the rocks.

"Is not a patron, my Lord, one who looks with unconcern on a man ſtruggling for life in the water, and, when he has reached ground, encumbers him with help? The notice which you have been pleaſed to take of my labours, had it been early, had been kind; but it has been delayed till I am indifferent, and cannot enjoy it; till I am ſolitary, and cannot impart it; till I am known, and do not want it. I hope it is no very cynical aſperity not to confeſs obligations where no benefit has been received; or to be unwilling that the publick ſhould conſider me as owing that to a patron, which Providence has enabled me to do for myſelf.

"Having carried on my work thus far with ſo little obligation to any favourer of learning, I ſhall not be diſappointed, though I ſhould conclude it, if leſs be poſſible, with leſs; for I have been long wakened from that dream of hope, in which I once boaſted myſelf with ſo much exultation. MY LORD, your Lordſhip's moſt humble and moſt obedient ſervant, SAMUEL JOHNSON."

It is ſaid, upon good authority, that Johnſon once received from Lord Cheſterfield the ſum of ten pounds. It were to be wiſhed that the ſecret had never tranſpired. It was mean to receive it, and meaner to give it. It may be imagined, that for Johnſon's ferocity, as it has been called, there was ſome foundation in his finances; and, as his Dictionary was brought to a concluſion, that money was now to flow in upon him. The reverſe was the caſe. For his ſubſiſtence, during the progreſs of the work, he had received at different times the amount of his contract; and when his receipts were produced to him at a tavern-dinner, given by the bookſellers, it appeared, that he had been paid a hundred pounds and upwards more than his due. The author of a book, called Lexiphanes, written by a Mr. Campbell, a Scotchman, and purſer of a man of war, endeavoured to blaſt his laurels, but in vain. The world applauded, and Johnſon never replied. "Abuſe," he ſaid, "is often of ſervice: there is nothing ſo dangerous to an author as ſilence; his name, like a ſhuttle-cock, muſt be beat backward and forward, or it falls to the ground." Lexiphanes profeſſed to be an imitation of the pleaſant manner of Lucian; but humour was not the talent of the writer of Lexiphanes. As Dryden ſays, "He had too much horſe-play in his raillery."

It was in the ſummer 1754, that the preſent writer became acquainted with Dr. Johnſon. The cauſe of his firſt viſit is related by Mrs. Piozzi nearly in the following manner. "Mr. Murphy being engaged in a periodical paper, the Gray's-Inn Journal, was at a friend's houſe in the country, and, not being diſpoſed to loſe pleaſure for buſineſs, wiſhed to content his bookſeller by ſome unſtudied eſſay. He therefore took up a French Journal Literaire, and tranſlating ſomething he liked, ſent it away to town. Time, however, diſcovered that he tranſlated from the French a Rambler, which had been taken from the Engliſh without acknowledgement. Upon this diſcovery Mr. Murphy thought it right to make his excuſes to Dr. Johnſon. He went next day, and found him covered with ſoot, like a chimney-ſweeper, in a little room, as if he had been acting Lungs in the Alchymiſt, making æther. This being told by Mr. Murphy in company, 'Come, come,' ſaid Dr. Johnſon, 'the ſtory is black enough; but it was a happy day that brought you firſt to my houſe'." After this firſt viſit, the author of this narrative by degrees grew intimate with Dr. Johnſon. The firſt ſtriking ſentence, that he heard from him, was in a few days after the publication of Lord Bolingbroke's poſthumous works. Mr. Garrick aſked him, "If he had ſeen them?" "Yes, I have ſeen them." "What do you think of them?" "Think of them!" He made a long pauſe, and then replied: "Think of them! A ſcoundrel and a coward! A ſcoundrel, who ſpent his life in charging a gun againſt Chriſtianity; and a coward, who was afraid of hearing the report of his own gun; but left half a crown to a hungry Scotchman to draw the trigger after his death." His mind, at this time ſtrained and over-laboured by conſtant exertion, called for an interval of repoſe and indolence. But indolence was the time of danger: it was then that his ſpirits, not employed abroad, turned with inward hoſtility againſt himſelf. His reflections on his own life and conduct were always ſevere; and, wiſhing to be immaculate, he deſtroyed his own peace by unneceſſary ſcruples. He tells us, that when he ſurveyed his paſt life, he diſcovered nothing but a barren waſte of time, with ſome diſorders of body, and diſturbances of mind, very near to madneſs. His life, he ſays, from his earlieſt years, was waſted in a morning bed; and his reigning ſin was a general ſluggiſhneſs, to which he was always inclined, and, in part of his life, almoſt compelled, by morbid melancholy, and wearineſs of mind. This was his conſtitutional malady, derived, perhaps, from his father, who was, at times, overcaſt with a gloom that bordered on inſanity. When to this it is added, that Johnſon, about the age of twenty, drew up a deſcription of his infirmities, for Dr. Swinfen, at that time an eminent phyſician in Staffordſhire; and received an anſwer to his letter, importing, that the ſymptoms indicated a future privation of reaſon; who can wonder that he was troubled with melancholy and dejection of ſpirit? An apprehenſion of the worſt calamity that can befal human nature hung over him all the reſt of his life, like the ſword of the tyrant ſuſpended over his gueſt. In his ſixtieth year he had a mind to write the hiſtory of his melancholy; but he deſiſted, not knowing whether it would not too much diſturb him. In a Latin poem, however, to which he has prefixed as a title, ΓΝΩΘΙ ΣΕΑΥΤΟΝ, he has left a picture, of himſelf, drawn with as much truth, and as firm a hand, as can be ſeen in the portraits of Hogarth or Sir Joſhua Reynolds. The learned reader will find the original poem in his works, and it is hoped, that a tranſlation, or rather imitation, of ſo curious a piece will not be improper in this place.

KNOW YOURSELF.

(After reviſing and enlarging the Engliſh Lexicon, or Dictionary.)

When Scaliger, whole years of labour paſt,
Beheld his Lexicon complete at laſt,
And weary of his taſk, with wond'ring eyes,
Saw from words pil'd on words a fabrick riſe,
He curs'd the induſtry, inertly ſtrong,
In creeping toil that could perſiſt ſo long,
And if, enrag'd he cried, Heav'n meant to ſhed
Its keeneſt vengeance on the guilty head,
The drudgery of words the damn'd would know,
Doom'd to write Lexicons in endleſs woe. *
Yes, you had cauſe, great Genius, to repent;
" You loſt good days, that might be better ſpent;
You well might grudge the hours of ling'ring pain,
And view your learned labours with diſdain.
To you were giv'n the large expanded mind,
The flame of Genius, and the taſte refin'd.
'Twas yours on eagle wings aloft to ſoar,
And amidſt rolling worlds the Great Firſt Cauſe explore;
To fix the æras of recorded time,
And live in ev'ry age and ev'ry clime;
Record the Chiefs, who propt their Country's cauſe;
Who founded Empires, and eſtabliſh'd Laws;
To learn whate'er the Sage with virtue fraught,
Whate'er the Muſe of moral wiſdom taught.
Theſe were your quarry; theſe to you were known,
And the world's ample volume was your own.
Yet warn'd by me, ye pigmy Wits, beware,
Nor with immortal Scaliger compare.
For me, though his example ſtrike my view,
Oh! not for me his footſteps to purſue.
Whether firſt Nature, unpropitious, cold,
This clay compounded in a ruder mould;
Or the ſlow current, loit'ring at my heart,
No gleam of wit or fancy can impart;
Whate'er the cauſe, from me no numbers flow,
No viſions warm me, and no raptures glow.
A mind like Scaliger's, ſuperior ſtill,
No grief could conquer, no misfortune chill.
Though for the maze of words his native ſkies
He ſeem'd to quit, 'twas but again to riſe;
To mount once more to the bright ſource of day,
And view the wonders of th' ætherial way.
The love of Fame his gen'rous boſom fir'd;
Each Science hail'd him, and each muſe inſpir'd.
For him the Sons of Learning trimm'd the bays,
And Nations grew harmonious in his praiſe.
My taſk perform'd, and all my labours o'er,
For me what lot has fortune now in ſtore?
The liſtleſs will ſucceeds, that worſe diſeaſe,
The rack of indolence, the ſluggiſh eaſe.
Care grows on care, and o'er my aching brain
Black Melancholy pours her morbid train.
No kind relief, no lenitive at hand,
I ſeek at midnight clubs, the ſocial Band;
But midnight clubs, where wit with noiſe conſpires,
Where Comus revels, and where wine inſpires,
Delight no more: I ſeek my lonely bed,
And call on Sleep to ſooth my languid head.
But Sleep from theſe ſad lids flies far away;
I mourn all night, and dread the coming day.
Exhauſted, tir'd, I throw my eyes around,
To find ſome vacant ſpot on claſſick ground;
And ſoon, vain hope! I form a grand deſign;
Languor ſucceeds, and all my pow'rs decline.
If Science open not her richeſt vein,
Without materials all our toil is vain.
A form to rugged ſtone when Phidias gives,
Beneath his touch a new creation lives.
Remove his marble, and his genius dies;
With Nature then no breathing ſtatue vies.
Whate'er I plan, I feel my pow'rs confin'd
By Fortune's frown and penury of mind.
I boaſt no knowledge glean'd with toil and ſtrife,
That bright reward of a well-acted life.
I view myſelf, while Reaſon's feeble light
Shoots a pale glimmer through the gloom of night,
While paſſions, error, phantoms of the brain,
And vain opinions, fill the dark domain;
A dreary void, where fears with grief combin'd
Waſte all within, and deſolate the mind.
What then remains? Muſt I in ſlow decline
To mute inglorious eaſe old age reſign?
Or, bold ambition kindling in my breaſt,
Attempt ſome arduous taſk? Or, were it beſt
Brooding o'er Lexicons to paſs the day,
And in that labour drudge my life away?

Such is the picture for which Dr. Johnſon ſat to himſelf. He gives the prominent features of his character; his laſſitude, his morbid melancholy, his love of fame, his dejection, his tavern-parties, and his wandering reveries, Vacuæ mala ſomnia mentis, about which ſo much has been written; all are painted in miniature, but in vivid colours, by his own hand. His idea of writing more Dictionaries was not merely ſaid in verſe. Mr. Hamilton, who was at that time an eminent printer, and well acquainted with Dr. Johnſon, remembers that he engaged in a Commercial Dictionary, and, as appears by the receipts in his poſſeſſion, was paid his price for ſeveral ſheets; but he ſoon relinquiſhed the undertaking. It is probable, that he found himſelf not ſufficiently verſed in that branch of knowledge.

He was again reduced to the expedient of ſhort compoſitions for the ſupply of the day. The writer of this narrative has now before him a letter in Dr. Johnſon's hand-writing, which ſhews the diſtreſs and melancholy ſituation of the man, who had written the Rambler, and finiſhed the great work of his Dictionary. The letter is directed to Mr. Richardſon (the author of Clariſſa) and is as follows:

* See Scaliger's Epigram on this ſubject, communicated without doubt by Dr. Johnſon, Gentleman's Magazine, 1748, p. 8.

"SIR,

"I am obliged to entreat your aſſiſtance. I am now under an arreſt for five pounds eighteen ſhillings. Mr. Strahan, from whom I ſhould have received the neceſſary help in this caſe, is not at home; and I am afraid of not finding Mr. Millar. If you will be ſo good as to ſend me this ſum, I will very gratefully repay you, and add it to all former obligations. I am, Sir, your moſt obedient and moſt humble ſervant, SAMUEL JOHNSON.

Gough-ſquare, 16 March."

In the margin of this letter there is a memorandum in theſe words: "March 16, 1756. Sent ſix guineas. Witneſs, Wm. Richardſon." For the honour of an admired writer it is to be regretted, that we do not find a more liberal entry. To his friend in diſtreſs he ſent eight ſhillings more than was wanted. Had an incident of this kind occurred in one of his romances, Richardſon would have known how to grace his hero; but in fictitious ſcenes generoſity coſts the writer nothing.

About this time Johnſon contributed ſeveral papers to the periodical Miſcellany, called THE VISITOR, from motives which are highly honourable to him, a compaſſionate regard for the late Mr. Chriſtopher Smart. The criticiſm on Pope's Epitaphs appeared in that work. In a ſhort time after, he became a reviewer in the Literary Magazine, under the auſpices of the late Mr. Newbery, a man of a projecting head, good taſte, and great induſtry. This employment engroſſed but little of Johnſon's time. He reſigned himſelf to indolence, took no exerciſe, roſe about two, and then received the viſits of his friends. Authors, long ſince forgotten, waited on him as their oracle, and he gave reſponſes in the chair of criticiſm. He liſtened to the complaints, the ſchemes, and the hopes and fears of a crowd of inferior writers, "who," he ſaid, in the words of Roger Aſcham, "lived, men know not how, and died obſcure, men marked not when." He believed, that he could give a better hiſtory of Grub-ſtreet than any man living. His houſe was filled with a ſucceſſion of viſitors till four or five in the evening. During the whole time he preſided at his tea-table. Tea was his favourite beverage; and, when the late Jonas Hanway pronounced his anathema againſt the uſe of tea, Johnſon roſe in defence of his habitual practice, declaring himſelf "in that article a hardened ſinner, who had for years diluted his meals with the infuſion of that faſcinating plant; whoſe tea-kettle had no time to cool; who with tea ſolaced the midnight hour, and with tea welcomed the morning."

The propoſal for a new edition of Shakeſpeare, which had formerly miſcarried, was reſumed in the year 1756. The bookſellers readily agreed to his terms, and ſubſcription tickets were iſſued out. For undertaking this work, money, he confeſſed, was the inciting motive. His friends exerted themſelves to promote his intereſt; and, in the mean time, he engaged in a new periodical production called THE IDLER. The firſt number appeared on Saturday, April 15, 1758; and the laſt, April 5, 1760. The profits of this work, and the ſubſcriptions for the new edition of Shakeſpeare, were the means by which he ſupported himſelf for four or five years. In 1759 was publiſhed Raſſelas, Prince of Abyſſinia. His tranſlation of Lobo's Voyage to Abyſſinia ſeems to have pointed out that country for the ſcene of action; and Raſſila Chriſtos, the general of Sultan Segued, mentioned in that work, moſt probably ſuggeſted the name of the prince. The author wanted to ſet out on a journey to Lichfield, in order to pay the laſt offices of filial piety to his mother, who, at the age of ninety, was then near her diſſolution; but money was neceſſary. Mr. Johnſon, a bookſeller who has long ſince left off buſineſs, gave one hundred pounds for the copy. With this ſupply Johnſon ſet out for Lichfield; but did not arrive in time to cloſe the eyes of a parent whom he loved. He attended the funeral, which, as appears among his memorandums, was on the 23d of January, 1759.

Johnſon now found it neceſſary to retrench his expences. He gave up his houſe in Gough-ſquare. Mrs. Williams went into lodgings. He retired to Gray's-Inn, and ſoon removed to chambers in the Inner Temple-lane, where he lived in poverty, total idleneſs, and the pride of literature. Magni ſtat nominis umbrâ. Mr. Fitzherbert (the father of Lord St. Helen's, the preſent miniſter at Madrid) a man diſtinguiſhed through life for his benevolence and other amiable qualities, uſed to ſay, that he paid a morning viſit to Johnſon, intending from his chambers to ſend a letter into the city; but, to his great ſurprize, he found an author by profeſſion without pen, ink, or paper. The preſent Biſhop of Saliſbury was alſo among thoſe who endeavoured by conſtant attention, to ſooth the cares of a mind which he knew to be afflicted with gloomy apprehenſions. At one of the parties made at his houſe, Boſcovich, the Jeſuit, who had then lately introduced the Newtonian philoſophy at Rome, and, after publiſhing an elegant Latin poem on the ſubject, was made a Fellow of the Royal Society, was one of the company invited to meet Dr. Johnſon. The converſation at firſt was moſtly in French. Johnſon, though thoroughly verſed in that language, and a profeſſed admirer of Boileau and La Bruyere, did not underſtand its pronunciation, nor could he ſpeak it himſelf with propriety. For the reſt of the evening the talk was in Latin. Boſcovich had a ready current flow of that flimſy phraſeology with which a prieſt may travel through Italy, Spain, and Germany. Johnſon ſcorned what he called colloquial barbariſms. It was his pride to ſpeak his beſt. He went on, after a little practice, with as much facility as if it was his native tongue. One ſentence this writer well remembers. Obſerving that Fontinelle at firſt oppoſed the Newtonian philoſophy, and embraced it afterwards, his words were: Fontinellus, ni fallor, in extrema ſenectute, fuit transfuga ad caſtra Newtoniana.

We have now travelled through that part of Dr. Johnſon's life which was a perpetual ſtruggle with difficulties. Halcyon days are now to open upon him. In the month of May 1762, his Majeſty, to reward literary merit, ſignified his pleaſure to grant to Johnſon a penſion of three hundred pounds a year. The Earl of Bute was miniſter. Lord Loughborough, who, perhaps, was originally a mover in the buſineſs, had authority to mention it. He was well acquainted with Johnſon; but, having heard much of his independent ſpirit, and of the downfall of Oſborne the bookſeller, he did not know but his benevolence might be rewarded with a folio on his head. He deſired the author of theſe memoirs to undertake the taſk. This writer thought the opportunity of doing ſo much good the moſt happy incident in his life. He went, without delay, to the chambers in the Inner Temple-lane, which, in fact, were the abode of wretchedneſs. By ſlow and ſtudied approaches the meſſage was diſcloſed. Johnſon made a long pauſe: he aſked if it was ſeriouſly intended? He fell into a profound meditation, and his own definition of a penſioner occurred to him. He was told, "That he, at leaſt, did not come within the definition." He deſired to meet next day, and dine at the Mitre Tavern. At that meeting he gave up all his ſcruples. On the following day Lord Loughborough conducted him to the Earl of Bute. The converſation that paſſed was in the evening related to this writer by Dr. Johnſon. He expreſſed his ſenſe of his Majeſty's bounty, and thought himſelf the more highly honoured, as the favour was not beſtowed on him for having dipped his pen in faction. "No, Sir," ſaid Lord Bute, "it is not offered to you for having dipped your pen in faction, nor with a deſign that you ever ſhould." Sir John Hawkins will have it, that, after this interview, Johnſon was often preſſed to wait on Lord Bute, but with a ſullen ſpirit refuſed to comply. However that be, Johnſon was never heard to utter a diſreſpectful word of that nobleman. The writer of this eſſay remembers a circumſtance which may throw ſome light on this ſubject. The late Dr. Roſe, of Chiſwick, whom Johnſon loved and reſpected, contended for the pre-eminence of the Scotch writers; and Ferguſon's book on Civil Society, then on the eve of publication, he ſaid, would give the laurel to North Britain. "Alas! what can he do upon that ſubject?" ſaid Johnſon: "Ariſtotle, Polybius, Grotius, Puffendorf, and Burlemaqui, have reaped in that field before him." "He will treat it," ſaid Dr. Roſe, "in a new manner." "A new manner! Buckinger had no hands, and he wrote his name with his toes at Charing-croſs, for half a crown apiece; that was a new manner of writing!" Dr. Roſe replied, "If that will not ſatisfy you, I will name a writer, whom you muſt allow to be the beſt in the kingdom." "Who is that?" "The Earl of Bute, when he wrote an order for your penſion." "There, Sir," ſaid Johnſon, "you have me in the toil: to Lord Bute I muſt allow whatever praiſe you may claim for him." Ingratitude was no part of Johnſon's character.

Being now in the poſſeſſion of a regular income, Johnſon left his chambers in the Temple, and once more became maſter of a houſe in Johnſon's-court, Fleet-ſtreet. Dr. Levet, his friend and phyſician in ordinary, paid his daily viſits with aſſiduity; made tea all the morning, talked what he had to ſay, and did not expect an anſwer. Mrs. Williams had her apartment in the houſe, and entertained her benefactor with more enlarged converſation. Chemiſtry was part of Johnſon's amuſement. For this love of experimental philoſophy, Sir John Hawkins thinks an apology neceſſary. He tells us, with great gravity, that curioſity was the only object in view; not an intention to grow ſuddenly rich by the philoſopher's ſtone, or the tranſmutation of metals. To enlarge his circle, Johnſon once more had recourſe to a literary club. This was at the Turk's Head, in Gerard-ſtreet, Soho, on every Tueſday evening through the year. The members were, beſides himſelf, the right hon. Edmund Burke, Sir Joſhua Reynolds, Dr. Nugent, Dr. Goldſmith, the late Mr. Topham Beauclerk, Mr. Langton, Mr. Chamier, Sir John Hawkins, and ſome others. Johnſon's affection for Sir Joſhua was founded on a long acquaintance, and a thorough knowledge of the virtues and amiable qualities of that excellent artiſt. He delighted in the converſation of Mr. Burke. He met him for the firſt time at Mr. Garrick's ſeveral years ago. On the next day he ſaid, "I ſuppoſe, Murphy, you are proud "of your countryman. CUM TALIS SIT UTINAM NOSTER ESSET!" From that time his conſtant obſervation was, "That a man of ſenſe could not meet Mr. Burke by accident, under a gateway to avoid a ſhower, without being convinced that he was the firſt man in England." Johnſon felt not only kindneſs, but zeal and ardour for his friends. He did every thing in his power to advance the reputation of Dr. Goldſmith. He loved him, though he knew his failings, and particularly the leaven of envy which corroded the mind of that elegant writer, and made him impatient, without diſguiſe, of the praiſes beſtowed on any perſon whatever. Of this infirmity, which marked Goldſmith's character, Johnſon gave a remarkable inſtance. It happened that he went with Sir Joſhua Reynolds and Goldſmith to ſee the Fantoccini, which were exhibited ſome years ago in or near the Haymarket. They admired the curious mechaniſm by which the puppets were made to walk the ſtage, draw a chair to the table, ſit down, write a letter, and perform a variety of other actions with ſuch dexterity, that though Nature's journeymen made the men, they imitated humanity to the aſtoniſhment of the ſpectator. The entertainment being over, the three friends retired to a tavern. Johnſon and Sir Joſhua talked with pleaſure of what they had ſeen; and ſays Johnſon, in a tone of admiration, "How the little fellow brandiſhed his ſpontoon!" "There is nothing in it," replied Goldſmith, ſtarting up with impatience; "give me a ſpontoon; I can do it as well myſelf."

Enjoying his amuſements at his weekly club, and happy in a ſtate of independence, Johnſon gained in the year 1765 another reſource, which contributed more than any thing elſe to exempt him from the ſolicitudes of life. He was introduced to the late Mr. Thrale and his family. Mrs Piozzi has related the fact, and it is therefore needleſs to repeat it in this place. The author of this narrative looks back to the ſhare he had in that buſineſs with ſelf-congratulation, ſince he knows the tenderneſs which from that time ſoothed Johnſon's cares at Streatham, and prolonged a valuable life. The ſubſcribers to Shakeſpeare began to deſpair of ever ſeeing the promiſed edition. To acquit himſelf of this obligation, he went to work unwillingly, but proceeded with vigour. In the month of October 1765, Shakeſpeare was publiſhed; and, in a ſhort time after, the Univerſity of Dublin ſent over a diploma, in honourable terms, creating him a Doctor of Laws. Oxford in eight or ten years afterwards followed the example; and till then Johnſon never aſſumed the title of Doctor. In 1766 his conſtitution ſeemed to be in a rapid decline, and that morbid melancholy, which often clouded his underſtanding, came upon him with a deeper gloom than ever. Mr. and Mrs. Thrale paid him a viſit in this ſituation, and found him on his knees, with Mr. Delap, the rector of Lewes, in Suſſex, beſeeching God to continue to him the uſe of his underſtanding. Mr. Thrale took him to his houſe at Streatham; and Johnſon from that time became a conſtant reſident in the family. He went occaſionally to the club in Gerard-ſtreet; but his head quarters were fixed at Streatham. An apartment was fitted up for him, and the library was greatly enlarged. Parties were conſtantly invited from town; and Johnſon was every day at an elegant table, with ſelect and poliſhed company. Whatever could be deviſed by Mr. and Mrs. Thrale to promote the happineſs, and eſtabliſh the health of their gueſt, was ſtudiouſly performed from that time to the end of Mr. Thrale's life. Johnſon accompanied the family in all their ſummer-excurſions to Brighthelmſtone, to Wales, and to Paris. It is but juſtice to Mr. Thrale to ſay, that a more ingenuous frame of mind no man poſſeſſed. His education at Oxford gave him the habits of a gentleman; his amiable temper recommended his converſation, and the goodneſs of his heart made him a ſincere friend. That he was the patron of Johnſon, is an honour to his memory.

In petty diſputes with contemporary writers, or the wits of the age, Johnſon was ſeldom entangled. A ſingle incident of that kind may not be unworthy of notice, ſince it happened with a man of great celebrity in his time. A number of friends dined with Garrick on a Chriſtmas-day. Foote was then in Ireland. It was ſaid at table, that the modern Ariſtophanes (ſo Foote was called) had been horſewhipped by a Dublin apothecary, for mimicking him on the ſtage. "I wonder," ſaid Garrick, "that any man ſhould ſhow ſo much reſentment to Foote; he has a patent for ſuch liberties; nobody ever thought it worth his while to quarrel with him in London." "I am glad," ſaid Johnſon, "to find that the man is riſing in the world." The expreſſion was afterwards reported to Foote; who, in return, gave out, that he would produce the Caliban of literature on the ſtage. Being informed of this deſign, Johnſon ſent word to Foote, "That the theatre being intended for the reformation of vice, he would ſtep from the boxes on the ſtage, and correct him before the audience." Foote knew the intrepidity of his antagoniſt, and abandoned the deſign. No ill-will enſued. Johnſon uſed to ſay, "That, for broad-faced mirth, Foote had not his equal."

Dr. Johnſon's fame excited the curioſity of the King. His Majeſty expreſſed a deſire to ſee a man of whom extraordinary things were ſaid. Accordingly, the librarian at Buckingham-houſe invited Johnſon to ſee that elegant collection of books, at the ſame time giving a hint of what was intended. His Majeſty entered the room; and, among other things, aſked the author, "If he meant to give the world any more of his compoſition?" Johnſon anſwered, "That he thought he had written enough." "And I ſhould think ſo too," replied his Majeſty, "if you had not written ſo well."

Though Johnſon thought he had written enough, his genius, even in ſpite of bodily ſluggiſhneſs, could not lie ſtill. In 1770 we find him entering the liſts as a political writer. The flame of diſcord that blazed throughout the nation on the expulſion of Mr. Wilkes, and the final determination of the Houſe of Commons, that Mr. Luttrell was duly elected by 206 votes againſt 1143, ſpread a general ſpirit of diſcontent. To allay the tumult, Dr. Johnſon publiſhed The Falſe Alarm. Mrs. Piozzi informs us, "That this pamphlet was written at her houſe, between eight o'clock on Wedneſday night and twelve on Thurſday night." This celerity has appeared wonderful to many, and ſome have doubted the truth. It may, however, be placed within the bounds of probability. Johnſon has obſerved that there are different methods of compoſition. Virgil was uſed to pour out a great number of verſes in the morning, and paſs the day in retrenching the exuberances and correcting inaccuracies; and it was Pope's cuſtom to write his firſt thoughts in his firſt words, and gradually to amplify, decorate, rectify and refine them. Others employ at once memory and invention, and, with little intermediate uſe of the pen, form and poliſh large maſſes by continued meditation, and write their productions only, when, in their opinion, they have completed them. This laſt was Johnſon's method. He never took his pen in hand till he had well weighed his ſubject, and graſped in his mind the ſentiments, the train of argument, and the arrangement of the whole. As he often thought aloud, he had, perhaps, talked it over to himſelf. This may account for that rapidity with which, in general, he diſpatched his ſheets to the preſs, without being at the trouble of a fair copy. Whatever may be the logick or eloquence of The Falſe Alarm, the Houſe of Commons have ſince eraſed the reſolution from the Journals. But whether they have not left materials for a future controverſy may be made a queſtion.

In 1771 he publiſhed another tract, on the ſubject of FALKLAND ISLANDS. The deſign was to ſhew the impropriety of going to war with Spain for an iſland thrown aſide from human uſe, ſtormy in winter, and barren in ſummer. For this work it is apparent that materials were furniſhed by direction of the miniſter.

At the approach of the general election in 1774, he wrote a ſhort diſcourſe, called THE PATRIOT, not with any viſible application to Mr. Wilkes; but to teach the people to reject the leaders of oppoſition, who called themſelves patriots. In 1775 he undertook a pamphlet of more importance, namely, Taxation no Tyranny, in anſwer to the Reſolutions and Addreſs of the American Congreſs. The ſcope of the argument was, that diſtant colonies, which had, in their aſſemblies, a legiſlature of their own, were, notwithſtanding, liable to be taxed in a Britiſh Parliament, where they had neither peers in one houſe or repreſentatives in the other. He was of opinion, that this country was ſtrong enough to enforce obedience. "When an Engliſhman," he ſays, "is told that the Americans ſhoot up like the hydra, he naturally conſiders how the hydra was deſtroyed." The event has ſhewn how much he and the miniſter of that day were miſtaken.

The Account of the Tour to the Weſtern Iſlands of Scotland, which was undertaken in the autumn of 1773, in company with

Mr. Boſwell, was not publiſhed till ſome time in the year 1775. This book has been variouſly received; by ſome extolled for the elegance of the narrative, and the depth of obſervation on life and manners; by others, as much condemned, as a work of avowed hoſtility to the Scotch nation. The praiſe was, beyond all queſtion, fairly deſerved; and the cenſure, on due examination, will appear haſty and ill-founded. That Johnſon entertained ſome prejudices againſt the Scotch, muſt not be diſſembled. It is true, as Mr. Boſwell ſays, "that he thought their ſucceſs in England exceeded their proportion of real merit, and he could not but ſee in them that nationality which no liberal-minded Scotſman will deny." The author of theſe memoirs well remembers, that Johnſon one day aſked him, "Have you obſerved the difference between your own country impudence and Scottiſh impudence?" The anſwer being in the negative: "Then I will tell you," ſaid Johnſon. "The impudence of an Iriſhman is the impudence of a fly, that buzzes about you, and you put it away, but it returns again, and flutters and teazes you. The impudence of a Scotſman is the impudence of a leech, that fixes and ſucks your blood." Upon another occaſion, this writer went with him into the ſhop of Davis the bookſeller, in Ruſſel-ſtreet, Convent-Garden. Davies came running to him almoſt out of breath with joy: "The Scots gentleman is come, Sir; his principal wiſh is to ſee you; he is now in the back-parlour." "Well well, I'll ſee the gentleman," ſaid Johnſon. He walked towards the room. Mr. Boſwell was the perſon. This writer followed with no ſmall curioſity. "I find," ſaid Mr. Boſwell, "that I am come to London at a bad time, when great popular prejudice has gone forth againſt us North Britons; but when I am talking to you, I am talking to a large and liberal mind, and you know that I cannot help coming from Scotland." "Sir," ſaid Johnſon, "no more can the reſt of your countrymen."

He had other reaſons that helped to alienate him from the natives of Scotland. Being a cordial well-wiſher to the conſtitution in Church and State, he did not think that Calvin and John Knox were proper founders of a national religion. He made, however, a wide diſtinction between the Diſſenters of Scotland and the Separatiſts of England. To the former he imputed no diſaffection, no want of loyalty. Their ſoldiers and their officers had ſhed their blood with zeal and courage in the ſervice of Great Britain; and the people, he uſed to ſay, were content with their own eſtabliſhed modes of worſhip, without wiſhing, in the preſent age, to give any diſturbance to the Church of England. This he was at all times ready to admit; and therefore declared, that whenever he found a Scotchman to whom an Engliſhman was as a Scotchman, that Scotchman ſhould be as an Engliſhman to him. In this, ſurely, there was no rancour, no malevolence. The diſſenters on this ſide the Tweed appeared to him in a different light. Their religion, he frequently ſaid, was too worldly, too political, too reſtleſs and ambitious. The doctrine of caſhiering kings, and erecting on the ruins of the conſtitution a new form of government, which lately iſſued from their pulpits, he always thought was, under a calm diſguiſe, the principle that lay lurking in their hearts. He knew that a wild democracy had overturned King, Lords, and Commons; and that a ſet of Republican Fanatics, who would not bow at the name of JESUS, had taken poſſeſſion of all the livings and all the pariſhes in the kingdom. That thoſe ſcenes of horror might never be renewed, was the ardent wiſh of Dr. Johnſon; and though he apprehended no danger from Scotland, it is probable that his diſlike of Calviniſm mingled ſometimes with his reflections on the natives of that country. The aſſociation of ideas could not be eaſily broken; but it is well known that he loved and reſpected many gentlemen from that part of the iſland. Dr. Robertſon's Hiſtory of Scotland, and Dr. Beattie's Eſſays, were ſubjects of his conſtant praiſe. Mr. Boſwell, Dr. Roſe of Chiſwick, Andrew Millar, Mr. Hamilton the printer, and the late Mr. Strahan, were among his moſt intimate friends. Many others might be added to the liſt. He ſcorned to enter Scotland as a ſpy; though Hawkins, his biographer, and the profeſſing defender of his fame, allowed himſelf leave to repreſent him in that ignoble character. He went into Scotland to ſurvey men and manners. Antiquities, foſſils, and minerals, were not within his province. He did not viſit that country to ſettle the ſtation of Roman camps, or the ſpot where Galgacus fought the laſt battle for publick liberty. The people, their cuſtoms, and the progreſs of literature, were his objects. The civilities which he received in the courſe of his tour have been repaid with grateful acknowledgement, and, generally, with great elegance of expreſſion. His crime is, that he found the country bare of trees, and he has ſtated the fact. This, Mr. Boſwell, in his Tour to the Hebrides, has told us, was reſented by his countrymen with anger inflamed to rancour; but he admits that there are few trees on the eaſt ſide of Scotland. Mr. Pennant, in his Tour, ſays, that in ſome parts of the eaſtern ſide of the country, he ſaw ſeveral large plantations of pine planted by gentlemen near their ſeats; and in this reſpect ſuch a laudable ſpirit prevails, that, in another half century, it never ſhall be ſaid, "To ſpy the nakedneſs of the land are you come." Johnſon could not wait for that half century, and therefore mentioned things as he found them. If in any thing he has been miſtaken, he has made a fair apology in the laſt paragraph of his book, avowing with candour, "That he may have been ſurprized by modes of life, and appearances of nature, that are familiar to men of wider ſurvey, and more varied converſation. Novelty and ignorance muſt always be reciprocal; and he is conſcious that his thoughts on national manners are the thoughts of one, who has ſeen but little."

The Poems of Oſſian made a part of Johnſon's enquiry during his reſidence in Scotland and the Hebrides. On his return to England, November 1773, a ſtorm ſeemed to be gathering over his head; but the cloud never burſt, and the thunder never fell. Oſſian, it is well known, was preſented to the publick as a tranſlation from the Earſe; but that this was a fraud, Johnſon declared without heſitation. "The Earſe," he ſays, "was always oral only, and never a written language. The Welch and the Iriſh were more cultivated. In Earſe there was not in the world a ſingle manuſcript a hundred years old. Martin, who in the laſt century publiſhed an Account of the Weſtern Iſlands, mentions Iriſh, but never Earſe manuſcripts, to be found in the iſlands in his time. The bards could not read; if they could, they might probably have written. But the bard was a barbarian among barbarians, and, knowing nothing himſelf, lived with others that knew no more. If there is a manuſcript from which the tranſlation was made, in what age was it written, and where is it? If it was collected from oral recitation, it could only be in detached parts and ſcattered fragments: the whole is too long to be remembered." Who put it together in its preſent form? For theſe, and ſuch like reaſons, Johnſon calls the whole an impoſture. He adds, "The editor, or author, never could ſhew the original, nor can it be ſhewn by any other. To revenge reaſonable incredulity, by refuſing evidence, is a degree of inſolence with which the world is not yet acquainted; and ſtubborn audacity is the laſt refuge of guilt." This reaſoning carries with it great weight. It rouſed the reſentment of Mr. Macpherſon. He ſent a threatening letter to the author; and Johnſon anſwered him in the rough phraſe of ſtern defiance. The two heroes frowned at a diſtance, but never came to action.

In the year 1777, the misfortunes of Dr. Dodd excited his compaſſion. He wrote a ſpeech for that unhappy man, when called up to receive judgment of death; beſides two petitions, one to the King, and another to the Queen; and a ſermon to be preached by Dodd to the convicts in Newgate. It may appear trifling to add, that about the ſame time he wrote a prologue to the comedy of A Word to the Wiſe, written by Hugh Kelly. The play, ſome years before, had been damned by a party on the firſt night. It was revived for the benefit of the author's widow. Mrs. Piozzi relates, that when Johnſon was rallied for theſe exertions, ſo cloſe to one another, his anſwer was, When they come to me with a dying Parſon, and a dead Staymaker, what can a man do? We come now to the laſt of his literary labours. At the requeſt of the Bookſellers he undertook the Lives of the Poets. The firſt publication was in 1779, and the whole was compleated in 1781. In a memorandum of that year he ſays, ſome time in March he finiſhed the Lives of the Poets, which he wrote in his uſual way, dilatorily and haſtily, unwilling to work, yet working with vigour and haſte. In another place, he hopes they are written in ſuch a manner as may tend to the promotion of piety. That the hiſtory of ſo many men, who, in their different degrees, made themſelves conſpicuous in their time, was not written recently after their deaths, ſeems to be an omiſſion that does no honour to the Republick of Letters. Their contemporaries in general looked on with calm indifference, and ſuffered Wit and Genius to vaniſh out of the world in total ſilence, unregarded, and unlamented. Was there no friend to pay the tribute of a tear? No juſt obſerver of life, to record the virtues of the deceaſed? Was even Envy ſilent? It ſeemed to have been agreed, that if an author's works ſurvived, the hiſtory of the man was to give no moral leſſon to after-ages. If tradition told us that BEN JONSON went to the Devil Tavern; that SHAKESPEARE ſtole deer, and held the ſtirrup at playhouſe doors; that DRYDEN frequented Button's Coffee-houſe; curioſity was lulled aſleep, and Biography forgot the beſt part of her function, which is to inſtruct mankind by examples taken from the ſchool of life. This taſk remained for

Dr. Johnſon, when years had rolled away; when the channels of information were, for the moſt part, choaked up, and little remained beſides doubtful anecdote, uncertain tradition, and vague report.

> "Nunc ſitus informis premit et deſerta Vetuſtas."

The value of Biography has been better underſtood in other ages, and in other countries. Tacitus informs us, that to record the lives and characters of illuſtrious men was the practice of the Roman authors, in the early periods of the Republick. In France the example has been followed. Fontinelle, D'Alembert, and Monſieur Thomas, have left models in this kind of compoſition. They have embalmed the dead But it is true, that they had incitements and advantages, even at a diſtant day, which could not, by any diligence, be obtained by Dr. Johnſon. The wits of France had ample materials. They lived in a nation of critics, who had at heart the honour done to their country by their Poets, their Heroes, and their Philoſophers. They had, beſides, an Academy of Belles Lettres, where Genius was cultivated, refined, and encouraged. They had the tracts, the eſſays, and diſſertations, which remain in the memories of the Academy, and they had the ſpeeches of the ſeveral members, delivered at their firſt admiſſion to a ſeat in that learned Aſſembly. In thoſe ſpeeches the new Academician did ample juſtice to the memory of his predeceſſor; and though his harangue was decorated with the colours of eloquence, and was, for that reaſon, called panegyric, yet being pronounced before qualified judges, who knew the talents, the conduct, and morals of the deceaſed, the ſpeaker could not, with propriety, wander into the regions of fiction. The truth was known, before it was adorned. The Academy ſaw the marble, before the artiſt poliſhed it. But this country has had no Academy of Literature. The publick mind, for centuries, has been engroſſed by party and faction; by the madneſs of many for the gain of a few; by civil wars, religious diſſentions, trade and commerce, and the arts of accumulating wealth. Amidſt ſuch attentions, who can wonder that cold praiſe has been often the only reward of merit? In this country Doctor Nathaniel Hodges, who, like the good biſhop of Marſeilles, drew purer breath amidſt the contagion of the plague in London, and, during the whole time, continued in the city, adminiſtering medical aſſiſtance, was ſuffered, as Johnſon uſed to relate with tears in his eyes, to die for debt in a goal. In this country, the man who brought the New River to London was ruined by that noble project; and in this country Otway died for want on Tower Hill; Butler, the great author of Hudibras, whoſe name can only die with the Engliſh language, was left to languiſh in poverty, the particulars of his life almoſt unknown, and ſcarce a veſtige of him left except his immortal poem. Had there been an Academy of Literature, the lives, at leaſt, of thoſe celebrated perſons would have been written for the benefit of poſterity. Swift, it ſeems, had the idea of ſuch an inſtitution, and propoſed it to Lord Oxford; but Whig and Tory were more important objects. It is needleſs to diſſemble, that Dr. Johnſon, in the Life of Roſcommon, talks of the inutility of ſuch a project. "In this country," he ſays, "an Academy could be expected to do but little. If an academician's place were profitable, it would be given by intereſt; if attendance were gratuitous, it would be rarely paid, and no man would endure the leaſt diſguſt. Unanimity is impoſſible, and debate would ſeparate the aſſembly." To this it may be ſufficient to anſwer, that the Royal Society has not been diſſolved by ſullen diſguſt; and the modern Academy at Somerſet-houſe has already performed much, and promiſes more. Unanimity is not neceſſary to ſuch an aſſembly. On the contrary, by difference of opinion, and colliſion of ſentiment, the cauſe of Literature would thrive and flouriſh. The true principles of criticiſm, the ſecret of fine writing, the inveſtigation of antiquities, and other intereſting ſubjects, might occaſion a claſh of opinions; but in that contention Truth would receive illuſtration, and the eſſays of the ſeveral members would ſupply the Memoirs of the Academy. "But," ſays Dr. Johnſon, "ſuppoſe the philological decree made and promulgated, what would be its authority? In abſolute government there is ſometimes a general reverence paid to all that has the ſanction of power, the countenance of greatneſs. How little this is the ſtate of our country needs not to be told. The edicts of an Engliſh academy would probably be read by many, only that they may be ſure to diſobey them. The preſent manners of the nation would deride authority, and therefore nothing is left, but that every writer ſhould criticize himſelf." This ſurely is not concluſive. It is by the ſtandard of the beſt writers that every man ſettles for himſelf his plan of legitimate compoſition; and ſince the authority of ſuperior genius is acknowledged, that authority, which the individual obtains, would not be leſſened by an aſſociation with others of diſtinguiſhed ability. It may, therefore, be inferred, that an Academy of Literature would be an eſtabliſhment highly uſeful, and an honour to Literature. In ſuch an inſtitution profitable places would not be wanted. Vatis avarus haud facile eſt animus; and the miniſter, who ſhall find leiſure from party and faction, to carry ſuch a ſcheme into execution, will, in all probability, be reſpected by poſterity as the Mæcenas of letters.

We now take leave of Dr. Johnſon as an author. Four volumes of his Lives of the Poets were publiſhed in 1778, and the work was completed in 1781. Should Biography fall again into diſuſe, there will not always be a Johnſon to look back through a century, and give a body of critical and moral inſtruction. In April 1781, he loſt his friend Mr. Thrale. His own words, in his diary, will beſt tell that melancholy event. "On Wedneſday the 11th of April, was buried my dear friend Mr. Thrale, who died on Wedneſday the 4th, and with him were buried many of my hopes and pleaſures. About five, I think, on Wedneſday morning he expired. I felt almoſt the laſt flutter of his pulſe, and looked for the laſt time upon the face, that, for fifteen years before, had never been turned upon me but with reſpect and benignity. Farewell: may God, that delighteth in mercy, have had mercy on thee. I had conſtantly prayed for him before his death. The deceaſe of him, from whoſe friendſhip I had obtained many opportunities of amuſement, and to whom I turned my thoughts as to a refuge from miſfortunes, has left me heavy. But my buſineſs is with myſelf." From the cloſe of his laſt work, the malady, that perſecuted him through life, came upon him with alarming ſeverity, and his conſtitution declined apace. In 1782 his old friend Levet expired without [illegible], and without a groan. Events like theſe reminded Johnſon of [illegible] mortality. He continued his viſits to Mr. Thrale at Streatham, to the 7th day of October 1782, when having firſt compoſed a prayer for the happineſs of a family, with whom he had for many years enjoyed the pleaſures and comforts of life, he removed to his own houſe in town. He ſays he was up early in the morning, and read fortuitouſly in the Goſpel, which was his parting uſe of the library. The merit of the family is manifeſted by the ſenſe he had of it, and we ſee his heart overflowing with gratitude. He leaves the place with regret, and caſts a lingering look behind.

The few remaining occurrences may be ſoon diſpatched. In the month of June 1783, Johnſon had a paralytic ſtroke, which affected his ſpeech only. He wrote to Dr. Taylor of Weſtminſter; and to his friend Mr. Allen, the printer, who lived at the next door. Dr. Brockleſby arrived in a ſhort time, and by his care, and that of Dr. Heberden, Johnſon ſoon recovered. During his illneſs the writer of this narrative viſited him, and found him reading Dr. Watſon's Chemiſtry. Articulating with difficulty, he ſaid, "From this book, he who knows nothing may learn a great deal; and he who knows, will be pleaſed to find his knowledge recalled to his mind in a manner highly pleaſing." In the month of Auguſt he ſet out for Lichfield, on a viſit to Mrs. Lucy Porter, the daughter of his wife by her firſt huſband; and in his way back paid his reſpects to Dr. Adams at Oxford. Mrs. Williams died at his houſe in Bolt-court in the month of September, during his abſence. This was another ſhock to a mind like his, ever agitated by the thoughts of futurity. The contemplation of his own approaching end was conſtantly before his eyes; and the proſpect of death, he declared, was terrible. For many years, when he was not diſpoſed to enter into the converſation going forward, whoever ſat near his chair, might hear him repeating, from Shakeſpeare,

> Ay, but to die and go we know not where;
> To lie in cold obſtruction and to rot;
> This ſenſible warm motion to become
> A kneaded clod, and the delighted ſpirit
> To bathe in fiery floods.——

And from Milton,

> Who would loſe,
> For fear of pain, this intellectual being?

By the death of Mrs. Williams he was left in a ſtate of deſtitution, with nobody but Frank, his black ſervant, to ſooth his anxious moments. In November 1783, he was ſwelled from head to foot with a dropſy. Dr. Brockleſby, with that benevolence with which he always aſſiſts his friends, paid his viſits with aſſiduity. The medicines preſcribed were ſo efficacious, that in a few days, Johnſon, while he was offering up his prayers, was ſuddenly obliged to riſe, and, in the courſe of the day, diſcharged twenty pints of water.

Johnſon, being eaſed of his dropſy, began to entertain hopes that the vigour of his conſtitution was not entirely broken. For the ſake of converſing with his friends, he eſtabliſhed a converſation club, to meet on every Wedneſday evening; and, to ſerve a man whom he had known in Mr. Thrale's houſhold for many years, the place was fixed at his houſe in Eſſex-ſtreet near the Temple. To anſwer the malignant remarks of Sir John Hawkins on this ſubject, were a wretched waſte of time. Profeſſing to be Johnſon's friend, that biographer has raiſed more objections to his character, than all the enemies of that excellent man. Sir John had a root of bitterneſs that put rancours in the veſſel of his peace. Fielding, he ſays, was the inventor of a cant phraſe, Goodneſs of heart, which means little more than the virtue of a horſe or a dog. He ſhould have known that kind affections are the eſſence of virtue; they are the will of God implanted in our nature, to aid and ſtrengthen moral obligation; they incite to action; a ſenſe of benevolence is no leſs neceſſary than a ſenſe of duty. Good affections are an ornament not only to an author but to his writings. He who ſhews himſelf upon a cold ſcent for opportunities to bark and ſnarl throughout a volume of ſix hundred pages, may, if he will, pretend to moralize; but GOODNESS OF HEART, or, to uſe that politer phraſe, the virtue of a horſe or a dog, would redound more to his honour. But Sir John is no more; our buſineſs is with Johnſon. The members of his club were reſpectable for their rank, their talents, and their literature. They attended with punctuality till about Midſummer 1784, when, with ſome appearance of health, Johnſon went into Derbyſhire, and thence to Lichfield. While he was in that part of the world, his friends in town were labouring for his benefit. The air of a more ſouthern climate they thought might prolong a valuable life. But a penſion of £300 a year was a ſlender fund for a travelling valetudinarian, and it was not then known that he had ſaved a moderate ſum of money. Mr. Boſwell and Sir Joſhua Reynolds undertook to ſolicit the patronage of the Chancellor. With Lord Thurlow, while he was at the bar, Johnſon was well acquainted. He was often heard to ſay, "Thurlow is a man of ſuch vigour of mind, that I never knew I was to meet him but—I was going to ſay, I was afraid, but that would not be true, for I never was afraid of any man; but I never knew that I was to meet Thurlow, but I knew I had ſomething to encounter." The Chancellor undertook to recommend Johnſon's caſe, but without ſucceſs. To protract if poſſible the days of a man, whom he reſpected, he offered to advance the ſum of five hundred pounds. Being informed of this at Lichfield, Johnſon wrote the following letter.

"After a long and not inattentive obſervation of mankind, the generoſity of your Lordſhip's offer raiſes in me not leſs wonder than gratitude. Bounty, ſo liberally beſtowed, I ſhould gladly receive if my condition made it neceſſary; for to ſuch a mind who would not be proud to own his obligations? But it has pleaſed God to reſtore me to ſo great a meaſure of health, that if I ſhould now appropriate ſo much of a fortune deſtined to do good, I could not eſcape from myſelf the charge of advancing a falſe claim. My journey to the continent, though I once thought it neceſſary, was never much encouraged by my phyſicians; and I was very deſirous that your Lordſhip ſhould be told it by Sir Joſhua Reynolds as an event very uncertain; for, if I grew much better, I ſhould not be willing; if much worſe, I ſhould not be able to migrate. Your Lordſhip was firſt ſolicited without my knowledge; but when I was told that you were pleaſed to honour me with your patronage, I did not expect to hear of a refuſal; yet, as I have had no long time to brood hopes, and have not rioted in imaginary opulence, this cold reception has been ſcarce a diſappointment; and from your Lordſhip's kindneſs I have received a benefit which only men like you are able to beſtow. I ſhall now live mihi carior, with a higher opinion of my own merit. I am, my Lord, your Lordſhip's moſt obliged, moſt grateful, and moſt humble ſervant,

Sept. 1784. SAMUEL JOHNSON."

We have in this inſtance the exertion of two congenial mines; one, with a generous impulſe relieving merit in diſtreſs, and the other, by gratitude and dignity of ſentiment riſing to an equal elevation.

It ſeems, however, that greatneſs of mind is not confined to greatneſs of rank. Dr. Brockleſby was not content to aſſiſt with his medical art; he reſolved to miniſter to his patient's mind, and pluck from his memory the ſorrow which the late refuſal from a high quarter might occaſion. To enable him to viſit the ſouth of France in purſuit of health, he offered from his own funds an annuity of one hundred pounds, payable quarterly. This was a ſweet oblivious antidote, but it was not accepted for the reaſons aſſigned to the Chancellor. The propoſal, however, will do honour to Dr. Brockleſby, as long as liberal ſentiment ſhall be ranked among the ſocial virtues.

In the month of October 1784, we find Dr. Johnſon correſponding with Mr. Nichols, the intelligent compiler of the Gentleman's Magazine, and, in the languor of ſickneſs, ſtill deſirous to contribute all in his power to the advancement of ſcience and uſeful knowledge. He ſays, in a letter to that gentleman, dated Lichfield, October 20, that he ſhould be glad to give ſo ſkilful a lover of Antiquities any information. He adds, "At Aſhburne, where I had very little company, I had the luck to borrow Mr. Bowyer's Life, a book ſo full of contemporary hiſtory, that a literary man muſt find ſome of his old friends. I thought that I could now and then have told you ſome hints worth your notice: We perhaps may talk a life over. I hope we ſhall be much together. You muſt now be to me what you were before, and what dear Mr Allen was beſides. He was taken unexpectedly away, but I think he was a very good man. I have made very little progreſs in recovery. I am very weak, and very ſleepleſs; but I live on and hope."

In that languid condition, he arrived, on the 16th of November, at his houſe in Bolt-court, there to end his days. He laboured with the dropſy and an aſthma. He was attended by Dr. Heberden, Dr. Warren, Dr. Brockleſby, Dr. Butter, and Mr. Cruikſhank, the eminent ſurgeon. Eternity preſented to his mind an aweful proſpect; and, with as much virtue as perhaps ever is the lot of man, he ſhuddered at the thought of his diſſolution. His friends awakened the comfortable reflection of a well-ſpent life; and, as his end drew near, they had the ſatisfaction of ſeeing him compoſed, and even chearful, inſomuch that he was able, in the courſe of his reſtleſs nights, to make tranſlations of Greek epigrams from the Anthologia; and to compoſe a Latin epitaph for his father, his mother, and his brother Nathaniel. He meditated, at the ſame time, a Latin inſcription to the memory of Garrick, but his vigour was exhauſted.

His love of Literature was a paſſion that ſtuck to his laſt ſand. Seven days before his death he wrote the following letter to his friend Mr. Nichols.

"SIR,

"The late learned Mr. Swinton of Oxford, having one day remarked that one man, meaning, I ſuppoſe, no man but himſelf, could aſſign all the parts of the Antient Univerſal Hiſtory to their proper authors, at the requeſt of Sir Robert Chambers, or myſelf, gave the account which I now tranſmit to you in his own hand, being willing that of ſo great a work the hiſtory ſhould be known, and that each writer ſhould receive his due proportion of praiſe from poſterity.

"I recommend to you to preſerve this ſcrap of literary intelligence in Mr. Swinton's own hand, or to depoſit it in the Muſeum,* that the veracity of this account may never be doubted. I am, Sir, your moſt humble ſervant, SAM. JOHNSON."

|| Before this authentic communication, Mr. Nichols had given, in the volume of the Magazine for 1781, p. 370, the following account of the Univerſal Hiſtory. The propoſals were publiſhed October 6, 1729; and the authors of the firſt ſeven volumes were,

On the morning of Dec. 7, Dr. Johnſon requeſted to ſee Mr. Nichols. A few days before, he had borrowed ſome of the early volumes of the Magazine, with a profeſſed intention to point out the pieces which he had written in that collection. The books lay on the table, with many leaves doubled down, and in particular thoſe which contained his ſhare in the Parliamentary Debates. Such was the goodneſs of Johnſon's heart, that he then declared, that "thoſe debates were the only parts of his writings which gave him any compunction; but that at the time he wrote them he had no conception that he was impoſing upon the world, though they were frequently written from very ſlender materials, and often from none at all, the mere coinage of his own imagination." He added, "that he never wrote any part of his work with equal velocity. Three columns of the Magazine in an hour," he ſaid, "was no uncommon effort; which was faſter than moſt perſons could have tranſcribed that quantity. In one day in particular, and that not a very long one, he wrote twelve pages, more in quantity than ever he wrote at any other time, except in the Life of Savage, of which forty-eight pages in octavo were the production of one long day, including a part of the night."

In the courſe of the converſation, he aſked, whether any of the family of Faden the printer were living. Being told that the geographer near Charing-croſs was Faden's ſon, he ſaid, after a ſhort pauſe, "I borrowed a guinea of his father near thirty years ago; be ſo good as to take this, and pay it for me."

Wiſhing to diſcharge every duty, and every obligation, Johnſon recollected another debt of ten pounds, which he had borrowed from his friend Mr. Hamilton the printer, about twenty years before. He ſent the money to Mr. Hamilton at his houſe in Bedford Row, with an apology for the length of time. The Reverend Mr. Strahan was the bearer of the meſſage, about four or five days before Johnſon breathed his laſt.

Mr. Saſtres (whom Dr. Johnſon eſteemed and mentioned in his will) entered the room during his illneſs. Dr. Johnſon, as ſoon as he ſaw him, ſtretched forth his hand, and, in a tone of lamentation, called out, JAM MORITURUS! But the love of life was ſtill an active principle. Feeling himſelf ſwelled with the dropſy, he conceived that, by inciſions in his legs, the water might be diſcharged. Mr. Cruikſhank apprehended that a mortification might be the conſequence; but, to appeaſe a diſtempered fancy, he gently lanced the ſurface. Johnſon cried out, "Deeper, deeper; I want length of life, and you are afraid of giving me pain, which I do not value."

On the 8th of December, the Reverend Mr. Strahan drew his will, by which, after a few legacies, the reſidue, amounting to about fifteen hundred pounds, was bequeathed to Frank, the black ſervant, formerly conſigned to the teſtator by his friend Dr. Bathurſt.

The hiſtory of a death-bed is painful. Mr. Strahan informs us, that the ſtrength of religion prevailed againſt the infirmity of nature; and his foreboding dread of the Divine Juſtice ſubſided into a pious truſt and humble hope of mercy at the Throne of Grace. On Monday the 13th day of December (the laſt of his exiſtence on this ſide the grave) the deſire of life returned with all its former vehemence. He ſtill imagined, that, by puncturing his legs relief might be obtained. At eight in the morning he tried the experiment, but no water followed. In an hour or two after, he fell into a doze, and about ſeven in the evening, expired without a groan.

On the 20th of the month his remains, with due ſolemnities, and a numerous attendance of his friends, were buried in Weſtminſter Abbey, near the foot of Shakeſpeare's monument, and cloſe to the grave of the late Mr. Garrick. The funeral ſervice was read by his friend Dr. Taylor.

A black marble over his grave has the following inſcription:

SAMUEL JOHNSON, LL. D.
obiit XIII die Decembris,
Anno Domini MDCCLXXXIV.
Ætatis ſuæ LXXV.

If we now look back, as from an eminence, to view the ſcenes of life, and the literary labours in which Dr. Johnſon was engaged, we may be able to delineate the features of the man, and to form an eſtimate of his genius.

As a man, Dr. Johnſon ſtands diſplayed in open day light. Nothing remains undiſcovered. Whatever he ſaid is known; and without allowing him the uſual privilege of hazarding ſentiments, and advancing poſitions, for mere amuſement, or the pleaſure of diſcuſſion, Criticiſm has endeavoured to make him anſwerable for what, perhaps, he never ſeriouſly thought. His diary, which has been printed, diſcovers ſtill more. We have before us the very heart of the man, with all his inward conſciouſneſs. And yet neither in the open paths of life, nor in his ſecret receſſes, has any one vice been diſcovered. We ſee him reviewing every year of his life, and ſeverely cenſuring himſelf, for not keeping reſolutions, which morbid melancholy, and other bodily infirmities, rendered impracticable. We ſee him for every little defect impoſing on himſelf voluntary penance, going through the day with only one cup of tea without milk, and to the laſt, amidſt paroxyſms and remiſſions of illneſs, forming plans of ſtudy and reſolutions to amend his life.* Many of his ſcruples may be called weakneſſes; but they are the weakneſſes of a good, a pious, and moſt excellent man.

His perſon, it is well known, was large and unwieldy. His nerves were affected by that diſorder, for which, at two years of age, he was preſented to the royal touch. His head ſhook, and involuntary motions made it uncertain that his legs and arms would, even at a tea-table, remain in their proper place. A perſon of Lord Cheſterfield's delicacy might in his company be in a fever. He would ſometimes of his own accord do things inconſiſtent with the eſtabliſhed modes of behaviour. Sitting at table with the celebrated Mrs. Cholmondeley, who exerted herſelf to circulate the ſubſcription for Shakeſpeare, he took hold of her hand in the middle of dinner, and held it cloſe to his eye, wondering at the delicacy and the whiteneſs, till with a ſmile ſhe aſked, Will he give it to me again when he has done with it? The exteriors of politeneſs did not belong to Johnſon. Even that civility which proceeds, or ought to proceed, from the mind, was ſometimes violated. His morbid melancholy had an effect on his temper; his paſſions were irritable; and the pride of ſcience, as well as of a fierce independent ſpirit, inflamed him on ſome occaſions above all bounds of moderation. Though not in the ſhade of academic bowers, he led a ſcholaſtic life; and the habit of pronouncing deciſions to his friends and viſitors gave him a dictatorial manner, which was much enforced by a voice naturally loud, and often overſtretched. Metaphyſical diſcuſſion, moral theory, ſyſtems of religion, and anecdotes of literature, were his favourite topics. General hiſtory had little of his regard. Biography was his delight. The proper ſtudy of mankind is man. Sooner than hear of the Punic war, he would be rude to the perſon that introduced the ſubject.

Johnſon was born a logician; one of thoſe, to whom only books of logick are ſaid to be of uſe. In conſequence of his ſkill in that art, he loved argumentation. No man thought more profoundly, nor with ſuch acute diſcernment. A fallacy could not ſtand before him: it was ſure to be refuted by ſtrength of reaſoning, and a preciſion both in idea and expreſſion almoſt unequalled. When he choſe by apt illuſtration to place the argument of his adverſary in a ludicrous light, one was almoſt inclined to think ridicule the teſt of truth. He was ſurpriſed to be told, but it is certainly true, that, with great powers of mind, wit and humour were his ſhining talents. That he often argued for the ſake of a triumph over his adverſary, cannot be diſſembled. Dr. Roſe, of Chiſwick, has been heard to tell of a friend of his, who thanked him for introducing him to Dr. Johnſon, as he had been convinced, in the courſe of a long diſpute, that an opinion which he had embraced as a ſettled truth, was no better than a vulgar error. This being reported to Johnſon, "Nay," ſaid he, "do not let him be thankful, for he was right, and I was wrong." Like his uncle Andrew, in the ring at Smithfield, Johnſon in a circle of diſputants, was determined neither to be thrown nor conquered. Notwithſtanding all his piety, ſelf-government, or the command of his paſſions in converſation, do not ſeem to have been among his attainments. Whenever he thought the contention was for ſuperiority, he has been known to break out with violence, and even ferocity. When the fray was over, he generally ſoftened into repentance, and, by conciliating meaſures, took care that no animoſity ſhould be left rankling in the breaſt of his antagoniſt. Of this defect he ſeems to have been conſcious. In a letter to Mrs. Thrale, he ſays, "Poor Baretti! do not quarrel with him; to neglect him a little will be ſufficient. He means only to be frank and manly, and independent, and, perhaps, as you ſay, a little wiſe. To be frank, he thinks, is to be cynical; and to be independent, is to be rude. Forgive him, deareſt lady, the rather, becauſe of his miſbehaviour I am afraid he learned part of me. I hope to ſet him hereafter a better example." For his own intolerant and overbearing ſpirit he apologized by obſerving, that it had done ſome good; obſcenity and impiety were repreſſed in his company.

It was late in life before he had the habit of mixing, otherwiſe than occaſionally, with polite company. At Mr. Thrale's he ſaw a conſtant ſucceſſion of well-accompliſhed viſitors. In that ſociety he began to wear off the rugged points of his own character. He ſaw the advantages of mutual civility, and endeavoured to profit by the models before him. He aimed at what has been called by Swift the leſſer morals, and by Cicero minores virtutes. His endeavour, though new and late, gave pleaſure to all his acquaintance. Men were glad to ſee that he was willing to be communicative on equal terms and reciprocal complacence. The time was then expected when he was to ceaſe being what George Garrick, brother to the celebrated actor, called him the firſt time he heard him converſe, "A TREMENDOUS COMPANION." He certainly wiſhed to be polite, and even thought himſelf ſo; but his civility ſtill retained ſomething uncouth and harſh. His manners took a milder tone, but the endeavour was too palpably ſeen. He laboured even in trifles. He was a giant gaining a purchaſe to lift a feather.

* On the ſubject of voluntary penance, ſee the Rambler, No. CX.

It is obſerved by the younger Pliny, that in the confines of virtue and great qualities there are generally vices of an oppoſite nature. In Dr. Johnſon not one ingredient can take the name of vice. From his attainments in literature grew the pride of knowledge; and from his powers of reaſoning, the love of diſputation and the vain-glory of ſuperior vigour. His piety, in ſome inſtances, bordered on ſuperſtition. He was willing to believe in preternatural agency, and thought it not more ſtrange that there ſhould be evil ſpirits than evil men. Even the queſtion about ſecond ſight held him in ſuſpence. "Second Sight," Mr. Pennant tells us, "is a power of ſeeing images impreſſed on the organs of ſight by the power of fancy, or on the fancy by the diſordered ſpirits operating on the mind. It is the faculty of ſeeing ſpectres or viſions, which repreſent an event actually paſſing at a diſtance, or likely to happen at a future day. In 1771, a gentleman, the laſt who was ſuppoſed to be poſſeſſed of this faculty, had a boat at ſea in a tempeſtuous night, and, being anxious for his freight, ſuddenly ſtarted up, and ſaid his men would be drowned, for he had ſeen them paſs before him with wet garments and dropping locks. The event correſponded with his diſordered fancy. And thus," continues Mr. Pennant, "a diſtempered imagination, clouded with anxiety, may make an impreſſion on the ſpirits; as perſons, reſtleſs and troubled with indignation, ſee various forms and figures while they lie awake in bed." This is what Dr. Johnſon was not willing to reject. He wiſhed for ſome poſitive proof of communications with another world. His benevolence embraced the whole race of man, and yet was tinctured with particular prejudices. He was pleaſed with the miniſter in the Iſle of Sky, and loved him ſo much that he began to wiſh him not a Preſbyterian. To that body of Diſſenters his zeal for the Eſtabliſhed Church made him in ſome degree an adverſary; and his attachment to a mixed and limited Monarchy led him to declare open war againſt what he called a ſullen Republican. He would rather praiſe a man of Oxford than of Cambridge. He diſliked a Whig, and loved a Tory. Theſe were the ſhades of his character, which it has been the buſineſs of certain party-writers to repreſent in the darkeſt colours.

Since virtue, or moral goodneſs, conſiſts in a juſt conformity of our actions to the relations in which we ſtand to the Supreme Being and to our fellow-creatures, where ſhall we find a man who has been, or endeavoured to be, more diligent in the diſcharge of thoſe eſſential duties? His firſt prayer was compoſed in 1738; he continued thoſe fervent ejaculations of piety to the end of his life. In his meditations we ſee him ſcrutinizing himſelf with ſeverity, and aiming at perfection unattainable by man. His duty to his neighbour conſiſted in univerſal benevolence, and a conſtant aim at the production of happineſs. Who was more ſincere and ſteady in his friendſhips? It has been ſaid that there was no real affection between him and Garrick. On the part of the latter, there might be ſome corroſions of jealouſy. The character of PROSPERO, in the Rambler, No. 200, was, beyond all queſtion, occaſioned by Garrick's oſtentatious diſplay of furniture and Dreſden china. It was ſurely fair to take from this incident a hint for a moral eſſay; and, though no more was intended, Garrick, we are told, remembered it with uneaſineſs. He was alſo hurt that his Lichfield friend did not think ſo highly of his dramatic art as the reſt of the world. The fact was, Johnſon could not ſee the paſſions as they roſe and chaſed one another in the varied features of that expreſſive face; and by his own manner of reciting verſes, which was wonderfully impreſſive, he plainly ſhewed that he thought there was too much of artificial tone and meaſured cadence in the declamation of the theatre. The preſent writer well remembers being in converſation with Dr. Johnſon near the ſide of the ſcenes during the tragedy of King Lear: when Garrick came off the ſtage, he ſaid, "You two talk ſo loud you deſtroy all my feelings." "Prithee," replied Johnſon, "do not talk of feelings, Punch has no feelings." This ſeems to have been his ſettled opinion; admirable as Garrick's imitation of nature always was, Johnſon thought it no better than mere mimickry. Yet it is certain that he eſteemed and loved Garrick; that he dwelt with pleaſure on his praiſe; and uſed to declare, that he deſerved his great ſucceſs, becauſe on all applications for charity he gave more than was aſked. After Garrick's death he never talked of him without a tear in his eyes. He offered, if Mrs. Garrick would deſire it of him, to be the editor of his works and the hiſtorian of his life. It has been mentioned that on his death-bed he thought of writing a Latin inſcription to the memory of his friend. Numbers are ſtill living who know theſe facts, and ſtill remember with gratitude the friendſhip which he ſhewed to them with unaltered affection for a number of years. His humanity and generoſity, in proportion to his ſlender income, were unbounded. It has been truly ſaid, that the lame, the blind, and the ſorrowful, found in his houſe a ſure retreat. A ſtrict adherence to truth he conſidered as a ſacred obligation, inſomuch that, in relating the moſt minute anecdote, he would not allow himſelf the ſmalleſt addition to embelliſh his ſtory. The late Mr. Tyers, who knew Dr. Johnſon intimately, obſerved, "that he always talked as if he was talking upon oath." After a long acquaintance with this excellent man, and an attentive retroſpect to his whole conduct, ſuch is the light in which he appears to the writer of this eſſay. The following lines of Horace may be deemed his picture in miniature:

> Iracundior eſt paulo, minus aptus acutis
> Naribus horum hominum, rideri poſſit, eo quod
> Ruſticius tonſo toga defluit, & male laxus
> In pede calceus hæret; at eſt bonus, ut melior vir
> Non alius quiſquam; at tibi amicus, at ingenium ingens,
> Inculto latet hoc ſub corpore.*

It remains to give a review of Johnſon's Works; and this, it is imagined, will not be unwelcome to the reader.

Like Milton and Addiſon, he ſeems to have been fond of his Latin poetry. Thoſe compoſitions ſhew that he was an early ſcholar; but his verſes have not the graceful eaſe that gave ſo much ſuavity to the poems of Addiſon. The tranſlation of the Meſſiah labours under two diſadvantages; it is firſt to be compared with Pope's inimitable performance, and afterwards with the Pollio of Virgil. It may appear trifling to remark, that he has made the letter o, in the word Virgo, long and ſhort in the ſame line; VIRGO, VIRGO PARIT. But the tranſlation has great merit, and ſome admirable lines. In the odes there is a ſweet flexibility, particularly, To his worthy friend Dr. Laurence; on himſelf at the theatre, March 8, 1771; the Ode in the iſle of Sky; and that to Mrs. Thrale from the ſame place.

His Engliſh poetry is ſuch as leaves room to think, if he had devoted himſelf to the Muſes, that he would have been the rival of Pope. His firſt production in this kind was LONDON, a poem in imitation of the third ſatire of Juvenal. The vices of the metropolis are placed in the room of ancient manners. The author had heated his mind with the ardour of Juvenal, and, having ſkill to poliſh his numbers, he became a ſharp accuſer of the times. The VANITY OF HUMAN WISHES is an imitation of the tenth ſatire of the ſame author. Though it is tranſlated by Dryden, Johnſon's imitation approaches neareſt to the ſpirit of the original. The ſubject is taken from the ALCIBIADES of PLATO, and has an intermixture of the ſentiments of SOCRATES concerning the object of prayers offered up to the Deity. The general propoſition is, that good and evil are ſo little underſtood by mankind, that their wiſhes when granted are always deſtructive. This is exemplified in a variety of inſtances, ſuch as riches, ſtate-preferment, eloquence, military glory, long life, and the advantages of form and beauty. Juvenal's concluſion is worthy of a Chriſtian poet, and ſuch a pen as Johnſon's. "Let us," he ſays, "leave it to the Gods to judge what is fitteſt for us. Man is dearer to his Creator than to himſelf. If we muſt pray for ſpecial favour, let it be for a ſound mind in a ſound body. Let us pray for fortitude, that we may think the labours of Hercules and all his ſufferings, preferable to a life of luxury and the ſoft repoſe of SARDANAPALUS. This is a bleſſing within the reach of every man; this we can give ourſelves. It is virtue, and virtue only, that can make us happy." In the tranſlation the zeal of the Chriſtian conſpired with the warmth and energy of the poet; but Juvenal is not eclipſed. For the various characters in the original the reader is pleaſed, in the Engliſh poem, to meet with Cardinal Wolſey, Buckingham ſtabbed by Felton, Lord Strafford, Clarendon, Charles XII. of Sweden; and for Tully and Demoſthenes, Lydiat, Galileo, and Archbiſhop Laud. It is owing to Johnſon's delight in biography that the name of LYDIAT is called forth from obſcurity. It may, therefore, not be uſeleſs to tell, that LYDIAT was a learned divine and mathematician in the beginning of the laſt century. He attacked the doctrine of Ariſtotle and Scaliger, and wrote a number of ſermons on the harmony of the Evangeliſts. With all his merit, he lay in the priſon of Bacardo at Oxford, till Biſhop Uſher, Laud, and others, paid his debts. He petitioned Charles I. to be ſent to Ethiopia to procure manuſcripts. Having ſpoken in favour of monarchy and biſhops, he was plundered by the Puritans, and twice carried away a priſoner from his rectory. He died very poor in 1646.

The Tragedy of Irene is founded on a paſſage in KNOLLES's Hiſtory of the Turks; an author highly commended in the Rambler, No. 122. An incident in the Life of Mahomet the Great, firſt emperor of the Turks, is the hinge on which the fable is made to move. The ſubſtance of the ſtory is ſhortly this. In 1453 Mahomet laid ſiege to Conſtantinople, and, having reduced the place, became enamoured of a fair Greek, whoſe name was IRENE. The ſultan invited her to embrace the law of the Prophet, and to grace his throne. Enraged at this intended marriage, the Janizaries formed a conſpiracy to dethrone the emperor. To avert the impending danger, Mahomet, in a full aſſembly of the grandees, "Catching with one hand," as KNOLLES relates it, "the fair Greek by the hair of her head, and drawing his falchion with the other, he, at one blow, ſtruck off her head, to the great terror of them all; and, having ſo done, ſaid unto them, Now, by this, judge whether your emperor is able to bridle his affections or not." The ſtory is ſimple, and it remained for the author to amplify it with proper epiſodes, and give it complication and variety. The cataſtrophe is changed, and horror gives place to terror and pity. But, after all, the fable is cold and languid. There is not, throughout the piece, a ſingle ſituation to excite curioſity, and raiſe a conflict of paſſions. The diction is nervous, rich, and elegant; but ſplendid language, and melodious numbers, will make a fine poem, not a tragedy. The ſentiments are beautiful, always happily expreſſed, but ſeldom appropriated to the character, and generally too philoſophic. What Johnſon has ſaid of the Tragedy of Cato may be applied to Irene: "It is rather a poem in dialogue than a drama; rather a ſucceſſion of juſt ſentiments in elegant language, than a repreſentation of natural affections. Nothing excites or aſſuages emotion. The events are expected without ſolicitude, and are remembered without joy or ſorrow. Of the agents we have no care; we conſider not what they are doing, nor what they are ſuffering; we wiſh only to know what they have to ſay. It is unaffecting elegance, and chill philoſophy." The following ſpeech, in the mouth of a Turk, who is ſuppoſed to have heard of the Britiſh conſtitution, has been often ſelected from the numberleſs beauties with which IRENE abounds:

> "If there be any land, as fame reports,
> Where common laws reſtrain the prince and ſubject;
> A happy land, where circulating pow'r
> Flows through each member of th' embodied ſtate;
> Sure, not unconſcious of the mighty bleſſing,
> Her grateful ſons ſhine bright with ev'ry virtue;
> Untainted with the LUST OF INNOVATION;
> Sure all unite to hold her league of rule,
> Unbroken as the ſacred chain of Nature,
> That links the jarring elements in peace."

Theſe are Britiſh ſentiments. Above forty years ago they found an echo in the breaſt of applauding audiences, and, to this hour, they are the voice of the people, in defiance of the metaphyſicks and the new lights of certain politicians, who would gladly find their private advantage in the diſaſters of their country; a race of men, quibus nulla ex honeſto ſpes.

The Prologue to Irene is written with elegance, and, in a peculiar ſtrain, ſhews the literary pride and lofty ſpirit of the author. The Epilogue, we are told in a late publication, was written by Sir William Young. This is a new diſcovery, but by no means probable. When the appendages to a Dramatic Performance are not aſſigned to a friend, or an unknown hand, or a perſon of faſhion, they are always ſuppoſed to be written by the author of the Play. It is to be wiſhed, however, that the Epilogue in queſtion could be transferred to any other writer. It is the worſt Jeu d'Eſprit that ever fell from Johnſon's pen.

An account of his various pieces, ſuch as miſcellaneous tracts, and philological diſſertations, would lead beyond the intended limits of this eſſay. It will ſuffice to ſay, that they are the productions of a man who never wanted decorations of language, and always taught his reader to think. The life of the late king of Pruſſia, as far as it extends, is a model of the biographical ſtyle. The Review of THE ORIGIN OF EVIL was, perhaps, written with aſperity; but the angry epitaph, which it provoked from SOAME JENYNS, was an ill-timed reſentment, unworthy of the genius of that amiable author.

The Rambler may be conſidered as Johnſon's great work. It was the baſis of that high reputation which went on increaſing to the end of his days. The circulation of thoſe periodical eſſays was not, at firſt, equal to their merit. They had not, like the Spectators, the art of charming by variety; and indeed how could it be expected? The wits of queen Anne's reign ſent their contributions to the Spectator; and Johnſon ſtood alone. A ſtage-coach, ſays Sir Richard Steele, muſt go forward on ſtated days, whether there are paſſengers or not. So it was with the Rambler, every Tueſday and Saturday, for two years. In this collection Johnſon is the great moral teacher of his countrymen; his eſſays form a body of ethics; the obſervations on life and manners are acute and inſtructive; and the papers, profeſſedly critical, ſerve to promote the cauſe of literature. It muſt, however, be acknowledged, that a ſettled gloom hangs over the author's mind; and all the eſſays, except eight or ten, coming from the ſame fountain head, no wonder that they have the racineſs of the ſoil from which they ſprung. Of this uniformity Johnſon was ſenſible. He uſed to ſay, that if he had joined a friend or two, who would have been able to intermix papers of a ſprightly turn, the collection would have been more miſcellaneous, and, by conſequence, more agreeable to the generality of readers. This he uſed to illuſtrate by repeating two beautiful ſtanzas from his own Ode to Cave, or Sylvanus Urban:

> Non ulla Muſis pagina gratior,
> Quam quæ ſeveris ludicra jungere
> Novit, fatigatamque nugis
> Utilibus recreare mentem.
> Texente nymphis ſerta Lycoride,
> Roſæ ruborem ſic viola adjuvat
> Immiſta, ſic Iris refulget
> Æthereis variata fucis.

It is remarkable, that the pomp of diction, which has been objected to Johnſon, was firſt aſſumed in the Rambler. His Dictionary was going on at the ſame time, and, in the courſe of that work, as he grew familiar with technical and ſcholaſtic words, he thought that the bulk of his readers were equally learned; or at leaſt would admire the ſplendour and dignity of the ſtyle. And yet it is well known, that he praiſed in Cowley the eaſe and unaffected ſtructure of the ſentences. Cowley may be placed at the head of thoſe who cultivated a clear and natural ſtyle. Dryden, Tillotſon, and Sir William Temple, followed. Addiſon, Swift, and Pope, with more correctneſs, carried our language well nigh to perfection. Of Addiſon, Johnſon was uſed to ſay, He is the Raphael of Eſſay Writers. How he differed ſo widely from ſuch elegant models is a problem not to be ſolved, unleſs it be true that he took an early tincture from the writers of the laſt century, particularly Sir Tho. Browne. Hence the peculiarities of his ſtyle, new combinations, ſentences of an unuſual ſtructure, and words derived from the learned languages. His own account of the matter is, "When common words were leſs pleaſing to the ear, or leſs diſtinct in their ſignification, I familiarized the terms of philoſophy, by applying them to popular ideas." But he forgot the obſervation of Dryden: If too many foreign words are poured in upon us, it looks as if they were deſigned, not to aſſiſt the natives, but to conquer them. There is, it muſt be admitted, a ſwell of language, often out of all proportion to the ſentiment; but there is, in general, a fullneſs of mind, and the thought ſeems to expand with the ſound of the words. Determined to diſcard colloquial barbariſms and licentious idioms, he forgot the elegant ſimplicity that diſtinguiſhes the writings of Addiſon. He had what Locke calls a round-about view of his ſubject; and, though he was never tainted, like many modern wits, with the ambition of ſhining in paradox, he may be fairly called an ORIGINAL THINKER. His reading was extenſive. He treaſured in his mind whatever was worthy of notice, but he added to it from his own meditation. He collected, quæ reconderet, auctaque promeret. Addiſon was not ſo profound a thinker. He was born to write, converſe, and live with eaſe; and he found an early patron in Lord Somers. He depended, however, more upon a fine taſte, than the vigour of his mind. His Latin Poetry ſhews, that he reliſhed, with a juſt ſelection, all the refined and delicate beauties of the Roman claſſicks; and when he cultivated his native language, no wonder that he formed that graceful ſtyle, which has been ſo juſtly admired; ſimple, yet elegant; adorned, yet never over-wrought; rich in alluſion, yet pure and perſpicuous; correct, without labour, and, though ſometimes deficient in ſtrength, yet always muſical. His eſſays, in general, are on the ſurface of life; if ever original, it was in pieces of humour. Sir Roger de Coverley, and the Tory Fox-hunter, need not be mentioned. Johnſon had a fund of humour, but he did not know it, nor was he willing to deſcend to the familiar idiom and the variety of diction which that mode of compoſition required. The letter, in the Rambler, No. 12, from a young girl that wants a place, will illuſtrate this obſervation. Addiſon poſſeſſed an unclouded imagination, alive to the firſt object of nature and of art. He reaches the ſublime without any apparent effort. When he tells us, "If we conſider the fixed ſtars as ſo many oceans of flame, that are each of them attended with a different ſet of planets; if we ſtill diſcover new firmaments and new lights, that are ſunk further in thoſe unfathomable depths of æther, we are loſt in a labyrinth of ſuns and worlds, and confounded with the magnificence and immenſity of nature;" the eaſe, with which this paſſage riſes to unaffected grandeur, is the ſecret charm that captivates the reader. Johnſon is always lofty; he ſeems, to uſe Dryden's phraſe, to be o'er-inform'd with meaning, and his words do not appear to himſelf adequate to his conception. He moves in ſtate, and his periods are always harmonious. His Oriental Tales are in the true ſtyle of Eaſtern magnificence, and yet none of them are ſo much admired as the Viſions of Mirza. In matters of criticiſm, Johnſon is never the echo of preceding writers. He thinks and decides for himſelf. If we except the Eſſays on the Pleaſures of Imagination, Addiſon cannot be called a philoſophical critick. His moral Eſſays are beautiful; but in that province nothing can exceed the Rambler, though Johnſon uſed to ſay, that the Eſſay on The burthens of mankind (in the Spectator, No. 558) was the moſt exquiſite he had ever read. Talking of himſelf, Johnſon ſaid, "Topham Beauclerk has wit, and every thing comes from him with eaſe; but when I ſay a good thing, I ſeem to labour." When we compare him with Addiſon, the contraſt is ſtill ſtronger. Addiſon lends grace and ornament to truth; Johnſon gives it force and energy. Addiſon makes virtue amiable; Johnſon repreſents it as an awful duty. Addiſon inſinuates himſelf with an air of modeſty; Johnſon commands like a dictator; but a dictator in his ſplendid robes, not labouring at the plough. Addiſon is the Jupiter of Virgil, with placid ſerenity talking to Venus:

> "Vultu, quo cœlum tempeſtateſque ſerenat."

Johnſon is JUPITER TONANS: he darts his lightning, and rolls his thunder, in the cauſe of virtue and piety. The language ſeems to fall ſhort of his ideas; he pours along, familiariſing the terms of philoſophy, with bold inverſions, and ſonorous periods; but we may apply to him what Pope has ſaid of Homer: "It is the ſentiment that ſwells and fills out the diction, which riſes with it, and forms itſelf about it; like glaſs in the furnace, which grows to a greater magnitude, as the breath within is more powerful, and the heat more intenſe."

It is not the deſign of this compariſon to decide between thoſe two eminent writers. In matters of taſte every reader will chuſe for himſelf. Johnſon is always profound, and of courſe gives the fatigue of thinking. Addiſon charms while he inſtructs; and writing, as he always does, a pure, an elegant, and idiomatic ſtyle, he may be pronounced the ſafeſt model for imitation.

The eſſays written by Johnſon in the Adventurer may be called a continuation of the Rambler. The IDLER, in order to be conſiſtent with the aſſumed character, is written with abated vigour, in a ſtyle of eaſe and unlaboured elegance. It is the Odyſſey after the Iliad. Intenſe thinking would not become the IDLER. The firſt number preſents a well-drawn portrait of an Idler, and from that character no deviation could be made. Accordingly, Johnſon forgets his auſtere manner, and plays us into ſenſe. He ſtill continues his lectures on human life, but he adverts to common occurrences, and is often content with the topick of the day. An advertiſement in the beginning of the firſt volume informs us, that twelve entire Eſſays were a contribution from different hands. One of theſe, No. 33, is the journal of a Senior Fellow at Cambridge, but, as Johnſon, being himſelf an original thinker, always revolted from ſervile imitation, he has printed the piece, with an apology, importing that the journal of a citizen in the Spectator almoſt precluded the attempt of any ſubſequent writer. This account of the Idler may be cloſed, after obſerving, that the author's mother being buried on the 23d of January 1759, there is an admirable paper, occaſioned by that event, on Saturday the 27th of the ſame month, No. 41. The reader, if he pleaſes, may compare it with another fine paper in the Rambler, No. 54, on the conviction that ruſhes on the mind at the bed of a dying friend.

"Raſſelas," ſays Sir John Hawkins, "is a ſpecimen of our language ſcarcely to be paralleled; it is written in a ſtyle refined to a degree of immaculate purity, and diſplays the whole force of turgid eloquence." One cannot but ſmile at this encomium. Raſſelas is undoubtedly both elegant and ſublime. It is a view of human life, diſplayed, it muſt be owned, in gloomy colours. The author's natural melancholy, depreſſed, at the time, by the approaching diſſolution of his mother, darkened the picture. A tale, that ſhould keep curioſity awake by the artifice of unexpected incidents, was not the deſign of a mind pregnant with better things. He, who reads the heads of the chapters, will find, that it is not a courſe of adventures that invites him forward, but a diſcuſſion of intereſting queſtions; Reflections on Human Life; the Hiſtory of Imlac, the Man of Learning; a Diſſertation upon Poetry; the Character of a wiſe and happy Man, who diſcourſes with energy on the government of the paſſions and on a ſudden, when Death deprives him of his daughter, forgets all his maxims of wiſdom and the eloquence that adorned them, yielding to the ſtroke of affliction with all the vehemence of the bittereſt anguiſh. It is by pictures of life, and profound moral reflection, that expectation is engaged and gratified throughout the work. The hiſtory of the Mad Aſtronomer, who imagines that, for five years, he poſſeſſed the regulation of the weather, and that the ſun paſſed from tropic to tropic by his direction, repreſents in ſtriking colours the ſad effects of a diſtempered imagination. It becomes the more affecting, when we recollect that it proceeds from one, who lived in fear of the ſame dreadful viſitation; from one who ſays emphatically, "Of the uncertainties in our preſent ſtate, the moſt dreadful and alarming is the uncertain continuance of reaſon." The enquiry into the cauſe of madneſs, and the dangerous prevalence of imagination, till, in time, ſome particular train of ideas fixes the attention, and the mind recurs conſtantly to the favourite conception, is carried on in a ſtrain of acute obſervation; but it leaves us room to think, that the author was tranſcribing from his own apprehenſions. The diſcourſe on the nature of the ſoul gives us all that philoſophy knows, not without a tincture of ſuperſtition. It is remarkable that the vanity of human purſuits was about the ſame time, the ſubject that employed both Johnſon and Voltaire; but Candide is the work of a lively imagination, and Raſſelas, with all its ſplendour of eloquence, exhibits a gloomy picture. It ſhould, however, be remembered, that the world has known the WEEPING as well as the LAUGHING philoſopher.

The Dictionary does not properly fall within the province of this eſſay. He who reads the preface towards the cloſe of it, without acknowledging the force of the pathetick and ſublime, muſt have more inſenſibility in his compoſition than uſually falls to the ſhare of man. The work itſelf, though in ſome inſtances abuſe has been loud, and in others malice has endeavoured to undermine its fame, ſtill remains the MOUNT ATLAS of Engliſh Literature.

> Though ſtorms and tempeſts thunder on its brow,
> And oceans break their billows at its feet,
> It ſtands unmov'd, and glories in its height.

That Johnſon was eminently qualified for the office of a commentator on Shakeſpeare, no man can doubt; but it was an office which he never cordially embraced. The publick expected more than he had diligence to perform; and yet his edition has been the ground on which every ſubſequent commentator has choſe to build. One note, for its ſingularity, may be thought worthy of notice in this place. Hamlet ſays, For if the ſun breed maggots in a dead dog, being a God-kiſſing carrion. In this Warburton diſcovered the origin of evil. Hamlet, he ſays, breaks off in the middle of the ſentence; but the learned commentator knows what he was going to ſay, and, being unwilling to keep the ſecret, he goes on in a train of philoſophical reaſoning that leaves the reader in aſtoniſhment. Johnſon, with true piety, adopts the fanciful hypotheſis, declaring it to be a noble emendation, which almoſt ſets the critic on a level with the author. The general obſervations at the end of the ſeveral plays, with great elegance and preciſion, give a ſummary view of each drama. The preface is a tract of great erudition and philoſophical criticiſm.

Johnſon's political pamphlets, whatever was his motive for writing them, whether gratitude for his penſion, or the ſolicitation of men in power, did not ſupport the cauſe for which they were undertaken. They are written in a ſtyle truly harmonious, and with his uſual dignity of language. When it is ſaid that he advanced poſitions repugnant to the common rights of mankind, the virulence of party may be ſuſpected. It is, perhaps, true that in the clamour raiſed throughout the kingdom Johnſon over-heated his mind; but he was a friend to the rights of man, and he was greatly ſuperior to the littleneſs of ſpirit that might incline him to advance what he did not think and firmly believe. In the Falſe Alarm, though many of the moſt eminent men in the kingdom concurred in petitions to the throne, yet Johnſon, having well ſurveyed the maſs of the people, has given, with great humour and no leſs truth, what may be called, the birth, parentage, and education of a remonſtrance. On the ſubject of Falkland's iſlands, the fine diſſuaſive from too haſtily involving the world in the calamities of war, muſt extort applauſe even from the party that wiſhed, at that time, for ſcenes of tumult and commotion. It was in the ſame pamphlet that Johnſon offered battle to JUNIUS; a writer, who, by the uncommon elegance of his ſtyle, charmed every reader, though his object was to inflame the nation in favour of a faction. Junius fought in the dark; he ſaw his enemy and had his full blow, while he himſelf remained ſafe in obſcurity. But let us not, ſaid Johnſon, miſtake the venom of the ſhaft for the vigour of the bow. The keen invective which he publiſhed on that occaſion, promiſed a paper war between two combatants, who knew the uſe of their weapons. A battle between them was as eagerly expected as between Mendoza and Big Ben. But Junius, whatever was his reaſon, never returned to the field. He laid down his arms, and has, ever ſince, remained as ſecret as the MAN IN THE MASK in Voltaire's Hiſtory.

The account of his journey to the Hebrides or Weſtern Iſles of Scotland, is a model for ſuch as ſhall hereafter relate their travels. The author did not viſit that part of the world in the character of an Antiquary, to amuſe us with wonders taken from the dark and fabulous ages; nor as a Mathematician, to meaſure a degree, and ſettle the longitude and latitude of the ſeveral iſlands. Thoſe, who expected ſuch information, expected what was never intended. In every work regard the writer's end. Johnſon went to ſee men and manners, modes of life, and the progreſs of civilization. His remarks are ſo artfully blended with the rapidity and elegance of his narrative, that the reader is inclined to wiſh, as Johnſon did with regard to GRAY, that to travel, and to tell his travels, had been more of his employment.

As to Johnſon's Parliamentary Debates, nothing with propriety can be ſaid in this place. They are collected in two volumes by Mr. Stockdale, and the flow of eloquence which runs through the ſeveral ſpeeches is ſufficiently known.

It will not be uſeleſs to mention two more volumes, which contain a ſet of Sermons left for publication by John Taylor, LL.D. The Rev. Mr. Hayes, who uſhered theſe Diſcourſes into the world, has not given them as the compoſition of Dr. Taylor. All he could ſay for his departed friend was, that he left them in ſilence among his papers. Mr. Hayes knew them to be the production of a ſuperior mind; and the writer of theſe Memoirs owes it to the candour of that elegant ſcholar, that he is now warranted to give an additional proof of Johnſon's ardour in the cauſe of piety, and every moral duty. The laſt diſcourſe in the collection was intended to be delivered by Dr. Taylor at the funeral of Johnſon's wife; but that Reverend gentleman declined the office, becauſe, as he told Mr. Hayes, the praiſe of the deceaſed was too much amplified. He, who reads the piece, will find it a beautiful moral leſſon, written with temper, and no where overcharged with ambitious ornaments. The reſt of the Diſcourſes were the fund, which Dr. Taylor, from time to time, carried with him to his pulpit. He had the LARGEST BULL* in England, and ſome of the beſt Sermons.

We come now to the Lives of the Poets, a work undertaken at the age of ſeventy, yet the moſt brilliant, and certainly the moſt popular of all our Author's writings. For this performance he needed little preparation. Attentive always to the hiſtory of letters, and by his own natural bias fond of Biography, he was the more willing to embrace the propoſition of the Bookſellers. He was verſed in the whole body of Engliſh Poetry, and his rules of criticiſm were ſettled with preciſion. The diſſertation, in the Life of Cowley, on the metaphyſical Poets of the laſt century, has the attraction of novelty as well as ſound obſervation. The writers, who followed Dr. Donne, went in queſt of ſomething better than truth and nature. As Sancho ſays in Don Quixotte, they wanted better bread than is made with wheat. They took pains to bewilder themſelves, and were ingenious for no other purpoſe than to err. In Johnſon's review of Cowley's works, falſe wit is detected in all its ſhapes, and the Gothic taſte for glittering conceits, and far-fetched alluſions, is exploded, never, it is hoped, to revive again.

An author, who has publiſhed his obſervations on the Life and Writings of Dr. Johnſon, ſpeaking of the Lives of the Poets, ſays, "Theſe compoſitions, abounding in ſtrong and acute remark, and with many fine and even ſublime paſſages, have unqueſtionably great merit; but if they be regarded merely as containing narrations of the Lives, delineations of the characters, and ſtrictures of the ſeveral authors, they are far from being always to be depended on." He adds, "The characters are ſometimes partial, and there is ſometimes TOO MUCH MALIGNITY of miſrepreſentation, to which, perhaps, may be joined no inconſiderable portion of erroneous criticiſm." The ſeveral clauſes of this cenſure deſerve to be anſwered as fully as the limits of this eſſay will permit.

In the firſt place, the facts are related upon the beſt intelligence, and the beſt vouchers that could be gleaned, after a great lapſe of time. Probability was to be inferred from ſuch materials as could be procured, and no man better underſtood the nature of hiſtorical evidence than Dr. Johnſon; no man was more religiouſly an obſerver of truth. If his Hiſtory is any where defective, it muſt be imputed to the want of better information, and the errors of uncertain tradition.

Ad nos vix tenuis famæ perlabitur aura.

If the ſtrictures on the works of the various authors are not always ſatisfactory, and if erroneous criticiſm may ſometimes be ſuſpected, who can hope that in matters of taſte all ſhall agree? The inſtances in which the publick mind has differed from the poſitions advanced by the author, are few in number. It has been ſaid, that juſtice has not been done to Swift; that Gay and Prior are undervalued; and that Gray has been harſhly treated. This charge, perhaps, ought not to be diſputed. Johnſon, it is well known, had conceived a prejudice againſt Swift. His friends trembled for him when he was writing that life, but were pleaſed, at laſt, to ſee it executed with temper and moderation. As to Prior, it is probable that he gave his real opinion, but an opinion that will not be adopted by men of lively fancy. With regard to Gray, when he condemns the apoſtrophe, in which Father Thames is deſired to tell who drives the hoop, or toſſes the ball, and then adds, that Father Thames had no better means of knowing than himſelf; when he compares the abrupt beginning of the firſt ſtanza of the bard to the ballad of JOHNNY ARMSTRONG, "Is there ever a man in all Scotland;" there are, perhaps, few friends of Johnſon, who would not wiſh to blot out both the paſſages. It may be queſtioned whether the remarks on Pope's Eſſay on Man can be received without great caution. It has been already mentioned, that Crouſaz, a profeſſor in Switzerland, eminent for his Treatiſe of Logick, ſtarted up a profeſſed enemy to that poem. Johnſon ſays, "his mind was one of thoſe, in which philoſophy and piety are happily united. He looked with diſtruſt upon all metaphyſical ſyſtems of theology, and was perſuaded, that the poſitions of Pope were intended to draw mankind away from Revelation, and to repreſent the whole courſe of things as a neceſſary concatenation of indiſſoluble fatality." This is not the place for a controverſy about the Leibnitzian ſyſtem. Warburton, with all the powers of his large and comprehenſive mind, publiſhed a Vindication of Pope; and yet Johnſon ſays, that, "in many paſſages a religious eye may eaſily diſcover expreſſions not very favourable to morals, or to liberty." This ſentence is ſevere, and, perhaps, dogmatical. Crouſaz wrote an Examen of THE ESSAY ON MAN, and afterwards a Commentary on every remarkable paſſage; and though it now appears that Mrs. Elizabeth Carter tranſlated the foreign Critick, yet it is certain that Johnſon encouraged the work, and, perhaps, imbibed thoſe early prejudices which adhered to him to the end of his life. He ſhuddered at the idea of irreligion. Hence we are told in the Life of Pope, "Never were penury of knowledge and vulgarity of ſentiment ſo happily diſguiſed; Pope, in the chair of wiſdom, tells much that every man knows, and much that he did not know himſelf; and gives us comfort in the poſition, that though man's a fool, yet God is wiſe; that human advantages are unſtable; that our true honour is, not to have a great part, but to act it well; that virtue only is our own, and that happineſs is always in our power. The reader, when he meets all this in its new array, no longer knows the talk of his mother and his nurſe." But may it not be ſaid, that every ſyſtem of ethics muſt or ought to terminate in plain and general maxims for the uſe of life? and, though in ſuch axioms no diſcovery is made, does not the beauty of the moral theory conſiſt in the premiſes, and the chain of reaſoning that leads to the concluſion? May not truth, as Johnſon himſelf ſays, be conveyed to the mind by a new train of intermediate images? Pope's doctrine about the ruling paſſion does not ſeem to be refuted, though it is called, in harſh terms, pernicious as well as falſe, tending to eſtabliſh a kind of moral predeſtination, or over-ruling principle, which cannot be reſiſted. But Johnſon was too eaſily alarmed in the cauſe of religion. Organized as the human race is, individuals have different inlets of perception, different powers of mind, and different ſenſations of pleaſure and pain.

* See Johnſon's Letters from Aſhbourne in Vol. VI. of the Poets.

> All ſpread their charms, but charm not all alike,
> On different ſenſes different objects ſtrike;
> Hence different paſſions more or leſs inflame,
> As ſtrong or weak the organs of the frame.
> And hence one maſter-paſſion in the breaſt,
> Like Aaron's ſerpent ſwallows up the reſt.

Brumoy ſays, Paſcal from his infancy felt himſelf a geometrician; and Vandyke, in like manner, was a painter. Shakeſpeare, who of all poets had the deepeſt inſight into human nature, was aware of a prevailing bias in the operations of every mind. By him we are told, "Maſterleſs paſſion ſways us to the mood of what it likes or loaths."

It remains to enquire, whether in the Lives of the Poets the characters are partial, and too often drawn with malignity of miſrepreſentation. To prove this it is alledged, that Johnſon has miſrepreſented the circumſtances relative to the tranſlation of the firſt Iliad, and maliciouſly aſcribed that performance to Addiſon, inſtead of Tickell, with too much reliance on the teſtimony of Pope, taken from the account in the papers left by Mr. Spence. For a refutation of the fallacy imputed to Addiſon, we are referred to a note in the Biographia Britannica, written by the late Judge Blackſtone, who, it is ſaid, examined the whole matter with accuracy, and found that the firſt regular ſtatement of the accuſation againſt Addiſon was publiſhed by Ruffhead in his Life of Pope, from the materials which he received from Dr. Warburton. But, with all due reference to the learned Judge, whoſe talents deſerve all praiſe, this account is by no means accurate.

Sir Richard Steele, in a dedication of the Comedy of the Drummer to Mr. Congreve, gave the firſt inſight into that buſineſs. He ſays, in a ſtyle of anger and reſentment, "If that gentleman" (Mr. Tickell) "thinks himſelf injured, I will allow I have wronged him upon this iſſue, that (if the reputed tranſlator of the firſt book of Homer ſhall pleaſe to give us another book) there ſhall appear another good judge in poetry, beſides Mr. Alexander Pope, who ſhall like it." The authority of Steele outweighs all opinions founded on vain conjecture, and, indeed, ſeems to be deciſive, ſince we do not find that Tickell, though warmly preſſed, thought proper to vindicate himſelf.

But the grand proof of Johnſon's malignity, is the manner in which he has treated the character and conduct of Milton. To enforce this charge, has wearied ſophiſtry, and exhauſted the invention of a party. What they cannot deny, they palliate; what they cannot prove, they ſay is probable. But why all this rage againſt Dr. Johnſon? Addiſon, before him, had ſaid of Milton;

> Oh! had the Poet ne'er prophan'd his pen,
> To varniſh o'er the guilt of faithleſs men!

And had not Johnſon an equal right to avow his ſentiments? Do his enemies claim a privilege to abuſe whatever is valuable to Engliſhmen, either in Church or State, and muſt the liberty of UNLICENSED PRINTING be denied to the friends of the Britiſh conſtitution?

It is unneceſſary to purſue the argument through all its artifices, ſince, diſmantled of ornament and ſeducing language, the plain truth may be ſtated in a narrow compaſs. Johnſon knew that Milton was a republican; he ſays, "an acrimonious, and ſurly republican, for which it is not known that he gave any better reaſon, than that a popular government was the moſt frugal; for the trappings of a monarchy would ſet up an ordinary commonwealth." Johnſon knew that Milton talked aloud of the danger of READMITTING KINGSHIP in this nation; and when Milton adds, "that a commonwealth was commended, or rather ENJOINED, by our Saviour himſelf to all Chriſtians, not without a remarkable diſallowance, and the brand of Gentiliſm UPON KINGSHIP," Johnſon thought him no better than a wild enthuſiaſt. He knew, as well as Milton, "that the happineſs of a nation muſt needs be firmeſt and certaineſt in a full and free council of their own electing, where no ſingle perſon, but reaſon only ſways;" but the example of all the republicks, recorded in the annals of mankind, gave him no room to hope that REASON ONLY would be heard. He knew that the republican form of government, having little or no complication, and no conſonance of parts by a nice mechaniſm forming a regular whole, was too ſimple to be beautiful even in theory. In practice it, perhaps, never exiſted. In its moſt flouriſhing ſtate, at Athens, Rome, and Carthage, it was a conſtant ſcene of tumult and commotion. From the miſchiefs of a wild democracy, the progreſs has ever been to the dominion of an ariſtocracy; and the word ariſtocracy fatally includes the boldeſt and moſt turbulent citizens, who riſe by their crimes, and call themſelves the beſt men in the State. By intrigue, by cabal, and faction, a pernicious oligarchy is ſure to ſucceed, and end at laſt in the tyranny of a ſingle ruler. Tacitus, the great maſter of political wiſdom, ſaw, under the mixed authority of king, nobles, and people, a better form of government than Milton's boaſted republick; and what Tacitus admired in theory, but deſpaired of enjoying, Johnſon ſaw eſtabliſhed in this country. He knew that it had been overturned by the rage of frantick men; but he knew that, after the iron rod of Cromwell's uſurpation, the conſtitution was once more reſtored to its firſt principles. Monarchy was eſtabliſhed, and this country was regenerated. It was regenerated a ſecond time at the Revolution: the rights of men were then defined, and the bleſſings of good order and civil liberty have been ever ſince diffuſed through the whole community.

The peace and happineſs of ſociety were what Dr. Johnſon had at heart. He knew that Milton called his Defence of the Regicides, a defence of the people of England, but, however gloſſed and varniſhed, he thought it an apology for murder. Had the men, who, under a ſhew of liberty, brought their king to the ſcaffold, proved by their ſubſequent conduct, that the publick good inſpired their actions, the end might have given ſome ſanction to the means; but uſurpation and ſlavery followed. Milton undertook the office of ſecretary under the deſpotick power of Cromwell, offering the incenſe of adulation to his maſter, with the titles of Director of publick Councils, the Leader of unconquered Armies, the Father of his Country. Milton declared, at the ſame time, that nothing is more pleaſing to God, or more agreeable to reaſon, than that the higheſt mind ſhould have the ſovereign power. In this ſtrain of ſervile flattery Milton gives us the right divine of tyrants. But it ſeems, in the ſame piece, he exhorts Cromwell "not to deſert thoſe great principles of liberty which he had profeſſed to eſpouſe; for it would be a grievous enormity, if, after having ſucceſsfully oppoſed tyranny, he ſhould himſelf act the part of a tyrant, and betray the cauſe that he had defended." This deſertion of every honeſt principle the advocate for liberty lived to ſee. Cromwell acted the tyrant; and, with vile hypocriſy, told the people, that he had conſulted the Lord, and the Lord would have it ſo. Milton took an under part in the tragedy. Did that become the defender of the people of England? Brutus ſaw his country enſlaved: he ſtruck the blow for freedom, and he died with honour in the cauſe. Had he lived to be ſecretary under Tiberius, what would now be ſaid of his memory?

But ſtill, it ſeems, the proſtitution with which Milton is charged, ſince it cannot be defended, is to be retorted on the character of Johnſon. For this purpoſe a book has been publiſhed, called Remarks on Dr. Johnſon's Life of Milton, to which are added Milton's Tractate of Education, and Areopagitica. In this laboured tract we are told, "There is one performance aſcribed to the pen of the Doctor, where the proſtitution is of ſo ſingular a nature, that it would be difficult to ſelect an adequate motive for it out of the mountainous heap of conjectural cauſes of human paſſions, or human caprice. It is the ſpeech of the late unhappy Dr. William Dodd, when he was about to hear the ſentence of the law pronounced upon him, in conſequence of an indictment for forgery. The voice of the publick has given the honour of manufacturing this ſpeech to Dr. Johnſon; and the ſtyle and configuration of the ſpeech itſelf confirm the imputation. But it is hardly poſſible to divine what could be his motive for accepting the office. A man, to expreſs the preciſe ſtate of mind of another, about to be deſtined to an ignominious death for a capital crime, ſhould, one would imagine, have ſome conſciouſneſs, that he himſelf had incurred ſome guilt of the ſame kind." In all the ſchools of Sophiſtry is there to be found ſo vile an argument? In the purlieus of Grubſtreet is there ſuch another mouthful of dirt? In the whole quiver of Malice is there ſo envenomed a ſhaft?

After this it is to be hoped, that a certain claſs of men will talk no more of Johnſon's malignity. The laſt apology for Milton is, that he acted according to his principles. But Johnſon thought thoſe principles deteſtable; pernicious to the conſtitution in Church and State, deſtructive of the peace of ſociety, and hoſtile to the great fabrick of civil policy, which the wiſdom of ages has taught every Briton to revere, to love, and cheriſh. He reckoned Milton in that claſs of men, of whom the Roman hiſtorian ſays, when they want, by a ſudden convulſion, to overturn the government, they roar and clamour for liberty; if they ſucceed, they deſtroy liberty itſelf. Ut imperium evertant, Libertatem præferunt; ſi perverterint, libertatem ipſam aggredientur. Such were the ſentiments of Dr. Johnſon; and it may be aſked, in the language of Bolingbroke, "Are theſe ſentiments, which any man, who is born a Briton, in any circumſtances, in any ſituation, ought to be aſhamed, or afraid to avow?" Johnſon has done ample juſtice to Milton's poetry: the Criticiſm on Paradiſe Loſt is a ſublime compoſition. Had he thought the author as good and pious a citizen as Dr. Watts, he would have been ready, notwithſtanding his non-conformity, to do equal honour to the memory of the man.

It is now time to cloſe this Eſſay, which the author fears has been drawn too much into length. In the progreſs of the work, feeble as it may be, he thought himſelf performing the laſt human office to the memory of a friend, whom he loved, eſteemed, and honoured.

> His ſaltem accumulem donis, et fungar inani
> Munere.——

The author of theſe memoirs has been anxious to give the features of the man, and the true character of the author. He has not ſuffered the hand of partiality to colour his excellencies with too much warmth; nor has he endeavoured to throw his ſingularities too much into ſhade. Dr. Johnſon's failings may well be forgiven for the ſake of his virtues. His defects were ſpots in the ſun. His piety, his kind affections, and the goodneſs of his heart, preſent an example worthy of imitation. His works will remain a monument of genius and learning. Had he written nothing but what is contained in the Lives of the Poets, to which theſe Memoirs of his life were originally prefixed, the quantity ſhews a life ſpent in ſtudy and meditation. If to this we add the labour of his Dictionary and other various productions, it may be fairly allowed, as he uſed to ſay of himſelf, that he has written his ſhare. In the volumes juſt referred to, the reader will find a perpetual ſource of pleaſure and inſtruction. With due precautions, authors may learn to grace their ſtyle with elegance, harmony, and preciſion; they may be taught to think with vigour and perſpicuity; and to crown the whole, by a diligent attention to thoſe books all may advance in virtue.

RULES AND DIRECTIONS

TO BE OBSERVED BY THE

NATIVES OF IRELAND, SCOTLAND, AND WALES,

AS WELL AS FOREIGNERS,

FOR ACQUIRING A PERFECT KNOWLEDGE OF THE MARKS USED IN THIS DICTIONARY,

SO AS TO FORM

A CORRECT STANDARD OF PRONUNCIATION.

DIRECTIONS TO THE IRISH.

THE chief miſtakes made by the Iriſh in pronouncing Engliſh, lie for the moſt part in the ſounds of the two firſt vowels a and e; the former being generally ſounded ả by the Iriſh, as in the word bår, in moſt words where it is pronounced å, as in day, by the Engliſh. Thus the Iriſh ſay, påtron, måtron, the vowel å, having the ſame ſound as in the word fåther; while the Engliſh pronounce them as if written, paytron, maytron. The following rule, ſtrictly attended to, will rectify this miſtake throughout the whole language.

When the vowel a finiſhes a ſyllable, and has the accent on it, it is invariably pronounced å [day] by the Engliſh. To this rule there are but three exceptions in the whole language, to be found in the words fåther, papå, mamå. The Iriſh may think alſo the word rather an exception, as well as father; and ſo it would appear to be in their manner of pronouncing it, rå-ther, laying the accent on the vowel a; but in the Engliſh pronunciation, the conſonant th is taken into the firſt ſyllable; as thus, rath'-ẻr, which makes the difference.

Whenever a conſonant follows the vowel a in the ſame ſyllable, and the accent is on the conſonant, the vowel a has always its firſt ſound, as håt', mån'; as alſo the ſame ſound lengthened when it precedes the letter r, as få'r, bå'r, though the accent be on the vowel; as likewiſe when it precedes lm, as bå'lm, pſå'lm. The Iriſh, ignorant of this latter exception, pronounce all words of that ſtructure as if they were written bawm, pſawm, quawm, cawm, &c. In the third ſound of a, marked by different combinations of vowels, or conſonants, ſuch as au, in Paul; aw, in law; all, in call; ald, in bald; alk, in talk, &c. the Iriſh make no miſtake, except in that of lm, as before mentioned.

The ſecond vowel e is, for the moſt part, ſounded ee by the Engliſh, when the accent is upon it; while the Iriſh in moſt words give it the ſound of å, as in hate. This ſound of ẻ [ee] is marked by different combinations of vowels, ſuch as ea, ei, e final mute, ee, and ie. In the two laſt combinations of ee and ie, the Iriſh never miſtake; ſuch as meet, ſeem, field, believe, &c. but in all the others, they almoſt univerſally change the ſound of ẻ, into å. Thus in the combination ea, they pronounce the words tea, ſea, pleaſe, as if they were ſpelt tay, ſay, plays; inſtead of tee, ſee, pleeſe. The Engliſh conſtantly give this ſound to ea, whenever the accent is on the e, except in the following words, grẻat, a pẻar, a bẻar, to bẻar, to forbẻar, to ſwẻar, to tẻar, to wẻar. In all which the e has its ſecond ſound. For want of knowing theſe exceptions, the gentlemen of Ireland, after ſome time of reſidence in London, are apt to fall into the general rule, and pronounce theſe words as if ſpelt greet, beer, ſweer, &c.

Ei is alſo ſounded ee by the Engliſh, and as å by the Iriſh; thus the words de*ceit*, re*ceive*, are pronounced by them as if written de*ſate*, re*ſave*. Ei is always ſounded ee, except when a g follows it, as in the words reign, ſeign, deign, &c. as alſo in the words, rein (of a bridle,) rein deer, vein, drein, veil, heir, which are pronounced like rain, vain, drain, vail, air.

The final mute e makes the preceding e in the ſame ſyllable, when accented, have the ſound of ee, as in the words ſuprẻme, ſincẻre, replẻte. This rule is almoſt univerſally broken through by the Iriſh, who pronounce all ſuch words as if written ſuprắme, ſinsåre, replåte, &c. There are but two exceptions to this rule in the Engliſh pronunciation, which are the words there, where.

In the way of marking this ſound, by a double e, as thus, ee, as the Iriſh never make any miſtakes, the beſt method for all who want to acquire the right pronunciation of theſe ſeveral combinations, is to ſuppoſe that ea, ei, and e attended by a final mute e, are all ſpelt with a double e, or ee.

Ey is always ſounded like å by the Engliſh, when the accent is upon it; as in the words prẻy, convẻy, pronounced pray, convay. To this there are but two exceptions, in the words kẻy and lẻy, ſounded kee, lee. The Iriſh, in attempting to pronounce like the Engliſh, often give the ſame ſound to ey, as uſually belongs to ei, thus for prẻy, convẻy, they ſay pree, convee.

A ſtrict obſervation of theſe few rules, will enable the well-educated natives of Ireland to pronounce their words exactly in the ſame way as the more poliſhed part of the inhabitants of England do, ſo far as the vowels are concerned. The diphthongs they commit no fault in, except in the ſound of ỉ, deſcribed in the ſubſequent directions to foreigners.

In order to complete the whole, a liſt is now given of ſuch detached words, that do not come under any of the above rules, as are pronounced differently in Ireland from what they are in England.

DIRECTIONS TO THE SCOTCH.

WITH regard to the Natives of Scotland—as their dialect differs more, and in a greater number of points, from the Engliſh, than that of any others who ſpeak that language, it will require a greater number of rules, and more pains to correct it. The moſt material difference in point of pronunciation, and which pervades their whole ſpeech, is that of always laying the accent on the vowel, in words where it ought to be on the conſonant. In this article therefore they ſhould chiefly exerciſe themſelves, till they attain a facility in accenting the conſonants, and giving their true ſounds to the preceding vowels; for it is in this that the chief difference between the Scotch and Engliſh pronunciation conſiſts. With regard to intonation indeed, or what is commonly called the Scotch accent, they totally differ from the Engliſh; but in this, written rules can be of little uſe, except when aſſiſted by the living voice; and therefore the aid of maſters, who ſhall join example to precept, is here required. If the ſame ardour continues in Scotland, which formerly did for obtaining a juſt and poliſhed delivery, they will now have it in their power to compaſs the point upon certain grounds, chiefly by their own labour, and application. Nor will they long be without due aſſiſtance, where that is requiſite, upon proper encouragement; for as there could be no hopes of having ſkilful maſters to teach this art, without firſt having a proper method of inſtruction; ſo that method being now laid open, will no doubt induce numbers to apply themſelves to the maſtery of it, in order to become preceptors in that moſt uſeful and ornamental of all arts.

Nor are there wanting examples to ſtimulate thoſe who are in purſuit of this object, and to enſure ſucceſs to their endeavours. There is at this day a gentleman of that country, now in London, in a high office of the law, who did not leave Scotland till after he had been ſome years advanced in manhood; and yet, after having received inſtruction for a few months only, according to the method laid down here, his ſpeech was not to be diſtinguiſhed from that of the moſt poliſhed natives of England, both in point of pronunciation and intonation; and he is perhaps at this day the beſt pattern to be followed with regard to both, whether in the Houſe of Commons, or at the bar.

And yet there was a more extraordinary inſtance at Edinburgh, in a Lord of Seſſion, (Lord Aylmoor) who, though he had never been out of Scotland, yet merely by his own pains, without rule or method, only converſing much with ſuch Engliſhmen as happened to be there, and reading regularly with ſome of the principal actors, arrived even at an accuracy of pronunciation, and had not the leaſt tincture of the Scottiſh intonation.

DIRECTIONS TO THE WELSH.

A few words now to the Natives of Wales, in order to ſhew how eaſily they might get rid of their provincial dialect.

The peculiarity of the Welſh pronunciation ariſes chiefly from their conſtantly ſubſtituting the three pure mutes, in the room of the three impure; and the three aſpirated ſemivowels, in the place of the three vocal. Thus inſtead of b, they uſe p; for g, they uſe k, or hard c; and for d, they employ t. For blood, they ſay plut; for God, Cot; and for dear, tear. In like manner, in the uſe of the ſemivowels, they ſubſtitute f in the place of v; s in the place of z; etħ in the room of eth; and eſh in that of ezh. Thus inſtead of virtue and vice, they ſay firtue and fice; inſtead of zeal and praiſe, they ſay, ſeal and praiſſe; inſtead of theſe and thoſe, tħeſſe and tħoſſe; inſtead of azure, oſier, they ſay, aſhur, oſhur. Thus there are no leſs than ſeven of our conſonants which the Welſh never pronounce at all. Now if the difference in the manner of formation between theſe ſeven conſonants and their ſeven correſpondent ones, were pointed out to them by any ſkilful Maſter, they might in a ſhort time be taught the perfect uſe of them.

The people of Somerſetſhire pronounce the ſemivowels in a way directly oppoſite to that of the Welſh. For whereas the Welſh change the vocal into the aſpirate, they of Somerſetſhire change the aſpirate into the vocal. For father, they ſay, vather; for Somerſetſhire, Zomerzetzhire; for tħin, thin. So that their method of cure, is to take the direct oppoſite courſe to that of the Welſh.

DIRECTIONS TO FOREIGNERS.

IN the firſt place, they ſhould be able to pronounce properly all the Words in the following ſhort Scheme of the Vowels, which, in default of Maſters, they may eaſily learn to do, by hearing them from the Mouth of any Engliſhman.

SCHEME OF THE VOWELS.

	First.	Second.	Third.
a	hat	hate	hall
e	bet	bear	beer
i	fit	fight	field
o	not	note	nooſe
u	but	buſh	blue
y	love-ly	lye

It will then be neceſſary to get the above Scheme by heart, ſo as to be able to repeat it readily in the order in which the words lie, on a parallel, not perpendicular line, as thus:

Firſt,	hat	hate	hall
Second,	bet	bear	beer
Third,	fit, &c.

or till they have perfectly committed it to memory, to write out the Scheme, and hold it in their hand, when they would conſult the Dictionary for any word.

As this is the maſter-key to the Marks throughout, it will be neceſſary to all, who would know them at ſight, to have the perfect uſe of it according to the above directions.

This point obtained, the next ſtep will be to ſhew foreigners how they may acquire the uſe of ſuch ſounds in the Engliſh tongue as peculiarly belong to it, whether ſimple or compound; with which they were not preacquainted, and to which, as being novel to them, they find it difficult, and in ſome caſes, for want of proper inſtruction, impoſſible, to give utterance. For which purpoſe the difference is pointed out between the French language and ours in that reſpect, as that is the moſt generally known and ſpoken by foreigners.

In the French tongue are to be found the ſounds of all our vowels; but it is not ſo with regard to the conſonants and diphthongs.

There are two of our conſonants, which, though marked by two letters each, are in reality ſimple ſounds; and theſe are th and ng; the former to be found in the word then, the latter in ring.

Th.

The conſonant th has two powers, according as it is formed by the voice, or the breath: the one may therefore be called vocal, the other aſpirate. Of the former, there has been an example given in the word then; the power of the latter will be found in the word thin. To diſtinguiſh them from each other in the Dictionary, the latter, or aſpirate, has a ſmall line drawn acroſs the h, thus—tħ. As this ſound has hitherto been found to be unconquerable by Frenchmen, and moſt foreigners, it will be neceſſary to ſhew the cauſe of the difficulty, and then, by removing that, to point out the means by which a right pronunciation of it may be eaſily attained.

It is to be obſerved then, that in the French tongue, all the articulations are formed within the mouth, and the tongue is never protruded beyond the teeth; conſequently, unleſs he is ſhewn how to do it, the foreigner will never of himſelf place the organ in a poſition that it never had been in before; ſo that when he is urged to pronounce that new ſound, as in the word then, without having the poſition of the organs in forming that ſound pointed out to him, he naturally utters the ſound that is neareſt to it in his own tongue, and, inſtead of then, ſays den, and for tħin, tin; changing eth to a d, and etħ to a t. And this he continues to do all his life, for want of being taught the following plain ſimple method of neceſſarily producing thoſe ſounds, if it be but ſtrictly followed. Suppoſe then you were deſirous of ſhewing a foreigner how he ſhould form the ſound eth when it begins a word or ſyllable; deſire him to protrude the tip of his tongue between his teeth and a little beyond them; in that poſition let him preſs it againſt the upper teeth without touching the under; then let him utter any voice with an intention of ſounding the word then, drawing back the tongue at the ſame time behind his teeth, and the right ſound will neceſſarily be produced. To pronounce the etħ, or aſpirated tħ, the organs muſt be exactly in the ſame poſition with the former; but previous to the withdrawing of the tongue, inſtead of voice, he muſt emit breath only, which will as neceſſarily produce the proper power of aſpirated tħ, as in the word tħin.

When theſe ſounds end a word, or ſyllable, as in the words breathe, breath, he muſt be told, that inſtantaneouſly after ſounding the preceding letters, he is to finiſh the word by applying the tip of the tongue to the upper teeth as before, and in ſounding the word breathe, the voice is to be continued to the end; while in that of breath, the voice is cut off at the vowel, and the conſonant tħ is formed by the breath only. In both caſes, it will be of uſe to continue the tongue in the ſame poſition for ſome time, prolonging the ſound of the voice in the former, and of the breath in the latter, till the ſounds become diſtinct and eaſy by practice. This will the more ſpeedily be effected, if he will for ſome time every day repeat from a vocabulary all the words beginning with th, and form liſts of ſuch words as terminate with it.

Ng.

As to the ſimple ſound or conſonant marked by the junction of the two letters ng, it is perhaps a ſound peculiar to the Engliſh language, as in the words ſing ſong; and ſeems to have been taken from the noiſe made by bells, mimicked in the expreſſion of dingdong bell. There is a ſound in the French nearly approaching to it, to be found in ſuch words as dent, camp, and in all their naſal vowels; but theſe are imperfect ſounds, and can ſcarce be called articulate; and there only wants to perfect the articulation to make the French exactly the ſame with the Engliſh: the only difference between them being, that in the French ſimilar ſounds the tongue does not touch the roof of the mouth, as in producing the Engliſh ing, though in other reſpects it be in a ſimilar poſition. If therefore a foreigner wants to produce this ſound, he has only to raiſe the middle of his tongue into a gentle contact with the roof of his mouth in pronouncing any of the naſal vowels, which completes the articulation, and in this way the French naſal vowel heard in the word dent, will be converted into the Engliſh conſonant ſounded in the ſyllable dong; and ſo on of the reſt.

J.

This latter has a very different ſound in Engliſh from what it has in French. In the latter it has a ſimple ſound; in the former it is the repreſentative of a compound ſound made of d and an aſpirated z. This is a difficult ſound to ſuch foreigners as have it not in their ſeveral tongues; and to enable them to pronounce it, it is only requiſite to deſire them to form the letter d with a vowel before it, as ed; keeping the tongue in the ſame poſition that it has when that letter is ſo formed; then let them try to unite to it the French j, which is exactly the ſame ſound with what I have called the aſpirated z or zh, and the compound ſound of edzh, or dzha, will be produced. But as foreigners are equally ſtrangers to the combination of the two letters zh, and would therefore not know what ſound belonged to it, it will be proper to ſubſtitute the French j in the room of zh in ſpelling all words containing that ſound, as thus, edje; and in order to begin a ſyllable with that ſound, which is more difficult than to conclude with it, let them place the tongue in the poſition of ſounding ed, keeping it in that poſition, and then the firſt ſound uttered muſt neceſſarily be that of d, which connected with the ſubſequent j followed by a vowel, of courſe muſt form the compound to be found in the words djoy (joy) djoke (joke).

The ſound of this letter has been ſometimes marked in the Dictionary by a combination of the letters dzh; and ſometimes by the ſingle letter j. But if a foreigner will conſider the zh as equivalent to the French j, the right pronunciation will ſoon become familiar to him

Ch.

The ſound annexed to this combination of letters is different in the Engliſh from what it is in the French: in the former it is a compound, in the latter a ſimple ſound, in the ſame way as that of j juſt deſcribed. The ſound of the French ch is exactly the ſame as the Engliſh ſh; and in order to facilitate the pronunciation of our compound ch, it will be only neceſſary to follow the ſame method as has been above propoſed with regard to the letter j, with this difference, that a t inſtead of a d is to be formed in the manner there deſcribed, preceding the ſound of the French ch, as etch. It is true, we have ſome words in our tongue where the ch is preceded by a t producing the ſame individual ſound, as in the words itch, ſtitch, which the French never fail to pronounce properly, being guided to it by ſeeing the letter t placed before the ch; but to other words of exactly the ſame ſound, though differently ſpelt, by the omiſſion of the t, as rich, which, they always annex their own ſimple ſound of ch. So that here is a plain ſimple rule to guide foreigners in the right pronunciation of the Engliſh ch, which is, by always ſuppoſing combined letters preceded by a t; thus in the words cheeſe, charm, let them ſuppoſe them ſpelt tcheeſe, tcharm; and if they find any difficulty at firſt in uniting thoſe ſounds at the beginning of words, on account of the eye's not being accuſtomed to ſuch a combination of thoſe letters, let them do, as was before directed with regard to j; let them begin with placing the organs in the poſition of ſounding t, which will be done by placing a vowel before it, as, et; the t being thus formed, let them keep the tongue in that poſition; the ſound of t muſt neceſſarily be the firſt uttered on changing that poſition, and will readily coaleſce with the following ſound of ch.

This compound ſound, as above deſcribed, is what uniformly prevails in all native Engliſh words; but there are ſome few derived from the French which retain their primitive pronunciation; ſuch as, chagrin, champaign, chevalier, &c. and ſome derived from the Greek take the ſound of k, as chaos, chorus; but the number of theſe is but ſmall, eaſily learned by uſe, and the difference is properly marked in the Dictionary.

Sh.

This is a combination of letters not to be found in the French language, and therefore foreigners know not what ſound to give it, but the uſual way is to pronounce it like a ſimple ſ. Thus, for ſhall, they ſay ſal; for ſhame, ſame, &c. But to attain the right ſound, it will be only neceſſary to inform them that the Engliſh ſh has uniformly the ſame ſound as the French ch in the words charite, chere: thus, if they ſuppoſe the words ſhall and ſhame, above mentioned, to be written, chall and chame, they will pronounce them properly.

Diphthongs.

Having ſaid all that is neceſſary of the vowels and conſonants, the next article to be conſidered is that of the diphthongs. It is in theſe that the chief difference between the Engliſh and French tongues conſiſts, as there are many diphthongs in the former, not to be found in the latter.

Of the Diphthongs $\overset{2}{\text{i}}$ and $\overset{3}{\text{u}}$.

Theſe two have hitherto always paſſed for ſimple ſounds, becauſe they are for the moſt part marked by ſingle letters as above: their ſounds are marked in the Scheme of the Vowels, by the words f$\overset{2}{\text{i}}$ght, bl$\overset{3}{\text{u}}$e; and theſe are the ſounds given to thoſe vowels in repeating the alphabet. But in reality they are perfect diphthongs, and therefore foreigners can never attain their right pronunciation, till they are firſt made acquainted with the ſimple ſounds whereof they are compoſed. The diphthong $\overset{2}{\text{i}}$ is a compound of the fulleſt and ſlendereſt of our vowels $\overset{3}{\text{a}}$ and $\overset{3}{\text{i}}$; the firſt made by the largeſt, and the laſt by the ſmalleſt aperture of the mouth. If we attend to the proceſs in forming this ſound, we ſhall find that the mouth is firſt opened to the ſame degree of aperture, and is in the ſame poſition as if it were going to pronounce $\overset{3}{\text{a}}$, but before the voice can get a paſſage through the lips, the under jaw is drawn near to the upper, in the ſame poſition as when the vowel $\overset{3}{\text{i}}$ is formed; and thus the full ſound, checked by the ſlender one, and coaleſcing with it, produces a third ſound different from both, which is the diphthong $\overset{2}{\text{i}}$. There is a ſound in the French ſomewhat reſembling our $\overset{2}{\text{i}}$, to be found in ſuch words as vin, fin, but that there is a difference between them, will be immediately perceptible by ſounding after them our words vine, fine; and the difference conſiſts in this, that their diphthong is formed of the ſecond ſound of a, $\overset{2}{\text{a}}$ and $\overset{3}{\text{i}}$, and ours of the third, $\overset{3}{\text{a}}$ $\overset{3}{\text{i}}$: ſo that in order to produce that ſound, you are to deſire a foreigner to open his mouth as wide as if he were going to pronounce $\overset{3}{\text{a}}$, and meant to ſound that vowel; but on the firſt effort of the voice for that purpoſe, to check its progreſs by a ſudden motion of the under jaw towards the upper till the two ſounds coaleſce, and then inſtantly to ſtop all farther effuſion of voice Thus as the ſound of $\overset{3}{\text{a}}$ is not completed, nor the ſound of $\overset{3}{\text{i}}$ continued, there reſults from the union of the two a third ſound or diphthong, which has no reſemblance to either, and yet is a compound of both.

The diphthong $\overset{3}{\text{u}}$ is compounded of the ſound $\overset{3}{\text{i}}$ and $\overset{3}{\text{o}}$; the former ſo rapidly uttered and falling ſo quickly into the ſound $\overset{3}{\text{o}}$, that its own power is not perceived, while that of $\overset{3}{\text{o}}$, being a little dwelt upon, is diſtinctly heard. There is a ſound in the French that ſomewhat reſembles this, to be found in the words, dieu, mieux, but the difference will be immediately perceived by ſounding after them our words, dew, mew; and it conſiſts in this, that their diphthong terminates in the French vowel eu, a ſound which we have not in our tongue, and is found therefore very hard to be formed by Engliſh organs; and ours terminates in $\overset{3}{o}$, the ſame as the French ou. To form it properly therefore, a foreigner is to be told that it is compoſed of the ſounds $\overset{3}{i}$ $\overset{3}{o}$, the firſt not completed, but rapidly running into the laſt, which he is to conſider as the ſame ſound with the French ou; our pronoun you is an exact repreſentation to a French eye of our diphthong $\overset{1}{u}$.

Of the Diphthong oi or oy.

This Diphthong, which is ſometimes ſpelt with an i and ſometimes with a y, is formed by a union of the ſame vowels as that of $\overset{2}{i}$, that is $\overset{3}{a}$ $\overset{3}{i}$; with this difference, that the firſt vowel $\overset{3}{a}$ being dwelt upon, is diſtinctly heard before its ſound is changed by its junction with the latter vowel $\overset{3}{i}$, as in the words noiſe (n$\underbrace{\overset{3}{a}\,\overset{1}{\ }\overset{3}{i}}$ſe) boys (b$\underbrace{\overset{3}{a}\,\overset{1}{\ }\overset{3}{i}}$ſe).

To form this diphthong, it is neceſſary to pronounce the full ſound of $\overset{3}{a}$, dwelling a little upon it before the ſound is intercepted by the motion of the under jaw, to the poſition of forming the ſlender ſound $\overset{3}{i}$, and then the voice is inſtantly to ceaſe. This diphthong differs from that of $\overset{2}{i}$ only in this, that the firſt vowel $\overset{3}{a}$ is diſtinctly heard before it unites with the latter vowel $\overset{3}{i}$.

Of the Diphthong ou, or ow.

This diphthong, though differently marked, like the foregoing one, ſometimes by ou, and ſometimes by ow, has always the ſame ſound, and is compoſed of the vowels $\overset{3}{a}$ and $\overset{3}{o}$; the organs being at firſt in the poſition of ſounding $\overset{3}{a}$, but before that ſound is perfected, by a motion of the under jaw and lips to the poſition of ſounding $\overset{3}{o}$, the firſt ſound $\overset{3}{a}$, is checked and blended with the latter $\overset{3}{o}$, from which reſults the diphthong ou or ow, as in thou, now, (th$\underbrace{\overset{3}{a}\,\overset{3}{o}}$u n$\underbrace{\overset{3}{a}\,\overset{3}{o}}$w).

All the other diphthongs of our tongue are formed by the ſhort ſounds of $\overset{3}{o}$ and $\overset{3}{i}$, marked by the characters w and y, preceding other vowels, and combining with them in the ſame ſyllable; as thus:

w or ſhort $\overset{3}{o}$.			y or ſhort $\overset{3}{i}$.
w$\overset{1}{a}$ft	w$\overset{2}{a}$ge	w$\overset{3}{a}$ll	y$\overset{1}{a}$rd	y$\overset{2}{a}$re	y$\overset{3}{a}$wl
w$\overset{1}{e}$d		w$\overset{3}{e}$ed	y$\overset{1}{e}$t	y$\overset{2}{e}$a	y$\overset{3}{e}$
w$\overset{1}{i}$t	w$\overset{2}{i}$ſe	w$\overset{3}{i}$eld	y$\overset{1}{o}$n	y$\overset{2}{o}$ke	y$\overset{3}{o}$uth
w$\overset{1}{o}$t	w$\overset{2}{o}$e	w$\overset{3}{o}$o	yo$\overset{1}{u}$ng.
$\overset{1}{u}$
word	would

To inſtruct foreigners in the true pronunciation of theſe, it will be only neceſſary to inform them that our w anſwers in ſound and power to the French ou, when it forms a diphthong. As for inſtance, our pronoun we is individually the ſame ſound as their affirmative oui: and the miſtake which they conſtantly commit of ſounding that letter like a v is owing to their not being informed of the true nature of that letter, and taking up their idea of it from the printed character wherein two interwoven vees (w) are exhibited to view; but if in all diphthongs commencing with that letter, they will place their lips in the poſition of forming the French ou, they cannot fail of producing the proper ſound. In like manner all diphthongs formed by y, are to be conſidered as commencing with the ſound given to that character in the French which is the ſame with their vowel i.

All who make themſelves maſters of the few Rules and Directions given above, together with the following Explanation of the Marks, will be enabled to produce at ſight the right Pronunciation of every word which they ſhall look for in this Dictionary.

EXPLANATION

Of the Method made Uſe of in this DICTIONARY, ſo as to acquire a TRUE KNOWLEDGE of the PRONUNCIATION of the WORDS.

THE firſt neceſſary ſtep is, that every reader ſhould commit to memory the following SCHEME OF THE VOWELS; or, as was before recommended, each reader ſhould copy the Scheme, and hold it in his hand when he conſults the Dictionary, till he has it perfectly fixed in his memory.

SCHEME OF THE VOWELS.

	First.	Second.	Third.
a	h$\overset{1}{a}$t	h$\overset{2}{a}$te	h$\overset{3}{a}$ll
e	b$\overset{1}{e}$t	b$\overset{2}{e}$ar	b$\overset{3}{e}$er
i	f$\overset{1}{i}$t	f$\overset{2}{i}$ght	f$\overset{3}{i}$eld
o	n$\overset{1}{o}$t	n$\overset{2}{o}$te	n$\overset{3}{o}$oſe
u	b$\overset{1}{u}$t	b$\overset{2}{u}$ſh	bl$\overset{3}{u}$e
y	love-l$\overset{1}{y}$	l$\overset{2}{y}$e

According to this ſcheme are the ſounds of the vowels marked throughout the Dictionary. One column exhibits the words as they are ſpelt, the other as they are pronounced. As thus——

Hat	h$\overset{1}{a}$t	Hate	h$\overset{2}{a}$te	Hall	h$\overset{3}{a}$ll
Bet	b$\overset{1}{e}$t	Bear	b$\overset{2}{e}$ar	Beer	b$\overset{3}{e}$er, &c.

Whenever one vowel uſurps the power of another, the firſt column will ſhew the vowel that is writ, and the other, the one that is ſounded. As thus——

Stir	ſt$\overset{1}{u}$r	Birth	b$\overset{1}{e}$rth	Love	l$\overset{1}{u}$v
Buſy	b$\overset{1}{i}$zzy	Blood	bl$\overset{1}{u}$d	Bird	b$\overset{1}{u}$rd.

All improper diphthongs, or digraphs, where two vowels are joined in writing, to repreſent any of the ſimple ſounds to be found in the Scheme, are changed in the ſecond column into the ſingle vowels which they ſtand for; as thus——

Bear	b$\overset{2}{e}$re	Head	h$\overset{1}{e}$d	Fourth	f$\overset{2}{o}$rth	Groan	gr$\overset{2}{o}$ne
Hear	h$\overset{3}{e}$re	Heart	h$\overset{1}{a}$rt	Door	d$\overset{2}{o}$re	Field	f$\overset{3}{e}$ld

The final mute e, though generally employed in our tongue as a guide to pronunciation, is, by a due attention to the figures placed over the vowels rendered wholly uſeleſs, and therefore omitted throughout in this Dictionary.

Thus far, with relation to the vowels. With regard to the conſonants, their irregularities are manifeſted, and their true ſounds pointed out, in the following manner:

C has three ſounds—

	k	care	k$\overset{2}{a}$r
	s	ceaſe	s$\overset{3}{e}$s
	ſh	ſocial	s$\overset{2}{o}$ſh$\overset{1}{a}$l.

G has two—

Its own proper one, as in		gold	g$\overset{2}{o}$ld
Another, compound, as in		gentle	dzhentl.

This ſound is uſually marked by the character j.

S has four—

Its own, as in	-	yes	y$\overset{1}{i}$s
That of -	z	roſe	r$\overset{2}{o}$z
	ſh	paſſion	p$\overset{1}{a}$ſsh$\overset{1}{u}$n
	zh	oſier	$\overset{2}{o}$zh$\overset{1}{e}$r.

T has alſo four—

Its own, as in	-	tell	t$\overset{1}{e}$l
	s	ſatiety	s$\overset{2}{a}$s$\overset{2}{i}$$\overset{1}{e}t\overset{1}{y}$
	ſh	nation	n$\overset{2}{a}$ſh$\overset{1}{u}$n
	tſh	queſtion	qu$\overset{1}{e}$ſtſh$\overset{1}{u}$n.

X has two ſounds—

	gz	example	$\overset{1}{e}$gz$\overset{1}{a}$mple
	ks	vex	v$\overset{1}{e}$ks.

Th has two ſounds—

One vocal	th	then	th$\overset{1}{e}$n
One aſpirate	tħ	tħin	tħ$\overset{1}{i}$n.

The ſecond, or aſpirate ſound, is marked by a ſtroke acroſs the ħ as above.

Ch has three ſounds—

	k	chorus	k$\overset{2}{o}$r$\overset{1}{u}$s
	ſh	chaiſe	ſh$\overset{2}{a}$z
	tſh	charity	tſh$\overset{1}{a}$r$\overset{1}{i}$t$\overset{1}{y}$.

Gh has two ſounds—

That of ſimple	g	ghoſt	g$\overset{2}{o}$ſt
That of -	f	laughter	l$\overset{1}{a}$ft$\overset{1}{u}$r.

All conſonants not pronounced are omitted in the ſecond column, as—gh	daughter	d$\overset{3}{a}$t$\overset{1}{u}$r	gn	gnat	n$\overset{1}{a}$t

bt	debt	d$\overset{1}{e}$t	gm	flegm	fl$\overset{1}{e}$m
gn	ſign	s$\overset{2}{i}$n	kn	knife	n$\overset{2}{i}$f
lm	balm	b$\overset{1}{a}$'m	mb	lamb	l$\overset{1}{a}$m'
mn	hymn	h$\overset{1}{i}$m	wr	wrong	r$\overset{1}{o}$ng

The accent is placed throughout over the letter on which it is laid in pronunciation; over the vowel, when the ſtreſs of the voice is on the vowel; over the conſonant when it is on that. As thus—

Accent over the Conſonant.	Accent over the Vowel.
ſt$\overset{1}{u}$r'	b$\overset{3}{e}$'r
l$\overset{1}{u}$v'	h$\overset{3}{e}$'r
b$\overset{1}{i}$z'zy	gr$\overset{2}{o}$'n
l$\overset{1}{a}$f't$\overset{1}{u}$r	s$\overset{2}{o}$'ſhal.

The ſyllables of the words are divided according to the mode of pronouncing them; that is, all letters which are united in utterance in the ſame ſyllable, are here kept together alſo in writing, and ſeparated from the reſt; which certainly is the natural diviſion, though it be contrary to the fantaſtick mode followed in our ſpelling-books and grammars.

PREFACE.

PREFACE.

IT is the fate of thoſe who toil at the lower employments of life, to be rather driven by the fear of evil, than attracted by the proſpect of good; to be expoſed to cenſure, without hope of praiſe; to be diſgraced by miſcarriage, or puniſhed for neglect, where ſucceſs would have been without applauſe, and diligence without reward.

Among theſe unhappy mortals is the writer of dictionaries; whom mankind have conſidered, not as the pupil, but the ſlave of ſcience, the pioneer of literature, doomed only to remove rubbiſh and clear obſtructions from the paths through which Learning and Genius preſs forward to conqueſt and glory, without beſtowing a ſmile on the humble drudge that facilitates their progreſs. Every other author may aſpire to praiſe; the lexicographer can only hope to eſcape reproach, and even this negative recompenſe has been yet granted to very few.

I have, notwithſtanding this diſcouragement, attempted a Dictionary of the Engliſh language, which, while it was employed in the cultivation of every ſpecies of literature, has itſelf been hitherto neglected; ſuffered to ſpread, under the direction of chance, into wild exuberance; reſigned to the tyranny of time and faſhion; and expoſed to the corruptions of ignorance, and caprices of innovation.

When I took the firſt ſurvey of my undertaking, I found our ſpeech copious without order, and energetick without rules: wherever I turned my view, there was perplexity to be diſentangled, and confuſion to be regulated; choice was to be made out of boundleſs variety, without any eſtabliſhed principle of ſelection; adulterations were to be detected, without a ſettled teſt of purity; and modes of expreſſion to be rejected or received, without the ſuffrages of any writers of claſſical reputation or acknowledged authority.

Having therefore no aſſiſtance but from general grammar, I applied myſelf to the peruſal of our writers; and noting whatever might be of uſe to aſcertain or illuſtrate any word or phraſe, accumulated in time the materials of a dictionary, which, by degrees, I reduced to method, eſtabliſhing to myſelf, in the progreſs of the work, ſuch rules as experience and analogy ſuggeſted to me; experience, which practice and obſervation were continually increaſing; and analogy, which, though in ſome words obſcure, was evident in others.

In adjuſting the ORTHOGRAPHY, which has been to this time unſettled and fortuitous, I found it neceſſary to diſtinguiſh thoſe irregularities that are inherent in our tongue, and perhaps coeval with it, from others which the ignorance or negligence of later writers has produced. Every language has its anomalies, which, though inconvenient, and in themſelves once unneceſſary, muſt be tolerated among the imperfections of human things, and which require only to be regiſtered, that they may not be increaſed, and aſcertained, that they may not be confounded: but every language has likewiſe its improprieties and abſurdities, which it is the duty of the lexicographer to correct or proſcribe.

As language was at its beginning merely oral, all words of neceſſary or common uſe were ſpoken before they were written; and while they were unfixed by any viſible ſigns, muſt have been ſpoken with great diverſity, as we now obſerve thoſe who cannot read to catch ſounds imperfectly, and utter them negligently. When this wild and barbarous jargon was firſt reduced to an alphabet, every penman endeavoured to expreſs, as he could, the ſounds which he was accuſtomed to pronounce or to receive, and vitiated in writing ſuch words as were already vitiated in ſpeech. The powers of the letters, when they were applied to a new language, muſt have been vague and unſettled, and therefore different hands would exhibit the ſame ſound by different combinations.

From this uncertain pronunciation ariſe in a great part the various dialects of the ſame country, which will always be obſerved to grow fewer, and leſs different, as books are multiplied; and from this arbitrary repreſentation of ſounds by letters, proceeds that diverſity of ſpelling obſervable in the Saxon remains, and I ſuppoſe in the firſt books of every nation, which perplexes or deſtroys analogy, and produces anomalous formations, that, being once incorporated, can never be afterwards diſmiſſed or reformed.

Of this kind are the derivatives length from long, ſtrength from ſtrong, darling from dear, breadth from broad, from dry, drought, and from high, height, which Milton, in zeal for analogy, writes highth; Quid te exempta juvat ſpinis de pluribus una? to change all would be too much, and to change one is nothing.

This uncertainty is moſt frequent in the vowels, which are ſo capriciouſly pronounced, and ſo differently modified, by accident or affectation, not only in every province, but in every mouth, that to them, as is well known to etymologiſts, little regard is to be ſhewn in the deduction of one language from another.

Such defects are not errours in orthography, but ſpots of barbarity impreſſed ſo deep in the Engliſh language, that criticiſm can never waſh them away: theſe, therefore, muſt be permitted to remain untouched; but many words have likewiſe been altered by accident, or depraved by ignorance, as the pronunciation of the vulgar has been weakly followed; and ſome ſtill continue to be variouſly written, as authors differ in their care or ſkill: of theſe it was proper to enquire the true orthography, which I have always conſidered as depending on their derivation, and have therefore referred them to their original languages: thus I write enchant, enchantment, enchanter, after the French, and incantation after the Latin; thus entire is choſen rather than intire, becauſe it paſſed to us not from the Latin integer, but from the French entier.

Of many words it is difficult to ſay whether they were immediately received from the Latin or the French, ſince at the time when we had dominions in France, we had Latin ſervice in our churches. It is, however, my opinion, that the French generally ſupplied us; for we have few Latin words, among the terms of domeſtick uſe, which are not French; but many French, which are very remote from Latin.

Even in words of which the derivation is apparent, I have been often obliged to ſacrifice uniformity to cuſtom; thus I write, in compliance with a numberleſs majority, convey and inveigh, deceit and receipt, fancy and phantom; ſometimes the derivative varies from the primitive, as explain and explanation, repeat and repetition.

Some combinations of letters having the ſame power, are uſed indifferently without any diſcoverable reaſon of choice, as in choak, choke; ſoap, ſope; fewel, fuel, and many others; which I have ſometimes inſerted twice, that thoſe who ſearch for them under either form, may not ſearch in vain.

In examining the orthography of any doubtful word, the mode of ſpelling by which it is inſerted in the ſeries of the dictionary, is to be conſidered as that to which I give, perhaps not often raſhly, the preference. I have left, in the examples, to every author his own practice unmoleſted, that the reader may balance ſuffrages, and judge between us: but this queſtion is not always to be determined by reputed or by real learning; ſome men, intent upon greater things, have thought little on ſounds and derivations; ſome, knowing in the ancient tongues, have neglected thoſe in which our words are commonly to be ſought. Thus Hammond writes fecibleneſs for feaſibleneſs, becauſe I ſuppoſe he imagined it derived immediately from the Latin; and ſome words, ſuch as dependant, dependent; dependance, dependence, vary their final ſyllable, as one or another language is preſent to the writer.

In this part of the work, where caprice has long wantoned without controul, and vanity ſought praiſe by petty reformation, I have endeavoured to proceed with a ſcholar's reverence for antiquity, and a grammarian's regard to the genius of our tongue. I have attempted few alterations, and among thoſe few, perhaps the greater part is from the modern to the ancient practice; and I hope I may be allowed to recommend to thoſe, whoſe thoughts have been perhaps employed too anxiouſly on verbal ſingularities, not to diſturb, upon narrow views, or for minute propriety, the orthography of their fathers. It has been aſſerted, that for the law to be known, is of more importance than to be right. Change, ſays Hooker, is not made without inconvenience, even from worſe to better. There is in conſtancy and ſtability a general and laſting advantage, which will always overbalance the ſlow improvements of gradual correction. Much leſs ought our written language to comply with the corruptions of oral utterance, or copy that which every variation of time or place makes different from itſelf, and imitate thoſe changes, which will again be changed, while imitation is employed in obſerving them.

This recommendation of ſteadineſs and uniformity does not proceed from an opinion, that particular combinations of letters have much influence on human happineſs; or that truth may not be ſucceſsfully taught by modes of ſpelling fanciful and erroneous: I am not yet ſo loſt in lexicography, as to forget that words are the daughters of earth, and that things are the ſons of heaven. Language is only the inſtrument of ſcience, and words are but the ſigns of ideas: I wiſh, however, that the inſtrument might be leſs apt to decay, and that ſigns might be permanent, like the things which they denote.

In ſettling the orthography, I have not wholly neglected the pronunciation, which I have directed, by printing an accent upon the acute or elevated ſyllable. It will ſometimes be found, that the accent is placed by the author quoted, on a different ſyllable from that marked in the alphabetical ſeries; it is then to be underſtood, that cuſtom has varied, or that the author has, in my opinion, pronounced wrong. Short directions are ſometimes given where the ſound of letters is irregular; and if they are ſometimes omitted, defect in ſuch minute obſervations will be more eaſily excuſed, than ſuperfluity.

In the inveſtigation both of the orthography and ſignification of words, their ETYMOLOGY was neceſſarily to be conſidered, and they were therefore to be divided into primitives and derivatives. A primitive word, is that which can be traced no further to any Engliſh root; thus circumſpect, circumvent, circumſtance, delude, concave, and complicate, though compounds in the Latin, are to us primitives. Derivatives are all thoſe that can be referred to any word in Engliſh of greater ſimplicity.

The derivatives I have referred to their primitives, with an accuracy ſometimes needleſs; for who does not ſee that remoteneſs comes from remote, lovely from love, concavity from concave, and demonſtrative from demonſtrate? but this grammatical exuberance the ſcheme of my work did not allow me to repreſs. It is of great importance, in examining the general fabrick of a language, to trace one word from another, by noting the uſual modes of derivation and inflection; and uniformity muſt be preſerved in ſyſtematical works, though ſometimes at the expence of particular propriety.

Among other derivatives I have been careful to inſert and elucidate the anomalous plurals of nouns and preterites of verbs, which in the Teutonick dialects are very frequent, and, though familiar to thoſe who have always uſed them, interrupt and embarraſs the learners of our language.

The two languages from which our primitives have been derived are the Roman and Teutonick: under the Roman I comprehend the French and provincial tongues; and under the Teutonick range the Saxon, German, and all their kindred dialects. Moſt of our polyſyllables are Roman, and our words of one ſyllable are very often Teutonick.

In aſſigning the Roman original, it has perhaps ſometimes happened that I have mentioned only the Latin, when the word was borrowed from the French; and conſidering myſelf as employed only in the illuſtration of my own language, I have not been very careful to obſerve whether the Latin word be pure or barbarous, or the French elegant or obſolete.

For the Teutonick etymologies I am commonly indebted to Junius and Skinner, the only names which I have forborn to quote when I copied their books; not that I might appropriate their labours or uſurp their honours, but that I might ſpare a general repetition by one general acknowledgment Of theſe, whom I ought not to mention but with the reverence due to inſtructors and benefactors, Junius appears to have excelled in extent of learning, and Skinner in rectitude of underſtanding. Junius was accurately ſkilled in all the northern languages, Skinner probably examined the ancient and remoter dialects only by occaſional inſpection into dictionaries; but the learning of Junius is often of no other uſe than to ſhow him a track by which he may deviate from his purpoſe, to which Skinner always preſſes forward by the ſhorteſt way. Skinner is often ignorant, but never ridiculous: Junius is always full of knowledge; but his variety diſtracts his judgment, and his learning is very frequently diſgraced by his abſurdities.

The votaries of the northern muſes will not perhaps eaſily reſtrain their indignation, when they find the name of Junius thus degraded by a diſadvantageous compariſon; but whatever reverence is due to his diligence, or his attainments, it can be no criminal degree of cenſoriouſneſs to charge that etymologiſt with want of judgment, who can ſeriouſly derive dream from drama, becauſe life is a drama, and a drama is a dream; and who declares with a tone of defiance, that no man can fail to derive moan from μόνος, monos, ſingle or ſolitary, who conſiders that grief naturally loves to be alone. *

Our knowledge of the northern literature is ſo ſcanty, that of words undoubtedly Teutonick, the original is not always to be found in any ancient language; and I have therefore inſerted Dutch or German ſubſtitutes, which I conſider not as radical, but parallel, not as the parents, but ſiſters of the Engliſh.

The words which are repreſented as thus related by deſcent or cognation, do not always agree in ſenſe; for it is incident to words, as to their authors, to degenerate from their anceſtors, and to change their manners when they change their country. It is ſufficient, in etymological enquiries, if the ſenſes of kindred words be found ſuch as may eaſily paſs into each other, or ſuch as may both be referred to one general idea.

The etymology, ſo far as it is yet known, was eaſily found in the volumes where it is particularly and profeſſedly delivered; and, by proper attention to the rules of derivation, the orthography was ſoon adjuſted. But to COLLECT the WORDS of our language was a taſk of greater difficulty: the deficiency of dictionaries was immediately apparent; and when they were exhauſted, what was yet wanting muſt be ſought by fortuitous and unguided excurſions into books, and gleaned as induſtry ſhould find, or chance ſhould offer it, in the boundleſs chaos of a living ſpeech. My ſearch, however, has been either ſkilful or lucky; for I have much augmented the vocabulary.

As my deſign was a dictionary, common or appellative, I have omitted all words which have relation to proper names; ſuch as Arian, Socinian, Calviniſt, Benedictine, Mahometan; but have retained thoſe of a more general nature, as Heathen, Pagan.

Of the terms of art I have received ſuch as could be found either in books of ſcience or technical dictionaries; and have often inſerted, from philoſophical writers, words which are ſupported perhaps only by a ſingle authority, and which being not admitted into general uſe, ſtand yet as candidates or probationers, and muſt depend for their adoption on the ſuffrage of futurity.

The words which our authors have introduced by their knowledge of foreign languages, or ignorance of their own, by vanity or wantonneſs, by compliance with faſhion or luſt of innovation, I have regiſtered as they occurred, though commonly only to cenſure them, and warn others againſt the folly of naturalizing uſeleſs foreigners to the injury of the natives.

I have not rejected any by deſign, merely becauſe they were unneceſſary or exuberant; but have received thoſe which by different writers have been differently formed, as viſcid, and viſcidity, viſcous, and viſcoſity.

Compounded or double words I have ſeldom noted, except when they obtain a ſignification different from that which the components have in their ſimple ſtate. Thus highwayman, woodman, and horſecourſe, require an explanation; but of thieflike or coachdriver no notice was needed, becauſe the primitives contain the meaning of the compounds.

Words arbitrarily formed by a conſtant and ſettled analogy, like diminutive adjectives in iſh, as greeniſh, bluiſh; adverbs in ly, as dully, openly; ſubſtantives in neſs, as vileneſs, faultineſs; were leſs diligently ſought, and ſometimes have been omitted, when I had no authority that invited me to inſert them; not that they are not genuine and regular offsprings of Engliſh roots, but becauſe their relation to the primitive being always the ſame, their ſignification cannot be miſtaken.

The verbal nouns in ing, ſuch as the keeping of the caſtle, the leading of the army, are always neglected, or placed only to illuſtrate the ſenſe of the verb, except when they ſignify things as well as actions, and have therefore a plural number, as dwelling, living; or have an abſolute and abſtract ſignification, as colouring, painting, learning.

The participles are likewiſe omitted, unleſs, by ſignifying rather habit or quality than action, they take the nature of adjectives; as a thinking man, a man of prudence; a pacing horſe, a horſe that can pace: theſe I have ventured to call participial adjectives. But neither are theſe always inſerted, becauſe they are commonly to be underſtood, without any danger of miſtake, by conſulting the verb.

Obſolete words are admitted, when they are found in authors not obſolete, or when they have any force or beauty that may deſerve revival.

As compoſition is one of the chief characteriſticks of a language, I have endeavoured to make ſome reparation for the univerſal negligence of my predeceſſors, by inſerting great numbers of compounded words, as may be found under after, fore, new, night, fair, and many more. Theſe, numerous as they are, might be multiplied, but that uſe and curioſity are here ſatisfied, and the frame of our language and modes of our combination amply diſcovered.

Of ſome forms of compoſition, ſuch as that by which re is prefixed to note repetition, and un to ſignify contrariety or privation, all the examples cannot be accumulated, becauſe the uſe of theſe particles, if not wholly arbitrary, is ſo little limited, that they are hourly affixed to new words as occaſion requires, or is imagined to require them.

There is another kind of compoſition more frequent in our language than perhaps in any other, from which ariſes to foreigners the greateſt difficulty. We modify the ſignification of many words by a particle ſubjoined; as to come off, to eſcape by a fetch; to fall on, to attack; to fall off, to apoſtatize; to break off, to ſtop abruptly; to bear out, to juſtify; to fall in, to comply; to give over, to ceaſe; to ſet off, to embelliſh; to ſet in, to begin a continual tenour; to ſet out, to begin a courſe or journey; to take off, to copy; with innumerable expreſſions of the ſame kind, of which ſome appear widely irregular, being ſo far diſtant from the ſenſe of the ſimple words, that no ſagacity will be able to trace the ſteps by which they arrived at the preſent uſe. Theſe I have noted with great care; and though I cannot flatter myſelf that the collection is complete, I believe I have ſo far aſſiſted the ſtudents of our language, that this kind of phraſeology will be no longer inſuperable; and the combinations of verbs and particles, by chance omitted, will be eaſily explained by compariſon with thoſe that may be found.

Many words yet ſtand ſupported only by the name of Bailey, Ainſworth, Philips, or the contracted Dict. for Dictionaries ſubjoined; of theſe I am not always certain that they are read in any book but the works of lexicographers. Of ſuch I have omitted many, becauſe I had never read them; and many I have inſerted, becauſe they may perhaps exiſt, though they have eſcaped my notice: they are, however, to be yet conſidered as reſting only upon the credit of former dictionaries. Others, which I conſidered as uſeful, or know to be proper, though I could not at preſent ſupport them by authorities, I have ſuffered to ſtand upon my own atteſtation, claiming the ſame privilege with my predeceſſors, of being ſometimes credited without proof.

The words, thus ſelected and diſpoſed, are grammatically conſidered; they are referred to the different parts of ſpeech; traced, when they are irregularly inflected, through their various terminations; and illuſtrated by obſervations, not indeed of great or ſtriking importance, ſeparately conſidered, but neceſſary to the elucidation of our language, and hitherto neglected or forgotten by Engliſh grammarians.

That part of my work on which I expect malignity moſt frequently to faſten, is the Explanation; in which I cannot hope to ſatisfy thoſe, who are perhaps not inclined to be pleaſed, ſince I have not always been able to ſatisfy myſelf. To interpret a language by itſelf is very difficult; many words cannot be explained by ſynonimes, becauſe the idea ſignified by them has not more than one appellation; nor by paraphraſe, becauſe ſimple ideas cannot be deſcribed. When the nature of things is unknown, or the notion unſettled and indefinite, and various in various minds, the words by which ſuch notions are conveyed, or ſuch things denoted, will be ambiguous and perplexed. And ſuch is the fate of hapleſs lexicography, that not only darkneſs, but light, impedes and diſtreſſes it; things may be not only too little, but too much known, to be happily illuſtrated. To explain, requires the uſe of terms leſs abſtruſe than that which is to be explained, and ſuch terms cannot always be found; for as nothing can be proved but the ſuppoſing ſomething intuitively known, and evident without proof, ſo nothing can be defined but by the uſe of words too plain to admit a definition.

Other words there are, of which the ſenſe is too ſubtle and evaneſcent to be fixed in a paraphraſe; ſuch are all thoſe which are by the grammarians termed expletives, and, in dead languages, are ſuffered to paſs for empty ſounds, of no other uſe than to fill a verſe, or to modulate a period, but which are eaſily perceived in living tongues to have power and emphaſis, though it be ſometimes ſuch as no other form of expreſſion can convey.

My labour has likewiſe been much increaſed by a claſs of verbs too frequent in the Engliſh language, of which the ſignification is ſo looſe and general, the uſe ſo vague and indeterminate, and the ſenſes detorted ſo widely from the firſt idea, that it is hard to trace them through the maze of variation, to catch them on the brink of utter inanity, to circumſcribe them by any limitations, or interpret them by any words of diſtinct and ſettled meaning; ſuch are bear, break, come, caſt, full, get, give, do, put, ſet, go, run, make, take, turn, throw. If of theſe the whole power is not accurately delivered, it muſt be remembered, that while our language is yet living, and variable by the caprice of every one that ſpeaks it, theſe words are hourly ſhifting their relations, and can no more be aſcertained in a dictionary, than a grove, in the agitation of a ſtorm, can be accurately delineated from its picture in the water.

The particles are among all nations applied with ſo great latitude, that they are not eaſily reducible under any regular ſcheme of explication: this difficulty is not leſs, nor perhaps greater, in Engliſh, than in other languages. I have laboured them with diligence, I hope with ſucceſs; ſuch at leaſt as can be expected in a taſk, which no man, however learned or ſagacious, has yet been able to perform.

Some words there are which I cannot explain, becauſe I do not underſtand them; theſe might have been omitted very often with little inconvenience, but I would not ſo far indulge my vanity as to decline this confeſſion: for when Tully owns himſelf ignorant whether leſſus, in the twelve tables, means a funeral ſong, or mourning garment; and Ariſtotle doubts whether οὐρευς, in the Iliad, ſignifies a mule, or muleteer, I may ſurely, without ſhame, leave ſome obſcurities to happier induſtry, or future information.

The rigour of interpretative lexicography requires that the explanation, and the word explained, ſhould be always reciprocal; this I have always endeavoured, but could not always attain. Words are ſeldom exactly ſynonimous; a new term was not introduced, but becauſe the former was thought inadequate: names, therefore, have often many ideas, but few ideas have many names. It was then neceſſary to uſe the proximate word, for the deficiency of ſingle terms can very ſeldom be ſupplied by circumlocution; nor is the inconvenience great of ſuch mutilated interpretations, becauſe the ſenſe may eaſily be collected entire from the examples.

In every word of extenſive uſe, it was requiſite to mark the progreſs of its meaning, and ſhow by what gradations of intermediate ſenſe it has paſſed from its primitive to its remote and accidental ſignification; ſo that every foregoing explanation ſhould tend to that which follows, and the ſeries be regularly concatenated from the firſt notion to the laſt.

This is ſpecious, but not always practicable; kindred ſenſes may be ſo interwoven, that the perplexity cannot be diſentangled, nor any reaſon be aſſigned why one ſhould be ranged before the other. When the radical idea branches out into parallel ramifications, how can a conſecutive ſeries be formed of ſenſes in their nature collateral? The ſhades of meaning ſometimes paſs imperceptibly into each other; ſo that though on one ſide they apparently differ, yet it is impoſſible to mark the point of contact. Ideas of the ſame race, though not exactly alike, are ſometimes ſo little different, that no words can expreſs the diſſimilitude, though the mind eaſily perceives it, when they are exhibited together; and ſometimes there is ſuch a confuſion of acceptations, that diſcernment is wearied, and diſtinction puzzled, and perſeverance herſelf hurries to an end, by crowding together what ſhe cannot ſeparate.

Theſe complaints of difficulty will, by thoſe that have never conſidered words beyond their popular uſe, be thought only the jargon of a man willing to magnify his labours, and procure veneration to his ſtudies by involution and obſcurity. But every art is obſcure to thoſe that have not learned it: this uncertainty of terms, and commixture of ideas, is well known to thoſe who have joined philoſophy with grammar; and if I have not expreſſed them very clearly, it muſt be remembered that I am ſpeaking of that which words are inſufficient to explain.

The original ſenſe of words is often driven out of uſe by their metaphorical acceptations, yet muſt be inſerted for the ſake of a regular origination. Thus I know not whether ardour is uſed for material heat, or whether flagrant, in Engliſh, ever ſignifies the ſame with burning; yet ſuch are the primitive ideas of theſe words, which are therefore ſet firſt, though without examples, that the figurative ſenſes may be commodiouſly deduced.

Such is the exuberance of ſignification which many words have obtained, that it was ſcarcely poſſible to collect all their ſenſes; ſometimes the meaning of derivatives muſt be ſought in the mother term, and ſometimes deficient explanations of the primitives may be ſupplied in the train of derivation. In any caſe of doubt or difficulty, it will be always proper to examine all the words of the ſame race; for ſome words are ſlightly paſſed over to avoid repetition, ſome admitted eaſier and clearer explanation than others, and all will be better underſtood, as they are conſidered in greater variety of ſtructures and relations.

All the interpretations of words are not written with the ſame ſkill, or the ſame happineſs: things equally eaſy in themſelves, are not all equally eaſy to any ſingle mind. Every writer of a long work commits errours, where there appears neither ambiguity to miſlead, nor obſcurity to confound him; and in a ſearch like this, many felicities of expreſſion will be caſually overlooked, many convenient parallels will be forgotten, and many particulars will admit improvement from a mind utterly unequal to the whole performance.

But many ſeeming faults are to be imputed rather to the nature of the undertaking, than the negligence of the performer. Thus ſome explanations are unavoidably reciprocal or circular, as hind, the female of the ſtag; ſtag, the male of the hind: ſometimes eaſier words are changed into harder, as burial into ſepulture or interment, drier into deſiccative, dryneſs into ſiccity or aridity, fit into paroxyſm; for the eaſieſt word, whatever it be, can never be tranſlated into one more eaſy. But eaſineſs and difficulty are merely relative, and if the preſent prevalence of our language ſhould invite foreigners to this dictionary, many will be aſſiſted by thoſe words which now ſeem only to produce increaſe or obſcurity. For this reaſon I have endeavoured frequently to join a Teutonick and Roman interpretation, as to CHEER, to gladden, or exhilarate, that every learner of Engliſh may be aſſiſted by his own tongue.

The ſolution of all difficulties, and the ſupply of all defects, muſt be ſought in the examples, ſubjoined to the various ſenſes of each word, and ranged according to the time of their authors.

When I firſt collected theſe authorities, I was deſirous that every quotation ſhould be uſeful to ſome other end than the illuſtration of a word; I therefore extracted from philoſophers principles of ſcience; from hiſtorians remarkable facts; from chymiſts complete proceſſes; from divines ſtriking exhortations; and from poets beautiful deſcriptions. Such is deſign, while it is yet at a diſtance from execution. When the time called upon me to range this accumulation of elegance and wiſdom into an alphabetical ſeries, I ſoon diſcovered that the bulk of my volumes would fright away the ſtudent, and was forced to depart from my ſcheme of including all that was pleaſing or uſeful in Engliſh literature, and reduce my tranſcripts very often to cluſters of words, in which ſcarcely any meaning is retained; thus to the wearineſs of copying, I was condemned to add the vexation of expunging. Some paſſages I have yet ſpared, which may relieve the labour of verbal ſearches, and interſperſe with verdure and flowers the duſty deſarts of barren philology.

The examples, thus mutilated, are no longer to be conſidered as conveying the ſentiments or doctrine of their authors; the word for the ſake of which they are inſerted, with all its appendant clauſes, has been carefully preſerved; but it may ſometimes happen, by haſty detruncation, that the general tendency of the ſentence may be changed: the divine may deſert his tenets, or the philoſopher his ſyſtem.

Some of the examples have been taken from writers who were never mentioned as maſters of elegance or models of ſtyle; but words muſt be ſought where they are uſed; and in what pages, eminent for purity, can terms of manufacture or agriculture be found? Many quotations ſerve no other purpoſe, than that of proving the bare exiſtence of words, and are therefore ſelected with leſs ſcrupulouſneſs than thoſe which are to teach their ſtructures and relations.

My purpoſe was to admit no teſtimony of living authors, that I might not be miſled by partiality, and that none of my contemporaries might have reaſon to complain; nor have I departed from this reſolution, but when ſome performance of uncommon excellence excited my veneration, when my memory ſupplied me, from late books, with an example that was wanting, or when my heart, in the tenderneſs of friendſhip, ſolicited admiſſion for a favourite name.

So far have I been from any care to grace my pages with modern decorations, that I have ſtudiouſly endeavoured to collect examples and authorities from the writers before the reſtoration, whoſe works I regard as the wells of Engliſh undefiled, as the pure ſources of genuine diction. Our language, for almoſt a century, has, by the concurrence of many cauſes, been gradually departing from its original Teutonick character, and deviating towards a Gallick ſtructure and phraſeology, from which it ought to be our endeavour to recal it, by making our ancient volumes the ground-work of ſtyle, admitting among the additions of later times, only ſuch as may ſupply real deficiencies, ſuch as are readily adopted by the genius of our tongue, and incorporate eaſily with our native idioms.

But as very language has a time of rudeneſs antecedent to perfection, as well as of falſe refinement and declenſion, I have been cautious leſt my zeal for antiquity might drive me into times too remote, and crowd my book with words now no longer underſtood. I have fixed Sidney's work for the boundary, beyond which I make few excurſions. From the authors which roſe in the time of Elizabeth, a ſpeech might be formed adequate to all the purpoſes of uſe and elegance. If the language of theology were extracted from Hooker and the tranſlation of the Bible; the terms of natural knowledge from Bacon; the phraſes of policy, war, and navigation from Raleigh; the dialect of poetry and fiction from Spenſer and Sidney; and the diction of common life from Shakeſpeare, few ideas would be loſt to mankind, for want of Engliſh words, in which they might be expreſſed.

PREFACE.

It is not ſufficient that a word is found, unleſs it be ſo combined as that its meaning is apparently determined by the tract and tenour of the ſentence; ſuch paſſages I have therefore choſen, and when it happened that any author gave a definition of a term, or ſuch an explanation as is equivalent to a definition, I have placed his authority as a ſupplement to my own, without regard to the chronological order, that is otherwiſe obſerved.

Some words, indeed, ſtand unſupported by any authority, but they are commonly derivative nouns, or abverbs, formed from their primitives by regular and conſtant analogy, or names of things ſeldom occurring in books, or words of which I have reaſon to doubt the exiſtence.

There is more danger of cenſure from the multiplicity than paucity of example; authorities will ſometimes ſeem to have been accumulated without neceſſity or uſe, and perhaps ſome will be found, which might, without loſs, have been omitted. But a work of this kind is not haſtily to be charged with ſuperfluities: thoſe quotations, which to careleſs or unſkilful peruſers appear only to repeat the ſame ſenſe, will often exhibit, to a more accurate examiner, diverſities of ſignification, or, at leaſt, afford different ſhades of the ſame meaning: one will ſhew the word applied to perſons, another to things; one will expreſs an ill, another a good, and a third a neutral ſenſe; one will prove the expreſſion genuine from an ancient author; another will ſhew it elegant from a modern: a doubtful authority is corroborated by another of more credit; an ambiguous ſentence is aſcertained by a paſſage clear and determinate; the word, how often ſoever repeated, appears with new aſſociates and in different combinations, and every quotation contributes ſomething to the ſtability or enlargement of the language.

When words are uſed equivocally, I receive them in either ſenſe; when they are metaphorical, I adopt them in their primitive acceptation.

I have ſometimes, though rarely, yielded to the temptation of exhibiting a genealogy of ſentiments, by ſhewing how one author copied the thoughts and diction of another: ſuch quotations are indeed little more than repetitions, which might juſtly be cenſured, did they not gratify the mind, by affording a kind of intellectual hiſtory.

The various ſyntactical ſtructures occurring in the examples have been carefully noted; the licence or negligence with which many words have been hitherto uſed, has made our ſtyle capricious and indeterminate; when the different combinations of the ſame word are exhibited together, the preference is readily given to propriety, and I have often endeavoured to direct the choice.

Thus have I laboured by ſettling the orthography, diſplaying the analogy, regulating the ſtructures, and aſcertaining the ſignification of Engliſh words, to perform all the parts of a faithful lexicographer: but I have not always executed my own ſcheme, or ſatisfied my own expectations. The work, whatever proofs of diligence and attention it may exhibit, is yet capable of many improvements: the orthography which I recommend is ſtill controvertible, the etymology which I adopt is uncertain, and perhaps frequently erroneous; the explanations are ſometimes too much contracted, and ſometimes too much diffuſed, the ſignifications are diſtinguiſhed rather with ſubtilty than ſkill, and the attention is haraſſed with unneceſſary minuteneſs.

The examples are too often injudicially truncated, and perhaps ſometimes, I hope very rarely, alleged in a miſtaken ſenſe; for in making this collection I truſted more to memory, than, in a ſtate of diſquiet and embarraſſment, memory can contain, and purpoſed to ſupply at the review what was left imcomplete in the firſt tranſcription.

Many terms appropriated to particular occupations, though neceſſary and ſignificant, are undoubtedly omitted; and of the words moſt ſtudiouſly conſidered and exemplified, many ſenſes have eſcaped obſervation.

Yet theſe failures, however frequent, may admit extenuation and apology. To have attempted much is always laudable, even when the enterprize is above the ſtrength that undertakes it: To reſt below his own aim is incident to every one whoſe fancy is active, and whoſe views are comprehenſive; nor is any man ſatisfied with himſelf becauſe he has done much, but becauſe he can conceive little. When firſt I engaged in this work, I reſolved to leave neither words nor things unexamined, and pleaſed myſelf with a proſpect of the hours which I ſhould revel away in feaſts of literature, the obſcure receſſes of northern learning which I ſhould enter and ranſack, the treaſures with which I expected every ſearch into thoſe neglected mines to reward my labour, and the triumph with which I ſhould diſplay my acquiſitions to mankind. When I had thus enquired into the original of words, I reſolved to ſhew likewiſe my attention to things; to pierce deep into every ſcience, to enquire the nature of every ſubſtance of which I inſerted the name, to limit every idea by a definition ſtrictly logical, and exhibit every production of art or nature in an accurate deſcription, that my book might be in place of all other dictionaries whether appellative or technical. But theſe were the dreams of a poet doomed at laſt to wake a lexicographer. I ſoon found that it is too late to look for inſtruments, when the work calls for execution, and that whatever abilities I had brought to my taſk, with thoſe I muſt finally perform it. To deliberate whenever I doubted, to enquire whenever I was ignorant, would have protracted the undertaking without end, and, perhaps, without much improvement; for I did not find by my firſt experiments, that what I had not of my own was eaſily to be obtained: I ſaw that one enquiry only gave occaſion to another, that book referred to book, that to ſearch was not always to find, and to find was not always to be informed; and that thus to purſue perfection, was, like the firſt inhabitants of Arcadia, to chaſe the ſun, which, when they had reached the hill where he ſeemed to reſt, was ſtill beheld at the ſame diſtance from them.

I then contracted my deſign, determining to confide in myſelf, and no longer to ſolicit auxiliaries, which produced more incumbrance than aſſiſtance: by this I obtained at leaſt one advantage, that I ſet limits to my work, which would in time be ended, though not completed.

Deſpondency has never ſo far prevailed as to depreſs me to negligence; ſome faults will at laſt appear to be the effects of anxious diligence and perſevering activity. The nice and ſubtle ramifications of meaning were not eaſily avoided by a mind intent upon accuracy, and convinced of the neceſſity of diſentangling combinations, and ſeparating ſimilitudes. Many of the diſtinctions, which to common readers appear uſeleſs and idle, will be found real and important by men verſed in the ſchool philoſophy, without which no dictionary can ever be accurately compiled, or ſkilfully examined.

Some ſenſes however there are, which, though not the ſame, are yet ſo nearly allied, that they are often confounded. Moſt men think indiſtinctly, and therefore cannot ſpeak with exactneſs; and conſequently ſome examples might be indifferently put to either ſignification: this uncertainty is not to be imputed to me, who do not form, but regiſter the language; who do not teach men how they ſhould think, but relate how they have hitherto expreſſed their thoughts.

The imperfect ſenſe of ſome examples I lamented, but could not remedy, and hope they will be compenſated by innumerable paſſages ſelected with propriety, and preſerved with exactneſs; ſome ſhining with ſparks of imagination, and ſome replete with treaſures of wiſdom.

The orthography and etymology, though imperfect, are not imperfect for want of care, but becauſe care will not always be ſucceſsful, and recollection or information come too late for uſe.

That many terms of art and manufacture are omitted, muſt be frankly acknowledged; but for this defect I may boldly allege that it was unavoidable: I could not viſit caverns to learn the miner's language, nor take a voyage to perfect my ſkill in the dialect of navigation, nor viſit the warehouſes of merchants, and ſhops of artificers, to gain the names of wares, tools and operations, of which no mention is found in books; what favourable accident, or eaſy enquiry brought within my reach, has not been neglected; but it had been a hopeleſs labour to glean up words, by courting living information, and conteſting with the ſullenneſs of one, and the roughneſs of another.

To furniſh the academicians della Cruſca with words of this kind, a ſeries of comedies called la Fiera, or the Fair, was profeſſedly written by Buonaroti; but I had no ſuch aſſiſtant, and therefore was content to want what they muſt have wanted likewiſe, had they not luckily been ſo ſupplied.

Nor are all words which are not found in the vocabulary, to be lamented as omiſſions. Of the labours and mercantile part of the people, the diction is in a great meaſure caſual and mutable; many of their terms are formed for ſome temporary or local convenience, and though current at certain times and places, are in others utterly unknown. This fugitive cant, which is always in a ſtate of increaſe or decay, cannot be regarded as any part of the durable materials of a language, and therefore muſt be ſuffered to periſh with other things unworthy of preſervation.

Care will ſometimes betray to the appearance of negligence. He that is catching opportunities which ſeldom occur, will ſuffer thoſe to paſs by unregarded, which he expects hourly to return; he that is ſearching for rare and remote things, will neglect thoſe that are obvious and familiar: thus many of the moſt common and curſory words have been inſerted with little illuſtration, becauſe in gathering the authorities, I forbore to copy thoſe which I thought likely to occur whenever they were wanted. It is remarkable that, in reviewing my collection, I found the word SEA unexemplified.

Thus it happens, that in things difficult there is danger from ignorance, and in things eaſy from confidence; the mind, afraid of greatneſs, and diſdainful of littleneſs, haſtily withdraws herſelf from painful ſearches, and paſſes with ſcornful rapidity over taſks not adequate to her powers, ſometimes too ſecure for caution, and again too anxious for vigorous effort; ſometimes idle in a plain path, and ſometimes diſtracted in labyrinths, and diſſipated by different intentions.

A large work is difficult becauſe it is large, even though all its parts might ſingly be performed with facility; where there are many things to be done, each muſt be allowed its ſhare of time and labour, in the proportion only which it bears to the whole; nor can it be expected, that the ſtones which form the dome of a temple, ſhould be ſquared and poliſhed like the diamond of a ring.

Of the event of this work, for which, having laboured it with ſo much application, I cannot but have ſome degree of parental fondneſs, it is natural to form conjectures. Thoſe who have been perſuaded to think well of my deſign, will require that it ſhould fix our language, and put a ſtop to thoſe alterations which time and chance have hitherto been ſuffered to make in it without oppoſition. With this conſequence I will confeſs that I flattered myſelf for a while; but now begin to fear that I have indulged expectation which neither reaſon nor experience can juſtify. When we ſee men grow old and die at a certain time one after another, from century to century, we laugh at the elixir that promiſes to prolong life to a thouſand years; and with equal juſtice may the lexicographer be derided, who being able to produce no example of a nation that has preſerved their words and phraſes from mutability, ſhall imagine that his dictionary can embalm his language, and ſecure it from corruption and decay, that it is in his power to change ſublunary nature, and clear the world at once from folly, vanity and affectation.

With this hope, however, academies have been inſtituted, to guard the avenues of their languages, to retain fugitives, and repulſe intruders; but their vigilance and activity have hitherto been vain; ſounds are too volatile and ſubtile for legal reſtraints; to enchain ſyllables, and to laſh the wind, are equally the undertakings of pride, unwilling to meaſure its deſires by its ſtrength. The French language has viſibly changed under the inſpection of the academy; the ſtyle of Amelot's tranſlation of father Paul is obſerved by Le Courayer to be un peu paſſé; and no Italian will maintain, that the diction of any modern writer is not perceptibly different from that of Boccace, Machiavel, or Caro.

Total and ſudden transformations of a language ſeldom happen; conqueſts and migrations are now very rare: but there are other cauſes of change, which, though ſlow in their operation, and inviſible in their progreſs, are perhaps as much ſuperiour to human reſiſtance, as the revolutions of the ſky, or intumeſcence of the tide. Commerce, however neceſſary, however lucrative, as it depraves the manners, corrupts the language; they that have frequent intercourſe with ſtrangers, to whom they endeavour to accommodate themſelves, muſt in time learn a mingled dialect, like the jargon which ſerves the traffickers on the Mediterranean and Indian coaſts. This will not always be confined to the exchange, the warehouſe, or the port, but will be communicated by degrees to other ranks of the people, and be at laſt incorporated with the current ſpeech.

There are likewiſe internal cauſes equally forcible. The language moſt likely to continue long without alteration, would be that of a nation raiſed a little, and but a little, above barbarity, ſecluded from ſtrangers, and totally employed in procuring the conveniencies of life; either without books, or, like ſome of the Mahometan countries, with very few: men thus buſied and unlearned, having only ſuch words as common uſe requires, would perhaps long continue to expreſs the ſame notions by the ſame ſigns. But no ſuch conſtancy can be expected in a people poliſhed by arts, and claſſed by ſubordination, where one part of the community is ſuſtained and accommodated by the labour of the other. Thoſe who have much leiſure to think, will always be enlarging the ſtock of ideas; and every increaſe of knowledge, whether real or fancied, will produce new words, or combinations of words. When the mind is unchained from neceſſity, it will range after convenience; when it is left at large in the fields of ſpeculation, it will ſhift opinions; as any cuſtom is diſuſed, the words that expreſſed it muſt periſh with it; as any opinion grows popular, it will innovate ſpeech in the ſame proportion as it alters practice.

PREFACE.

As by the cultivation of various ſciences a language is amplified, it will be more furniſhed with words deflected from their original ſenſe; the geometrician will talk of a courtier's zenith, or the eccentrick virtue of a wild hero, and the phyſician of ſanguine expectations and phlegmatick delays. Copiouſneſs of ſpeech will give opportunities to capricious choice, by which ſome words will be preferred, and others degraded; viciſſitudes of faſhion will enforce the uſe of new, or extend the ſignification of known terms. The tropes of poetry will make hourly encroachments, and the metaphorical will become the current ſenſe: pronunciation will be varied by levity or ignorance, and the pen muſt at length comply with the tongue; illiterate writers will, at one time or other, by publick infatuation, riſe into renown, who, not knowing the original import of words, will uſe them with colloquial licentiouſneſs, confound diſtinction, and forget propriety. As politeneſs increaſes, ſome expreſſions will be conſidered as too groſs and vulgar for the delicate, others as too formal and ceremonious for the gay and airy; new phraſes are therefore adopted, which muſt, for the ſame reaſons, be in time diſmiſſed. Swift, in his petty treatiſe on the Engliſh language, allows that new words muſt ſometimes be introduced, but propoſes that none ſhould be ſuffered to become obſolete. But what makes a word obſolete, more than general agreement to forbear it? and how ſhall it be continued, when it conveys an offenſive idea, or recalled again into the mouths of mankind, when it has once become unfamiliar by diſuſe, and unpleaſing by unfamiliarity?

There is another cauſe of alteration more prevalent than any other, which yet in the preſent ſtate of the world cannot be obviated A mixture of two languages will produce a third diſtinct from both, and they will always be mixed, where the chief part of education, and the moſt conſpicuous accompliſhment, is ſkill in ancient or in foreign tongues. He that has long cultivated another language, will find its words and combinations crowd upon his memory; and haſte and negligence, refinement and affectation, will obtrude borrowed terms and exotick expreſſions.

The great peſt of ſpeech is frequency of tranſlation. No book was ever turned from one language into another, without imparting ſomething of its native idiom; this is the moſt miſchievous and comprehenſive innovation; ſingle words may enter by thouſands, and the fabrick of the tongue continue the ſame; but new phraſeology changes much at once; it alters not the ſingle ſtones of the building, but the order of the columns. If an academy ſhould be eſtabliſhed for the cultivation of our ſtyle, which I, who can never wiſh to ſee dependance multiplied, hope the ſpirit of Engliſh liberty will hinder or deſtroy, let them, inſtead of compiling grammars and dictionaries, endeavour, with all their influence, to ſtop the licence of tranſlators, whoſe idleneſs and ignorance, if it be ſuffered to proceed, will reduce us to babble a dialect of France.

If the changes that we fear be thus irreſiſtible, what remains but to acquieſce with ſilence, as in the other inſurmountable diſtreſſes of humanity? It remains that we retard what we cannot repel, that we palliate what we cannot cure. Life may be lengthened by care, though death cannot be ultimately defeated: tongues, like governments, have a natural tendency to degeneration; we have long preſerved our conſtitution, let us make ſome ſtruggles for our language.

In hope of giving longevity to that which its own nature forbids to be immortal, I have devoted this book, the labour of years, to the honour of my country, that we may no longer yield the palm of philology, without a conteſt, to the nations of the continent. The chief glory of every people ariſes from its authors: whether I ſhall add any thing by my own writings to the reputation of Engliſh literature, muſt be left to time: much of my life has been loſt under the preſſures of diſeaſe; much has been trifled away; and much has always been ſpent in proviſion for the day that was paſſing over me; but I ſhall not think my employment uſeleſs or ignoble, if by my aſſiſtance foreign nations, and diſtant ages, gain acceſs to the propagators of knowledge, and underſtand the teachers of truth; if my labours afford light to the repoſitories of ſcience, and add celebrity to Bacon, to Hooker, to Milton, and to Boyle.

When I am animated by this wiſh, I look with pleaſure on my book, however defective, and deliver it to the world with the ſpirit of a man that has endeavoured well. That it will immediately become popular I have not promiſed to myſelf: a few wild blunders, and riſible abſurdities, from which no work of ſuch multiplicity was ever free, may for a time furniſh folly with laughter, and harden ignorance in contempt; but uſeful diligence will at laſt prevail, and there never can be wanting ſome who diſtinguiſh deſert; who will conſider that no dictionary of a living tongue ever can be perfect, ſince while it is haſtening to publication, ſome words are budding, and ſome falling away; that a whole life cannot be ſpent upon ſyntax and etymology, and that even a whole life would not be ſufficient; that he, whoſe deſign includes whatever language can expreſs, muſt often ſpeak of what he does not underſtand; that a writer will ſometimes be hurried by eagerneſs to the end, and ſometimes faint with wearineſs under a taſk, which Scaliger compares to the labours of the anvil and the mine; that what is obvious is not always known, and what is known is not always preſent; that ſudden fits of inadvertency will ſurprize vigilance, ſlight avocations will ſeduce attention, and caſual eclipſes of the mind will darken learning; and that the writer ſhall often in vain trace his memory at the moment of need, for that which yeſterday he knew with intuitive readineſs, and which will come uncalled into his thoughts to-morrow.

In this work, when it ſhall be found that much is omitted, let it not be forgotten that much likewiſe is performed; and though no book was ever ſpared out of tenderneſs to the author, and the world is little ſolicitous to know whence proceeded the faults of that which it condemns; yet it may gratify curioſity to inform it, that the Engliſh Dictionary was written with little aſſiſtance of the learned, and without any patronage of the great; not in the ſoft obſcurities of retirement, or under the ſhelter of academick bowers, but amidſt inconvenience and diſtraction, in ſickneſs and in ſorrow. It may repreſs the triumph of malignant criticiſm to obſerve, that if our language is not here fully diſplayed, I have only failed in an attempt which no human powers have hitherto completed. If the lexicons of ancient tongues, now immutably fixed, and comprized in a few volumes, be yet, after the toil of ſucceſſive ages, inadequate and deluſive; if the aggregated knowledge, and co-operationg diligence of the Italian academicians, did not ſecure them from the cenſure of Beni; if the embodied criticks of France, when fifty years had been ſpent upon their work, were obliged to change its œconomy, and give their ſecond edition another form, I may ſurely be contented without the praiſe of perfection, which, if I could obtain, in this gloom of ſolitude, what would it avail me? I have protracted my work till moſt of thoſe whom I wiſhed to pleaſe have ſunk into the grave, and ſucceſs and miſcarriage are empty ſounds: I therefore diſmiſs it with frigid tranquillity, having little to fear or hope from cenſure or from praiſe.

THE HISTORY OF THE ENGLISH LANGUAGE.

THOUGH the Britains or Welſh were the firſt poſſeſſors of this iſland, whoſe names are recorded, and are therefore in civil hiſtory always conſidered as the predeceſſors of the preſent inhabitants; yet the deduction of the Engliſh language, from the earlieſt times of which we have any knowledge to its preſent ſtate, requires no mention of them: for we have ſo few words which can, with any probability, be referred to Britiſh roots, that we juſtly regard the Saxons and Welſh as nations totally diſtinct. It has been conjectured, that when the Saxons ſeized this country, they ſuffered the Britains to live among them in a ſtate of vaſſalage, employed in the culture of the ground, and other laborious and ignoble ſervices. But it is ſcarcely poſſible, that a nation, however depreſſed, ſhould have been mixed with another in conſiderable numbers without ſome communication of their tongue, and therefore, it may, with great reaſon, be imagined, that thoſe, who were not ſheltered in the mountains, periſhed by the ſword.

The whole fabrick and ſcheme of the Engliſh language is Gothick or Teutonick: it is a dialect of that tongue, which prevails over all the northern countries of Europe, except thoſe where the Sclavonian is ſpoken. Of theſe languages Dr. Hickes has thus exhibited the genealogy.

GOTHICK,

ANGLO-SAXON,	FRANCICK,	CIMBRICK,
Dutch, Friſick, Engliſh.	German.	Iſlandick, Norwegian, Swediſh, Daniſh.

Of the Gothick, the only monument remaining is a copy of the goſpels ſomewhat mutilated, which, from the ſilver with which the characters are adorned, is called the ſilver-book. It is now preſerved at Upſal, and having been twice publiſhed before, has been lately reprinted at Oxford, under the inſpection of Mr. Lye, the editor of Junius. Whether the diction of this venerable manuſcript be purely Gothick, has been doubted; it ſeems however to exhibit the moſt ancient dialect now to be found of the Teutonick race; and the Saxon, which is the origin of the preſent Engliſh, was either derived from it, or both have deſcended from ſome common parent.

What was the form of the Saxon language, when, about the year 450, they firſt entered Britain, cannot now be known. They ſeem to have been a people without learning, and very probably without an alphabet; their ſpeech, therefore, having been always curſory and extemporaneous, muſt have been artleſs and unconnected, without any modes of tranſition or involution of clauſes; which abruptneſs and inconnection may be obſerved even in their later writings. This barbarity may be ſuppoſed to have continued during their wars with the Britains, which for a time left them no leiſure for ſofter ſtudies; nor is there any reaſon for ſuppoſing it abated, till the year 570, when Auguſtine came from Rome to convert them to Chriſtianity. The Chriſtian religion always implies or produces a certain degree of civility and learning; they then became by degrees acquainted with the Roman language, and ſo gained, from time to time, ſome knowledge and elegance, till in three centuries they had formed a language capable of expreſſing all the ſentiments of a civiliſed people, as appears by king Alfred's paraphraſe or imitation of Boethius, and his ſhort preface, which I have ſelected as the firſt ſpecimen of ancient Engliſh.

This may perhaps be conſidered as a ſpecimen of the Saxon in its higheſt ſtate of purity, for here are ſcarcely any words borrowed from the Roman dialects.

Of the following verſion of the goſpels the age is not certainly known, but it was probably written between the time of Alfred and that of the Norman conqueſt, and therefore may properly be inſerted here.

Tranſlations ſeldom afford juſt ſpecimens of a language, and leaſt of all thoſe in which a ſcrupulous and verbal interpretation is endeavoured, becauſe they retain the phraſeology and ſtructure of the original tongue; yet they have often this convenience, that the ſame book, being tranſlated in different ages, affords opportunity of marking the gradations of change, and bringing one age into compariſon with another. For this purpoſe I have placed the Saxon verſion and that of Wickliffe, written about the year 1380, in oppoſite columns, becauſe the convenience of eaſy collation ſeems greater than that of regular chronology.

LUK, Chap. I.

IN the dayes of Eroude kyng of Judee ther was a preſt Zacarye by name: of the ſort of Abia, and his wyf was of the doughtris of Aaron: and hir name was Elizabeth.

2 An bothe weren juſte bifore God: goynge in alle the maundementis and juſtifyingis of the Lord withouten playnt.

3 And thei hadden no child, for Elizabeth was bareyn and bothe weren of greet age in her dayes.

4 And it befel that whanne Zacarye ſchould do the office of preſthod in the ordir of his courſe to fore God.

5 Aftir the cuſtom of the preſthod, he wente forth by lot and entride into the temple to encenſen.

6 And at the multitude of the puple was without ſorth and preyede in the our of encenſying.

7 And an aungel of the Lord apperide to him: and ſtood on the right half of the auter of encenſe.

8 And Zacarye ſeynge was afrayed: and drede fel upon him.

9 And the aungel ſayde to him, Zacarye drede thou not: for thy preier is herd, and Elizabeth thi wif ſchal bere to thee a ſone: and his name ſchal be clepid Jon.

10 And joye and gladyng ſchal be to thee: and manye ſchulen have joye in his natyvyte.

11 For he ſchal be great bifore the Lord: and he ſchal not drinke wyn ne ſydyr, and he ſchal be fulfild with the holy goſt yit of his modir wombe.

12 And he ſchal converte manye of the children of Iſrael to her Lord God.

13 And he ſchal go bifore in the ſpiryte and vertu of Helye: and he ſchal turne the hertis of the fadris to the ſonis, and men out of beleeve: to the prudence of juſt men, to make redy a perfyt puple to the Lord.

14 And Zacarye ſeyde to the aungel: wherof ſchal Y wyte this? for Y am old: and my wyf hath gon fer in hir dayes.

15 And the aungel anſwerde and ſeyde to him, for Y am Gabriel that ſtonde nygh bifore God, and Y am ſent to thee to ſpeke and to evangeliſe to thee theſe thingis, and lo thou ſchalt be doumbe.

16 And thou ſchalt not mowe ſpeke, till into the day in which theſe thingis ſchulen de don, for thou haſt not beleved to my wordis, whiche ſchulen be fulfild in her tyme.

17 And the puple was abidynge Zacarye: and thei wondriden that he taryede in the temple.

18 And he gede out and myghte not ſpeke to hem: and thei knewen that he hadde ſeyn a viſioun in the temple, and he bekenide to hem: and he dwellide ſtille doumbe.

19 And it was don whanne the dayes of his office weren fulfillid: he wente into his hous.,

20 And aftir theſe dayes Elizabeth his wif conſeyvede and hidde hir fyve monethis and ſeyde.

21 For ſo the Lord dide to me in the dayes in whiche he biheld to take awey my reproof among men.

22 But in the ſixte monethe the aungel Gabriel was ſent from God: into a cytee of Galilee whos name was Nazareth.

23 To a maydun weddid to a man; whos name was Joſeph of the hous of Dauith, and the name of the maydun was Marye.

24 And the aungel entride to hir, and ſayde, heil ful of grace the Lord be with thee: bleſſid be thou among wymmen.

25 And whanne ſche hadde herd: ſche was troublid in his word, and thoughte what manner ſalutacioun this was.

26 And the aungel ſeid to hir, ne drede not thou Marye: for thou haſt founden grace anentis God.

27 Lo thou ſchalt conſeyve in wombe, and ſchalt bere a ſone: and thou ſchalt clepe his name Jheſus.

28 This ſhall be gret: and he ſchal be clepid the ſone of higheſte, and the Lord God ſchal geve to him the ſeete of Dauith his fadir.

29 And he ſchal regne in the hous of Jacob withouten ende, and of his rewme ſchal be noon ende.

30 And Marye ſeyde to the aungel, on what maner ſchal this thing be don? for Y knowe not man.

31 And the aungel anſwerde and ſeyde to hir, the holy Goſt ſchal came fro above into thee: and the vertu of the higheſte ſchal ouer ſchadowe thee: and therfore that holy thing that ſchal be borun of thee: ſchal be clepide the ſone of God.

32 And to Elizabeth thi coſyn, and ſche alſo hath conſeyved a ſone in hir eelde, and this monethe is the ſixte to hir that is clepid bareyn.

33 For every word ſchal not be impoſſyble anentis God.

34 And Marye ſeide to the hond maydun of the Lord: be it doon to me aftir thi word; and the aungel departide fro hir.

39 Soðlice on þam dagum aras Maria ⁊ ferde on muntland mid ofste, on Iudeiscre ceastre.

40 ⁊ eode into Zacharias huse. ⁊ grette Elizabeth :·

41 Ða wæs geworden þa Elizabeth gehyrde Marian gretinge. ða gefagnude ꝥ cild on hyre innoðe. and þa wearð Elizabeth haligum Gaste gefylled.

42 ⁊ heo clypode mycelre stefne. and cwæð. Þu eart betwux wifum gebletsud. and gebletsud is þines innoðes wæstm.

43 ⁊ hwanum is me þis. ꝥ mines Drihtnes modor to me cume :·

44 Sona swa þinre gretinge stefn on minum earum geworden wæs. þa fahnude [in glædnisse] min cild on minum innoþe.

45 And eadig þu eart þu þe gelyfdest. ꝥ fulfremede synt þa þing þe fram Drihtne gesæde synd.·

46 Ða cwæð Maria. Min sawel mærsað Drihten.

47 ⁊ min gast geblissude on Gode minum Hælende.

48 Forþam þe he geseah his þinene ead-modnesse. soðlice heonun-forð me eadige secgað ealle cneoressa.

49 Forþam þe me mycele þing dyde se ðe mihtig is. ⁊ his nama is halig.

35 And Marye roos up in tho dayes and wente with haſte into the mountaynes into a citee of Judee.

36 And ſche entride into the hous of Zacarye and grette Elizabeth.

37 And it was don as Elizabeth herde the ſalutacioun of Marye the young childe in hir wombe gladide, and Elizabeth was fulfild with the holy Goſt.

38 And cryede with a gret voice and ſeyde, bleſſid be thou among wymmen, and bleſſid be the fruyt of thy wombe.

39 And whereof is this thing to me, that the modir of my Lord come to me?

40 For lo as the vois of thi ſalutacioun was maad in myn eeris: the yong child gladide in joye in my wombe.

41 And bleſſid be thou that haſt beleeved: for thilke thingis that ben ſeid of the Lord to thee ſchulen be parfytly don.

42 And Marye ſeyde, my ſoul magnifieth the Lord.

43 And my ſpiryt hath gladid in God myn helthe.

44 For he hath behulden the mekeneſſe of his hand-mayden: for lo for this alle generatiouns ſchulen ſeye that I am bleſſid.

45 For he that is mighti hath don to me grete thingis, and his name is holy.

46 And his merſy is fro kyndrede into kyndredis to men that dreden him.

47 He made myght in his arm, he ſcateride proude men with the thoughte of his herte.

48 He ſette doun myghty men fro ſeete and enhaunſide meke men.

49 He hath fulfillid hungry men with goodis, and he has left riche men voide.

50 He havynge mynde of his mercy took up Iſrael his child,

51 As he hath ſpokun to oure fadris, to Abraham, and to his ſeed into worldis.

52 And Marye dwellide with hir as it were thre monethis and turned again into his hous.

53 But the tyme of beringe child was fulfillid to Elizabeth, and ſche bar a ſon.

54 And the neyghbouris and coſyns of hir herden that the Lord hadde magnyfied his mercy with hir, and thei thankiden him.

55 And it was doon in the eightithe day thei camen to circumſide the child, and thei clepiden him Zacarye by the name of his fadir.

56 And his modir anſweride and ſeide, nay; but he ſchal be clepid Jon.

57 And thei ſeiden to hir, for no man is in thi kyndrede that is clepid this name.

58 And thei bikenyden to his fadir, what he wolde that he were clepid.

59 And he axinge a poyntel wroot ſeyinge, Jon is his name, and alle men wondriden.

60 And annoon his mouth was openyd and his tunge, and he ſpak and bleſſide God.

61 And drede was maad on all hir neighbouris, and all the wordis weren puplischid on alle the mounteynes of Judee.

62 And alle men that herden puttiden in her herte, and ſeiden what manner child ſchal this be, for the hond of the Lord was with him.

63 And Zacarye his fadir was fulfillid with the holy Goſt, and profeciede and ſeide.

64 Bleſſid be the Lord God of Iſrael, for he has viſitid and maad redempcioun of his puple.

65 And he has rered to us an horn of helthe in the hous of Dauith his his child.

66 As he ſpak by the mouth of hiſe holy prophetis that weren fro the world.

67 Helth fro oure enemyes, and fro the hond of alle men that hatiden us.

68 To do merſy with oure fadris, and to have mynde of his holy teſtament.

69 The great ooth that he ſwoor to Abraham our fadir,

70 To geve himſelf to us, that we without drede delyvered fro the hond of our enemyes ſerve to him,

71 In holyneſſe and rightwiſneſſe before him, in alle our dayes.

72 And thou child ſchalt be clepid the profete of the higheſte, for thou ſchalt go before the face of the Lord to make redy hiſe weyes.

73 To geve ſcience of heelth to his puple into remiſſioun of her ſynnes.

74 By the inwardeneſs of the merſy of oure God, in the which he ſpringyng up fro on high hath viſited us.

75 To geve light to them that ſitten in derkneſſis, and in ſchadowe of deeth, to dreſſe our feet into the weye of pees;

76 And the child wexide, and was confortid in ſpiryt, and was in deſert placis till to the day of his ſchewing to Yſrael.

Of the Saxon poetry ſome ſpecimen is neceſſary, though our ignorance of the laws of their metre and the quantities of their ſyllables, which it would be very difficult, perhaps impoſſible, to recover, excludes us from that pleaſure which the old bards undoubtedly gave to their contemporaries.

The firſt poetry of the Saxons was without rhyme, and conſequently muſt have depended upon the quantity of their ſyllables; but they began in time to imitate their neighbours, and cloſe their verſes with correſpondent ſounds.

The two paſſages, which I have ſelected, contain apparently the rudiments of our preſent lyrick meaſures, and the writers may be juſtly conſidered as the genuine anceſtors of the Engliſh poets.

About the year 1150, the Saxon began to take a form in which the beginning of the preſent Engliſh may be plainly diſcovered; this change ſeems not to have been the effect of the Norman conqueſt, for very few French words are found to have been introduced in the firſt hundred years after it; the language muſt therefore have been altered by cauſes like thoſe which, notwithſtanding the care of writers and ſocieties inſtituted to obviate them, are even now daily making innovations in every living language. I have exhibited a ſpecimen of the language of this age from the year 1135 to 1140 of the Saxon chronicle, of which the latter part was apparently written near the time to which it relates.

Nearly about this time, the following pieces of poetry ſeem to have been written, of which I have inſerted only ſhort fragments; the firſt is a rude attempt at the preſent meaſure of eight ſyllables, and the ſecond is a natural introduction to Robert of Glouceſter, being compoſed in the ſame meaſure, which, however rude and barbarous it may ſeem, taught the way to the Alexandrines of the French poetry.

In theſe fragments, the adulteration of the Saxon tongue, by a mixture of the Norman, becomes apparent; yet it is not ſo much changed by the admixture of new words, which might be imputed to commerce with the continent, as by changes of its own forms and terminations; for which no reaſon can be given.

Hitherto the language uſed in this iſland, however different in ſucceſſive time, may be called Saxon; nor can it be expected, from the nature of things gradually changing, that any time can be aſſigned, when the Saxon may be ſaid to ceaſe, and the Engliſh to commence. Robert of Glouceſter, however, who is placed by the criticks in the thirteenth century, ſeems to have uſed a kind of intermediate diction, neither Saxon nor Engliſh; in his work therefore we ſee the tranſition exhibited, and, as he is the firſt of our writers in rhyme, of whom any large work remains, a more extenſive quotation is extracted. He writes apparently in the ſame meaſure with the foregoing authour of St. Margarite, which, poliſhed into greater exactneſs, appeared to our anceſtors ſo ſuitable to the genius of the Engliſh language, that it was continued in uſe almoſt to the middle of the ſeventeenth century.

OF þe batayles of Denemarch, þat hii dude in þys londe
Þat worſt were of alle oþere, we mote abbe an honde.
Worſt hii were. vor oþere adde ſomwanne ydo,
As Romeyns & Saxons, & wel wuſte þat lond þerto.
Ac hii ne kept yt holde noȝt, bote robby, and ſſende,
And deſtrue, & berne, & ſle, & ne couþe abbe non ende.
And bote lute yt nas worþ, þey hii were ouercome ylome.
Vor myd ſſypes and gret poer as preſt eſſone hii come.
Kyng Adelwolf of þys lond kyng was tuenty ȝer.
Þe Deneys come by hym ryuor þan hii dude er.
Vor in þe al our vorſt ȝer of ys kynedom
Myd þre & þrytty ſſypuol men her prince hyder come,
And at Souþhamtone aryuede, an hauene by Souþe.
Anoþer gret oſt þulke tyme aryuede at Porteſmouþe.
Þe kyng nuſte weþer kepe, at delde ys oſt atuo.
Þe Denes adde þe mayſtre. þo al was ydo,
And by Eſtangle and Lyndeſeye hii wende vorþ atte laſte,
And ſo hamward al by Kent, & ſlowe & barnde vaſte.
Aȝen wynter hii wende hem. anoþer ȝer eſt hii come.
And deſtrude Kent al out, and Londone nome.
Þus al an ten ȝer þat lond hii broȝte þer doune,
So þat in þe teþe ȝer of þe kynge's croune,
Al byſouþe hii come alond, and þet folc of Somerſete
Þoru þe byſſop Alcſton and þet folc of Dorſete
Hii come & ſmyte an batayle, & þere, þoru Gode's grace,
Þe Deneys were al byneþe, & þe lond folc adde þe place,
And more proweſſe dude þo, þan þe kyng myȝte byuore,
Þeruore gode lond men ne beþ noȝt al verlore.
Þe kyng was þe boldore þo, & aȝen hem þe more drou,
And ys foure godes ſones woxe vaſte y nou,

Edelbold and Adelbryȝt, Edelred and Alfred.
Þẏs was a ſtalwarde tem, & of gret wẏſdom & red,
And kẏnges were al foure, & defendede wel þẏs lond,
An Deneẏs dude ſſame ẏnou, þat me volwel vond.
Is ſyxteþe ȝere of þe kẏnge's kẏnedom
In eldeſte ſone Adelbold gret oſt to hẏm nome,
And ẏs fader alſo god, and oþere heye men al ſo,
And wende aȝen þẏs Deneẏs, þat muche wo adde ẏ do.
Vor myd tuo hondred ſſẏpes & an alf at Temſe mouþ hii come,
And Londone, and Kanterburẏ, and oþer tounes nome,
And ſo vorþ in to Soþereẏe, & ſlowe & barnde vaſte,
Þere þe kẏng and ẏs ſone hem mette atte laſte.
Þere was bataẏle ſtrong ẏnou ẏſmẏte in an þrowe.
Þe godes kẏnȝtes leẏe adoun as gras, wan medeþ mowe.
Heueden, (þat were of ẏſmẏte,) & oþer lẏmes alſo,
Flete in blode al fram þe grounde, ar þe bataẏle were ẏdo.
Wanne þat blod ſtod al abrod, vas þer gret wo ẏ nou.
Nẏs ẏt reuþe vorto hure, þat me ſo volc ſlou?
Ac our ſuete Louerd atte laſte ſſewede ẏs ſuete grace,
And ſende þe Criſtẏne Englẏſſe men þe maẏſtrẏe in þe place,
And þe heþene men of Denemarch bẏneþe were echon.
Nou nas þer ȝut in Denemarch Criſtendom non;
Þe kẏng her after to holẏ chẏrche ẏs herte þe more drou,
And teþeȝede wel & al ẏs lond, as hii aȝte, wel ẏ nou.
Seẏn Swẏthẏn at Wẏncheſtre bẏſſop þo was,
And Alcſton at Sẏrebourne, þat amendede muche þẏs cas.
Þe kẏng was wel þe betere man þoru her beẏre red,
Tuentẏ wẏnter he was kẏng, ar he were ded.
At Wẏncheſtre he was ẏbured, as he ȝut lẏþ þere.
Hẏs tueẏe ſones he ȝef ẏs lond, as he bẏȝet ham ere.
Adelbold, the eldore, þe kẏnedom of Eſtſex,
And ſuþþe Adelbrẏȝt, Kent and Weſtſex.
Eẏȝte hondred ȝer ẏt was and ſeuene and fẏftẏ al ſo,
After þat God anerþe com, þat þẏs dede was ẏdo.
Boþe hii wuſte bẏ her tẏme wel her kẏnedom,
At þe vyſte ȝer Adelbold out of þẏs lyue nome.
At Sſẏrebourne he was ẏbured, & ẏs broþer Adelbrẏȝt
His kẏnedom adde after hẏm, as lawe was and rẏȝt.
Bẏ ẏs daye þe verde com of þe heþene men wel prout,
And Hamteſſyre and deſtrude Wẏncheſtre al out.
And that lond folc of Hamteſſyre her red þo nome
And of Barcſſyre, and foȝte and þe ſſrewen ouercome.
Adelbrẏȝt was kẏng of Kent ȝeres folle tene,
And of Weſtſex bote vẏue, þo he deẏde ẏch wene.

ADELRED was after hẏm kẏnȝ ẏ mad in the place,
Eẏȝhte hondred & ſeuene & ſẏxtẏ as in the ȝer of grace.
Þe vorſte ȝer of ẏs kẏnedom þe Deneẏs þẏcke com,
And robbede and deſtrude, and cẏtes vaſte nome.
Maẏſtres hii adde of her oſt, as ẏt were dukes, tueẏe,
Hẏnguar and Hubba, þat ſſrewen were beẏe.
In Eſt Angle hii bẏleuede, to reſt hem as ẏt were,
Mẏd her oſt al þe wynter, of the vorſt ȝere,
Þe oþer ȝer hii dude hem vorþ, & ouer Homber come,
And ſlowe to grounde & barnde, & Euerwẏk nome.
Þer was bataẏle ſtrong ẏ nou, vor ẏſlawe was þere
Oſryc kẏng of Homberlond, & monẏe þat with hẏm were.
Þo Homberlond was þus ẏſſend, hii wende & tounes nome.
So þat atte laſte to Eſtangle aȝen hẏm come.
Þer hii barnde & robbede, and þat folc to grounde ſlowe,
And, as wolues among ſſep, reulẏch hem to drowe.
Seẏnt Edmond was þo her kẏng, & þo he ſeẏ þat deluol cas
Þat me morþrede ſo þat folc, & non amendement nas,
He ches leuere to deẏe hẏmſulf, þat ſuch ſorwe to ẏſeẏ.
He dude hẏm vorþ among hẏs fon, nolde he nothẏg fle.
Hii nome hẏm & ſourged hẏm, & ſuþþe naked hẏm bounde
To a tre, & to hẏm ſſote, & made hẏm monẏ a wounde,
Þat þe arewe were on hẏm þo þẏcce, þat no ſtede nas bẏleuede.
Atte laſte hii martred hẏm, and ſmẏte of ẏs heued.
Þe ſẏxte ȝer of þe crounement of Aldered the kẏng
A nẏwe oſt com into þẏs lond, gret þoru alle þẏng,
And anon to Redẏnge robbede and ſlowe.
Þe king and Alfred ẏs broþer nome men ẏnowe,
Mette hem, and a bataẏle ſmẏte vp Aſſeſdoune.
Þer was monẏ moder chẏld, þat ſone laẏ þer doune.
The bataẏle ẏlaſte vorte nẏȝt, and þer were aſlawe
Vẏf dukes of Denemarch, ar hii wolde wẏþ drawe,
And mony þouſend of oþer men, & þo gonne hii to fle;
Ac hii adde alle ẏbe aſſend, ȝẏf þe nẏȝt madde ẏ be.
Tueẏe bataẏles her after in þe ſulf ȝere
Hii ſmẏte, and at boþe þe heþene maẏſtres were.
Þe kẏng Adelred ſone þo þen weẏ of deþ nome,
As ẏt vel, þe vẏftẏ ȝer of ẏs kẏnedom.
At Wẏmbourne he was ẏbured, as God ȝef þat cas, Þe gode Alfred, ẏs broþer, after hẏm kẏng was.

ALFRED, þẏs noble man, as in þe ȝer of grace he nom
Eẏgte hondred & ſẏxtẏ & tuelue þe kẏnedom.
Arſt he adde at Rome ẏbe, &, vor ẏs grete wẏſdom,
Þe pope Leon hẏm bleſſede, þo he þuder com,
And þe kẏnge's croune of hẏs lond, þat in þẏs lond ȝut ẏs:
And he led hẏm to be kẏng, ar he kẏng were ẏwẏs.
An he was kẏng of Engelond, of alle þat þer come,
Þat vorſt þus ẏlad was of þe pope of Rome,
An ſuþþe oþer after hẏm of þe erchebẏſſopes echon.
So þat hẏuor hẏm pore kẏng nas þer non.
In þe Souþ ſẏde of Temeſe nẏne bataẏles he nome
Aȝen þe Deneẏs þe vorſt ȝer of ẏs kẏnedom.
Nẏe ȝer he was þus in þẏs lond in bataẏle & in wo,
An ofte ſẏþe aboue was, and bẏneþe oftor mo;
So longe, þat hẏm nere bẏ leuede bote þre ſſẏren in ẏs hond,
Hamteſſyre, and Wẏlteſſyre, and Somerſete, of al ẏs lond.
A daẏ as he werẏ was, and aſuoddrẏnge hẏm nome
And ẏs men were ẏwend auẏſſeþ, Seyn Cutbert to hym com.
"Ich am," he ſeyde, "Cutbert, to þe ẏcham ẏwend
"To brẏnge the gode tẏtẏnges. Fram God ẏcham ẏſend.
"Vor þat folc of þẏs lond to ſẏnne her wẏlle al ȝeue,
"And ȝut nolle herto her ſẏnnes bẏleue
"Þoru me & oþer halewen, þat in thẏs lond were ẏbore;
"Than vor ȝou bẏddeth God, wanne we beth hẏm bẏuore,
"Hour Louerd mẏd ẏs eẏen of milce on the loketh theruore,
"And thẏ poer the wole ȝẏue aȝen, that thou aſt neẏ verlore.
"And that thou ther of ſoth ẏſe, thou ſſalt abbe tokẏnẏnge.
"Vor thẏm men, þat beth ago to daẏ auẏſſynge,
"In lepes & in couſles ſo muche vyſs hii ſſolde hẏm brynge,
"That ech man wondrẏ ſſal of ſo gret cacchẏnge.
"And the mor vor the harde vorſte, that the water ẏfrore hẏs,
"That the more aȝen the kunde of vyſſẏnge ẏt ẏs.
"Of ſerue ẏt wel aȝen God, and ẏlef me ys meſſager,
"And thou ſſall thẏ wẏlle abẏde, as ẏcham ẏtold her."
As thẏs kẏng herof awoc, and of thẏs ſẏȝte thoȝte,
H ẏs ẏſſares come to hẏm, & ſo gret won of fyſs hẏm broȝte,
That wonder ẏt was, & namelẏche vor the weder was ſo colde.
Tho lẏuede the god man wel, that Seẏn Cutbert adde ẏtold.
In Deuenẏſſyre þer after arẏuede of Deneẏs
Thre and tuentẏ ſſẏpuol men, all aȝen the peẏs,
The kẏnge's brother of Denemarch duc of oſt was.
Oure kẏnge's men of Engelond mette hem bẏ cas,
And ſmẏte þer an bataẏle, and her gret duc ſlowe,
And eẏȝte hondred & fourty men, & her caronẏes to drowe.
Tho kyng Alfred hurde thẏs, ẏs herte gladede tho,
That lond folc to hẏm come ſo thẏcke ſo ẏt mẏȝte go,
Of Somerſete, of Wẏlteſſẏre, of Hamteſſẏre therto,
Euere as he wende, and of ẏs owe folc al ſo.
So that he adde poer ẏnou, and atte laſte hii come,
And a bataẏle at Edendone aȝen the Deneẏs nome.
And ſlowe to grounde, & wonne the maẏſtre of the velde.
The kẏng & ẏs grete duke bẏgonne hem to ȝelde
To the kẏng Alfred to ẏs wẏlle, and oſtages toke,
Vorto wende out of ẏs lond, ȝẏf he ẏt wolde loke;
And ȝut therto, vor ẏs loue, to auonge Criſtendom.
Kẏng Gurmund, the hexte kẏng, vorſt ther to come.
Kẏng Alfred ẏs godfader was. & ẏbaptẏſed ek ther were Threttẏ of her hexte dukes. and muche of that folc here
Kẏng Alfred hem huld wẏth hẏm tuelf dawes as he hende,
And ſuthþe he ȝef hem large ȝẏftes, and let hẏm wende.
Hii, that nolde Criſtyn be, of lande ſlowe tho,
And byȝonde ſee in France dude wel muche wo.
Ȝut the ſſrewen come aȝen, and muche wo here wroȝte.
Ac the kẏng Alfred atte laſte to ſſame hem euere broȝte.
Kẏng Alfred was the wẏſoſt kẏng, that long was bẏuore.
Vor theẏ me ſegge the lawes beth in worre tẏme vorlore,
Nas ẏt noȝt ſo hiis daẏe, vor theẏ he in worre were,
Lawes he made rẏȝtuollore, and ſtrengore than er were.
Clerc he was god ynou, and ȝut, as me telleth me,
He was more than ten ȝer old, ar he couthe ẏs abece.
Ac ẏs gode moder ofte ſmale ȝẏftes hẏm tok,
Vor to byleue other ple, and lokẏ on ẏs boke.
So that bẏ por clergẏe ẏs rẏȝt lawes he wonde,
That neuere er nere ẏ mad, to gouernẏ ẏs lond.
And vor the worre was ſo muche of the luther Deneẏs,
The men of thẏs ſulue lond were of the worſe peẏs.
And robbede and ſlowe othere, theruor he bẏuonde,
That ther were hondredes in eche contreẏe of ẏs lond,
And in ech toune of the hondred a tethẏnge were alſo,
And that ech man wythoute gret lond in tethẏnge were ẏdo,
And that ech man knewe other that in tethẏnge were,
And wuſte ſomdel of her ſtat, ȝẏf me thu vp hem bere.
So ſtreẏt he was, that they me ledde amẏdde weẏes heẏe
Seluer, that non man ne dorſte ẏt nẏme, theẏ he ẏt ſeẏe.

Ac Wẏncheſtrẏe he rerde on, that nẏwe munſtre ẏcluped ẏs.
Hẏs lẏf eẏȝte and tuentẏ ȝer in ẏs kẏnedom ẏlaſte.
Aſter ẏs deth he wos ẏbured at Wẏncheſtre atte laſte.

Sir John Mandeville wrote, as he himſelf informs us, in the fourteenth century, and his work, which compriſing a relation of many different particulars, conſequently required the uſe of many words and phraſes, may be properly ſpecified in this place. Of the following quotations, I have choſen the firſt, becauſe it ſhows, in ſome meaſure, the ſtate of European ſcience as well as of the Engliſh tongue; and the ſecond, becauſe it is valuable for the force of thought and beauty of expreſſion.

IN that lond, ne in many othere bezonde that, no man may ſee the ſterre tranſmontane, that is clept the ſterre of the ſee, that is unmevable, and that is toward the Northe, that we clepen the lode ſterre. But men ſee another ſterre, the contrarie to him, that is toward the Southe, that is clept Antartyk. And right as the ſchip men taken here avys here, and governe hem be the lode ſterre, right ſo don ſchip men bezonde the parties, be the ſterre of the Southe, the which ſterre apperethe not to us. And this ſterre, that is toward the Northe, that wee clepen the lode ſterre, ne apperethe not to hem. For whiche cauſe, men may wel perceyve, that the londe and the ſee ben of rownde ſchapp and forme. For the partie of the firmament ſchewethe in o contree, that ſchewethe not in another contree. And men may well preven be experience and ſotyle compaſſement of wytt, that zif a man fond paſſages be ſchippes, that wolde go to ſerchen the world, men myghte go be ſchippe alle aboute the world, and aboven and benethen. The whiche thing I prove thus, aſtre that I have ſeyn. For I have been toward the parties of Braban, and beholden the Aſtrolabre, that the ſterre that is clept the tranſmontayne, is 53 degrees highe. And more forthere in Almayne and Bewme, it hathe 58 degrees. And more forthe toward the parties ſeptemtrioneles, it is 62 degrees of heghte, and certyne mynutes. For I my ſelf have meſured it by the Aſtrolabre. Now ſchulle ze knowe, that azen the Tranſmontayne, is the tother ſterre, that is clept Antartyk; as I have ſeyd before. And tho 2 ſterres ne meeven nevere. And be hem turnethe alle the firmament, righte as dothe a wheel, that turnethe be his axille tree: ſo that tho ſterres beren the firmament in 2 egalle parties; ſo that it hathe als mochel aboven, as it hath benethen. Aſtre this, I have gon toward the parties meridionales, that is toward the Southe: and I have founden that in Lybye, men ſeen firſt the ſterre Antartyk. And ſo fer I have gon more in tho contrees, that I have founde that ſterre more highe; ſo that toward the highe Lybye, it is 18 degrees of heghte, and certeyn minutes (of the which, 60 minutes maken a degree) after goynge be ſee and be londe, toward this contree, of that I have ſpoke, and to other yles and londes bezonde that contree, I have founden the ſterre Antartyk of 33 degrees of heghte, and mo mynutes. And zif I hadde had companye and ſchippynge, for to go more bezonde, I trowe wel in certyn, that wee ſcholde have ſeen alle the roundneſſe of the firmament alle aboute. For as I have ſeyd zou be forn, the half of the firmament is betwene tho 2 ſterres: the whiche halfondelle I have ſeyn. And of the other halfondelle, I have ſeen toward the Northe, undre the Tranſmontane 62 degrees and 10 mynutes; and toward the partie meridionalle, I have ſeen undre the Antartyk 33 degrees and 16 mynutes: and thanne the halfondelle of the firmament in alle, ne holdethe not but 180 degrees. And of tho 180, I have ſeen 62 on that o part, and 33 on that other part, that ben 95 degrees, and nyghe the halfondelle of a degree; and ſo there ne faylethe but that I have ſeen alle the firmament, ſaf 84 degrees and the halfondelle of a degree; and that is not the fourthe part of the firmament. For the 4 partie of the roundneſſe of the firmament holt 90 degrees: ſo there faylethe but 5 degrees and an half of the fourthe partie. And alſo I have ſeen the 3 parties of alle the roundneſſe of the firmament, and more zit 5 degrees and an half. Be the whiche I ſeye zou certeynly, that men may envirowne alle the erthe of alle the world, as wel undre as aboven, and turnen azen to his contree, that hadde companye and ſchippynge and conduyt: and alle weyes he ſcholde fynde men, londes, and yles, als wel as in this contree. For zee wyten welle, that thei that ben toward the Antartyk, thei ben ſtreghte, feet azen feet of hem, that dwellen undre the tranſmontane; als wel as wee and thei that dwellyn undre us, been feet azenſt feet For alle the parties of ſee and of lond han here appoſitees, habitables or trepaſſables, and thei of this half and bezond half. And wytethe wel, that aſtre that, that I may parceyve and comprehende, the londes of Preſtre John, emperour of Ynde ben undre us. For in goynge from Scotlond or from Englond toward Jeruſalem, men gon upward alweys. For oure lond is in the lowe partie of the erthe, toward the Weſt: and the lond of Preſtre John is the low partie of the erthe, toward the Eſt: and thei han there the day, whan wee have the nyghte, and alſo highe to the contrarie, thei han the nyghte, whan wee han the day. For the erthe and the ſee ben of round forme and ſchapp, as I have ſeyd beforn. And than that men gon upward to o coſt, men gon dounward to another coſt. Alſo zee have herd me ſeye, that Jeruſalem is in the myddes of the world; and that may men preven and ſchewen there, be a ſpere, that is pighte in to the erthe, upon the hour of mydday, whan it is equenoxium, that ſchewethe no ſchadwe on no ſyde. And that it ſcholde ben in the myddes of the world, David wytneſſethe it in the Pſautre, where he ſeythe, Deus operatus eſt ſalutē in medio terre. Thanne thei that parten fro the parties of the Weſt for to go toward Jeruſalem, als many iorneyes as thei gon upward for to go thidre, in als many iorneyes may thei gon fro Jeruſalem, unto other confynyes of the ſuperficialtie of the erthe bezonde. And whan men go bezonde tho iourneys, towarde Ynde and to the foreyn yles, alle is envyronynge the roundneſſe of the erthe and of the ſee, undre oure contrees on this half. And therefore hathe it befallen many tymes of o thing, that I have herd cownted, whan I was zong; how a worthi man departed ſometyme from our countree, for to go ſerche the worlde. And ſo he paſſed Ynde, and the yles bezond Ynde, where ben mo than 5000 yles: and ſo longe he wente be ſee and lond, and ſo enviround the world be many ſeyſons, that he fond an yle, where he herde ſpeke his own langage, callynge on oxen in the plowghe, ſuche wordes as men ſpeken to beſtes in his owne contree: whereof he hadde gret mervayle: for he knewe not how it myghte be. But I ſeye, that he had gon ſo longe, be londe and be ſee, that he had envyround alle the erthe, that he was comen azen envirounynge, that is to ſeye, goynge aboute, unto his owne marches, zif he wolde have paſſed forthe, til he had founden his contree and his owne knouleche. But he turned azen from thens, from whens he was come fro; and ſo he loſt moche peynefulle labour, as him ſelf ſeyde, a gret while after, that he was comen hom. For it befelle aftre, that he wente in to Norweye; and there tempeſt of the ſee toke him; and he arryvèd in an yle; and whan he was in that yle, he knew wel, that it was the yle where he had herd ſpeke his owne langage before, and the callynge of the oxen at the plowghe: and that was poſſible thinge. But how it ſeemethe to ſymple men unlerned, that men ne mowe not go undre the erthe, and alſo that men ſcholde falle toward the hevene, from undre! But that may not be, upon leſſe, than wee mowe falle toward hevene, fro the erthe, where wee ben. For fro what partie of the erthe that men duelle, outher aboven or benethen, it ſemethe alweyes to hem that duellen, that thei gon more righte than ony other folk. And righte as it ſemethe to us, that thei ben undre us, righte ſo it ſemethe hem, that wee ben undre hem. For zif a man myghte falle fro the erthe unto the firmament; be grettere reſoun, the erthe and the ſee, that ben ſo grete and ſo hevy, ſcholde fallen to the firmament: but that may not be: and therfore ſeithe oure Lord God, Non timeas me, qui ſuſpendi terrā ex nichilo? And alle be it, that it be poſſible thing, that men may ſo envyronne alle the world, natheleſs of a 1000 perſones, on ne myghte not happen to returnen in to his contree. For, for the gretneſſe of the erthe and of the ſee, men may go be a 1000 and a 1000 other weyes, that no man cowde reyde him perfitely toward the parties that he cam fro, but zif it were be aventure and happ, or be the grace of God. For the erthe is fulle large and fulle gret, and holt in roundneſſe and aboute envyroun, be aboven and be benethen 20425 myles, aftre the opynyoun of the old wiſe aſtronomeres. And here ſeyenges I repreve noughte. But aftre my lytylle wyt, it ſemethe me, ſavynge here reverence, that it is more. And for to have bettere underſtondynge, I ſeye thus, be ther ymagyned a figure, that hathe a gret compas; and aboute the poynt of the gret compas, that is clept the centre, be made another litille compas: than aftre, be the gret compas deviſed be lines in manye parties; and that alle the lynes meeten at the centre; ſo that in als manye parties, as the grete compas ſchal be departed, in als mayne, ſchalle be departed the litille, that is aboute the centre, alle be it, that the ſpaces ben leſſe. Now thanne, be the gret compaſs repreſented for the firmament, and the litille compas repreſented for the erthe. Now thanne the firmament is devyſed, be aſtronomeres, in 12 ſignes; and every ſigne is devyſed in 30 degrees, that is 360 degrees, that the firmament hathe aboven. Alſo, be the erthe devyſed in als manye parties, as the firmament; and let every partye anſwere to a degree of the firmament: and wytethe it wel, that aftre the auctoures of aſtronomye, 700 furlonges of erthe anſweren to a degree of the firmament; and tho ben 87 miles and 4 furlonges. Now be that here multiplyed be 360 ſithes; and than thei ben 315000 myles, every of 8 furlonges, aftre myles of oure contree. So moche hath the erthe in roundneſſe, and of heghte enviroun, aftre my opynyoun and myn undirſtondynge. And zee ſchulle undirſtonde, that aftre opynyoun of olde wiſe philoſophres and aſtronomeres, our contree ne Irelond ne Wales ne Scotlond ne Norweye ne the other yles coſtynge to hem, ne ben not in the ſuperficyalte cownted aboven the erthe; as it ſchewethe be alle the bokes of aſtronomye. For the ſuperficialtee of the erthe is departed in 7 parties, for the 7 planetes: and tho parties ben clept clymates. And oure parties be not of the 7 clymates: for thei ben deſcendynge toward the Weſt. And alſo theſe yles of Ynde, which beth evene azenſt us, beth noght reckned in the clymates: for thei ben azenſt us, that ben in the lowe contree. And the 7 clymates ſtrecchen hem envyrounynge the world.

II. And I John Maundeville knyghte aboveſeyd, (alle thoughe I be unworthi) that departed from our contrees and paſſed the ſee, the zeer of grace 1322. that have paſſed manye londes and manye yles and contrees, and cerched manye fulle ſtraunge places, and have ben in manye a fulle gode honourable companye, and at manye a faire dede of armes, (alle be it that I dide none myſelf, for myn unable inſuffiſance) now I am comen hom (mawgree my ſelf) to reſte; for gowtes, artetykes, that me diſtreynen, tho diffynen the ende of my labour, azenſt my wille (God knowethe.) And thus takynge ſolace in my wrecched reſte, recordynge the tyme paſſed, I have fulfilled theiſe thinges and putte hem wryten in this boke, as it wolde come in to my mynde, the zeer of grace 1356 in the 34 zeer that I departede from our cōtrees. Wherſore I preye to alle the rederes and hereres of this boke, zif it pleſe hem, that thei wolde preyen to God for me: and I ſchalle preye for hem. And alle tho that ſeyn for me a Pater noſter, with an Ave Maria, that God forzeve me my ſynnes, I make hem partneres and graunte em part of alle the gode pilgrymages and of alle the gode dedes, that I have don, zif ony be to his pleſance: and noghte only of tho, but of alle that evere I ſchalle do unto my lyfes ende. And I beſeche Almyghty God, fro whom alle godeneſſe and grace comethe fro, that he voucehſaf, of his excellent mercy and habundant grace, to fulle fylle hire ſoules with inſpiracioun of the Holy Goſt, in makynge defence of alle hire goſtly enemyes here in erthe, to hire ſalvacioun, both of body and ſoule; to worſchipe and thankynge of him, that is three and on, withouten begynnynge and withouten endynge; that is, withouten qualitee, good, and withouten quantytee, gret; that in alle places is preſent, and alle thinges contenynynge; the whiche that no goodneſſe may amende, ne non evelle empeyre; that in perfeyte trynytee lyvethe and regnethe God, be alle worldes and be alle tymes. Amen, Amen, Amen.

The firſt of our authours, who can be properly ſaid to have written Engliſh, was Sir John Gower, who, in his Confeſſion of a Lover, calls Chaucer his diſciple, and may therefore be conſidered as the father of our poetry.

NOWE for to ſpeke of the commune,
It is to drede of that fortune,
Which hath befalle in ſondrye londes:
But ofte for defaute of bondes
All ſodeinly, er it be wiſt,
A tunne, when his lie ariſt
Tobreketh, and renneth all aboute,
Which els ſhulde nought gone out.
And eke full ofte a littell ſkare
Vpon a bank, er men be ware,
Let in the ſtreme, whiche with gret
peine,
If any man it ſhall reſtreine.
Where lawe failleth, errour groweth.
He is not wiſe, who that ne troweth.
For it hath proued oft er this.
And thus the common clamour is
In euery londe, where people dwelleth:
And eche in his complainte telleth,
How that the worde is miſwent,
And thervpon his argument
Yeueth euery man in ſondrie wiſe:
But what man wolde him ſelfe auiſe
His conſcience, and nought miſuſe,
He maie well at the firſt excuſe
His God, whiche euer ſtant in one,
In him there is defaute none
So muſt it ſtand vpon vs ſelue,
Nought only vpon ten ne twelue,
But plenarly vpon vs all.
For man is cauſe of that ſhall fall.

The hiſtory of our language is now brought to the point at which the hiſtory of our poetry is generally ſuppoſed to commence, the time of the illuſtrious Geoffry Chaucer, who may, perhaps, with great juſtice, be ſtiled the firſt of our verſifiers who wrote poetically. He does not, however, appear to have deſerved all the praiſe which he has received, or all the cenſure that he has ſuffered. Dryden, who, miſtaking genius for learning, in confidence of his abilities, ventured to write of what he had not examined, aſcribes to Chaucer the firſt refinement of our numbers, the firſt production of eaſy and natural rhymes, and the improvement of our language, by words borrowed from the more poliſhed languages of the continent. Skinner contrarily blames him in harſh terms for having vitiated his native ſpeech by whole cartloads of foreign words. But he that reads the works of Gower will find ſmooth numbers and eaſy rhymes, of which Chaucer is ſuppoſed to have been the inventor, and the French words, whether good or bad, of which Chaucer is charged as the importer. Some innovations he might probably make, like others, in the infancy of our poetry, which the paucity of books does allow us to diſcover with particular exactneſs; but the works of Gower and Lydgate ſufficiently evince, that his diction was in general like that of his contemporaries; and ſome improvements he undoubtedly made by the various diſpoſitions of his rhymes, and by the mixture of different numbers, in which he ſeems to have been happy and judicious. I have ſelected ſeveral ſpecimens both of his proſe and verſe; and among them, part of his tranſlation of Boetius, to which another verſion, made in the time of queen Mary, is oppoſed. It would be improper to quote very ſparingly an author of ſo much reputation, or to make very large extracts from a book ſo generally known.

CHAUCER.

ALAS! I wepyng am conſtrained to begin verſe of ſorowfull matter, that whilom in floriſhyng ſtudie made delitable ditees. For lo! rendyng muſes of a Poetes editen to me thinges to be writen, and drerie teres. At laſte no drede ne might overcame tho muſes, that thei ne weren fellowes, and foloweden my waie, that is to ſaie, when I was exiled, thei that weren of my youth whilom welfull and grene, comforten now ſorowfull wierdes of me olde man: for elde is comen unwarely upon me, haſted by the harmes that I have, and ſorowe hath commaunded his age to be in me. Heres hore aren ſhad overtimeliche upon my bed: and the ſlacke ſkinne tremblethe of mine empted bodie. Thilke deth of men is welefull, that he ne cometh not in yeres that be ſwete, but cometh to wretches often icleped! Alas! alas! with how defe an ere deth cruell turneth awaie fro wretches, and naieth for to cloſe wepyng eyen. While fortune unfaithfull favoured me with light godes, that ſorowfull houre, that is to ſaie, the deth, had almoſte drent myne hedde: but now for fortune cloudie hath chaunged her decevable chere to mewarde, myne unpitous life draweth along ungreable dwellynges. O ye my frendes, what, or whereto avaunted ye me to ben welfull? For he that hath fallin, ſtode in no ſtedfaſt degre.

IN the mean while, that I ſtill record theſe thynges with my ſelf, and marked my wepelie complainte with office of poinctell: I ſaugh ſtondyng aboven the hight of myn hed a woman of full grete reverence, by ſemblaunt. Her eyen brennyng, and clere, ſeyng over the common might of menne, with a lively colour, and with ſoche vigour and ſtrength that it ne might not be nempned, all were it ſo, that ſhe were full of ſo grete age, that menne woulden not trowen in no manere, that ſhe were of our elde.

The ſtature of her was of doutous Judgemente, for ſometyme ſhe conſtrained and ſhronke her ſelven, like to the common meſure of menne: And ſometyme it ſeemed, that ſhe touched the heven with the hight of her hedde. And when ſhe hove her hedde higher, ſhe perced the ſelf heven, ſo that the ſight of menne lokyng was in ydell: her clothes wer maked of right delie thredes, and ſubtel craft of perdurable matter. The whiche clothes ſhe had woven with her own handes, as I knewe well after by her ſelf declaryng, and ſhewyng to me the beautie: The whiche clothes a darkneſſe

I THAT in tyme of proſperite, and floryſhyng ſtudye, made pleaſaunte and delectable dities, or verſes: alas now beyng heauy and ſad ouerthrown in aduerſitie, am compelled to fele and taſt heuines and greif. Beholde the muſes Poeticall, that is to ſaye: the pleaſure that is in poetes verſes, do appoynt me, and compel me to writ theſe verſes in meter, and the ſorowfull verſes do wet my wretched face with very waterye teares, yſſuinge out of my eyes for ſorowe. Whiche muſes no feare without doute could ouercome, but that they wold folow me in my iourney of exile or baniſhment. Sometyme the ioye of happy and luſty delectable youth dyd comfort me, and nowe the courſe of ſorowfull olde age cauſeth me to reioyſe. For haſty old age vnloked for is come vpon me with al her incommodities and euyls, and ſorowe hath commaunded and broughte me into the ſame old age, that is to ſay: that ſorowe cauſeth me to be olde, before my time come of olde age. The hoer heares do growe vntimely vpon my heade, and my reuiled ſkynne trembleth my fleſh, cleane conſumed and waſte with ſorowe. Mannes death is happy, that cometh not in youth, when a man is luſtye, and in pleaſure or welth: but in time of aduerſitie, when it is often deſyred. Alas Alas howe dull and deffe be the eares of cruel death vnto men in miſery that would fayne dye: and yet refuſythe to come and ſhutte vp theyr carefull wepyng eyes. Whiles that falſe fortune fauoryd me with her tranſitorye goodes, then the howre of death had almoſt ouercome me. That is to ſay, deathe was redy to oppreſſe me when I was in proſperitie. Nowe for by cauſe that fortune beynge turned, from proſperitie into aduerſitie (as the clere day is darkyd with cloudes) and hath chaungyd her deceyuable countenaunce: my wretched life is yet prolonged, and doth continue in dolour. O my frendes, why haue you ſo often boſted me, ſayinge that I was happy when I had honour poſſeſſions riches, and authoritie whych be tranſitory thynges. He that hath fallen was in no. ſtedefaſt degre.

WHYLES that I conſiderydde pryuylye with my ſelfe the thynges before ſayd, and deſcrybed my wofull complaynte after the maner and offyce of a wrytter, me thought I ſawe a woman ſtand ouer my head of a reuerend countenaunce, hauyng quycke and glyſteryng clere eye, aboue the common ſorte of men in lyuely and delectable coloure, and ful of ſtrength, although ſhe ſemed ſo olde that by no meanes ſhe is thought to be one of this oure tyme, her ſtature is of douteful knowledge, for nowe ſhe ſhewethe herſelfe at the common length or ſtatur of men, and other whiles ſhe ſemeth ſo high, as though ſhe touched heuen with the crown of her hed. And when ſhe wold ſtretch fourth her hed hygher, it alſo perced thorough heauen, ſo that mens ſyght coulde not attaine to behold her. Her veſtures or cloths were perfyt of the finyſte thredes, and ſubtyll workemanſhyp, and of ſubſtaunce permanent, whych veſtures ſhe had wouen with her own hands as I perceyued after by her owne ſaiynge. The kynde or beawtye of the whyche veſtures, a certayne darkenes or rather ignoraunce of oldenes of a forleten and diſpiſed elde had duſked and darked, as it is wonte to darke by ſmoked images.

In the nethereſt hemme and border of theſe clothes menne redde iwoven therein a Grekiſhe A. that ſignifieth the life active, and above that letter, in the hieſt bordure, a Grekiſhe C. that ſignifieth the life contemplatiſe. And betwene theſe two letters there were ſeen degrees nobly wrought, in maner of ladders, by whiche degrees menne might climben from the nethereſt letter to the uppereſt: natheleſſe handes of ſome men hadden, kerve that clothe, by violence or by ſtrength, and everiche manne of 'hem had borne awaie ſoche peces, as he might getten. And forſothe this forſaied woman bare ſmale bokes in her right hande, and in her lefte hande ſhe bare a ſcepter. And when ſhe ſawe theſe Poeticall muſes approchyng about my bed, and endityng wordes to my wepynges, ſhe was a little amoved, and glowed with cruell eyen. Who (qd ſhe) hath ſuffered approchen to this ſike manne theſe commen ſtrompettes, of which is the place that menne callen Theatre, the whiche onely ne aſſwagen not his ſorowes with remedies, but thei would feden and noriſhe hym with ſwete venime? Forſothe, that ben tho that with thornes, and prickynges of talentes of affeccions, whiche that ben nothyng fructuous nor profitable, diſtroien the Corne, plentuous of fruictes of reſon. For thei holden hertes of men in uſage, but thei ne deliver no folke fro maladie. But if ye muſes had withdrawen fro me with your flatteries any unconnyng and unprofitable manne, as ben wont to finde commenly emong the peple, I would well ſuffre the laſſe grevouſly. For why, in ſoche an unprofitable man myne ententes were nothyng endamaged. But ye withdrowen fro me this man, that hath ben nouriſhed in my ſtudies or ſcoles of Eleaticis, and of Academicis in Grece. But goeth now rather awaie ye Mermaidens, whiche that ben ſwete, till it be at the laſt, and ſuffreth this man to be cured and heled by my muſes, that is to ſay, by noteſull ſciences. And thus this companie of muſes iblamed caſten wrothly the chere dounward to the yerth, and ſhewing by redneſſe ther ſhame, thei paſſeden ſorowfully the threſholde. And I of whom the ſight plounged in teres was darked, ſo that I ne might not know what that woman was, of ſo Imperial aucthoritie, I woxe all abaſhed and ſtonied, and caſt my ſight doune to the yerth, and began ſtill for to abide what ſhe would doen afterward. Then came ſhe nere, and ſet her doune upon the uttereſt corner of my bed, and ſhe beholdyng my chere, that was caſt to the yerth, hevie and grevous of wepyng, complained with theſe wordes (that I ſhall ſaine) the perturbacion of my thought.

forgotten hadde obſcuryd and darkened, as the ſmoke is wont to darken images that ſtand nyghe the ſmoke. In the lower parte of the ſaid veſtures was read the Greke letter P. wouen whych ſignifyeth practiſe or actyſſe, and in the hygher parte of the veſtures the Greke letter T. whych eſtandeth for theorica, that ſignifyeth ſpeculacion or contemplation. And betwene both the ſayd letters were ſene certayne degrees, wrought after the maner of ladders, wherein was as it were a paſſage or waye in ſteppes or degrees from the lower part wher the letter P. was which is vnderſtand from practys or actyf, unto the hygher parte wher the letter T. was whych is vnderſtand ſpeculacion or contemplacion. Neuertheles the handes of ſome vyolente perſones had cut the ſayde veſtures and had taken awaye certayne pecis thereof, ſuch as euery one coulde catch. And ſhe her ſelfe dyd bare in her ryght hand litel bokes, and in her lefte hande a ſcepter, which foreſayd phyloſophy (when ſhe ſaw the muſes poetycal preſent at my bed, ſpekyng ſorowfull wordes to my wepynges) beyng angry ſayd (with terrible or frownynge countenaunce) who ſuffred theſe crafty harlottes to com to thys ſycke man? whych can help hym by no means of hys griefe by any kind of medicines, but rather increaſe the ſame with ſwete poyſon. Theſe be they that doo dyſtroye the fertile and plentious commodytyes of reaſon and the fruytes therof wyth their pryckynge thornes, or barren affectes, and accuſtome or ſubdue mens myndes with ſickenes, and heuynes, and do not delyuer or heale them of the ſame. But yf your flatterye had conueyed or withdrawen from me; any vnlernyd man as the comen ſorte of people are wonte to be, I coulde haue ben better contentyd, for in that my worke ſhould not be hurt or hynderyd. But you haue taken and conueyed from me thys man that hath ben broughte vp in the ſtudyes of Ariſtotel and of Plato. But yet get you hence maremaids (that ſeme ſwete untyll you haue brought a man to deathe) and ſuffer me to heale thys my man wyth my muſes or ſcyences that be holſome and good. And after that philoſophy had ſpoken theſe wordes the ſayd companye of the muſys poeticall beynge rebukyd and ſad, caſte down their countenaunce to the grounde, and by bluſſyng confeſſed their ſhamfaſtnes, and went out of the dores. But I (that had my ſyght dull and blynd wyth wepyng, ſo that I knew not what woman this was hauing ſoo great aucthoritie) was amaſyd or aſtonyed, and lokyng downeward, towarde the grounde, I began pryvylye to look what thyng ſhe would ſaye ferther, then ſhe had ſaid. Then ſhe approching and drawynge nere vnto me, ſat downe upon the vttermoſt part of my bed, and lokyng vpon my face ſad with weping, and declynyd toward the earth for ſorow, bewayled the trouble of my minde wyth theſe ſayinges folownyge.

The concluſions of the ASTROLABIE.

This book, (written to his ſon in the year of our Lord 1391, and in the 14 of King Richard II.) ſtandeth ſo good at this day, eſpecially for the horizon of Oxford, as in the opinion of the learned it cannot be amended, ſays an Edit. of Chaucer.

LYTEL Lowys my ſonne, I perceve well by certaine evidences thyne abylyte to lerne ſcyences, touching nombres and proporcions, and alſo well conſydre I thy beſye prayer in eſpecyal to lerne the tretyſe of the aſtrolabye. Than for as moche as a philoſopher ſaithe, he wrapeth hym in his frende, that condiſcendeth to the ryghtfull prayers of his frende: therfore I have given the a ſufficient aſtrolabye for oure orizont, compowned after the latitude of Oxenforde: upon the whiche by mediacion of this lytell tretiſe, I purpoſe to teche the a certaine nombre of concluſions, pertainynge to this ſame inſtrument. I ſay a certaine nombre of concluſions for thre cauſes, the firſt cauſe is this. Truſte wel that al the concluſions that have be founden, or ells poſſiblye might be founde in ſo noble an inſtrument as in the aſtrolabye, ben unknowen perfitely to anye mortal man in this region, as I ſuppoſe. Another cauſe is this, that ſothely in any cartes of the aſtrolabye that I have yſene, ther ben ſome concluſions, that wol not in al thinges perſourme ther beheſtes: and ſome of 'hem ben to harde to thy tender age of ten yere to conceve. This tretiſe divided in five partes, wil I ſhewe the wondir light rules and naked wordes in Engliſhe, for Latyne ne canſt thou nat yet but ſmale, my litel ſonne. But nevertheleſſe ſuffiſeth to the theſe trewe concluſyons in Engliſhe, as well as ſuffiſeth to theſe noble clerkes Grekes theſe ſame concluſyons in Greke, and to the Arabines in Arabike, and to the Jewes in Hebrewe, and to the Latin folke in Latyn: whiche Latyn folke had 'hem firſte out of other divers langages, and write 'hem in ther owne tonge, that is to ſaine in Latine.

And God wote that in all theſe langages and in manye mo, have theſe concluſyons ben ſufficientlye lerned and taught, and yet by divers rules, right as divers pathes leden divers folke the right waye to Rome.

Now wol I pray mekely every perſon diſcrete, that redeth or hereth this lityl tretiſe to have my rude ententing excuſed, and my ſuperfluite of wordes, for two cauſes. The firſt cauſe is, for that curious endityng and harde ſentences is ful hevy at ones, for ſoch a childe to lerne. And the ſeconde cauſe is this, that ſothely me ſemeth better to writen unto a childe twiſe a gode ſentence, that he foriete it ones. And, Lowis, if it be ſo that I ſhewe the in my lith Engliſhe, as trewe concluſions touching this mater, and not only as trewe but as many and ſubtil concluſions as ben yſhewed in Latin, in any comon tretiſe of the aſtrolabye, conne me the more thanke; and praye God ſave the kinge, that is lorde of this langage, and all that him faith bereth, and obeieth everiche in his degree, the more and the laſſe. But conſydreth well, that I ne uſurpe not to have founden this werke of my labour or of myne engin. I n'ame but a leude compilatour of the laboure of olde aſtrologiens, and have it tranſlated in myn Engliſhe onely for thy doctrine: and with this ſwerde ſhal I ſlene envy.

The firſt party.

The firſt partye of this tretiſe ſhal reherce the figures, and the membres of thyne aſtrolaby, bycauſe that thou ſhalte have the greter knowinge of thine owne inſtrument.

The ſeconde party.

The ſeconde partye ſhal teche the to werken the very practike of the foreſaid concluſions, as ferforthe and alſo narowe as may be ſhewed in ſo ſmale an inſtrument portatiſe aboute. For well wote every aſtrologien, that ſmalleſt fractions ne wol not be ſhewed in ſo ſmal an inſtrument, as in ſubtil tables calculed for a cauſe.

The PROLOGUE of the TESTAMENT of LOVE.

MANY men ther ben, that with eres openly ſprad ſo moche ſwalowen the deliciouſneſſe of jeſtes and of ryme, by queint knittinge coloures, that of the godeneſſe or of the badneſſe of the ſentence take they litel hede or els none.

Sothelye dulle witte and a thoughtfulle ſoule ſo ſore have mined and graffed in my ſpirites, that ſoche craft of enditinge woll nat ben of mine acquaintaunce. And for rude wordes and boiſtous percen the herte of the herer to the inreſt point, and planten there the ſentence of thinges, ſo that with litel helpe it is able to ſpring, this boke, that nothinge hath of the grete flode of wytte, ne of ſemelyche colours, is dolven with rude wordes and boiſtous, and ſo drawe togiðer to maken the catchers therof ben the more redy to hent ſentence.

Some men there ben, that painten with colours riche and ſome with wers, as with red inke, and ſome with coles and chalke: and yet is there gode matter to the leude peple of thylke chalkye purtreyture, as 'hem thinketh for the time, and afterward the ſyght of the better coloures yeven to 'hem more joye for the firſt leudeneſſe. So ſothly this leude clowdy occupacyon is not to prayſe, but by the leude, for comenly leude leudeneſſe commendeth. Eke it ſhal yeve ſight that other precyous thynges ſhall be the more in reverence. In Latin and French hath many ſoveraine wittes had grete delyte to endite, and have many noble thinges fulfilde, but certes there ben ſome that ſpeken ther poiſye mater in Frenche, of whiche ſpeche the Frenche men have as gode a ſantaſye as we have in heryng of Frenche mens Engliſhe. And many termes there ben in Englyſhe, whiche unneth we Engliſhe men connen declare the knowlegiinge; howe ſhould than a Frenche man borne? ſoche termes connejumpere in his matter, but as the jay chatereth Engliſhe. Right ſo truely the underſtandyn of Engliſhmen woll not ſtretche to the privie termes in Frenche, what ſo ever we boſten of ſtraunge langage. Let then clerkes enditen in Latin, for they have the propertie of ſcience, and the knowinge in that facultie: and lette Frenche men in ther Frenche alſo enditen ther queint termes, for it is kyndely to ther mouthes; and let us ſhewe our fantaſies in ſuch wordes as we lerneden of our dame's tonge. And although this boke be lytel thank worthy for the leudeneſſe in travaile, yet ſoch writing exiten men to thilke thinges that ben neceſſarie; for every man therby may as by a perpetual myrrour ſene the vices or vertues of other, in whyche thynge lightly may be conceved to eſchue perils, and neceſſaries to catch, after as aventures have fallen to other peple or perſons.

Certes the ſoverainſt thinge of deſire and moſt creture reſonable, have or els ſhuld have full appetite to ther perfeccyon: unreſonable beſtes mowen not, ſithe reſon hath in 'hem no workinge: than reſonable that wol not, is compariſoned to unreſonable, and made lyke 'hem. Forſothe the moſt ſoveraine and finall perfeccion of man is in knowynge of a ſothe, withouten any entent decevable, and in love of one very God, that is inchaungeable, that is to knowe, and love his creatour.

Nowe principally the mene to brynge in knowleging and lovynge his creatour, is the conſideracyon of thynges made by the creatour, wher through by thylke thinges that ben made, underſtandynge here to our wyttes, arne the unſene pryvities of God made to us ſyghtfull and knowinge, in our contemplacion and underſtondinge. Theſe thinges than forſothe moche bringen us to the ful knowleginge ſothe, and to the parfyte love of the maker of hevenly thinges. Lo! David ſaith: thou haſte delited me in makinge, as who ſaith, to have delite in the tune how God hat lent me in conſideracion of thy makinge. Wherof Ariſtotle in the boke de Animalibus, ſaith to naturell philoſophers: it is a grete likynge in love of knowinge ther cretoure: and alſo in knowinge of cauſes in kindelye thynges, conſidrid forſothe the formes of kyndelye thynges and the ſhap, a gret kyndelye love we ſhulde have to the werkman that 'hem made. The crafte of a werkman is ſhewed in the werk. Herefore trulie the philoſophers with a lyvely ſtudie manie noble thinges, righte precious, and worthy to memorye, writen, and by a gret ſwet and travaille to us leften of cauſes the properties in natures of thinges, to whiche therfore philoſophers it was more joy, more lykinge, more herty luſt in kindely vertues and matters of reſon the perfeccion by buſy ſtudy to knowe, than to have had all the treſour, al the richeſſe, al the vaine glory, that the paſſed emperours, princes, or kinges hadden. Therſore the names of 'hem in the boke of perpetuall memorie in vertue and pece arne writen; and in the contrarie, that is to ſaine, in Styxe the foule pitte of helle arne thilke preſſed that ſoch godenes hated. And bicauſe this boke ſhall be of love, and the prime cauſes of ſtering in that doinge with paſſions and diſeſes for wantinge of deſire, I wil that this boke be cleped the teſtament of love.

But nowe thou reder, who is thilke that will not in ſcorne laughe, to here a dwarfe or els halfe a man, ſay he will rende out the ſwerde of Hercules handes, and alſo he ſhulde ſet Hercules Gades a mile yet ferther, and over that he had power of ſtrength to pull up the ſpere, that Aliſander the noble myght never wagge, and that paſſinge al thinge to ben mayſter of Fraunce by might, there as the noble gracious Edwarde the thirde for al his grete proweſſe in victories ne might al yet conquere?

Certes I wote well, ther ſhall be made more ſcorne and jape of me, that I ſo unworthely clothed altogither in the cloudie cloude of unconning, wil putten me in prees to ſpeke of love, or els of the cauſes in that matter, ſithen al the gretteſt clerkes han had ynough to don, and as who ſaith gathered up clene toforne 'hem, and with ther ſharp ſithes of conning al mowen and made therof grete rekes and noble, ful of al plenties to fede me and many an other. Envye forſothe commendeth noughte his reſon, that he hath in hain, be it never ſo truſty. And although theſe noble repers, as gode workmen and worthy ther hier, han al draw and bounde up in the ſheves, and made many ſhockes, yet have I enſample to gaðer the ſmale crommes, and fullin ma walet of tho that fallen from the bourde among the ſmalle houndes, notwithſtanding the travaile of the almoigner, that hath draw up in the cloth al the remiſſailes, as trenchours, and the releſe to bere to the almeſſe. Yet alſo heve I leve of the noble huſbande Boece, although I be a ſtraunger of conninge to come after his doctrine, and theſe grete workmen, and glene my handfuls of the ſhedynge after ther handes, and yf me faile ought of my ful, to encreſe my porcion with that I ſhal drawe by privyties out of ſhockes; a ſlye ſervaunte in his owne helpe is often moche commended; knowynge of trouthe in cauſes of thynges, was more hardier in the firſte ſechers, and ſo ſayth Ariſtotle, and lighter in us that han folowed after. For ther paſſing ſtudy han freſhed our wittes, and oure underſtandynge han excited in conſideracion of trouth by ſharpenes of ther reſons. Utterly theſe thinges be no dremes ne japes, to throwe to hogges, it is lyfelych mete for children of trouth, and as they me betiden whan I pilgramed out of my kith in wintere, whan the wether out of meſure was boiſtous, and the wyld wynd Boreas, as his kind aſketh, with dryinge coldes maked the wawes of the ocean ſe ſo to ariſe unkindely over the commune bankes that it was in point to ſpill all the erthe.

The Prologues of the Canterbury Tales of CHAUCER, from the MSS.

WHEN that Aprilis with his ſhouris ſote,
The drought of March had percid to the rote,
And bathid every veyn in ſuch licour,
Of which vertue engendrid is the flour.
When Zephyrus eke, with his ſwetè breth
Enſpirid hath, in every holt and heth
The tender croppis; and that the yong Sunn
Hath in the Ramm his halvè cours yrunn:
And ſmalè foulis makin melodye,
That ſlepin allè night with opin eye,
(So prickith them nature in ther corage)
Then longin folk to go on pilgrimage:
And palmers for to ſekin ſtrangè ſtrondes,
To ſervin hallowes couth in ſondry londes:
And ſpecially fro every ſhir'is end
Of England, to Canterbury they wend,
The holy bliſfull martyr for to ſeke,
That them hath holpin, whan that they were ſeke.
Beſell that in that ſeſon on a day
In Southwerk at the Tabberd as I lay,
Redy to wendin on my pilgrimage
To Canterbury, with devote corage,
At night wer come into that hoſtery
Wele nine and twenty in a cumpany
Of ſundrie folk, by aventure yfall
In felaſhip: and pilgrimes wer they all:
That toward Canterbury wouldin ride.
The chambers and the ſtablis werin wide,
And well we werin eſid at the beſt:
And ſhortly whan the ſunnè was to reſt,
So had I ſpokin with them everych one,
That I was of ther felaſhip anone;
And madè forward erli for to riſe,
To take our weye, ther as I did deviſe.
But nathleſs while that I have time and ſpace,
Er that I farther in this talè pace,
Methinkith it accordaunt to reſon,
To tell you allè the condition
Of ech of them, ſo as it ſemid me,
And which they werin, and of what degree,
And eke in what array that they wer in:
And at a knight then woll I firſt begin.

The Knight.

A knight ther was, and that a worthy man,
That fro the timè that he firſt began
To ridin out, he lovid Chevalrie,
Trouth and honour, fredome and curteſy.
Full worthy was he in his lordis werre,
And thereto had he riddin nane more ferre
As well in Chriſtendom, as in Hethneſs;
And evyr honoured for his worthineſs.
At Aleſſandre he was whan it was won;
Full oft timis he had the bord begon
Abovin allè naciouns in Pruce;
In Lettow had he riddin, and in Luce,
No Chriſten-man ſo oft of his degree
In Granada; in the ſege had he be
Of Algezir, and ridd in Belmary;
At Leyis was he, and at Sataly,
Whan that they wer won; and in the grete ſee
At many'a noble army had he be:
At mortal battails had he ben fiftene,
And foughtin for our feith at Trameſene,
In liſtis thrys, and alwey ſlein his fo.
This ilke worthy knight had been alſo
Sometimis with the lord of Palathy,
Ayens anothir hethin in Turky;
And evirmore he had a ſov'rane prize;
And though that he was worthy, he was wiſe;
And of his port as meke as is a maid,
He nevir yet no villany he ſaid
In all his life unto no manner wight:
He was a very parfit gentil knight.
But for to tellin you of his array,
His hors wer good; but he was nothing gay,
Of fuſtian he werid a gipon,
Allè beſmottrid with his haburgeon.
For he was late ycome from his viage,
And wentè for to do his pilgrimage.

The House of FAME.

The Firſt Boke.

NOW herken, as I have you ſaied,
What that I mette or I abraied,
Of December the tenith daie,
When it was night, to ſlepe I laie,
Right as I was wont for to doen,
And fill aſlepè wondir ſone,
As he that was werie forgo
On pilgrimagè milis two
To the corps of ſainct Leonarde,
To makin lith that erſt was harde.
But as me ſlept me mette I was
Within a temple' imade of glas,
In whiche there werin mo images
Of golde, ſtandyng in ſondrie ſtages,
Sette in mo riche tabirnacles,
And with perrè mo pinnacles,
And mo curious portraituris,
And queint manir of figuris
Of golde worke, then I ſawe evir.
But certainly I n'iſt nevir
Where that it was, but well wiſt I
It was of Venus redily
This temple, for in purtreiture
I ſawe anone right her figure
Nakid yſletyng in a ſe,
And alſo on her hedde parde
Her roſy garland white and redde,
And her combe for to kembe her hedde,

Her dovis, and Dan Cupido
Her blindè ſonne, and Vulcano,
That in his face ywas full broune.
But as I romid up and doune,
I founde that on the wall there was
Thus writtin on a table' of bras.
I woll now ſyng, if that I can,
The armis, and alſo the man,
That firſt came through his deſtine
Fugitiſe fro Troye the countre
Into Itaile, with full moche pine,
Unto the ſtrondis of Lavine,
And tho began the ſtorie' anone,
As I ſhall tellin you echone.
Firſt ſawe I the diſtruccion
Of Troie, thorough the Greke Sinon,
With his falſe untrue forſwerynges,
And with his chere and his leſynges,
That made a horſe, brought into Troye,
By whiche Trojans loſte all their joye.
And aftir this was graved, alas!
How Ilions caſtill aſſailed was,
And won, and kyng Priamus ſlain,
And Polites his ſonne certain,
Diſpitouſly of Dan Pyrrhus.
And next that ſawe I howe Venus,
When that ſhe ſawe the caſtill brende,
Doune from hevin ſhe gan diſcende,
And bade her ſonne Æneas fle,
And how he fled, and how that he
Eſcapid was from all the pres,
And toke his fathre', old Anchiſes,
And bare hym on his back awaie,
Crying alas and welawaie!
The whiche Anchiſes in his hande,
Bare tho the goddis of the lande
I mene thilke that unbrennid were.
Then ſawe I next that all in fere
How Creuſa, Dan Æneas wife,
Whom that he lovid all his life,
And her yong ſonne clepid Julo,
And eke Aſcanius alſo,
Fleddin eke, with full drerie chere,
That it was pite for to here,
And in a foreſt as thei went
How at a tournyng of a went
Creüſa was iloſte, alas!
That rede not I, how that it was
How he her ſought, and how her ghoſte
Bad hym to flie the Grekis hoſte,
And ſaied he muſt into Itaile,
As was his deſtinie, ſauns faile,
That it was pitie for to here,
When that her ſpirite gan appere,
The wordis that ſhe to hym ſaied,
And for to kepe her ſonne hym praied.
There ſawe I gravin eke how he
His fathir eke, and his meinè,
With his ſhippis began to ſaile
Toward the countrey of Itaile,
As ſtreight as ere thei mightin go.
There ſawe I eke the, cruill Juno,
That art Dan Jupiter his wife,
That haſt ihated all thy life
Merciless all the Trojan blode,
Rennin and crie as thou were wode
On Æolus, the god of windes,
To blowin out of allè kindes
So loudè, that he ſhould ydrenche
Lorde, and ladie, and grome, and wenche
Of all the Trojanis nacion,
Without any' of their ſalvacion.
There ſawe I ſoche tempeſt ariſe,
That evèry herte might agriſe,
To ſe it paintid on the wall.
There ſawe I eke gravin withall,
Venus, how ye, my ladie dere,
Ywepyng with full wofull chere
Ypráyid Jupiter on hie,
To ſave and kepin that navie
Of that dere Trojan Æneas,
Sithins that he your ſonne ywas.

Gode counſaile of CHAUCER.

FLIE fro the preſe and dwell with ſothfaſtneſſe,
Suffiſe unto the gode though it be ſmall,
For horde hath hate, and climbyng tikilneſſe,
Prece hath envie, and wele it brent oer all,
Savour no more then the behovin ſhall,
Rede well thy ſelf, that othir ſolke canſt rede,
And trouthe the ſhall delivir it 'is no drede.
Painè the not eche crokid to redreſſe,
In truſt of her that tournith as a balle,
Grete reſt ſtandith in litil buſineſſe,
Beware alſo to ſpurne again a nalle,
Strive not as doith a crocke with a walle,
Demith thy ſelf that demiſt othir's dede.
And trouthe the ſhall deliver it 'is no drede.
That the is ſent receve in buxomeneſſe;
The wraſtlyng of this worlde aſkith a fall;
Here is no home, here is but wildirneſſe,
Forthe pilgrim, forthe o beſt out of thy ſtall,
Loke up on high, and thanke thy God of all,
Weivith thy luſte and let thy ghoſt the lede,
And trouthe the ſhall delivir, it 'is no drede.

Balade of the village without paintyng.

THIS wretchid world'is tranſmutacion
As wele and wo, nowe pore, and now honour,
Without ordir or due diſcrecion
Govirnid is by fortune'is errour,
But nathèleſſe the lacke of her favour
Ne maie not doe me ſyng though that I die,
J'ay tout perdu, mon temps & mon labeur.
For finally fortune I doe defie,
Yet is me left the ſight of my reſoun
To knowin frende fro foe in thy mirrour,
So moche hath yet thy tournyng up and doun,
I taughtin me to knowin in an hour,
But truily no force of thy reddour
To hym that ovir hymſelf hath maiſtrie,
My ſuffiſaunce yſhal be my ſuccour,
For finally fortune I do defie.
O Socrates, thou ſtedfaſt champion,
She ne might nevir be thy turmentour,
Thou nevir dreddiſt her oppreſſion,
Ne in her chere foundin thou no favour,
Thou knewe wele the diſceipt of her colour,
And that her moſte worſhip is for to lie,
I knowe her eke a falſe diſſimulour.
For finally fortune I do defie.

The anſwere of Fortune.

NO man is wretchid but hymſelf it wene,
He that yhath hymſelf hath ſuffiſaunce,
Why ſaieſt thou then that I am to the ſo kene,
That hath thy ſelf out of my govirnaunce?
Saie thus grant mercie of thin habundaunce,
That thou haſt lent or this, thou ſhalt not ſtrive,
What woſt thou yet how I the woll avaunce?
And eke thou haſt thy beſtè frende alive.
I have the taught diviſion betwene
Frende of effecte, and frende of countinaunce,
The nedith not the gallè of an hine,
That curith eyin derke for ther penaunce,
Now ſeeſt thou clere that wer in ignoraunce,
Yet holt thine anker, and thou maieſt arive
There bountie bereth the key of my ſubſtaunce,
And eke thou haſte thy beſtè frende alive.
How many have I refuſed to ſuſtene,
Sith I have the foſtrid in thy pleſaunce?
Wolt thou then make a ſtatute on thy quene,
That I ſhall be aie at thine ordinaunce?
Thou born art in my reign of variaunce,
About the whele with othir muſt thou drive
My lore is bet, then wicke is thy grevaunce,
And eke thou haſt beſtè frende alive.

The anſwere to Fortune.

THY lore I dampne, it is adverſitie,
My frend maiſt thou not revin blind goddeſſe,
That I thy frendis knowe I thanke it the,
Take 'hem again, let 'hem go lie a preſſe,
The nigardis in kepyng ther richeſſe
Pronoſtike is thou wolt ther tour aſſaile,
Wicke appetite cometh aie before ſickeneſſe,
In generall this rule ne maie not faile.

Fortune.

THOU pinchiſt at my mutabilitie,
For I the lent a droppe of my richeſſe,
And now me likith to withdrawin me,
Why ſhouldiſt thou my roialtie oppreſſe?
The ſe maie ebbe and flowin more and leſſe,
The welkin hath might to ſhine, rain, and haile,
Right ſo muſt I kithin my brotilneſſe,
In generall this rule ne maie not faile.

The Plaintiffe.

LO, the' execucion of the majeſtie,
That all purveighith of his rightwiſeneſſe,
That ſamè thyng fortune yclepin ye,
Ye blindè beſtis full of leudèneſs!
The heven hath propirtie of ſikirneſs,
This worldè hath evir reſtleſſe travaile,
The laſt daie is the ende of myne entreſſe,
In generall this rule ne maie not faile.

Th' envoye of Fortune.

PRINCES I praie you of your gentilneſſe,
Let not this man and me thus crie and plain,
And I ſhall quitin you this buſineſſe,
And if ye liſte releve hym of his pain,
Praie ye his beſt frende of his nobleneſſe
That to ſome bettir ſtate he maie attain.

Lydgate was a monk of Bury, who wrote about the ſame time with Chaucer. Out of his prologue to his third book of The Fall of Princes a few ſtanzas are ſelected, which, being compared with the ſtyle of his two contemporaries, will ſhow that our language was then not written by caprice, but was in a ſettled ſtate.

LIKE a pilgrime which that goeth on foote,
And hath none horſe to relieue his trauayle,
Whote, drye and wery, and may finde no bote
Of wel cold whan thruſt doth hym aſſayle,
Wine nor licour, that may to him auayle,
Tight ſo fare I which in my buſineſſe,
No ſuccour fynde my rudeneſſe to redreſſe.
I meane as thus, I haue no freſh licour
Out of the conduites of Calkope,
Nor through Clio in rhetorike no floure,
In my labour for to refreſh me
Nor of the ſuſters in noumber thriſe three,
Which with Cithera on Parnaſo dwell,
They neuer me gaue drinke once of their wel.
Nor of theyr ſpringes clere and chriſtaline,
That ſprange by touchyng of the Pegaſe,
Their fauour lacketh my making ten lumine
I fynde theyr bawme of ſo great ſcarcitie,
To tame theyr tunnes with ſome drop of plentie
For Poliphemus throw his great blindnes,
Hath in me derked of Argos the brightnes.
Our life here ſhort of wit the great dulnes
The heuy ſoule troubled with trauayle,
And of memorye the glaſyng brotelnes,
Drede and vncunning haue made a ſtrong batail
With werines my ſpirite to aſſayle,
And with their ſubtil creping in moſt queint
Hath made my ſpirit in makyng for to feint.
And ouermore, the ferefull forwardnes
Of my ſtepmother called obliuion,
Hath a baſtyll of foryetfulnes,
To ſtoppe the paſſage, and ſhadow my reaſon
That I might haue no clere direccion,
In tranſlating of new to quicke me,
Stories to write of olde antiquite.
Thus was I ſet and ſtode in double werre
At the metyng of feareful wayes tweyne,
The one was this, who euer liſt to lere,
Whereas good wyll gan me conſtrayne,
Bochas taccompliſh for to doe my payne,
Came ignoraunce, with a menace of drede,
My penne to reſt I durſt not procede.

Forteſcue was chief juſtice of the Common-Pleas, in the reign of king Henry VI. He retired in 1471, after the battle of Tewkeſbury, and probably wrote moſt of his works in his privacy. The following paſſage is ſelected from his book of The Difference between an abſolute and limited Monarchy.

HYT may peraventure be marvelid by ſome men, why one Realme is a Lordſhyp only Royall, and the Prynce thereof rulyth yt by his Law, called Jus Regale; and another Kyngdome is a Lordſchip, Royall and Politike, and the Prince thereof rulyth by a Lawe, called Jus Politicum & Regale; ſythen thes two Princes beth of egall Aſtate.

To this dowte it may be anſweryd in this manner; The firſt Inſtitution of thes twoo Realmys, upon the Incorporation of them, is the cauſe of this diverſyte.

When Nembroth by Might, for his own Glorye, made and incorporate the firſt Realme, and ſubduyd it to hymſelf by Tyrannye, he would not have it governyd by any other Rule or Lawe, but by his own Will; by which and for th' accompliſhment thereof he made it. And therfor, though he had thus made a Realme, holy Scripture denyid to cal hym a Kyng, Quia Rex dicitur a Regendo; Whych thyng he dyd not, but oppreſſyd the People by Myght, and therfore he was a Tyrant, and callid Primus Tyrannorum. But holy Writ callith hym Robuſtus Venator coram Deo. For as the Hunter takyth the wyld beſte for to ſcle and eate hym: ſo Nembroth ſubduyd to him the People with Might, to have their ſervice and their goods, uſing upon them the Lordſchip that is callid Dominium Regale tantum. After hym Belus that was callid firſt a Kyng, and after hym his Sone Nynus, and after hym other Panyms; They, by Example of Nembroth, made them Realmys, would not have them rulyd by other Lawys than by their own Wills. Which Lawys ben right good under good Princes; and their Kyngdoms a then moſt reſemblyd to the Kyngdome of God, which reynith upon Man, rulyng him by hys own Will. Wherfor many Cryſtyn Princes uſen the ſame Lawe; and therfor it is, that the Lawys ſayen, Quod Principi plaucit Legis babet vigorem. And thus I ſuppoſe firſt beganne in Realmys, Dominium tantum Regale.' But afterward, whan Mankynd was more manſuete, and better diſpoſyd to Vertue, Grete Communalties, as was the Feliſhip, that came into this Lond with Brute, wyllyng to be unyed and made a Body Politike callid a Realme, havyng an Heed to governe it; as after the Saying of the philoſopher, every Communaltie unyed of many parts muſt needs have an heet; that they choſe the ſame Brute to be their Heed and Kyng. And they and he upon this Incorporation and Inſtitution, and onyng of themſelf into a Realme, ordeynyd the ſame Realme ſo to be rulyd and juſtyfyd by ſuch Lawys, as they al would aſſent unto; which Law therefor is callid Politicum; and bycauſe it is myniſtrid by a Kyng, it is callid Regale. Dominium Politicum dicitur quaſi Regimen, plurium Scientia, ſive Conſilio miniſtratum. The Kyng of Scotts reynith upon his People by this Lawe, videlicet, Regimine Politico & Regali. And as Diodorus Syculus ſaith, in his Boke de priſcis Hiſtoriis, The Realme of Egypte is rulid by the ſame Lawe, and therfor the King therof chaungith not his Lawes, without the Aſſent of his People. And in like forme as he ſaith is ruled the Kyngdome of Saba, in Felici Arabia, and the Lond of Libie; And alſo the more parte of al the Realmys in Afrike. Which manner of Rule and Lordſhip, the ſayd Diodorus in that Boke, prayſith gretely. For it is not only good for the Prince, that may thereby the more ſewerly do Juſtice, than by his owne Arbitriment; but it is alſo good for his People that receyve therby, ſuch Juſtice as they deſyer themſelf. Now as me ſeymth, it ys ſhewyd opinly ynough, why one Kyng rulyth and reynith on his People Dominio tantum Regali, and that other reynith Dominio Politico & Regali: For that one Kyngdom beganne, of and by, the Might of the Prince, and the other beganne, by the Deſier and Inſtitution of the People of the ſame Prince.

Of the works of Sir Thomas More it was neceſſary to give a large ſpecimen, both becauſe our language was then in a great degree formed and ſettled, and becauſe it appears from Ben Jonſon, that his works were conſidered as models of pure and elegant ſtyle. The tale, which is placed firſt, becauſe earlieſt written, will ſhow what an attentive reader will, in peruſing our old writers, often remark, that the familiar and colloquial part of our language, being diffuſed among thoſe claſſes who had no ambition of refinement, or affectation of novelty, has ſuffered very little change. There is another reaſon why the extracts from this author are more copious: his works are carefully and correctly printed, and may therefore be better truſted than any other edition of the Engliſh books of that, or the preceding ages.

A merry ieſt how a ſergeant would learne to playe the frere. Written by maiſter Thomas More in hys youth.

WYSE men alway,
Affyrme and ſay,
That beſt is for a man:
Diligently,
For to apply,
The buſineſs that he can,
And in no wyſe,
To enterpryſe,
An other faculte,
For he that wyll,
And can no ſkyll,
Is neuer lyke to the.
He that hath laſte,
The hoſiers crafte,
And falleth to making ſhone,
The ſmythe that ſhall,
To payntyng fall,
His thrift is well nigh done.
A blacke draper,
With whyte paper,
To goe to writyng ſcole,
An olde butler,
Becum a cutler,
I wene ſhall proue a fole.
And an olde trot,
That can I wot.
Nothyng but kiſſe the cup,
With her phiſick,
Wil kepe on ſicke,
Tyll ſhe have ſouſed hym vp.
A man of lawe,
That neuer ſawe,
The wayes to bye and ſell,
Wenyng to ryſe,
By marchaundiſe,
I wiſh to ſpede hym well.
A marchaunt eke,
That wyll goo ſeke.
By all the meanes he may,
To fall in ſute,
Tyll he diſpute,
His money cleane away,
Pletyng the lawe,
For euery ſtrawe,
Shall proue a thrifty man,
With bate and ſtrife,
But by my life,
I cannot tell you whan.
Whan an hatter
Wyll go ſmatter,
In philoſophy,
Or a pedlar
Ware a medlar,
In theology,
All that enſue,
Suche craftes new,
They driue ſo farre a caſt,
That euermore,
They do therfore,
Beſhrewe themſelfe at laſt.
This thing was tryed
And verefyed,
Here by a ſergeaunt late,
That thrifty was,
Or he coulde pas,
Rapped about the pate,
Whyle that he would
See howe he could,
A little play the frere:
Now yf you wyll,
Knowe howe it fyll,
Take hede and ye ſhall here.
It happed ſo,
Not long ago,
A thrifty man there dyed,
An hundred pounde,
Of nobles rounde,
That had he layd a ſide:
His ſonne he wolde,
Should haue this golde,
For to beginne with all:
But to ſuffiſe
His chylde, well thriſe,
That money was to ſmal,
Yet or this day
I have hard ſay,
That many a man certeſſe,
Hath with good caſt,
Be ryche at laſt,
That hath begonne with leſſe.
But this yonge manne,
So well beganne,
His money to employ,
That certainly,
His policy.
To ſee it was a joy,
For leſt ſum blaſt,
Myght ouer caſt,
His ſhip, or by miſchaunce,
Men with ſum wile,
Myght hym begyle,
And miniſh his ſubſtaunce,
For to put out,
Al maner dout,
He made a good puruay,
For euery whyt,
By his owne wyt,
And toke an other way:
Firſt fayre and wele,
Therof much dele,
He dygged it in a pot,
But then him thought,
That way was nought,
And there he left it not.
So was he faine,
From thence agayne,
To put it in a cup,
And by and by,
Couetouſly,
He ſupped it fayre vp,
In his owne breſt,
He thought it beſt,
His money to encloſe,
Then wiſt he well,
What euer fell,
He coulde it neuer loſe.
He borrowed then,
Of other men,
Money and marchaundiſe:
Neuer payd it,
Up he laid it,
In like maner wyſe.
Yet on the gere,
That he would were,
He reight not what he ſpent,
So it were nyce,
As for the price,
Could him not miſcontent.
With luſty ſporte,
And with reſort,
Of ioly company,
In mirth and play,
Full many a day,
He liued merely.
And men had ſworne,
Some man is borne,
To have a lucky howre,
And ſo was he,
For ſuch degre,
He gat and ſuche honour,
That without dout,
Whan he went out,
A ſergeaunt well and fayre,
Was redy ſtrayte,
On him to wayte,
As ſone as on the mayre.
But he doubtleſſe,
Of his mekeneſſe,
Hated ſuch pompe and pride,
And would not go,
Companied ſo,
But drewe himſelf a ſide,
To ſaint Katharine,
Streight as a line,
He gate him at a tyde,
For deuocion,
Or promocion,
There would he nedes abyde.
There ſpent he faſt,
Till all were paſt,
And to him came there meny,
To aſke theyr det,
But none could get,
The valour of a peny.
With viſage ſtout,
He bare it out,
Euen vnto the harde hedge,
A month or twaine,
Tyll he was fayne,
To laye his gowne to pledge.
Than was he there,
In greater feare,
Than ere that he came thither,
And would as fayne,
Depart againe,
But that he wiſt not whither.
Than after this,
To a frende of his,
He went and there abode,
Where as he lay,
So ſick alway,
He myght not come abrode.
It happed than,
A marchaunt man,
That he ought money to,
Of an officere,
That gan enquere,
What him was beſt to do.
And he anſwerde,
Be not aferde,
Take an accion therfore,
I you beheſte,
I ſhall hym reſte,
And than care for no more.
I feare quod he,
It wyll not be.
For he wyll not come out.
The ſergeaunt ſaid,
Be not afrayd,
It ſhall be brought about.
In many a game,
Lyke to the ſame,
Haue I bene well in vre,

And for your ſake,
Let me be bake,
But yf I do this cure.
Thus part they both,
And foorth then goth,
A pace this officere,
And for a day,
All his array,
He chaunged with a frere.
So was he dight,
That no man might,
Hym for a frere deny,
He dopped and dooked,
He ſpake and looked,
So religiouſly.
Yet in a glaſſe,
Or he would paſſe,
He toted and he peered,
His harte for pryde,
Lepte in his ſyde*
To ſee how well he freered.
Than forth a pace,
Unto the place,
He goeth withouten ſhame
To do this dede,
But now take hede.
For here begynneth the game.
He drew hym ny,
And ſoftely,
Streyght at the dore he knocked:
And a damſell,
That hard hym well,
There came and it vnlocked.
The frere ſayd,
Good ſpede fayre mayd,
Here lodgeth ſuch a man,
It is told me:
Well ſyr quod ſhe,
And yf he do what than.
Quod he mayſtreſſe,
No harm doutleſſe:
It longeth for our order,
To hurt no man,
But as we can,
Euery wight to forder.
With hym truly.
Fayne ſpeake would I
Sir quod ſhe by my fay,
He is ſo ſike,
Ye be not lyke,
To ſpeake with hym to day.
Quod he fayre may,
Yet I you pray,
This much at my deſire,
Vouchеſafe to do,
As go hym to,
And ſay an auſten frere
Would with hym ſpeke,
And matters breake,
For his auayle certayn.
Quod ſhe I wyll,
Stonde ye here ſtyll,
Tyll I come downe agayn.
Vp is ſhe go,
And told hym ſo,
As ſhe was bode to ſay,
He miſtruſtyng,
No maner thyng,
Sayd mayden go thy way,
And fetch him hyder,
That we togyder,
May talk. A downe ſhe gothe,
Vp ſhe hym brought,
No harme ſhe thought,
But it made ſome folke wrothe.
This officere,
This fayned frere,
Whan he was come aloft,
He dopped than,
And grete this man,
Religiouſly and oft.
And he agayn,
Ryght glad and fayn,
Toke hym there by the hande,
The frere than ſayd,
Ye be diſmayd
With trouble I underſtande.
In dede quod he,
It hath with me,
Bene better than it is.
Syr quod the frere,
Be of good chere,
Yet ſhall it after this.
But I would now,
Comen with you,
In counſayle yf you pleaſe,
Or ellys nat
Of matters that,
Shall ſet your heart at eaſe.
Downe went the mayd,
The marchaunt ſayd,
Now ſay on gentle frere,
Of thys tydyng,
That ye me bryng,
I long full ſore to here.
Whan there was none,
But they alone,
The frere with euyll grace,
Sayd, I reſt the,
Come on with me,
And out he toke his mace:
Thou ſhalt obay,
Come on thy way,
I have the in my clouche,
Thou goeſt not hence,
For all the penſe,
The mayre hath in his pouche.
This marchaunt there,
For wrath and fere,
He waxyng welnygh wood,
Sayd horſon thefe,
With a miſchefe,
Who hath taught the thy good.
And with his fiſt,
Vpon the lyſt,
He gaue hym ſuch a blow,
That backward downe,
Almoſt in ſowne,
The frere is ouerthrow.
Yet was this man
Well fearder than,
Leſt he the frere had ſlayne,
Tyll with good rappes,
And heuy clappes,
He dawde hym vp agayne.
The frere took harte,
And vp he ſtarte,
And well he layde about,
And ſo there goth,
Betwene them both,
Many a luſty clout.
They rent and tere,
Eche others here,
And claue togyder faſt,
Tyll with luggyng,
And with tuggyng,
They fell downe bothe at laſt.
Than on the grounde,
Togyder rounde,
With many a ſadde ſtroke,
They roll and rumble,
They turne and tumble,
As pygges do in a poke.
So long aboue,
They heue and ſhoue,
Togider that at laſt,
The mayd and wyfe,
To breake the ſtrife,
Hyed them vpward faſt.
And whan they ſpye,
The captaynes lye,
Both waltring on the place,
The freres hood,
They pulled a good,
Adowne about his face.
Whyle he was blynde,
The wenche behynde,
Lent him leyd on the flore,
Many a ioule,
About the noule,
With a great batyldore.
The wyfe came yet,
And with her fete,
She holpe to kepe him downe,
And with her rocke,
Many a knocke,
She gaue hym on the crowne.
They layd his mace,
About his face,
That he was wood for payne:
The fryre frappe,
Gate many a ſwappe,
Tyll he was full nygh ſlayne.
Vp they hym lift,
And with yll thrift,
Hedlyng a long the ſtayre,
Downe they hym threwe,
And ſayde adewe,
Commende us to the mayre.
The frere aroſe,
But I ſuppoſe,
Amaſed was his hed,
He ſhoke his eares,
And from grete feares,
He thought hym well yfled.
Quod he now loſt,
Is all this coſt,
We be neuer the nere.
Ill mote he be,
That cauſed me,
To make my ſelf a frere.
Now maſters all,
Here now I ſhall
Ende there as I began,
In any wyſe,
I would auyſe,
And counſayle euery man,
His owne craft vſe,
All newe refuſe,
And lyghtly let them gone:
Play not the frere,
Now make good chere,
And welcome euerych one.

A ruful lamentacion (writen by maſter Thomas More in his youth) of the deth of quene Eliſabeth mother to king Henry the eight, wife to king Henry the ſeuenth, and the eldeſt doughter to king Edward the fourth, which quene Eliſabeth dyed in childbed in February in the yere of our Lord 1503, and in the 18 yere of the raigne of king Henry the ſeuenth.

O YE that put your truſt and confidence,
In worldly ioy and frayle proſperite,
That ſo lyue here as ye ſhould neuer hence,
Remember death and loke here vppon me.
Enſaumple I thynke there may no better be.
Your ſelfe wotte well that in this realme was I,
Your quene but late, and lo now here I lye.
Was I not borne of olde worthy linage?
Was not my mother queene, my father kyng?
Was I not a kinges fere in marriage?
Had I not plenty of euery pleaſaunt thing?
Mercifull God this is a ſtraunge reckenyng:
Rycheſſe, honour, welth, and aunceſtry,
Hath me forſaken, and lo now here I ly.
If worſhip myght haue kept me, I had not gone.
If wyt myght haue me ſaued, I neded not fere.
If money myght haue holpe, I lacked none.
But O good God what vayleth all this gere.
When deth is come thy mighty meſſangere,
Obey we muſt there is no remedy,
Me hath he ſommoned, and lo now here I ly.
Yet was I late promiſed otherwyſe,
This yere to liue in welth and delice.
Lo where to commeth thy blandiſhyng promyſe,
O falſe aſtrolagy and deuynatrice,
Of Goddes ſecretes makyng thy ſelfe ſo wyſe.
How true is for this yere thy prophecy.
The yere yet laſteth, and lo nowe here I ly.
O bryttill welth, as full of bitterneſſe,
Thy ſingle pleaſure doubled is with payne.
Account my ſorow firſt and my diſtreſſe,
In ſondry wyſe, and recken there agayne,
The ioy that I haue had, and I dare ſayne,
For all my honour, endured yet haue I,
More wo then welth, and lo now here I ly.
Where are our caſtels, now where are our towers,
Goodly Rychmonde ſone art thou gone from me,
At Weſtminſter that coſtly worke of yours,
Myne owne dere lorde now ſhall I neuer ſee.
Almighty God vouchеſafe to graunt that ye,
For you and your children well may edefy.
My palyce bylded is, and lo now here I ly.
Adew myne owne dere ſpouſe my worthy lorde,
The faithfull loue, that dyd vs both combyne,
In mariage and peaſable concorde,
Into your handes here I cleane reſyne,
To be beſtowed vppon your children and myne.
Erſt wer you father, and now muſt ye ſupply,
The mothers part alſo, for lo now here I ly.
Farewell my doughter lady Margerete.
God wotte full oft it greued hath my mynde,
That ye ſhould go where we ſhould ſeldome mete.
Nowe am I gone, and haue left you behynde.
O mortall folke that we be very blynde.
That we leaſt feare, full oft it is moſt nye,
From you depart I fyrſt, and lo now here I ly.
Farewell Madame my lordes worthy mother,
Comfort your ſonne, and be ye of good chere.
Take all a worth, for it will be no nother.
Farewell my doughter Katherine late the fere,
To prince Arthur myne owne chyld ſo dere,
It booteth not for me to wepe or cry,
Pray for my ſoule, for lo now here I ly.
Adew lord Henry my louyng ſonne adew.
Our lorde encreaſe your honour and eſtate,
Adew my doughter Mary bright of hew,
God make you vertuous wyſe and fortunate.
Adew ſwete hart my litle doughter Kate,
Thou ſhalt ſwete babe ſuche is thy deſteny,
Thy mother neuer know, for lo now here I ly.
Lady Cicyly Anne and Katheryne,
Farewell my welbeloved ſiſters three,
O lady Briget other ſiſter myne,
Lo here the ende of worldly vanitee.
Now well are ye that earthly foly flee,
And heuenly thynges loue and magnify,
Farewell and pray for me, for lo now here I ly.
Adew my lordes, adew my ladies all,
Adew my faithful ſeruauntes euerych one,
Adew my commons whom I neuer ſhall
See in this world, wherfore to the alone,
Immortall god verely three and one,
I me commende. Thy infinite mercy,
Shew to thy ſeruant, for lo now here I ly.

Certain meters in Engliſh written by maſter Thomas More in hys youth for the boke of fortune, and cauſed them to be printed in the begynnyng of that boke.

The wordes of Fortune to the people.

MINE high eſtate power and auctoritie,
If ye ne know, enſerche and ye ſhall ſpye,
That richeſſe, worſhip, welth, and dignitie,
Joy, reſt, and peace, and all thyng fynally,
That any pleaſure or profit may come by,
To mannes comfort, ayde, and ſuſtinaunce,
Is all at my deuyſe and ordinaunce.
Without my fauour there is nothyng wonne.
Many a matter haue I brought at laſt,
To good concluſion, that fondly was begonne.
And many a purpoſe, bounden ſure and faſt
With wiſe prouiſion, I haue ouercaſt.
Without good happe there may no wit ſuffiſe.
Better is to be fortunate than wyſe.
And therefore hath there ſome men bene or this,
My deadly foes and written many a boke,
To my diſprayſe. And other cauſe there nys,
But for me liſt not frendly on them loke.
Thus lyke the fox they fare that once forſoke,
The pleaſaunt grapes, and gan for to defy them,
Becauſe he lept and yet could not come by them.
But let them write theyr labour is in vayne.
For well ye wote, myrth, honour, and richeſſe,
Much better is than penury and payne.
The nedy wretch that lingereth in diſtreſſe,
Without myne helpe is euer comfortleſſe,
A wery burden odious and loth,
To all the world, and eke to him ſelfe both.
But he that by my fauour may aſcende,
To mighty power and excellent degree,
A common weſe to gouerne and defende,
O in how bliſt condicion ſtandeth he:
Him ſelf in honour and felicite,
And ouer that, may forther and increaſe,
A region hole in ioyfull reſt and peace.
Now in this poynt there is no more to ſay,
Eche man hath of him ſelf the gouernaunce.
Let euery wight than folowe his owne way,
And he that out of pouertee and miſchaunce,
Liſt for to liue, and wyll him ſelfe enhaunce,
In wealth and richeſſe, come forth and wayte on me.
And he that wyll be a beggar, let hym be.

Thomas More to them that truſt in Fortune.

THOU that are prowde of honour, ſhape or kynne,
That hepeſt vp this wretched worldes treaſure,
Thy fingers ſhrined with gold, thy tawny ſkynne,
With freſh apparyle garniſhed out of meaſure,
And weneſt to haue fortune at thy pleaſure,
Caſt vp thyne eye, and loke how ſlipper chaunce,
Illudeth her men with chaunge and varyaunce.
Sometyme ſhe loketh as louely, fayre and bright,
As goodly Uenus mother of Cupyde.
She becketh and ſhe ſmileth on euery wight.
But this chere fayned, may not long abide.
There cometh a cloude, and farewell all our pryde.
Like any ſerpent ſhe beginneth to ſwell,
And looketh as fierce as any fury of hell.
Yet for all that we brotle men are fayne,
(So wretched is our nature and ſo blynde)
As ſoone as Fortune liſt to laugh agayne,
With fayre countenaunce and diſceitfull mynde,
To crouche and knele and gape after the wynde,
Not one or twayne but thouſandes in a rout,
Lyke ſwarmyng bees come flickeryng her aboute.
Then as a bayte ſhe bryngeth forth her ware,
Siluer, gold, riche perle, and precious ſtone:
On whiche the maſed people gaſe and ſtare,
And gape therefore, as dogges doe for the bone.
Fortune at them laugheth, and in her trone
Amyd her treaſure and waueryng rycheſſe,
Prowdly ſhe houeth as lady and empreſſe.
Faſt by her ſyde doth wery labour ſtand,
Pale fere alſo, and ſorow all bewept,
Diſdayn and hatred on that other hand,
Eke reſtles watche fro ſlepe with trauayle kept,
His eyes drowſy and lokyng as he ſlept.
Before her ſtandeth daunger and enuy,
Flattery, dyſceyt, miſchiefe and tiranny.
About her commeth all the world to begge.
He aſketh lande, and he to pas would bryng,
This toye and that, and all not worth an egge:
He would in loue proſper aboue all thyng:
He kneleth downe and would be made a kyng:
He forceth not ſo he may money haue,
Though all the worlde accompte hym for a knaue.
Lo thus ye ſee diuers heddes, diuers wittes.
Fortune alone as diuers as they all,
Vnſtable here and there among them flittes:
And at auenture downe her giftes fall,
Catch who ſo may ſhe throweth great and ſmall
Not to all men, as commeth ſonne or dewe,
But for the moſt part, all among a fewe.
And yet her broteil giftes long may not laſt,
He that ſhe gaue them, loketh prowde and hye.
She whirlth about and pluckth away as faſt,
And geueth them to an other by an by.
And thus from man to man continually,
She vſeth to geue and take, and ſlily toſſe,
One man to wynnyng of an others loſſe.
And when ſhe robbeth one, down goth his pryde.
He wepeth and wayleth and curſeth her full ſore.
But he that receueth it, on that other ſyde,
Is glad, and bleſth her often tymes therefore.
But in a whyle when ſhe loueth hym no more,
She glydeth from hym, and her giftes to,
And he her curſeth, as other fooles do.
Alas the folyſh people can not ceaſe,
Ne voyd her trayne, tyll they the harme do fele.
About her alway, beſely they preace.
But lord how he doth thynk hym ſelf full wele.
That may ſet once his hande vppon her whele.
He holdeth faſt: but vpward as he flieth,
She whippeth her whele about, and there he lyeth.
Thus fell Julius from his mighty power.
Thus fell Darius the worthy kyng of Perſe.
Thus fell Alexander the great conquerour.
Thus many mo then I may well reherſe.
Thus double fortune, when ſhe lyſt reuerſe
Her ſlipper fauour fro them that in her truſt,
She fleeth her wey and leyeth them in the duſt.
She ſodeinly enhaunceth them aloft.
And ſodeynly miſcheueth all the flocke.
The head that late lay eaſily and full ſoft,
In ſtede of pylows lyeth after on the blocke.
And yet alas the moſt cruell proude mocke:
The deynty mowth that ladyes kiſſed haue,
She bryngeth in the caſe to kyſſe a knaue.
In chaungyng of her courſe, the chaunge ſhewth this,
Vp ſtartth a knaue, and down there falth a knight,
The beggar ryche, and the ryche man pore is.
Hatred is turned to loue, loue to deſpyght.
This is her ſport, thus proueth ſhe her myght.
Great boſte ſhe maketh yf one be by her power.
Welthy and wretched both within an howre.
Pouertee that of her giftes wyl nothing take,
Wyth mery chere, looketh vppon the prece,
And ſeeth how fortunes houſhold goeth to wrake.
Faſt by her ſtandeth the wyſe Socrates,
Arriſtippus, Pythagoras, and many a leſe
Of olde philoſophers. And eke agaynſt the ſoone
Bekyth hym poore Diogenes in his tonne.
With her is Byas, whoſe countrey lackt defence,
And whylom of their foes ſtode ſo in dout,
That eche mon haſtely gan to cary thence,
And aſked hym why he nought caryed out.
I bere quod he all myne with me about:
Wiſedom he ment, not fortunes brotle fees.
For nought he counted his that he might leeſe.
Heraclitus eke, lyſt felowſhip to kepe
With glade pouertee, Democritus alſo:
Of which the fyrſt can neuer ceaſe but wepe,
To ſee how thicke the blynded people go,
With labour great to purchaſe care and wo.
That other laugheth to ſee the foolyſh apes,
How earneſtly they walk about theyr capes.
Of this poore ſect, it is comen vſage,
Onely to take that nature may ſuſtayne,
Baniſhing cleane all other ſurpluſage,
They be content, and of nothyng complayne.
No nygarde eke is of his good ſo fayne.
But they more pleaſure haue a thouſande folde,
The ſecrete draughtes of nature to beholde.
Set fortunes ſeruauntes by them and ye wull,
That one is free, that other euer thrall,
That one content, that other neuer full,
That one in ſuretye, that other lyke to fall.
Who lyſt to aduiſe them bothe, parceyue he ſhall,
As great difference between them as we ſee,
Betwixte wretchednes and felicite.
Nowe haue I ſhewed you bothe: theſe whiche ye lyſt,
Stately fortune, or humble pouertee:
That is to ſay, nowe lyeth it in your fyſt,
To take here bondage, or free libertee.
But in thys poynte and ye do after me,
Draw you to fortune, and labour her to pleaſe,
If that ye thynke your ſelfe to well at eaſe.
And fyrſt vppon the louely ſhall ſhe ſmile,
And frendly on the caſt her wandering eyes,
Embrace the in her armes, and for a whyle,
Put the and kepe the in a fooles paradiſe:
And foorth with all what ſo thou lyſt deuiſe,
She wyll the graunt it liberally perhappes:
But for all that beware of after clappes.
Recken you neuer of her fauoure ſure:
Ye may in clowds as eaſily trace an hare,
Or in drye lande cauſe fiſhes to endure,
And make the burnyng fyre his heate to ſpare,
And all thys worlde in compace to forfare,
As her to make by craft or engine ſtable,
That of her nature is euer variable.
Serue her day and nyght as reuerently,
Vppon thy knees as any ſeruaunt may,
And in concluſion, that thou ſhalt winne thereby
Shall not be worth thy ſeruyce I dare ſay.
And looke yet what ſhe geueth the to day,
With labour wonne ſhe ſhall happly to morow
Plucke it agayne out of thyne hand with ſorow.
Wherefore yf thou in ſuretye lyſt to ſtande,
Take pouerties parte and let prowde fortune go,
Receyue nothyng that commeth from her hande.
Loue maner and vertue: they be onely tho.
Whiche double fortune may not take the fro.
Then mayſt thou boldly defye her turnyng chaunce:
She can the neyther hynder nor auaunce.
But and thou wylt nedes medle with her treaſure,
Truſt not therein, and ſpende it liberally.
Beare the not proude, nor take not out of meaſure.
Bylde not thyne houſe on heyth vp in the ſkye,
Nonne falleth farre, but he that climbeth hye.
Remember nature ſent the hyther bare,
The gyftes of fortune count them borowed ware.

Thomas More to them that ſeke Fortune.

WHO ſo delyteth to prouen and aſſay,
Of waueryng fortune the vncertayne lot,
If that the aunſwere pleaſe you not alway,
Blame ye not me: for I commaunde you not,
Fortune to truſt, and eke full well ye wot,
I haue of her no brydle in my fiſt,
She renneth looſe, and turneth where ſhe lyſt.
The rollyng dyſe in whome your lucke doth ſtande,
With whoſe vnhappy chaunce ye be ſo wroth,
Ye knowe your ſelfe came neuer in myne hande.
Lo in this ponde be fyſhe and frogges both.
Caſt in your nette: but be you liefe or lothe,
Hold you content as fortune lyſt aſſyne:
For it is your owne fyſhyng and not myne.
And though in one chaunce fortune you offend,
Grudge not there at, but beare a mery face.
In many an other ſhe ſhall it amende.
There is no manne ſo farre out of her grace,
But he ſometyme hath comfort and ſolace:
Ne none agayne ſo farre foorth in her fauour,
That is full ſatisfyed with her behauiour.
Fortune is ſtately, ſolemne, prowde, and hye:
And rycheſſe geueth, to haue ſeruyce therefore.
The nedy begger catcheth an halfpeny:
Some manne a thouſande pound ſome leſſe ſome more.
But for all that ſhe kepeth euer in ſtore,
From euery manne ſome parcell of his wyll,
That he may pray therfore and ſerue her ſtyll.
Some manne hath good, but chyldren hath he none.
Some manne hath both, but he can get none health.
Some hath al thre, but vp to honours trone,
Can he not crepe, by no maner of ſtelth.
To ſome ſhe ſendeth, children, ryches, welthe,
Honour, woorſhyp, and reuerence all hys lyfe:
But yet ſhe pyncheth hym with a ſhrewde wyfe.
Then for aſmuch as it is fortunes guyſe,
To graunt to manne all thyng that he wyll axe,
But as her ſelfe lyſt order and deuyſe,
Doth euery manne his parte diuide and tax,

I counſayle you eche one truſſe vp your packes,
And take no thyng at all, or be content,
With ſuche rewarde as fortune hath you ſent.
All thynges in this boke that ye ſhall rede,
Doe as ye lyſt, there ſhall no manne you bynde,
Them to beleue, as ſurely as your crede.
But notwithſtandyng certes in my mynde,
I durſt well ſwere, as true ye ſhall them fynde,
In euery poynt eche anſwere by and by,
As are the iudgementes of aſtronomye.

The Deſcripcion of RICHARD the thirde.

RICHARDE the third ſonne, of whom we nowe entreate, was in witte and courage egall with either of them, in bodye and proweſſe farre vnder them bothe, little of ſtature, ill fetured of limmes, croke backed, his left ſhoulder much higher than his right, hard fauoured of viſage, and ſuch as is in ſtates called warlye, in other menne otherwiſe, he was malicious, wrathfull, enuious, and from afore his birth, euer frowarde. It is for trouth reported, that the duches his mother had ſo much a doe in her trauaile, that ſhee could not bee deliuered of hym vncutte: and that hee came into the worlde with the feete forwarde, as menne bee borne outwarde, and (as the ſame runneth) alſo not vntothed, whither menne of hatred reporte aboue the trouthe, or elles that nature chaunged her courſe in hys beginninge, whiche in the courſe of his lyfe many thinges vnnaturallye committed. None euill captaine was hee in the warre, as to whiche his diſpoſicion was more metely then for peace. Sundrye victories hadde hee, and ſommetime ouerthrowes, but neuer in defaulte as for his owne parſone, either of hardineſſe or polytike order, free was hee called of dyſpence, and ſommewhat aboue hys power liberall, with large giftes hee get him vnſtedfaſte frendeſhippe, for whiche hee was fain to pil and ſpoyle in other places, and get him ſtedfaſt hatred. Hee was cloſe and ſecrete, a deepe diſſimuler, lowlye of counteynaunce, arrogant of heart, outwardly coumpinable where he inwardely hated, not letting to kiſſe whome he thoughte to kyll: diſpitious and cruell, not for euill will alway, but after for ambicion, and either for the ſuretie and encreaſe of his eſtate. Frende and foo was muche what indifferent, where his aduauntage grew, he ſpared no mans deathe, whoſe life withſtoode his purpoſe. He ſlewe with his owne handes king Henry the ſixt, being priſoner in the Tower, as menne conſtantly ſaye, and that without commaundement or knoweledge of the king, whiche woulde vndoubtedly yf he had entended that thinge, haue appointed that boocherly office, to ſome other then his owne borne brother.

Somme wiſe menne alſo weene, that his drift couertly conuayde, lacked not in helping furth his brother of Clarence to his death: whiche hee reſiſted openly, howbeit ſomwhat (as menne deme) more faintly then he that wer hartely minded to his welth. And they that thus deme, thinke that he long time in king Edwardes life, forethought to be king in that caſe the king his brother (whoſe life hee looked that euil dyete ſhoulde ſhorten) ſhoulde happen to deceaſe (as in dede he did) while his children wer yonge. And thei deme, that for thys intente he was gladde of his brothers death the duke of Clarence, whoſe life muſt nedes haue hindered hym ſo entendynge, whither the ſame duke of Clarence hadde kepte him true to his nephew the yonge king, or enterpriſed to be kyng himſelfe. But of al this pointe, is there no certaintie, and whoſo diuineth vppon coniectures, maye as wel ſhote to farre as to ſhort. Howbeit this haue I by credible informacion learned, that the ſelfe nighte in whiche kynge Edwarde died, one Myſtlebrooke longe ere mornynge, came in greate haſte to the houſe of one Pottyer dwellyng in Reddecroſſe ſtrete without Crepulgate: and when he was with haſtye rappyng quickly letten in, hee ſhewed vnto Pottyer that kynge Edwarde was departed. By my trouthe manne quod Pottyer then wyll my mayſter the duke of Glouceſter bee kynge. What cauſe hee hadde ſoo to thynke harde it is to ſaye, whyther hee being toward him, anye thynge knewe that hee ſuche thynge purpoſed, or otherwyſe had anye inkelynge thereof: for hee was not likely to ſpeake it of noughte.

But nowe to returne to the courſe of this hyſtorye, were it that the duke of Glouceſter hadde of old fore-minded this concluſion, or was nowe at erſte thereunto moued, and putte in hope by the occaſion of the tender age of the younge princes, his nephues (as opportunitye and lykelyhoode of ſpede, putteth a manne in courage of that hee neuer entended) certayn is it that hee contriued theyr deſtruccion, with the vſurpacion of the regal dignitye vppon hymſelfe. And for as muche as hee well wiſte and holpe to mayntayn, a long continued grudge and hearte brennynge betwene the quenes kinred and the kinges blood eyther partye enuying others authoritye, he nowe thought that their deuiſion ſhoulde bee (as it was in dede) a fortherlye begynnynge to the purſuite of his intente, and a ſure ground for the foundacion of al his building yf he might firſte vnder the pretext of reueugynge of olde diſpleaſure, abuſe the anger and ygnoraunce of the tone partie, to the deſtruccion of the tother: and then wynne to his purpoſe as manye as he coulde: and thoſe that coulde not be wonne, myght be loſte ere they looked therefore. For of one thynge was hee certayne, that if his entente were perceiued, he ſhold ſoone haue made peace beetwene the bothe parties, with his owne bloude.

Kynge Edwarde in his life, albeit that this diſcencion beetwene hys frendes ſommewhat yrked hym: yet in his good healthe he ſommewhat the leſſe regarded it, becauſe hee thought whatſoeuer buſines ſhoulde falle beetwene them, hymſelfe ſhould alwaye bee hable to rule bothe the parties.

But in his laſt ſickneſſe, when hee receiued his naturall ſtrengthe ſoo ſore enfebled, that hee dyſpayred all recouerye, then hee conſyderynge the youthe of his chyldren, albeit hee nothynge leſſe miſtruſted then that that happened, yet well forſeynge that manye harmes myghte growe by theyr debate, whyle the youth of hys children ſhoulde lacke diſcrecion of themſelf and good counſayle of their frendes, of whiche either party ſhold counſayle for their owne commodity and rather by pleaſaunte aduyſe too wynne themſelfe fauour, then by profitable aduertiſemente to do the children good, he called ſome of them before him that were at variaunce, and in eſpecyall the lorde marques Dorſette the quenes ſonne by her fyrſte houſebande, and Richarde the lorde Haſtynges, a noble man, than lorde chamberlayne agayne whome the quene ſpecially grudged, for the great fauoure the kyng bare hym, and alſo for that ſhee thoughte hym ſecretlye familyer with the kynge in wanton coumpanye. Her kynred alſo bare hym ſore, as well for that the kynge hadde made hym captayne of Calyce (whiche office the lorde Ryuers, brother to the quene, claimed of the kinges former promyſe) as for diuerſe other great giftes which he receyued, that they loked for. When theſe lordes with diuerſe other of bothe the parties were comme in preſence, the kynge liftinge vppe himſelfe and vnderſette with pillowes, as it is reported on this wyſe ſayd vnto them, My lordes, my dere kinſmenne and alies, in what plighte I lye you ſee, and I feele. By whiche the leſſe whyle I looke to lyue with you, the more depelye am I moued to care in what caſe I leaue you, for ſuch as I leauve you, ſuche bee my children lyke to fynde you. Whiche if they ſhoulde (that Godde forbydde) fynde you at varyaunce, myght happe to fall themſelfe at warre ere their diſcrecion woulde ſerue to ſette you at peace. Ye ſe their youthe, of whiche I recken the onely ſuretie to reſte in your concord. For it ſuffiſeth not that al you loue them, yf eche of you hate other. If they wer menne, your faithfulneſſe happelye woulde ſuffiſe. But childehood muſt be maintained by mens authoritye, and ſlipper youth vnderpropped with elder counſayle, which neither they can haue, but ye geue it, nor ye geue it, yf ye gree not. For wher eche laboureth to breake that the other maketh, and for hatred of eche of others parſon, impugneth eche others counſayle, there muſt it nedes bee long ere anye good concluſion goe forwarde. And alſo while either partye laboureth to be chiefe, flattery ſhall haue more place then plaine and faithfull aduyſe, of whyche muſte needes enſure the euyll bringing vppe of the prynce, whoſe mynd in tender youth infect, ſhal redily fal to miſchief and riot, and drawe down with this noble relme to ruine, but if grace turn him to wiſdom, which if God ſend, then thei that by euill menes before pleaſed him beſt, ſhal after fall fartheſt out of fauour, ſo that euer at length euill driftes dreue to nought, and good plain wayes proſper. Great variaunce hath ther long bene betwene you, not alway for great cauſes. Sometime a thing right wel intended, our miſconſtruccion turneth vnto worſe or a ſmal diſpleaſure done vs, eyther our owne affeccion or euil tongues agreueth. But this wote I well ye neuer had ſo great cauſe of hatred, as ye have of loue. That we be al men, that we be chriſten men, this ſhall I leave for prechers to tel you (and yet I wote nere whither any prechers wordes ought more to moue you, then his that is by and by gocying to the place that thei all preache of.) But this ſhal I deſire you to remember, that the one parte of you is of my bloode, the other of myne alies, and eche of yow with other, eyther of kinred or affinitie, whiche ſpirytuall kynred of affynyty, if the ſacramentes of Chriſtes churche, beare that weyghte with vs that woulde Godde thei did, ſhoulde no leſſe moue vs to charitye, then the reſpecte of fleſhlye conſanguinitye. Oure Lorde forbydde, that you loue together the worſe, for the ſelfe cauſe that you ought to loue the better. And yet that happeneth. And no where fynde wee ſo deadlye debate as amonge them, whyche by nature and lawe moſte oughte to agree together. Suche a peſtilente ſerpente is ambicion and deſyre of vaine glorye and ſoueraintye, whiche amonge ſtates where he once entreth crepeth foorth ſo farre, tyll with deuiſion and variaunce hee turneth all to miſchiefe. Firſte longing to be nexte the beſt, afterwarde egall with the beſte, and at laſte chiefe and aboue the beſte. Of which immoderate appetite of woorſhip, and thereby of debate and diſſencion what loſſe, what ſorowe, what trouble hathe within theſe fewe yeares growen in this realme, I praye Godde as wel forgeate as wee wel remember.

Whiche thinges yf I coulde as well haue foreſene, as I haue with my more payne then pleaſure proued, by Goddes bleſſed Ladie (that was euer his othe) I woulde neuer haue won the courteſye of mennes knees, with the loſſe of ſoo many heades. But ſithen thynges paſſed cannot be gaine called, muche oughte wee the more beware, by what occaſion we haue taken ſoo greate hurt afore, that we eftesoones fall not in that occaſion agayne. Nowe be thoſe griefes paſſed, and all is (Godde be thanked) quiete, and likelie righte wel to proſper in wealthfull peace under youre coſeyns my children, if Godde ſend them life and you loue. Of whiche twoo thinges, the leſſe loſſe wer they by whome thoughe Godde dydde hys pleaſure, yet ſhoulde the realme alway finde kinges and peraduenture as good kinges. But yf you among youre ſelfe in a childes reygne fall at debate, many a good man ſhall periſh and happely he to, and ye to, ere thys land finde peace again. Wherfore in theſe laſte wordes that euer I looke to ſpeake with you: I exhort you and require you al, for the loue that you haue euer borne to me, for the loue that I haue euer borne to you, for the loue that our Lord beareth to vs all, from this time forwarde, all grieues forgotten, eche of you loue other. Whiche I verelye truſte you will, if ye any thing earthly regard, either Godde or your king, affinitie or kinred, this realme, your owne countrey, or your owne ſurety. And therewithal the king no longer enduring to ſitte vp, laide him down on his right ſide, his face towarde them: and none was there preſent that coulde refrain from weping. But the lordes recomforting him with as good wordes as they could, and anſwering for the time as thei thought to ſtand with his pleaſure, there in his preſence (as by their wordes appered) eche forgau eother, and ioyned their hands together, when (as it after appeared by their dedes) their hearts wer far a ſonder. As ſone as the king was departed, the noble prince his ſonne drew toward London, which at the time of his deceaſe, kept his houſhold at Ludlow in Wales. Which countrey being far of from the law and recourſe to iuſtice, was begon to be farre oute of good wyll and waxen wild, robbers and riuers walking at libertie vncorrected. And for this encheaſon the prince was in the life of hir father ſente thither, to the ende that the authoritie of his preſence, ſhould refraine euill diſpoſed parſons fro the boldneſs of their formar outerages, to the gouernaunce and ordering of this yong prince at his ſending thyther, was there appointed Sir Anthony Woduile lord Riuers and brother unto the quene, a right honourable man, as valiaunte of hande as politike in counſayle. Adioyned wer there vnto him other of the ſame partie, and in effect euery one as he was nereſt of kin vnto the quene, ſo was planted next about the prince. That drifte by the quene not unwiſely deuiſed, whereby her bloode mighte of youth be rooted in the princes fauor, the duke of Glouceſter turned vnto their deſtruccion, and upon that grounde ſet the foundacion of all his vnhappy building. For whom ſoeur he perceiued, either at variance with them, or bearing himſelf their fauor, hee brake vnto them, ſom by mouth, ſom by writing and ſecret meſſengers, that it neyther was reaſon nor in any wiſe to be ſuffered, that the yong king their maſter and kinſmanne, ſhoode bee in the handes and cuſtodye of his mothers kinred, ſequeſtred in maner from theyr compani, and attendance, of which eueri one ought him as faithful ſeruice as they, and manye of them far more honorable part of kin then his mothers ſide: whoſe blood (quod he) ſauing the kinges pleaſure, was ful vnmetely to be matched with his: whiche nowe to be as who ſay remoued from the kyng, and the leſſe noble to be left aboute him, is (quod he) neither honorable to hys mageſtie, nor vnto vs, and alſo to his grace no ſurety to haue the mightieſt of his frendes from him, and vnto vs no little ieopardy, to ſuffer our welproued euil willers, to grow in ouergret authoritie with the prince in youth, namely which is lighte of beliefe and ſone perſwaded. Ye remember I trow king Edward himſelf, albeit he was a manne of age and of diſcrecion, yet was he in manye thynges ruled by the bende, more then ſtode either with his honour, or our profite, or with the commoditie of any manne els, except onely the immoderate aduauncement of them ſelfe. Whiche whither they ſorer thirſted after their owne weale, or our woe, it wer harde I wene to geſſe. And if ſome folkes frendſhip had not holden better place with the king, then any reſpect of kinred, thei might peraduenture eaſily have be trapped and brought to confuſion ſomme of vs ere this. Why not as eaſily as they haue done ſome other alreadye, as neere of his royal bloode as we. But our Lord hath wrought his wil, and thanke be to his grace that peril is paſte. Howe be it as great is growing, yf wee ſuffer this yonge kyng in oure enemyes hande, whiche without his wyttyng, might abuſe the name of his commaundements, to ani of our vndoing, which thyng God and good prouiſion forbyd. Of which good prouiſion none of vs hath any thing the leſſe nede, for the late made attonemente, in whiche the kinges pleaſure hadde more place then the parties willes. Nor none of vs I beleue is ſo vnwyſe, ouerſone to truſte a newe frende made of an olde foe, or to think that an houerly kindnes, ſodainely contract in one houre continued, yet ſcant a fortnight, ſhold be deper ſetled in their ſtomackes: then a long accuſtomed malice many yeres rooted.

With theſe wordes and wrytinges and ſuche other, the duke of Glouceſter ſone ſet a fyre, them that were of themſelf ethe to kindle, and in eſpeciall twayne, Edwarde duke of Buckingham, and Richarde lorde Haſtinges and chaumberlayn, both men of honour and of great power. The tone by longe ſucceſſion from his anceſtrie, the tother by his office and the kinges fauor. Theſe two not bearing eche to other ſo muche loue, as hatred bothe vnto the quenes parte: in this poynte accorded together wyth the duke of Glouceſter, that they wolde vtterlye amoue fro the kinges companye, all his mothers frendes, vnder the name of their enemyes. Vpon this concluded, the duke of Glouceſler vnderſtandyng, that the lordes whiche at that tyme were aboute the kyng, entended to bryng him vppe to his coronacion, accoumpanied with ſuche power of theyr frendes, that it ſhoulde bee harde for hym to bryng his purpoſe to paſſe, without the gathering and great aſſemble of people and in maner of open warre, wherof the ende he wiſte was doubtous, and in which the kyng being on their ſide, his part ſhould haue the face and name of a rebellion: he ſecretly therefore by diuers meanes, cauſed the quene to be perſwaded and brought in the mynd, that it neither wer nede, and alſo ſhold be ieopardous, the king to come vp ſtrong. For where as nowe euery lorde loued other, and none other thing ſtudyed vppon, but aboute the coronacion and honoure of the king: if the lordes of her kinred ſhold aſſemble in the kinges name muche people, thei ſhould geue the lordes atwixte whome and them hadde bene ſommetyme debate, to feare and ſuſpecte, leſte thei ſhoulde gather thys people, not for the kynges ſauegarde whome no manne empugned, but for theyr deſtruccion, hauying more regarde to their old variaunce, then their newe attonement. For whiche cauſe thei ſhoulde aſſemble on the other partie muche people agayne for their defence, whoſe power ſhe wyſte wel farre ſtretched. And thus ſhould al the realme fall on a rore. And of al the hurte that therof ſhould enſue, which was likely not to be litle, and the moſt harme there like to fal wher ſhe leſt would, al the worlde woulde put her and her kinred in the wyght, and ſay that thei had vnwyſely and vntrewlye alſo, broken the amitie and peace that the kyng her huſband ſo prudentelye made, betwene hys kinne and hers in his death bed, and whiche the other party faithfully obſerued.

The quene being in this wiſe perſwaded, ſuche woorde ſent vnto her ſonne, and vnto her brother being aboute the kynge, and ouer that the duke of Glouceſter hymſelfe and other lordes the chiefe of hys bende, wrote vnto the kynge ſoo reuerentlye, and to the queenes frendes, there ſoo louyngelye, that they nothynge earthelye myſtruſtynge, broughte the kynge vppe in greate haſte, not in good ſpede, with a ſober coumpanye. Nowe was the king in his waye to London gone, from Northampton, when theſe dukes of Glouceſter and Buckyngham came thither. Where remained behynd, the lorde Ryuers the kynges vncle, entendyng on the morrowe to folow the kynge, and bee with hym at Stonye Stratforde miles thence, earely or hee departed. So was there made that nyghte muche frendely chere betwene theſe dukes and the lorde Riuers a greate while. But incontinente after that they were oppenlye with greate courteſy departed, and the lorde Riuers lodged, the dukes ſecretelye with a fewe of the moſte priuye frendes, ſette them downe in counſayle, wherin they ſpent a great parte of the nyght. And at their riſinge in the dawnyng of the day, thei ſent about priuily to their ſeruantes in the innes and lodgynges about, geuinge them commaundemente to make them ſelfe ſhortely readye, for their lordes wer to horſebackward. Vppon whiche meſſages, manye of their folke were attendaunt, when manye of the lorde Riuers ſeruantes were vnreadye. Nowe hadde theſe dukes taken alſo into their cuſtodye the kayes of the inne, that none ſhoulde paſſe foorth without theyr licence.

And ouer this in the hyghe waye towarde Stonye Stratforde where the kynge laye, theyhadde beeſtowed certayne of theyr folke, that ſhoulde ſende backe agayne, and compell to retourne, anye manne that were gotten oute of Northampton toward Stonye Stratforde, tyll they ſhould geue other lycence. For as muche as the dukes themſelfe entended for the ſhewe of theire dylygence, to bee the fyrſte that ſhoulde that daye attende vppon the kynges highneſſe oute of that towne: thus bare they folke in hande. But when the lorde Ryuers vnderſtode the gates cloſed, and the wayes on euerye ſide beſette, neyther hys ſeruauntes nor hymſelfe ſuffered to go oute, parceiuyng well ſo greate a thynge without his knowledge not begun for noughte, comparyng this maner preſent with this laſt nightes chere, in ſo few houres ſo gret a chaunge maruelouſlye miſliked. How be it ſithe hee could not get awaye, and keep himſelfe cloſe, hee woulde not, leſte he ſhoulde ſeeme to hyde himſelfe for ſome ſecret feare of hys owne faulte, whereof he ſaw no ſuch cauſe in hym ſelf: he determined vppon the ſuretie of his own conſcience, to goe boldelye to them, and inquire what thys matter mighte meane. Whome as ſoone as they ſawe, they beganne to quarrell with hym, and ſaye, that hee intended to ſette diſtaunce beetweene the kynge and them, and to brynge them to confuſion, but it ſhoulde not lye in hys power. And when hee beganne (as hee was a very well ſpoken manne) in goodly wiſe to excuſe himſelf, they taryed not the ende of his aunſwere, but ſhortely tooke him and putte him in warde, and that done, foorthwyth wente to horſebacke, and tooke the waye to Stonye Stratforde. Where they founde the kinge with his companie readye to leape on horſebacke, and departe forwarde, to leaue that lodging for them, becauſe it was to ſtreighte for bothe coumpanies. And as ſone as they came in his preſence, they lighte adowne with all their companie aboute them. To whome the duke of Buckingham ſaide, goe afore gentlemenne and yeomen, kepe youre rowmes. And thus in goodly arraye, thei came to the kinge, and on theire knees in very humble wiſe, ſalued his grace; whiche receyued them in very ioyous and amiable maner, nothinge earthlye knowing nor miſtruſtinge as yet. But euen by and by in his preſence, they piked a quarrell to the lorde Richarde Graye, the kynges other brother by his mother, ſayinge that hee with the lorde marques his brother and the lorde Riuers his vncle, hadde coumpaſſed to rule the kinge and the realme, and to ſette variaunce among the ſtates, and to ſubdewe and deſtroye the noble blood of the realm. Toward the accoumpliſhinge whereof, they ſayde that the lorde Marques hadde entered into the Tower of London, and thence taken out the kinges treaſor, and ſent menne to the ſea. All whiche thinge theſe dukes wiſte well were done for good purpoſes and neceſſari by the whole counſaile at London, ſauing that ſommewhat thei muſt ſai. Vnto whiche woordes, the king aunſwered, what my brother Marques hath done I cannot ſaie. But in good faith I dare well aunſwere for myne vncle Riuers and my brother here, that thei be innocent of any ſuch matters. Ye my liege quod the duke of Buckingham thei haue kepte theire dealing in theſe matters farre fro the knowledge of your good grace And foorthwith thei arreſted the lord Richarde and Sir Thomas Waughan knighte, in the kinges preſence, and broughte the king and all backe vnto Northampton, where the tooke againe further counſaile. And there they ſent awaie from the kinge whom it pleaſed them, and ſette newe ſeruantes aboute him, ſuche as lyked better them than him. At whiche dealinge hee wepte and was nothing contente, but it booted not. And at dyner the duke of Glouceſter ſente a diſhe from his owne table to the lord Riuers, prayinge him to be of good chere, all ſhould be well inough. And he thanked the duke, and prayed the meſſenger to beare it to his nephewe the lorde Richarde with the ſame meſſage for his comfort, who he thought had more nede of coumfort, as one to whom ſuch aduerſitie was ſtraunge. But himſelf had been al his dayes in vre therewith, and therfore coulde beare it the better. But for al this coumfortable courteſye of the duke of Glouceſter he ſent the lorde Riuers and the lorde Richarde with Sir Thomas Vaughan into the Northe countrey into diuers places to priſon, and afterward al to Pomfrait, where they were in concluſion beheaded.

A letter written with a cole by Sir Thomas More to hys doughter maiſtres Margaret Roper, within a whyle after he was a priſoner in the Towre.

MYNE own good doughter, our lorde be thanked I am in good helthe of bodye and in good quiet of minde: and of worldly thynges I no more deſyer then I haue. I beſeche hym make you all mery in the hope of heauen. And ſuch thynges as I ſomewhat longed to talke with you all, concerning the worlde to come, our Lorde put theim into your myndes, as I truſte he dothe and better to by hys holy ſpirite: who bleſſe you and preſerue you all. Written wyth a cole by your tender louing father, who in hys pore prayers forgetteth none of you all, nor your babes, nor your nurſes, nor your good huſbandes, nor your good huſbandes ſhrewde wyues, nor your fathers ſhrewde wyfe neither, nor our other frendes. And thus fare ye hartely well for lacke of paper.

LEWYS the loſt louer.

EY flattering fortune, loke thou neuer ſo fayre,
Or neuer ſo pleſantly begin to ſmile,
As though thou wouldſt my ruine all repayre,
During my life thou ſhalt not me begile.
Truſt ſhall I God, to entre in a while.
Hys hauen or heauen ſure and vniforme
Euer after thy calme, loke I for a ſtorme.

DAUY the dycer.

LONG was I lady Lucke your ſeruing man,
And now haue loſt agayne all that I gat,
Wherfore whan I thinke on you nowe and than,
And in my mynde remember this and that,
Ye may not blame me though I beſhrew your cat,
But in fayth I bleſſe you agayne a thouſand times,
For lending me now ſome layſure to make rymes.

At the ſame time with Sir THOMAS MORE lived SKELTON, the poet laureate of HENRY VIII. from whoſe works it ſeems proper to inſert a few ſtanzas, though he cannot be ſaid to have attained great elegance of language.

The Prologue to the Bouge of Courte.

IN Autumpne whan the ſonne in vyrgyne
By radyante hete enryped hath our corne
Whan Luna full of mutabylyte
As Emperes the dyademe hath worne
Of our pole artyke, ſmylynge halfe in ſcorne
At our foly, and our vnſtedfaſtneſſe
The time whan Mars to warre hym dyd dres.
I callynge to mynde the greate auctoryte
Of poetes olde, whiche full craftely
Vnder as couerte termes as coulde be
Can touche a trouth, and cloke ſubtylly
With freſhe vtteraunce full ſentencyouſly
Dyuerſe in ſtyle ſome ſpared not vyce to wryte
Some of mortalitie nobly did endyte
Whereby I rede, theyr renome and theyr fame
Maye neuer dye, but euermore endure
I was ſore moued to a forſe the ſame
But ignoraunce full ſoone dyd me dyſcure
And ſhewed that in this arte I was not ſure
For to illumine ſhe ſayd I was to dulle
Aduyſynge me my penne awaye to pulle
And not to wryte, for he ſo wyll atteyne
Excedyng ferther than his connynge is
His heed maye be harde, but feble is brayne
Yet haue I knowen ſuche er this
But of reproche ſurely he maye not mys
That clymmeth hyer than he may fotinge haue
What and he ſlyde downe, who ſhall hym ſaue?
Thus vp and downe my mynde was drawen and caſt
That I ne wyſte what to do was beſte.
So ſore enwered that I was at the laſte
Enforſed to ſlepe, and for to take ſome reſte
And to lye downe as ſoone as I my dreſte
At Harwyche porte ſlumbrynge as I laye
In myne hoſtes houſe called powers keye.

Of the wits that flouriſhed in the reign of HENRY VIII. none has been more frequently celebrated than the earl of SURRY; and this hiſtory would therefore have been imperfect without ſome ſpecimens of his works, which yet it is not eaſy to diſtinguiſh from thoſe of Sir THOMAS WYAT and others, with which they are confounded in the edition that has fallen into my hands. The three firſt are, I believe, SURRY's; the reſt, being of the ſame age, are ſelected, ſome as examples of different meaſures, and one as the oldeſt compoſition which I have found in blank verſe.

Deſcripcion of Spring, wherein eche thing renewes, ſave only the lover.

THE ſoote ſeaſon that bud, and bloom fourth bringes,
With grene hath cladde the hyll, and eke the vale,
The Nightingall with fethers new ſhe ſinges;
The turtle to her mate hath told her tale:
Somer is come, for every ſpray now ſpringes,
The hart hath hunge hys olde head on the pale,
The bucke in brake his winter coate he flynges;
The fiſhes flete with newe repayred ſcale:
The adder all her ſlough away ſhe flynges,
The ſwift ſwallow purſueth the flyes ſmalle,
The buſy bee her honey how ſhe mynges;
Winter is worne that was the floures bale.
And thus I ſee among theſe pleaſant thynges
Eche care decayes, and yet my ſorrow ſprynges.

Deſcripcion of the reſtleſs eſtate of a lover.

WHEN youth had led me half the race,
That Cupides ſcourge had made me runne:
I looked back to meet the place,
From whence my weary courſe begunne:
And then I ſaw howe my deſyre
Miſguiding me had led the waye.
Myne eyne to greedy of theyre hyre,
Had made me loſe a better prey.
For when in ſighes I ſpent the day,
And could not cloake my grief with game;
The boyling ſmoke dyd ſtill bewray,
The preſent heat of ſecret flame:
And when ſalt teares do bayne my breaſt,
Where love his pleaſent traynes hath ſown,
Her beauty hath the fruytes oppreſt,
Ere that the buddes were ſpronge and blowne.
And when myne eyen dyd ſtill purſue,
The flying chaſe of theyre requeſt;
Theyre greedy looks did oft renew,
The hydden wounde within my breſte.
When every loke theſe cheekes might ſtayne,
From dedly pale to glowing red;
By outward ſignes appeared playne,
To her for helpe my harte was fled.
But all to late Love learneth me,
To paynt all kynd of Colours new;
To blynd theyre eyes that elſe ſhould ſee
My ſpeckled chekes with Cupides hew.
And now the covert breſt I clame,
That worſhipt Cupide ſecretely;
And nouriſhed hys ſacred flame,
From whence no blairing ſparks do flye.

Deſcripcion of the fickle Affections, Pangs, and Sleightes of Love.

SUCH wayward wayes hath Love, that moſt part in diſcord
Our willes do ſtand, whereby our hartes but ſeldom do accord:
Decyte is hys delighte, and to begyle and mocke
The ſimple hartes which he doth ſtrike with froward divers ſtroke.
He cauſeth th' one to rage with golden burning darte,
And doth alay with Leaden cold, again the others harte,
Whoſe gleames of burning fyre and eaſy ſparkes of flame,
In balance of unequal weyght he pondereth by ame
From eaſye fordwhere I myghte wade and paſs full well,
He me withdrawes and doth me drive, into a depe dark hell:
And me witholdes where I am calde and offred place,
And willes me that my mortal foe I do beſeke of Grace;
He lettes me to purſue a conqueſt welnere wonne
To follow where my paynes were loſt, ere that my ſute begunne.
So by this means I know how ſoon a hart may turne
From warre to peace, from truce to ſtryfe, and ſo agayne returne.
I know how to content myſelf in others luſt,
Of little ſtuffe unto my ſelf to weave a webbe of truſt:
And how to hyde my harmes with ſole dyſſembling chere,
Whan in my face the painted thoughtes would outwardly appeare.
I know how that the bloud forſakes the face for dred,
And how by ſhame it ſtaynes agayne the Chekes with flamyng red:
I know under the Grene, the Serpent how he lurkes:
The hammer of the reſtleſs forge I wote eke how it workes.
I know and con by roate the tale that I woulde tell
But ofte the wordes come fourth awrye of him that loveth well.
I know in heate and colde the Lover how he ſhakes,
In ſynging howe he doth complayne, in ſleeping how he wakes
To languiſh without ache, ſickeleſſe for to conſume,
A thouſand thynges for to deviſe, reſolvynge of his fume;
And though he lyſte to ſee his Ladyes Grace full ſore
Such pleaſures as delyght his Eye, do not his helthe reſtore.
I know to ſeke the tracte of my deſyred foe,
And fere to fynde that I do ſeek, but chiefly this I know,
That Lovers muſt transfourme into the thynge beloved,
And live (alas! who would believe?) with ſprite from Lyfe removed.
I knowe in harty ſighes and laughters of the ſpleene,
At once to chaunge my ſtate, my will, and eke my colour clene.
I know how to deceyve my ſelf wythe others helpe,
And how the Lyon chaſtiſed is, by beatynge of the whelpe.
In ſtandynge nere the fyre, I know how that I freaſe;
Farre of I burne, in bothe I waſte, and ſo my Lyfe I leeſe.
I know how Love doth rage upon a yeylding mynde,
How ſmalle a nete may take and maſe a harte of gentle kynde:
Or elſe with ſeldom ſwete to ſeaſon hepes of gall,
Revived with a glympſe of Grace old ſorrowes to let fall.
The hydden traynes I know, and ſecret ſnares of Love,
How ſoone a loke will prynte a thoughte that never may remove.
The ſlypper ſtate I know, the ſodein turnes from welthe
The doubtfull hope, the certaine wooe, and ſure deſpaired helthe.

A praiſe of his ladie.

GEVE place you ladies and be gone,
Boaſt not your ſelves at all,
For here at hande approcheth one,
Whoſe face will ſtayne you all.
The vertue of her lively lookes
Excels the precious ſtone,
I wiſhe to have none other bookes
To reade or look upon.
In eche of her two chriſtall eyes,
Smyleth a naked boy;
It would you all in heart ſuffiſe
To ſee that lampe of joye.
I think nature hath loſt the moulde,
Where ſhe her ſhape did take;
Or elſe I doubte if nature coulde
So fayre a creature make.
She may be well comparde
Unto the Phenix kinde,
Whoſe like was never ſeene nor heard,
That any man can fynde.
In lyfe ſhe is Diana chaſt
In trouth Penelopey,
In woord and eke in dede ſtedfaſt;
What will you more we ſay:
If all the world were ſought ſo farre,
Who could finde ſuche a wight,
Her beauty twinkleth lyke a ſtarre
Within the froſty night.

The Lover refuſed of his love, embraceth vertue.

MY youthfull years are paſt,
My joyfull dayes are gone,
My lyfe it may not laſt,
My grave and I am one.
My myrth and joyes are fled,
AndI a Man in wo,
Deſirous to be ded,
My miſchiefe to forgo.
I burne and am a colde,
I freeſe amyddes the fyer,
I ſee ſhe doth witholde
That is my honeſt deſyre.
I ſee my helpe at hande,
I ſee my lyfe alſo,
I ſee where ſhe doth ſtande
That is my deadly fo.
I ſee how ſhe doth ſee,
And yet ſhe wil be blynde,
I ſee in helpyng me,
She ſekes and wil not fynde.
I ſee how ſhe doth wrye,
When I begynne to mone,
I ſee when I come nye,
How fayne ſhe would be gone.
I ſee what wil ye more,
She will me gladly kill,
And you ſhall ſee therfore
That ſhe ſhall have her will.
I cannot live with ſtones,
It is too hard a foode,
I wil be dead at ones
To do my Lady good.

The death of ZOROAS, an Egiptian aſtronomer, in the firſt fight that Alexander had with the Perſians.

NOW clattring armes, now raging broyls of warre,
Gan paſſe the noys of dredfull trumpets clang,
Shrowded with ſhafts, the heaven with cloude of dartes,

Covered the ayre. Againſt full fatted bulles,
As forceth kyndled yre the lyons keene,
Whoſe greedy gutts the gnawing hunger prickes;
So Macedons againſt the Perſians fare,
Now corpſes hyde the purpurde ſoyle with blood:
Large ſlaughter on eche ſide, but Perſes more,
Moyſt fieldes bebled, theyr heartes and numbers bate
Fainted while they gave backe, and fall to flighte.
The litening Macedon by ſwordes, by gleaves,
By bandes and troupes of footemen, with his garde,
Speedes to Dary, but hym his mereſt kyn,
Oxate preſerves with horſemen on a plumpe
Before his carr, that none his charge ſhoud give.
Here grunts, here groans, eche where ſtrong youth is ſpent:
Shaking her bloudy hands, Bellone among
The Perſes ſoweth all kind of cruel death:
With throte yrent he roares, he lyeth along
His entrailes with a launce through gryded quyte,
Hym ſmytes the club, hym woundes farre ſtryking
bowe,
And hym the ſling, and him the ſhining ſword;
He dyeth, he is all dead, he pantes, he reſtes.
Right over ſtoode in ſnowwhite armour brave,
The Memphite Zoroas, a cunnyng clarke,
To whom the heaven lay open as his booke;
And in celeſtiall bodies he could tell
The moving meeting light, aſpect eclips,
And influence, and conſtellations all;
What earthly chaunces would betyde, what yere,
Of plenty ſtorde, what ſigne forewarned death,
How winter gendreth ſnow, what temperature
In the prime tyde doth ſeaſon well the ſoyle,
Why ſummer burnes, why autumne hath ripe grapes,
Whither the circle quadrate may become,
Whether our tunes heavens harmony can yelde
Of four begyns among themſelves how great
Proportion is; what ſway the erring lightes
Doth ſend in courſe gayne that fyrſt movyng heaven;
What grees one from another diſtance be,
What ſtarr doth lett the hurtfull fyre to rage,
Or him more mylde what oppoſition makes,
What fyre doth qualifye Mavorſes fyre,
What houſe eche one doth ſeeke, what plannett
raignes
Within this heaven ſphere, nor that ſmall thynges
I ſpeake, whole heaven he cloſeth in his breſt.
This ſage then in the ſtarres hath ſpyed the fates
Threatned him death without delay, and, ſith,
He ſaw he could not fatall order chaunge,
Foreward he preſt in battayle, that he might
Mete with the rulers of the Macedons,
Of his right hand deſirous to be ſlain,
The bouldeſt borne, and worthieſt in the feilde;
And as a wight, now wery of his lyfe,
And ſeking death, in fyrſt front of his rage,
Comes deſperately to Alexanders face,
At him with dartes one after other throwes,
With reckleſſe wordes and clamour him provokes,
And ſayth, Nectanaks baſtard ſhamefull ſtayne
Of mothers bed, why loſeſt thou thy ſtrokes,
Cowardes among, Turn thee to me, in caſe
Manhood there be ſo much left in thy heart,
Come fight with me, that on my helmet weare
Apollo's laurell both for learninges laude,
And eke for martiall praiſe, that in my ſhielde
The ſeven fold Sophie of Minerve contein,
A match more mete, Syr King, then any here.
The noble prince amoved takes ruth upon
The wilfull wight, and with ſoft words ayen,
O monſtrous man (quoth he) what ſo thou art,
I pray thee live, ne do not with my death
This lodge of Lore, the Muſes manſion marre;
That treaſure houſe this hand ſhall never ſpoyle,
My ſword ſhall never bruiſe that ſkilfull brayne,
Long gather'd heapes of ſcience ſone to ſpill;
O how fayre fruites may you to mortall men
From Wiſdoms garden give; how many may
By you the wiſer and the better prove:
What error, what mad moode, what frenzy thee
Perſwades to be downe, ſent to depe Averne,
Where no artes flouriſh, nor no knowledge vailes
For all theſe ſawes. When thus the Sovereign ſaid,
Alighted Zoroas with ſword unſheathed,
The careleſs king there ſmoate above the greve,
At th' opening of his quiſhes wounded him,
So that the blood down trailed on the ground:
The Macedon perceiving hurt, gan gnaſhe,
But yet his mynde he bent in any wiſe
Hym to forbeare, ſett ſpurrs upon his ſtede,
And turnde away, leſt anger of his ſmarte
Should cauſe revenger hand deale balefull blowes.
But of the Macedonian chieftaines knights,
One Meleager could not bear this ſight,
But ran upon the ſaid Egyptian rude,
And cutt him in both knees: he fell to ground,
Wherewith a whole rout came of ſouldiours ſterne,
And all in pieces hewed the ſely ſeg,
But happely the ſoule fled to the ſtarres,
Where, under him, he hath full ſight of all,
Whereat he gazed here with reaching looke.
The Perſians waild ſuch ſapience to forgoe,
The very ſone the Macedonians wiſht
He would have lived, king Alexander ſelfe
Demde him a man unmete to dye at all;
Who wonne like praiſe for conqueſt of his Yre,
As for ſtoute men in field that day ſubdued,
Who princes taught how to diſcerne a man,
That in his head ſo rare a jewel beares,
But over all thoſe ſame Camenes, thoſe ſame,
Divine Camenes, whoſe honour he procurde,
As tender parent doth his daughters weale,
Lamented, and for thankes, all that they can,
Do cheriſh hym deceaſt, and ſett him free,
From dark oblivion of devouring death.

BARCLAY wrote about 1550; his chief work is the SHIP OF FOOLES, of which the following extract will ſhew his ſtyle.

Of Mockers and Scorners, and falſe Accuſers.

O HEARTLESS fooles, haſte here to our doctrine,
Leaue off the wayes of your enormitie,
Enforce you to my preceptes to encline,
For here ſhall I ſhewe you good and veritie:
Encline, and ye finde ſhall great proſperitie,
Enſuing the doctrine of our fathers olde,
And godly lawes in valour worth great golde.
Who that will follow the graces manyfolde
Which are in vertue, ſhall find auauncement:
Wherfore ye fooles, that in your ſinne are bolde,
Enſue ye wiſdome, and leaue your lewde intent,
Wiſdome is the way of men moſt excellent:
Therfore haue done, and ſhortly ſpede your pace,
To quaynt your ſelf and company with grace.
Learne what is vertue, therin is great ſolace,
Learne what is truth, ſadnes and prudence,
Let grutche be gone, and grauitie purchaſe,
Forſake your folly and inconuenience,
Ceaſe to be fooles, and ay to ſue offence,
Followe ye vertue, chiefe roote of godlynes,
For it and wiſedome is ground of clenlynes.
Wiſedome and vertue two thinges are doubtles,
Whiche man endueth with honour ſpeciall,
But ſuche heartes as ſlepe in fooliſhnes
Knoweth nothing, and will nought know at all:
But in this little barge is principall
All fooliſh mockers I purpoſe to repreue,
Clawe he his backe that feeleth itche or greue.
Mockers and ſcorners that are harde of beleue,
With a rough combe here will I clawe and grate,
To proue if they will from their vice remeue,
And leaue their folly, which cauſeth great debate:
Suche caytiues ſpare neyther poore man nor eſtate,
And where their ſelfe are moſt worthy deriſion,
Other men to ſcorne is all their moſt condition.
Yet are mo fooles of this abuſion,
Whiche of wiſe men deſpiſeth the doctrine,
With mowes, mockes, ſcorne, and colluſion,
Rewarding rebukes for their good diſcipline:
Shewe to ſuche wiſdome, yet ſhall they not encline
Unto the ſame, but ſet nothing therby,
But mocke thy doctrine, ſtill or openly.
So in the worlde it appeareth commonly,
That who that will a foole rebuke or blame,
A mocke or mowe ſhall he haue by and by:
Thus in deriſion haue fooles their ſpeciall game.
Correct a wiſe man that woulde eſchue ill name,
And fayne woulde learne, and his lewde life amende,
And to thy wordes he gladly ſhall intende.
If by misfortune a rightwiſe man offende,
He gladly ſuffereth a iuſte correction,
And him that him teacheth taketh for his frende,
Him ſelfe putting mekely unto ſubiection,
Folowing his preceptes and good direction:
But yf that one a foole rebuke or blame,
He ſhall his teacher hate, ſlaunder and diſfame.
Howbeit his wordes oft turne to his own ſhame,
And his owne dartes retourne to him agayne,
And ſo is he ſore wounded with the ſame,
And in wo endeth, great miſery and payne.
It alſo proued full often is certayne,
That they that on mockers alway their mindes caſt,
Shall of all other be mocked at the laſt.
He that goeth right, ſtedfaſt, ſure, and faſt,
May him well mocke that goeth halting and lame,
And he that is white may well his ſcornes caſt.
Agaynſt a man of Inde: but no man ought to blame
Anothers vice, while he vſeth the ſame.
But who that of ſinne is cleane in deede and thought,
May him well ſcorne whoſe liuing is ſtarke nought.
The ſcornes of Naball full dere ſhould haue been bought,
If Abigayl his wife diſcrete and ſage,
Had not by kindnes right crafty meanes ſought,
The wrath of Dauid to temper and aſſwage.
Hath not two beares in their fury and rage
Two and fortie children rent and torne,
For they the prophete Helyſeus did ſcorne.
So might they curſe the time that they were borne,
For their mocking of this prophete diuine:
So many other of this ſort often mourne
For their lewde mockes, and fall into ruine.
Thus is it foly for wiſe men to incline,
To this lewde flocke of fooles, for ſee thou ſhall
Them moſte ſcorning that are moſt bad of all.

The Lenuoy of Barclay to the fooles.

Ye mocking fooles that in ſcorne ſet your ioy,
Proudly deſpiſing Gods punition:
Take ye example by Cham the ſonne of Noy,
Which laughed his father vnto deriſion,
Which him after curſed for his tranſgreſſion,
And made him ſeruaunt to all his lyne and ſtocke.
So ſhall ye caytifs at the concluſion,
Since ye are nought, and other ſcorne and mocke.

About the year 1553 wrote Dr. WILSON, a man celebrated for the politeneſs of his ſtyle, and the extent of his knowledge: what was the ſtate of our language in his time, the following may be of uſe to ſhow.

PRONUNCIATION is an apte orderinge both of the voyce, countenaunce, and all the whole bodye, accordynge to the worthines of ſuche woordes and matter as by ſpeache are declared. The vſe hereof is ſuche for anye one that liketh to haue prayſe for tellynge his tale in open aſſemblie, that hauing a good tongue, and a comelye countenaunce, he ſhal be thought to paſſe all other that haue the like vtteraunce: thoughe they haue much better learning. The tonge geueth a certayne grace to euerye matter, and beautifieth the cauſe in like maner, as a ſwete ſoundynge lute muche ſetteth forthe a meanne deuiſed ballade. Or as the ſounde of a good inſtrumente ſtyrreth the hearers, and moueth much delite, ſo a cleare ſoundyng voice comforteth muche our deintie eares with muche ſwete melodie, and cauſeth vs to allowe the matter rather for the reporters ſake, then the reporter for the matters ſake. Demoſthenes therſore, that famouſe oratour, beyng aſked what was the chiefeſt point in al oratorie, gaue the chiefe and onely praiſe to Pronunciation; being demaunded, what was the ſeconde, and the thirde, he ſtill made aunſwere, Pronunciation, and would make none other aunſwere, till they lefte aſkyng, declaryng hereby that arte without vtteraunce can dooe nothyng, vtteraunce without arte con dooe right muche. And no doubte that man is in outwarde appearaunce half a good clarke, that hath a cleane tongue, and a comely geſture of his body. Æſchines lykwyſe beyng banniſhed his countrie through Demoſthenes, when he had redde to the Rhodians his own oration, and Demoſthenes aunſwere thereunto, by force whereof he was banniſhed, and all they marueiled muche at the excellencie of the ſame: then (q d Æſchines) you would have marueiled muche more if you had heard hymſelfe ſpeak it. Thus beyng caſt in miſerie and banniſhed for euer, he could not but geue ſuche greate reporte of his deadly and mortal ennemy.

Thus have I deduced the ENGLISH language from the age of ALFRED to that of ELIZABETH; in ſome parts imperfectly for want of materials; but I hope, at leaſt, in ſuch a manner that its progreſs may be eaſily traced, and the gradations obſerved, by which it advanced from its firſt rudeneſs to its preſent elegance.

ENGLISH TONGUE.

GRAMMAR, which is the art of uſing words properly, comprizes four parts; Orthography, Etymology, Syntax, and Proſody.

In this diviſion and order of the parts of grammar I follow the common grammarians, without enquiring whether a fitter diſtribution might not be found. Experience has long ſhown this method to be ſo diſtinct as to obviate confuſion, and ſo comprehenſive as to prevent any inconvenient omiſſions. I likewiſe uſe the terms already received, and already underſtood, though perhaps others more proper might ſometimes be invented. Sylburgius, and other innovators, whoſe new terms have ſunk their learning into neglect, have left ſufficient warning againſt the trifling ambition of teaching arts in a new language.

ORTHOGRAPHY is the art of combining letters into ſyllables, and ſyllables into words. It therefore teaches previouſly the form and ſound of letters.

The letters of the Engliſh language are,

To theſe may be added certain combinations of letters univerſally uſed in printing; as ct, ſt, fl, ſl, ſb, ſk, ff, ſſ, ſi, ſſi, fi, ffi, ffl, and &, or and per ſe, and. ct, ſt, fl, ſl, ſb, ſk, ff, ſſ, ſi, ſſi, fi, ffi, ffl, &. 𝔠𝔱, ſ𝔱, 𝔣𝔩, ſ𝔩, 𝔣𝔣, ſſ, ſ𝔦, 𝔣𝔦, ſſ𝔦, 𝔣𝔣𝔦, ⁊.

Our letters are commonly reckoned twenty-four, becauſe anciently i and j, as well as u and v, were expreſſed by the ſame character; but as thoſe letters, which had always different powers, have now different forms, our alphabet may be properly ſaid to conſiſt of twenty-ſix letters.

None of the ſmall conſonants have a double form, except ſ, s; of which ſ is uſed in the beginning and middle, and s at the end.

Vowels are five, a, e, i, o, u.

Such is the number generally received; but for i it is the practice to write y in the end of words, as thy, holy; before i, as from die, dying; from beautify, beautifying; in the words ſays, days, eyes; and in words derived from the Greek, and written originally with υ, as ſyſtem, σύστημα; ſympathy, συμπάθεια.

For u we often write w after a vowel, to make a diphthong; as raw, grew, view, vow, flowing, lowneſs.

The ſounds of all the letters are various.

In treating on the letters, I ſhall not, like ſome other grammarians, enquire into the original of their form, as an antiquarian; nor into their formation and prolation by the organs of ſpeech, as a mechanick, anatomiſt, or phyſiologiſt; nor into the properties and gradation of ſounds, or the elegance or harſhneſs of particular combinations, as a writer of univerſal and tranſcendental grammar. I conſider the Engliſh alphabet only as it is Engliſh; and even in this narrow diſquiſition, I follow the example of former grammarians, perhaps with more reverence than judgment, becauſe by writing in Engliſh I ſuppoſe my reader already acquainted with the Engliſh language, and conſequently able to pronounce the letters, of which I teach the pronunciation; and becauſe of ſounds in general it may be obſerved, that words are unable to deſcribe them. An account therefore of the primitive and ſimple letters is uſeleſs almoſt alike to thoſe who know their ſound, and thoſe who know it not.

Of VOWELS.

A.

A has three ſounds, the ſlender, open, and broad.

A ſlender is found in moſt words, as face, mane; and in words ending in ation, as creation, ſalvation, generation.

The a ſlender is the proper Engliſh a, called very juſtly by Erpenius, in his Arabick Grammar, a Anglicum cum e miſtum, as having a middle ſound between the open a and the e. The French have a ſimilar ſound in the word pais, and in their e maſculine.

A open is the a of the Italian, or nearly reſembles it; as father, rather, congratulate, fancy, glaſs.

A broad reſembles the a of the German; as all, wall, call.

Many words pronounced with a broad were anciently written with au, as fault, mault; and we ſtill ſay fault, vault. This was probably the Saxon ſound, for it is yet retained in the northern dialects, and in the ruſtick pronunciation; as maun for man, baund for band.

The ſhort a approaches to the a open, as graſs.

The long a, if prolonged by e at the end of the word, is always ſlender, as graze, fame.

A forms a diphthong only with i or y, and u or w. Ai or ay, as in plain, wain, gay, clay, has only the ſound of the long and ſlender a, and differs not in the pronunciation from plane, wane.

Au or aw has the ſound of the German a, as raw, naughty.

Ae is ſometimes found in Latin words not completely naturaliſed or aſſimilated, but is no Engliſh diphthong; and is more properly expreſſed by ſingle e, as Ceſar, Eneas.

E.

E is the letter which occurs moſt frequently in the Engliſh language.

E is long, as in ſcēne; or ſhort, as in cĕllar, ſĕparate, cĕlebrate, mĕn, thĕn.

It is always ſhort before a double conſonant, or two conſonants, as in vĕx, pĕrplexity, rĕlent, mĕdlar, rĕptile, ſĕrpent, cĕllar, cĕſſation, blĕſſing, fĕll, fĕlling, dĕbt.

E is always mute at the end of a word, except in monoſyllables that have no other vowel, as the; or proper names, as Penelope, Phebe, Derbe; being uſed to modify the foregoing conſonant, as ſince, once, hedge, oblige; or to lengthen the preceding vowel, as băn, bāne; căn, cāne; pĭn, pīne; tŭn, tūne; rŏb, rōbe; pŏp, pōpe; fĭr, fīre; cŭr, cūre; tŭb, tūbe.

Almoſt all words which now terminate in conſonants ended anciently in e, as year, yeare; wildneſs, wildneſſe; which e probably had the force of the French e feminine, and conſtituted a ſyllable with its aſſociate conſonant; for, in old editions, words are ſometimes divided thus, clea-re, fel-le, knowled-ge. This e was perhaps for a time vocal or ſilent in poetry, as convenience required; but it has been long wholly mute. Camden in his Remains calls it the ſilent e.

It does not always lengthen the foregoing vowel, as glŏve, lĭve, gĭve.

It has ſometimes in the end of words a ſound obſcure, and ſcarcely perceptible, as open, ſhapen, ſhotten, thiſtle, participle, lucre.

This faintneſs of ſound is found when e ſeparates a mute from a liquid, as in rotten; or follows a mute and liquid, as in cattle.

E forms a diphthong with a, as near; with i, as deign, receive; and with u or w, as new, flew.

Ea ſounds like e long, as mean; or like ee, as dear, clear, near.

Ei is ſounded like e long, as ſeize, perceiving.

Eu ſounds as u long and ſoft.

E, a, u, are combined in beauty and its derivatives, but have only the ſound of u.

E may be ſaid to form a diphthong by reduplication, as agree, ſleeping.

Eo is found in yeomen, where it is ſounded as e ſhort; and in people, where it is pronounced like ee.

I.

I has a ſound, long, as fīne; and ſhort, as fĭn.

That is eminently obſervable in i, which may be likewiſe remarked in other letters, that the ſhort ſound is not the long ſound contracted, but a ſound wholly different.

The long ſound in monoſyllables is always marked by the e final, as thĭn, thīne.

I is often ſounded before r as a ſhort u; as flirt, firſt, ſhirt.

It forms a diphthong only with e, as field, ſhield, which is ſounded as the double ee; except friend, which is ſounded as frĕnd.

I is joined with eu in lieu, and ew in view; which triphthongs are ſounded as the open u.

O.

O is long, as bōne, ōbedient, corrōding; or ſhort, as blŏck, knŏck, ŏblique, lŏll.

Women is pronounced wimen.

The ſhort o has ſometimes the ſound of a cloſe u, as ſon, come.

O coaleſces into a diphthong with a, as moan, groan, approach; oa has the ſound of o long.

O is united to e in ſome words derived from Greek, as œconomy; but oe being not an Engliſh diphthong, they are better written as they are ſounded, with only e, economy.

With i, as oil, ſoil, moil, noiſome.

This coalition of letters ſeems to unite the ſounds of the two letters as far as two ſounds can be united without being deſtroyed, and therefore approaches more nearly than any combination in our tongue to the notion of a diphthong.

With o, as boot, hoot, cooler; oo has the ſound of the Italian u.

With u or w, as our, power, flower; but in ſome words has only the ſound of o long, as in ſoul, bowl, ſow, grow. Theſe different ſounds are uſed to diſtinguiſh different ſignifications; as bow, an inſtrument for ſhooting; bow, a depreſſion of the head: ſow, the ſhe of a boar; ſow, to ſcatter ſeed: bowl, an orbicular body; bowl, a wooden veſſel.

Ou is ſometimes pronounced like o ſoft, as court; ſometimes like o ſhort, as cough; ſometimes like u cloſe, as could; or u open, as rough, tough; which uſe only can teach.

Ou is frequently uſed in the laſt ſyllable of words which in Latin end in or, and are made Engliſh, as honour, labour, favour, from honor, labor, favor.

Some late innovators have ejected the u, without conſidering that the laſt ſyllable gives the ſound neither of or nor ur, but a ſound between them, if not compounded of both; beſides that they are probably derived to us from the French nouns in eur, as honneur, faveur.

U.

U is long in ūſe, confūſion; or ſhort, as ŭs, concŭſſion.

It coaleſces with a, e, i, o; but has rather in theſe combinations the force of the w, as quaff, queſt, quit, quite, languiſh; ſometimes in ui the i loſes its ſound, as in juice. It is ſometimes mute before a, e, i, y, as guard, gueſt, guiſe, buy.

U is followed by e in virtue, but the e has no ſound.

Ue is ſometimes mute at the end of a word, in imitation of the French, as prorogue, ſynagogue, plague, vague, harangue.

Y.

Y is a vowel, which, as Quintilian obſerves of one of the Roman letters, we might want without inconvenience, but that we have it. It ſupplies the place of i at the end of words, as thy; before an i, as dying; and is commonly retained in derivative words where it was part of a diphthong in the primitive; as deſtroy, deſtroyer; betray, betrayed, betrayer; pray, prayer; ſay, ſayer; day, days.

Y being the Saxon vowel ẏ, which was commonly uſed where i is now put, occurs very frequently in all old books.

GENERAL RULES.

A vowel in the beginning or middle ſyllable, before two conſonants, is commonly ſhort, as ŏppŏrtunity.

In monoſyllables a ſingle vowel before a ſingle conſonant is ſhort, as ſtăg, frŏg.

Many is pronounced as if it were wrote manny.

OF CONSONANTS.

B.

B has one unvaried ſound, ſuch as it obtains in other languages.

It is mute in debt, debtor, ſubtle, doubt, lamb, limb, dumb, thumb, climb, comb, womb.

It is uſed before l and r, as black, brown.

C.

C has before e and i the ſound of ſ; as ſincerely, centrick, century, circular, ciſtern, city, ſiccity: before a, o, and u, it ſounds like k, as calm, concavity, copper, incorporate, curioſity, concupiſcence.

C might be omitted in the language without loſs, ſince one of its ſounds might be ſupplied by ſ, and the other by k, but that it preſerves to the eye the etymology of words, as face from facies, captive from captivus.

Ch has a ſound which is analyſed into tſh, as church, chin, crutch. It is the ſame ſound which the Italians give to the c ſimple before i and e, as città, cerro.

Ch is ſounded like k in words derived from the Greek, as chymiſt, ſcheme, choler. Arch is commonly ſounded ark before a vowel, as archangel; and with the Engliſh ſound of ch before a conſonant, as archbiſhop.

Ch, in ſome French words not yet aſſimilated, ſounds like ſh, as machine, chaiſe.

C, having no determinate ſound, according to Engliſh orthography, never ends a word; therefore we write ſtick, block, which were originally ſticke, blocke, in ſuch words. C is now mute.

It is uſed before l and r, as clock, croſs.

D.

D is uniform in its ſound, as death, diligent.

It is uſed before r, as draw, droſs; and w, as dwell.

F.

F, though having a name beginning with a vowel, it is numbered by the grammarians among the ſemi-vowels; yet has this quality of a mute, that it is commodiouſly ſounded before a liquid, as flaſk, fly, freckle. It has an unvariable ſound, except that of is ſometimes ſpoken nearly as ov.

G.

G has two ſounds, one hard, as in gay, go, gun; the other ſoft, as in gem, giant.

At the end of a word it is always hard, ring, ſnug, ſong, frog.

Before e and i the ſound is uncertain.

G before e is ſoft, as gem, generation, except in gear, geld, geeſe, get, gewgaw, and derivatives from words ending in g, as ſinging, ſtronger, and generally before er at the end of words, as finger.

G is mute before n, as gnaſh, ſign, foreign.

G before i is hard, as give, except in giant, gigantick, gibbet, gibe, giblets, Giles, gill, gilliflower, gin, ginger, gingle, to which may be added Egypt and gypſey.

Gh, in the beginning of a word, has the ſound of the hard g, as ghoſtly; in the middle, and ſometimes at the end, it is quite ſilent, as though, right, ſought, ſpoken tho', rite, ſoute.

It has often at the end the ſound of f, as laugh, whence laughter retains the ſame ſound in the middle; cough, trough, ſough, tough, enough, ſlough.

It is not to be doubted, but that in the original pronunciation gh had the force of a conſonant, deeply guttural, which is ſtill continued among the Scotch.

G is uſed before h, l, and r.

H.

H is a note of aſpiration, and ſhows that the following vowel muſt be pronounced with a ſtrong emiſſion of breath, as hat, horſe.

It ſeldom begins any but the firſt ſyllable, in which it is always ſounded with a full breath, except in heir, herb, holſter, honour, humble, honeſt, humour, and their derivatives.

It ſometimes begins middle or final ſyllables in words compounded, as blockhead; or derived from the Latin, as comprehended.

J conſonant

J.

J conſonant ſounds uniformly like the ſoft g, and is therefore a letter uſeleſs, except in etymology, as ejaculation, jeſter, jocund, juice.

K.

K has the ſound of hard c, and is uſed before e and i, where, according to Engliſh analogy, c would be ſoft, as kept, king, ſkirt, ſkeptick, for ſo it ſhould be written, not ſceptick, becauſe ſc is ſounded like ſ, as in ſcene.

It is uſed before n, as knell, knot, but totally loſes its ſound in modern pronunciation.

K is never doubled; but c is uſed before it to ſhorten the vowel by a double conſonant, as cŏckle, pĭckle.

L.

L has in Engliſh the ſame liquid ſound as in other languages.

The cuſtom is to double the l at the end of monoſyllables, as kill, will, full. Theſe words were originally written kille, wille, fulle; and when the e firſt grew ſilent, and was afterwards omitted, the ll was retained, to give force, according to the analogy of our language, to the foregoing vowel.

L is ſometimes mute, as in calf, half, halves, calves, could, would, ſhould, pſalm, talk, ſalmon, falcon.

The Saxons, who delighted in guttural ſounds, ſometimes aſpirated the l at the beginning of words, as hlaꝼ a loaf, or bread; hlaꝼoꝛd a lord; but this pronunciation is now diſuſed.

Le at the end of words is pronounced like a weak el, in which the e is almoſt mute, as table, ſhuttle.

M.

M has always the ſame ſound, as murmur, monumental.

N.

N has always the ſame ſound, as noble, manners.

N is ſometimes mute after m, as damn, condemn, hymn.

P.

P has always the ſame ſound, which the Welſh and Germans confound with B.

P is ſometimes mute, as in pſalm, and between m and t, as tempt.

Ph is uſed for f in words derived from the Greek, as philoſopher, philanthropy, Philip.

Q.

Q, as in other languages, is always followed by u, and has a ſound which our Saxon anceſtors well expreſſed by cƿ, cw, as quadrant, queen, equeſtrian, quilt, enquiry, quire, quotidian. Qu is never followed by u.

Qu is ſometimes ſounded, in words derived from the French, like k, as conquer, liquor, riſque, chequer.

R.

R has the ſame rough ſnarling ſound as in other tongues.

The Saxons uſed often to put h before it, as before l at the beginning of words.

Rh is uſed in words derived from the Greek as myrrh, myrrhine, catarrhous, rheum, rheumatick, rhyme.

Re, at the end of ſome words derived from the Latin or French, is pronounced like a weak er, as theatre, ſepulchre.

S.

S has a hiſſing ſound, as ſibilation, ſiſter.

A ſingle s ſeldom ends any word, except in the third perſon of verbs, as loves, grows; and the plurals of nouns, as trees, buſhes, diſtreſſes; the pronouns this, his, ours, yours, us; the adverb thus; and words derived from Latin, as rebus, ſurplus; the cloſe being always either in ſe, as houſe, horſe, or in ſs, as graſs, dreſs, bliſs, leſs, anciently graſſe, dreſſe.

S ſingle, at the end of words, has a groſſer ſound, like that of z, as trees, eyes, except this, thus, us, rebus, ſurplus.

It ſounds like z before ion, if a vowel goes before, as intruſion; and like ſ, if it follows a conſonant, as converſion.

It ſounds like z before e mute, as refuſe, and before y final, as roſy; and in thoſe words boſom, deſire, wiſdom, priſon, priſoner, préſent, preſent, damſel, caſement.

It is the peculiar quality of ſ, that it may be ſounded before all conſonants, except x and z, in which ſ is compriſed, x being only ks, and z a hard or groſs ſ. This ſ is therefore termed by grammarians ſuæ poteſtatis litera; the reaſon of which the learned Dr. Clarke erroneouſly ſuppoſed to be, that in ſome words it might be doubled at pleaſure. Thus we find in ſeveral languages:

σβέννυμι, ſcatter, ſdegno, ſdrucciolo, ſfavellare, σφίγξ, ſgombrare, ſgranare, ſhake, ſlumber, ſmell, ſnipe, ſpace, ſplendour, ſpring, ſqueeze, ſhrew, ſtep, ſtrength, ſtramen, ſtripe, ſventura, ſwell

S is mute in iſle, iſland, demeſne, viſcount.

T.

T has its cuſtomary ſound, as take, temptation.

Ti before a vowel has the ſound of ſi, as ſalvation, except an ſ goes before, as queſtion; excepting likewiſe derivatives from words ending in ty, as mighty, mightier.

Th has two ſounds; the one ſoft, as thus, whether; the other hard, as thing, think. The ſound is ſoft in theſe words, then, thence, and there, with their derivatives and compounds; and in that, theſe, thou, thee, thy, thine, their, they, this, thoſe, them, though, thus, and in all words between two vowels, as father, whether; and between r and a vowel, as burthen.

In other words it is hard, as thick, thunder, faith, faithful. Where it is ſoftened at the end of a word, an e ſilent muſt be added, as breath, breathe; cloth, clothe.

V.

V has a ſound of near affinity to that of f, vain, vanity.

From f, in the Iſlandick alphabet, v is only diſtinguiſhed by a diacritical point.

W.

Of w, which in diphthongs is often an undoubted vowel, ſome grammarians have doubted whether it ever be a conſonant; and not rather, as it is called, a double u or ou, as water may be reſolved into ouater; but letters of the ſame ſound are always reckoned conſonants in other alphabets: and it may be obſerved, that w follows a vowel without any hiatus or difficulty of utterance, as froſty winter.

Wh has a ſound accounted peculiar to the Engliſh, which the Saxons better expreſſed by hƿ, hw, as what, whence, whiting; in whore only, and ſometimes in wholeſome, wh is ſounded like a ſimple h.

X.

X begins no Engliſh word; it has the ſound of ks, as axle, extraneous.

Y.

Y, when it follows a conſonant, is a vowel; when it precedes either a vowel or diphthong, is a conſonant, ye, young. It is thought by ſome to be in all caſes a vowel. But it may be obſerved of y as of w, that it follows a vowel without any hiatus, as roſy, youth.

The chief argument by which w and y appear to be always vowels is, that the ſounds which they are ſuppoſed to have as conſonants, cannot be uttered after a vowel, like that of all other conſonants: thus we ſay, tu, ut; do, odd; but in wed, dew, the two ſounds of w have no reſemblance to each other.

Z.

Z begins no word originally Engliſh; it has the ſound, as its name izzard, or ſ hard expreſſes, of an ſ uttered with cloſer compreſſion of the palate by the tongue, as freeze, froze.

In orthography I have ſuppoſed orthoepy, or juſt utterance of words, to be included; orthography being only the art of expreſſing certain ſounds by proper characters. I have therefore obſerved in what words any of the letters are mute.

Moſt of the writers of Engliſh grammar have given long tables of words pronounced otherwiſe than they are written, and ſeem not ſufficiently to have conſidered, that of Engliſh, as of all living tongues, there is a double pronunciation, one curſory and colloquial, the other regular and ſolemn. The curſory pronunciation is always vague and uncertain, being made different in different mouths by negligence, unſkilfulneſs, or affectation. The ſolemn pronunciation, though by no means immutable and permanent, is yet always leſs remote from the orthography, and leſs liable to capricious innovation. They have however, generally formed their tables according to the curſory ſpeech of thoſe with whom they happen to converſe; and concluding that the whole nation combines to vitiate language in one manner, have often eſtabliſhed the jargon of the loweſt of the people as the model of ſpeech.

For pronunciation the beſt general rule is, to conſider thoſe of the moſt elegant ſpeakers who deviate leaſt from the written words.

There have been many ſchemes offered for the emendation and ſettlement of our orthography, which, like that of other nations, being formed by chance, or according to the fancy of the earlieſt writers in rude ages, was at firſt very various and uncertain, and is yet ſufficiently irregular. Of theſe reformers ſome have endeavoured to accommodate orthography better to the pronunciation, without conſidering that this is to meaſure by a ſhadow, to take that for a model or ſtandard which is changing while they apply it. Others, leſs abſurdly indeed, but with equal unlikelihood of ſucceſs, have endeavoured to proportion the number of letters to that of ſounds, that every ſound may have its own character, and every character a ſingle ſound. Such would be the orthography of a new language to be formed by a ſynod of grammarians upon principles of ſcience. But who can hope to prevail on nations to change their practice, and make all their old books uſeleſs? or what advantage would a new orthography procure equivalent to the confuſion and perplexity of ſuch an alteration?

Some of theſe ſchemes I ſhall however exhibit, which may be uſed according to the diverſities of genius, as a guide to reformers, or terrour to innovators.

One of the firſt who propoſed a ſcheme of regular orthography, was Sir Thomas Smith, ſecretary of ſtate to Queen Elizabeth, a man of real learning, and much practiſed in grammatical diſquiſitions. Had he written the following lines according to his ſcheme, they would have appeared thus;

At length Eraſmus, that great injur'd name,
The glory of the prieſthood, and the ſhame,
Stemm'd the wild torrent of a barb'rous age,
And drove thoſe holy Vandals off the ſtage.

At lengð Eraſmus, ðat grēt ïngurd nâm,
Δe gloiï of ðe prēſthüd, and ðe zâm,
Stemmd ðe *wi*ld torrent of a barb'rous âȝ,
And dröv ðös höli Vandals ïff ðe ſtâȝ.

After him another mode of writing was offered by Dr. Gill, the celebrated maſter of St. Paul's ſchool in London; which I cannot repreſent exactly for want of types, but will approach as nearly as I can by means of characters now in uſe, ſo as to make it underſtood, exhibiting two ſtanzas of Spenſer in the reformed orthography.

Spenſer, book iii. canto 5.

Unthankful wretch, ſaid he, is this the meed,
With which her ſovereign mercy thou doſt quite?
Thy life ſhe ſaved by her gracious deed;
But thou doſt ween with villanous deſpight,
To blot her honour, and her heav'nly light.
Die, rather die, than ſo diſloyally
Deem of her high deſert, or ſeem ſo light.
Fair death it is to ſhun more ſhame; then die.
Die, rather die, than ever love diſloyally.
But if to love diſloyalty it be,
Shall I then hate her, that from deathes door
Me brought? ah! far be ſuch reproach from me.
What can I leſs do, than her love therefore,
Sith I her due reward cannot reſtore?
Die, rather die, and dying do her ſerve,
Dying her ſerve, and living her adore.
Thy life ſhe gave, thy life ſhe doth deſerve;
Die, rather die, than ever from her ſervice ſwerve.

Dr. Gill was followed by Charles Butler, a man who did not want an underſtanding which might have qualified him for better employment. He ſeems to have been more ſanguine than his predeceſſors, for he printed his book according to his own ſcheme; which the following ſpecimen will make eaſily underſtood.

But whenſoever you have occaſion to trouble their patienee, or to come among them being troubled, it is better to ſtand upon your guard, than to truſt to their gentleneſs For the ſafeguard of your face, which they have moſt mind unto, provide a purſehood, made of coarſe boultering, to be drawn and knit about your collar, which for more ſafety is to be lined againſt the eminent parts with woollen cloth. Firſt cut a piece about an inch and a half broad, and half a yard long, to reach round by the temples and forehead, from one ear to the other; which being ſowed in his place, join unto it two ſhort pieces of the ſame breadth under the eyes, for the balls of the cheeks, and then ſet another piece about the breadth of a ſhilling againſt the top of the noſe. At other times, when they are not angered, a little piece half a quarter broad, to cover the eyes and parts about them, may ſerve, though it be in the heat of the day.

Bet ƿenſoëver you hav' occaſion to trubble ðeir patienc' or to c*oo*m among ðem b*ee*ing trubled, it is better to ſtand upon your gard, ðan to truſt to ðeir gentlenes. For ðe ſaf' gard of your fac', ƿiɔ ðey hav' moſt mind' unto, provid' a purſeh*oo*d, mad' of c*oo*rſe boultering, to b*ee* drawn and knit about your collar, ƿiɔ for mor' ſaf'ty is to b*ee* lined againſt ð' eminent parts wiꞇ w*oo*llen cloꞇ. Firſt cut a p*ee*c' about an inɔ and a half broad, and half a yard long, to reaɔ round by ðe temples and for'head, from one ear to ðe oðer; ƿiɔ b*ee*ing ſowed in his plac', join unto it two ʃort p*ee*ces of the ſam breadꞇ under ðe eys, for the balls of ðe ch*ee*ks, and then ſet an oðer p*ee*c' about ðe breadꞇ of a ʃilling againſt the top o ðe noſe. At oðer tim's, ƿen ðey ar' not angered, a little piec' half a quarter broad, to cover ðe eys and parts about them, may ſerve, ðowȝ it be in the heat of ðe day. Butler on the Nature and Properties of Bees, 1634.

In the time of Charles I. there was a very prevalent inclination to change the orthography; as appears, among other books, in ſuch editions of the works of Milton as were publiſhed by himſelf. Of theſe reformers, every man had his own ſcheme; but they agreed in one general deſign of accommodating the letters to the pronunciation, by ejecting ſuch as they thought ſuperfluous. Some of them would have written theſe lines thus:

All the erth
Shall then be paradis, far happier place
Than this of Eden, and far happier dais.

Biſhop Wilkins afterwards, in his great work of the philoſophical language, propoſed, without expecting to be followed, a regular orthography; by which the Lord's prayer is to be written thus:

Yɤr Fádher hɤitſh art in héven h*a*lloed bi dhyi nám, dhyi cingdým cým, dhy ɤill bi dýn in erth as it is in héven, &c.

We have ſince had no general reformers; but ſome ingenious men have endeavoured to deſerve well of their country, by writing honor and labor for honour and labour, red for read in the preter-tenſe, ſais for ſays, repete for repeat, explane for explain, or declame for declaim. Of theſe it may be ſaid, that as they have done no good, they have done little harm; both becauſe they have innovated little, and becauſe few have followed them.

The Engliſh language has properly no dialects; the ſtyle of writers has no profeſſed diverſity in the uſe of words, or of their flexions, and terminations, nor differs but by different degrees of ſkill or care. The oral diction is uniform in no ſpacious country, but has leſs variation in England than in moſt other nations of equal extent. The language of the northern counties retains many words now out of uſe, but which are commonly of the genuine Teutonick race, and is uttered with a pronunciation which now ſeems harſh and rough, but was probably uſed by our anceſtors. The northern ſpeech is therefore not barbarous but obſolete. The ſpeech in the weſtern provinces ſeems to differ from the general diction rather by a depraved pronunciation, than by any real difference which letters would expreſs.

ETYMOLOGY.

ETYMOLOGY teaches the deduction of one word from another, and the various modifications by which the ſenſe of the ſame word is diverſified; as horſe, horſes; I love, I loved.

Of the ARTICLE.

The Engliſh have two articles, an or a, and the.

AN, A.

A has an indefinite ſignification, and means one, with ſome reference to more; as This is a good book, that is, one among the books that are good. He was killed by a ſword, that is, ſome ſword. This is a better book for a man than a boy, that is, for one of thoſe that are men than one of thoſe that are boys. An army might enter without reſiſtance, that is, any army.

In the ſenſes in which we uſe a or an in the ſingular, we ſpeak in the plural without an article; as, theſe are good books.

I have made an the original article, becauſe it is only the Saxon an, or æn, one, applied to a new uſe, as the German ein, and the French un: the n being cut off before a conſonant in the ſpeed of utterance.

Grammarians of the laſt age direct that an ſhould be uſed before h; whence it appears that the Engliſh anciently aſpirated leſs. An is ſtill uſed before the ſilent h, as, an herb, an honeſt man: but otherwiſe a; as,

A horſe, a horſe, my kingdom for a horſe. Shakeſpeare.

An or a can only be joined with a ſingular, the correſpondent plural is the noun without an article, as I want a pen; I want pens: or with the pronominal adjective ſome, as I want ſome pens.

THE has a particular and definite ſignification.

The fruit
Of that forbidden tree, whoſe mortal taſte
Brought death into the world. Milton.

That is, that particular fruit, and this world in which we live. So, He giveth fodder for the cattle, and green herbs for the uſe of man; that is, for thoſe beings that are cattle, and his uſe that is man.

The is uſed in both numbers.

I am as free as Nature firſt made man,
Ere the baſe laws of ſervitude began,
When wild in woods the noble ſavage ran. Dryden.

Many words are uſed without articles; as,

1. Proper names as, John, Alexander, Longinus, Ariſtarchus, Jeruſalem, Athens, Rome, London. GOD is uſed as a proper name.
2. Abſtract names, as blackneſs, witchcraft, virtue, vice, beauty, uglineſs, love, hatred, anger, good-nature, kindneſs.
3. Words in which nothing but the mere being of any thing is implied: This is not beer, but water: this is not braſs, but ſteel.

Of NOUNS SUBSTANTIVES.

The relations of Engliſh nouns to words going before or following, are not expreſſed by caſes, or changes of termination, but as in moſt of the other European languages by prepoſitions, unleſs we may be ſaid to have a genitive caſe.

		Singular.
Nom.	Magiſter,	a Maſter, the Maſter.
Gen.	Magiſtri,	of a Maſter, of the Maſter, or Maſters, the Maſters.
Dat.	Magiſtro,	to a Maſter, to the Maſter.
Acc.	Magiſtrum,	a Maſter, the Maſter.
Voc.	Magiſter,	Maſter, O Maſter.
Abl.	Magiſtro,	from a Maſter, from the Maſter.
		Plural.
Nom.	Magiſtri,	Maſters, the Maſters.
Gen.	Magiſtrorum,	of Maſters, of the Maſters.
Dat.	Magiſtris,	to Maſters, to the Maſters.
Acc.	Magiſtros,	Maſters, the Maſters.
Voc.	Magiſtri,	Maſters, O Maſters.
Abl.	Magiſtris,	from Maſters, from the Maſters.

Our nouns are therefore only declined thus:

Maſter,	Gen. Maſters,	Plur. Maſters,
Scholar,	Gen. Scholars,	Plur. Scholars.

Theſe genitives are always written with a mark of eliſion, maſter's, ſcholar's, according to an opinion long received, that the 's is a contraction of his, as the ſoldier's valour, for the ſoldier his valour: but this cannot be the true original; becauſe 's is put to female nouns, Woman's beauty; the Virgin's delicacy; Haughty Juno's unrelenting hate: and collective nouns, as Women's paſſions, the rabble's inſolence, the multitude's folly; in all theſe caſes it is apparent that his cannot be underſtood. We ſay likewiſe, the foundation's ſtrength, the diamond's luſtre, the winter's ſeverity; but in theſe caſes his may be underſtood, he and his having formerly been applied to neuters in the place now ſupplied by it and its.

The learned and ſagacious Wallis, to whom every Engliſh grammarian owes a tribute of reverence, calls this modification of the noun an adjective poſſeſſive; I think with no more propriety than he might have applied the ſame to the genitive in equitum decus, Trojæ oris, or any other Latin genitive. Dr. Lowth, on the other part, ſuppoſes the poſſeſſive pronouns mine and thine to be genitive caſes.

This termination of the noun ſeems to conſtitute a real genitive indicating poſſeſſion. It is derived to us from thoſe who declined ꞅmıð a ſmith; Gen. ꞅmıðeꞅ of a ſmith; Plur. ꞅmıðeꞅ, or ꞅmıð-ꞅ, ſmiths; and ſo in two other of their ſeven declenſions.

It is a further confirmation of this opinion, that in the old poets both the genitive and plural were longer by a ſyllable than the original word: knitis, for knight's, in Chaucer; leavis, for leaves, in Spenſer.

When a word ends in s, the genitive may be the ſame with the nominative, as Venus Temple.

The plural is formed by adding s, as table, tables; fly, flies; ſiſter, ſiſters; wood, woods; or es where s could not otherwiſe be ſounded, as after ch, s, ſh, x, z; after c ſounded like s, and g like j; the mute e is vocal before s, as lance, lances; outrage, outrages.

The formation of the plural and genitive ſingular is the ſame.

A few words yet make the plural in n, as men, women, oxen, ſwine, and more anciently eyen and ſhoon. This formation is that which generally prevails in the Teutonick dialects.

Words that end in f commonly form their plural by ves, as loaf, loaves; calf, calves.

Except a few, muff, muffs; chief, chiefs. So hoof, roof, proof, relief, miſchief, puff, cuff, dwarf, handkerchief, grief.

Irregular plurals are teeth from tooth, lice from louſe, mice from mouſe, geeſe from gooſe, feet from foot, dice from die, pence from penny, brethren from brother, children from child.

Plurals ending in s have for the moſt part no genitive; but we ſay, Womens excellencies, and Weigh the mens wits againſt the ladies hairs. Pope.

Dr. Wallis thinks the Lords' houſe may be ſaid for the houſe of Lords; but ſuch phraſes are not now in uſe; and ſurely an Engliſh ear rebels againſt them. They would commonly produce a troubleſome ambiguity, as the Lord's houſe may be the houſe of Lords, or the houſe of a Lord. Beſides that the mark of eliſion is improper, for in the Lords' houſe nothing is cut off.

Some Engliſh ſubſtantives, like thoſe of many other languages, change their termination as they expreſs different ſexes, as prince, princeſs; actor, actreſs; lion, lioneſs; hero, heroine. To theſe mentioned by Dr. Lowth may be added arbitreſs, poeteſs, chauntreſs, ducheſs, tigreſs, governeſs, tutreſs, peereſs, authoreſs, traytreſs, and perhaps others. Of theſe variable terminations we have only a ſufficient number to make us feel our want; for when we ſay of a woman that ſhe is a philoſopher, an aſtronomer, a builder, a weaver, a dancer, we perceive an impropriety in the termination which we cannot avoid; but we can ſay that ſhe is an architect, a botaniſt, a ſtudent, becauſe theſe terminations have not annexed to them the notion of ſex. In words which the neceſſities of life are often requiring, the ſex is diſtinguiſhed not by different terminations, but by different names, as a bull, a cow; a horſe, a mare; equus, equa; a cock, a hen; and ſometimes by pronouns prefixed, as a he-goat, a ſhe-goat.

Of ADJECTIVES.

Adjectives in the Engliſh language are wholly indeclinable; having neither caſe, gender, nor number, and being added to ſubſtantives in all relations without any change; as a good woman; good women, of a good woman; a good man, good men, of good men.

The Compariſon of Adjectives.

The comparative degree of adjectives is formed by adding er, the ſuperlative by adding eſt, to the poſitive; as fair, fair*er*, fair*eſt*; lovely, loveli*er*, loveli*eſt*; ſweet, ſweet*er*, ſweet*eſt*; low, low*er*, low*eſt*; high, high*er*, high*eſt*.

Some words are irregularly compared; as good, better, beſt; bad, worſe, worſt; little, leſs, leaſt; near, nearer, next; much, more, moſt; many (or moe), more (for moer), moſt (for moeſt); late, later, lateſt or laſt.

Some comparatives form a ſuperlative by adding moſt, as nether, nethermoſt; outer, outermoſt; under, undermoſt; up, upper, uppermoſt; fore, former, foremoſt.

Moſt is ſometimes added to a ſubſtantive, as topmoſt, ſouthmoſt.

Many adjectives do not admit of compariſon by terminations, and are only compared by more and moſt, as benevolent, more benevolent, moſt benevolent.

All adjectives may be compared by more and moſt, even when they have comparatives and ſuperlatives regularly formed; as fair; fairer, or more fair; faireſt, or moſt fair.

In adjectives that admit a regular compariſon, the comparative more is oftener uſed than the ſuperlative moſt, as more fair is oftener written for fairer, than moſt fair for faireſt.

The compariſon of adjectives is very uncertain; and being much regulated by commodiouſneſs of utterance, or agreeableneſs of ſound, is not eaſily reduced to rules.

Monoſyllables are commonly compared.

Polyſyllables, or words of more than two ſyllables, are ſeldom compared otherwiſe than by more and moſt, as deplorable, more deplorable, moſt deplorable.

Diſſyllables are ſeldom compared if they terminate in ſome, as fulſome, toilſome; in ful, as careful, ſpleenful, dreadful; in ing, as trifling, charming; in ous, as porous; in leſs, as careleſs, harmleſs; in ed, as wretched; in id, as candid; in al, as mortal; in ent, as recent, fervent; in ain, as certain; in ive, as miſſive; in dy, as woody; in fy, as puffy; in ky, as rocky, except lucky; in my, as roomy; in ny, as ſkinny; in py, as ropy, except happy; in ry, as hoary.

Some comparatives and ſuperlatives are yet found in good writers, formed without regard to the foregoing rules: but in a language ſubjected ſo little and ſo lately to grammar, ſuch anomalies muſt frequently occur.

So ſhady is compared by Milton.

> She in ſhadieſt covert hid,
> Tun'd her nocturnal note. Paradiſe Loſt.

And virtuous.

> What ſhe wills to ſay or do,
> Seems wiſeſt, virtuouſeſt, diſcreeteſt, beſt. Paradiſe Loſt.

So trifling, by Ray, who is indeed of no great authority.

> It is not ſo decorous, in reſpect of God, that he ſhould immediately do all the meaneſt and triflingeſt things himſelf, without making uſe of any inferior or ſubordinate miniſter. Ray on the Creation.

Famous, by Milton.

> I ſhall be nam'd among the famouſeſt
> Of women, ſung at ſolemn feſtivals. Milton's Agoniſtes.

Inventive, by Aſcham.

> Thoſe have the inventiveſt heads for all purpoſes, and roundeſt tongues in all matters. Aſcham's Schoolmaſter.

Mortal, by Bacon.

> The mortaleſt poiſons practiſed by the Weſt Indians, have ſome mixture of the blood, fat, or fleſh of man. Bacon.

Natural, by Wotton.

> I will now deliver a few of the propereſt and naturalleſt conſiderations that belong to this piece. Wotton's Architecture.

Wretched, by Jonſon.

> The wretcheder are the contemners of all helps; ſuch as preſuming on their own naturals, deride diligence, and mock at terms when they underſtand not things. Ben Jonſon.

Powerful, by Milton.

> We have ſuſtain'd one day in doubtful fight,
> What Heav'n's great King hath pow'rfulleſt to ſend
> Againſt us from about his throne. Paradiſe Loſt.

The termination in iſh may be accounted in ſome ſort a degree of compariſon, by which the ſignification is diminiſhed below the poſitive, as black, blackiſh, or tending to blackneſs; ſalt, ſaltiſh, or having a little taſte of ſalt; they therefore admit no compariſon. This termination is ſeldom added but to words expreſſing ſenſible qualities, nor often to words of above one ſyllable, and is ſcarcely uſed in the ſolemn or ſublime ſtyle.

Of PRONOUNS.

Pronouns, in the Engliſh language, are, I, thou, he, with their plurals, we, ye, they; it, who, which, what, whether, whoſoever, whatſoever, my, mine, our, ours, thy, thine, your, yours, his, her, hers, their, theirs, this, that, other, another, the ſame, ſome.

The pronouns perſonal are irregularly inflected.

	Singular.	Plural.
Nom.	I	We
Accuſ. and other oblique caſes.	Me	Us
Nom.	Thou	Ye
Oblique.	Thee	You

You is commonly uſed in modern writers for ye, particularly in the language of ceremony, where the ſecond perſon plural is uſed for the ſecond perſon ſingular, You are my friend.

	Singular.	Plural.
Nom.	He	They	Applied to maſculines.
Oblique.	Him	Them
Nom.	She	They	Applied to feminines.
Oblique.	Her	Them
Nom.	It	They	Applied to neuters or things.
Oblique.	Its	Them

For it the practice of ancient writers was to uſe he, and for its, his.

The poſſeſſive pronouns, like other adjectives, are without caſes or change of termination.

The poſſeſſive of the firſt perſon is my, mine, our, ours; of the ſecond, thy, thine, your, yours; of the third, from he, his; from ſhe, her, and hers; and in the plural their, theirs, for both ſexes.

Ours, yours, hers, theirs, are uſed when the ſubſtantive preceding is ſeparated by a verb, as Theſe are our books. Theſe books are ours. Your children excel ours in ſtature, but ours ſurpaſs yours in learning.

Ours, yours, hers, theirs, notwithſtanding their ſeeming plural termination, are applied equally to ſingular and plural ſubſtantives, as, This book is ours. Theſe books are ours.

Mine and thine were formerly uſed before a vowel, as mine amiable lady; which, though now diſuſed in proſe, might be ſtill properly continued in poetry: they are uſed as ours and yours, and are referred to a ſubſtantive preceding, as thy houſe is larger than mine, but my garden is more ſpacious than thine.

Their and theirs are the poſſeſſives likewiſe of they, when they is the plural of it, and are therefore applied to things.

Pronouns relative are, who, which, what, whether, whoſoever, whatſoever.

Sing. and Plur.
Nom.	Who
Gen.	Whoſe
Other oblique caſes.	Whom

Sing. and Plur.
Nom.	Which
Gen.	Of which, or whoſe
Other oblique caſes.	Which.

Who is now uſed in relation to perſons, and which in relation to things; but they were anciently confounded. At leaſt it was common to ſay, the man which, though I remember no example of the thing who.

Whoſe is rather the poetical than regular genitive of which:

The fruit
Of that forbidden tree, whoſe mortal taſte
Brought death into the world. Milton.

Whether is only uſed in the nominative and accuſative caſes; and has no plural, being applied only to one of a number, commonly to one of two, as Whether of theſe is left I know not. Whether ſhall I chooſe? It is now almoſt obſolete.

What, whether relative or interrogative, is without variation.

Whoſoever, whatſoever, being compounded of who or what, and ſoever, follow the rule of their primitives.

	Singular.	Plural.
In all caſes,	This	Theſe
	That	Thoſe
	Other	Others
	Whether

The plural others is not uſed but when it is referred to a ſubſtantive preceding, as I have ſent other horſes. I have not ſent the ſame horſes, but others.

Another, being only an other, has no plural.

Here, there, and where, joined with certain particles, have a relative and pronominal uſe. Hereof, herein, hereby, hereafter, herewith, thereof, therein, thereby, thereupon, therewith, whereof, wherein, whereby, whereupon, wherewith, which ſignify, of this, in this, &c. of that, in that, &c. of which, in which, &c.

Therefore and wherefore, which are properly, there for and where for, for that, for which, are now reckoned conjunctions, and continued in uſe. The reſt ſeem to be paſſing by degrees into neglect, though proper, uſeful, and analogous. They are referred both to ſingular and plural antecedents.

There are two more words uſed only in conjunction with pronouns, own and ſelf.

Own is added to poſſeſſives, both ſingular and plural, as my own hand, our own houſe. It is emphatical, and implies a ſilent contrariety or oppoſition; as I live in my own houſe, that is, not in a hired houſe. This I did with my own hand, that is, without help, or not by proxy.

Self is added to poſſeſſives, as myſelf, yourſelves; and ſometimes to perſonal pronouns, as himſelf, itſelf, themſelves. It then, like own, expreſſes emphaſis and oppoſition, as I did this myſelf, that is, not another; or it forms a reciprocal pronoun, as We hurt ourſelves by vain rage.

Himſelf, itſelf, themſelves, are ſuppoſed by Wallis to be put, by corruption, for his ſelf, it' ſelf, their ſelves; ſo that ſelf is always a ſubſtantive. This ſeems juſtly obſerved, for we ſay, He came himſelf; Himſelf ſhall do this; where himſelf cannot be an accuſative.

Of the VERB.

Engliſh verbs are active, as I love; or neuter, as I languiſh. The neuters are formed like the actives.

Moſt verbs ſignifying action may likewiſe ſignify condition or habit, and become neuters, as I love, I am in love; I ſtrike, I am now ſtriking.

Verbs have only two tenſes inflected in their terminations, the preſent, and the ſimple preterite; the other tenſes are compounded of the auxiliary verbs have, ſhall, will, let, may, can, and the infinitive of the active or neuter verb.

The paſſive voice is formed by joining the participle preterite to the ſubſtantive verb, as I am loved.

To have. Indicative Mood.

Preſent Tenſe.

Sing. I have; thou haſt; he hath or has;
Plur. We have; ye have; they have.

Has is a termination corrupted from hath, but now more frequently uſed both in verſe and proſe.

Simple Preterite.

Sing. I had; thou hadſt; he had;
Plur. We had; ye had; they had.

Compound Preterite.

Sing. I have had; thou haſt had; he has or hath had;
Plur. We have had; ye have had; they have had.

Preterpluperfect.

Sing. I had had; thou hadſt had; he had had;
Plur. We had had; ye had had; they had had.

Future.

Sing. I ſhall have; thou ſhalt have; he ſhall have;
Plur. We ſhall have; ye ſhall have; they ſhall have.

Second Future.

Sing. I will have; thou wilt have; he will have;
Plur. We will have; ye will have; they will have.

By reading theſe future tenſes may be obſerved the variations of ſhall and will.

Imperative Mood.

Sing. Have, or have thou; let him have;
Plur. Let us have; have, or have ye; let them have.

Conjunctive Mood.

Preſent.

Sing. I have; thou have; he have;
Plur. We have; ye have; they have.

Preterite ſimple as in the Indicative.

Preterite compound.

Sing. I have had; thou have had; he have had;
Plur. We have had; ye have had; they have had.

Future.

Sing. I ſhall have; as in the Indicative.

Second Future.

Sing. I ſhall have had; thou ſhalt have had; he ſhall have had;
Plur. We ſhall have had; ye ſhall have had; they ſhall have had.

Potential.

The potential form of ſpeaking is expreſſed by may, can, in the preſent; and might, could, or ſhould, in the preterite, joined with the infinitive mood of the verb.

Preſent.

Sing. I may have; thou mayſt have; he may have;
Plur. We may have; ye may have; they may have.

Preterite.

Sing. I might have; thou mightſt have; he might have;
Plur. We might have; ye might have; they might have.

Preſent.

Sing. I can have; thou canſt have; he can have;
Plur. We can have; ye can have; they can have.

Preterite.

Sing. I could have; thou couldſt have; he could have;
Plur. We could have; ye could have; they could have.

In like manner ſhould is united to the verb.

There is likewiſe a double preterite.

Sing. I ſhould have had; thou ſhouldſt have had; he ſhould have had;
Plur. We ſhould have had; ye ſhould have had; they ſhould have had;

In like manner we uſe, I might have had; I could have had, &c.

Infinitive Mood.

Preſent. To have. Preterite. To have had.
Participle Preſent. Having. Participle preter. Had.

Verb Active. To love.

Indicative. Preſent.

Sing. I love; thou loveſt; he loveth, or loves;
Plur. We love; ye love; they love.

Preterite ſimple.

Sing. I loved; thou lovedſt; he loved;
Plur. We loved; ye loved; they loved.
Preterperfect compound. I have loved, &c.
Preterpluperfect. I had loved, &c.
Future. I ſhall love, &c. I will love, &c.

Imperative.

Sing. Love, or love thou; let him love;
Plur. Let us love; love, or love ye; let them love.

Conjunctive. Preſent.

Sing. I love; thou love; he love;
Plur. We love; ye love; they love.
Preterite ſimple, as in the Indicative.
Preterite compound. I have loved, &c.
Future. I ſhall love, &c.
Second Future. I ſhall have loved, &c.

Potential.

Preſent. I may or can love, &c.
Preterite. I might, could, or ſhould love, &c.
Double Preterite. I might, could, or ſhould have loved, &c.

Infinitive.

Preſent. To love. Preterite. To have loved.
Participle preſent. Loving. Participle paſt. Loved

The paſſive is formed by the addition of the participle preterite to the different tenſes of the verb to be, which muſt therefore be here exhibited.

Indicative. Preſent.

Sing. I am; thou art; he is;
Plur. We are, or be; ye are, or be; they are, or be.

The plural be is now little in uſe.

Preterite.

Sing. I was; thou waſt, or wert; he was;
Plur. We were; ye were; they were.

Wert is properly of the conjunctive mood, and ought not to be uſed in the indicative.

Preterite compound. I have been, &c.
Preterpluperfect. I had been, &c.
Future. I ſhall or will be, &c.

Imperative.

Sing. Be thou; let him be;
Plur. Let us be; be ye; let them be.

Conjunctive. Preſent.

Sing. I be; thou beeſt; he be.
Plur. We be; ye be; they be.

Preterite.

Sing. I were; thou wert; he were;
Plur. We were; ye were; they were.
Preterite compound. I have been, &c.
Future. I ſhall have been, &c.

Potential.

I may or can; would, could, or ſhould be; could, would, or ſhould have been, &c.

Infinitive.

Preſent. To be. Preterite. To have been,
Participle preſent. Being. Participle preter. Having been.

Paſſive Voice. Indicative Mood.

I am loved, &c. I was loved, &c. I have been loved, &c.

Conjunctive Mood.

If I be loved, &c. If I were loved, &c. If I ſhall have been loved, &c.

Potential Mood.

I may or can be loved, &c. I might, could, or ſhould be loved, &c.
I might, could, or ſhould have been loved, &c.

Infinitive.

Preſent. To be loved. Preterite. To have been loved.
Participle. Loved.

There is another form of Engliſh verbs, in which the infinitive mood is joined to the verb do in its various inflections, which are therefore to be learned in this place.

To Do.

Indicative. Preſent.

Sing. I do; thou doſt; he doth;
Plur. We do; ye do; they do.

Preterite.

Sing. I do; thou do; he do;
Plur. We do; ye do; they do.

The reſt are as in the Indicative.

Infinitive. To do; to have done.
Participle preſent. Doing. Participle preter. Done.

Do is ſometimes uſed ſuperfluouſly, as I do love, I did love; ſimply for I love, or I loved; but this is conſidered as a vitious mode of ſpeech.

It is ſometimes uſed emphatically; as,

> I do love thee, and when I love thee not,
> Chaos is come again. Shakeſpeare.

It is frequently joined with a negative; as I like her, but I do not love her; I wiſhed him ſucceſs, but did not help him. This, by cuſtom at leaſt, appears more eaſy than the other form of expreſſing the ſame ſenſe by a negative adverb after the verb, I like her, but love her not.

The Imperative prohibitory is ſeldom applied in the ſecond perſon, at leaſt in proſe, without the word do; as Stop him, but do not hurt him; Praiſe beauty, but do not dote on it.

Its chief uſe is in interrogative forms of ſpeech, in which it is uſed through all the perſons; as Do I live? Doſt thou ſtrike me? Do they rebel? Did I complain? Didſt thou love her? Did ſhe die? So likewiſe in negative interrogations; Do I not yet grieve? Did ſhe not die?

Do and did are thus uſed only for the preſent and ſimple preterite.

There is another manner of conjugating neuter verbs, which, when it is uſed, may not improperly denominate them neuter paſſives, as they are inflected according to the paſſive form by the help of the verb ſubſtantive to be. They anſwer nearly to the reciprocal verbs in French; as

I am riſen, ſurrexi, Latin; Je me ſuis levé, French.
I was walked out, exieram; Je m'étois promené.

In like manner we commonly expreſs the preſent tenſe; as, I am going, eo. I am grieving, doleo. She is dying, illa moritur. The tempeſt is raging, furit procella. I am purſuing an enemy, hoſtem inſequor. So the other tenſes, as, We were walking, ἐτυγχάνομεν περιπατοῦντες, I have been walking, I had been walking, ſhall or will be walking.

There is another manner of uſing the active participle, which gives it a paſſive ſignification: as, The grammar is now printing, grammatica jam nunc chartis imprimitur. The braſs is forging, æra excuduntur. This is, in my opinion, a vitious expreſſion, probably corrupted from a phraſe more pure, but now ſomewhat obſolete: The book is a printing. The braſs is a forging; a being properly at, and printing and forging verbal nouns ſignifying action, according to the analogy of this language.

The indicative and conjunctive moods are by modern writers frequently confounded, or rather the conjunctive is wholly neglected, when ſome convenience of verſification does not invite its revival. It is uſed among the purer writers of former times after if, though, ere, before, till, or until, whether, except, unleſs, whatſoever, whomſoever, and words of wiſhing; as, Doubtleſs thou art our father, though Abraham be ignorant of us, and Iſrael acknowledge us not.

Of IRREGULAR VERBS.

The Engliſh verbs were divided by Ben Jonſon into four conjugations, without any reaſon ariſing from the nature of the language, which has properly but one conjugation, ſuch as has been exemplified; from which all deviations are to be conſidered as anomalies, which are indeed in our monoſyllable Saxon verbs, and the verbs derived from them, very frequent; but almoſt all the verbs which have been adopted from other languages, follow the regular form.

Our verbs are obſerved by Dr. Wallis to be irregular only in the formation of the preterite, and its participle. Indeed, in the ſcantineſs of our conjugations, there is ſcarcely any other place for irregularity.

The firſt irregularity is a ſlight deviation from the regular form, by rapid utterance or poetical contraction: the laſt ſyllable ed is often joined with the former by ſuppreſſion of e; as lov'd for loved; after c, ch, ſh, f, k, x, and after the conſonants ſ, th, when more ſtrongly pronounced, and ſometimes after m, n, r, if preceded by a ſhort vowel, t is uſed in pronunciation, but very ſeldom in writing, rather than d; as plac't, ſnatch't, fiſh't, wak't, dwel't, ſmel't; for plac'd, ſnatch'd, fiſh'd, wak'd, dwel'd, ſmel'd; or placed, ſnatched, fiſhed, waked, dwelled, ſmelled.

Thoſe words which terminate in l or ll, or p, make their preterite in t, even in ſolemn language; as crept, felt, dwelt, ſometimes after x, ed is changed into t, as vext; this is not conſtant.

A long vowel is often changed into a ſhort one; thus, kept, ſlept, wept, crept, ſwept; from the verbs, to keep, to ſleep, to weep, to creep, to ſweep.

Where d or t go before, the additional letter d or t, in this contracted form, coaleſce into one letter with the radical d or t: if t were the radical, they coaleſce into t; but if d were the radical, then into d or t, as the one or the other letter may be more eaſily pronounced: as read, led, ſpread, ſhed, ſhred, bid, hid, chid, fed, bled, bred, ſped, ſtrid, ſlid, rid; from the verbs to read, to lead, to ſpread, to ſhed, to ſhread, to bid, to hide, to chide, to feed, to bleed, to breed, to ſpeed, to ſtride, to ſlide, to ride. And thus, caſt, hurt, coſt, burſt, eat, beat, ſweat, ſit, quit, ſmit, writ, bit, hit, met, ſhot; from the verbs to caſt, to hurt, to coſt, to burſt, to eat, to beat, to ſweat, to ſit, to quit, to ſmite, to write, to bite, to hit, to meet, to ſhoot. And in like manner, lent, ſent, rent, girt; from the verbs to lend, to ſend, to rend, to gird.

The participle preterite or paſſive is often formed in en, inſtead of ed; as been, taken, given, ſlain, known; from the verbs to be, to take, to give, to ſlay, to know,

Many words have two or more participles, as not only written, bitten, eaten, beaten, hidden, chidden, ſhotten, choſen, broken; but likewiſe writ, bit, eat, beat, bid, chid, ſhot, choſe, broke, are promiſcuouſly uſed in the participle, from the verbs to write, to bite, to eat, to beat, to bide, to chide, to ſhoot, to chooſe, to break, and many ſuch like.

In the ſame manner ſown, ſhewn, hewn, mown, loaden, laden, as well as ſow'd, ſhew'd, hew'd, mow'd, loaded, laded, from the verbs to ſow, to ſhew, to hew, to mow, to load, or lade.

Concerning theſe double participles it is difficult to give any rule; but he ſhall ſeldom err who remembers, that when a verb has a participle diſtinct from its preterite, as write, wrote, written, that diſtinct participle is more proper and elegant, as The book is written, is better than The book is wrote. Wrote however may be uſed in poetry; at leaſt if we allow any authority to poets, who, in the exultation of genius, think themſelves perhaps entitled to trample on grammarians.

There are other anomalies in the preterite.

1. Win, ſpin, begin, ſwim, ſtrike, ſtick, ſing, ſting, fling, ring, wring, ſpring, ſwing, drink, ſink, ſhrink, ſtink, come, run, find, bind, grind, wind, both in the preterite, imperfect, and participle paſſive, give won, ſpun, begun, ſwum, ſtruck, ſtuck, ſung, ſtung, flung, rung, wrung, ſprung, ſwung, drunk, ſunk, ſhrunk, ſtunk, come, run, found, bound, ground, wound. And moſt of them are alſo formed in the preterite by a, as began, rang, ſang, ſprang, drank, came, ran, and ſome others; but moſt of theſe are now obſolete. Some in the participle paſſive likewiſe take en, as ſtricken, ſtrucken, drunken, bounden.

2. Fight, teach, reach, ſeek, beſeech, catch, buy, bring, think, work, make fought, taught, raught, ſought, beſought, caught, bought, brought, thought, wrought.

But a great many of theſe retain likewiſe the regular form, as teached, reached, beſeeched, catched, worked.

3. Take, ſhake, forſake, wake, awake, ſtand, break, ſpeak, bear, ſhear, ſwear, tear, wear, weave, cleave, ſtrive, thrive, drive, ſhine, riſe, ariſe, ſmite, write, bide, abide, ride, chooſe, chuſe, tread, get, beget, forget, ſeethe, make in both preterite and participle took, ſhook, forſook, woke, awoke, ſtood, broke, ſpoke, bore, ſhore, ſwore, tore, wore, wove, clove, ſtrove, throve, drove, ſhone, roſe, aroſe, ſmote, wrote, bode, abode, rode, choſe, trode, got, begot, forgot, ſod. But we ſay likewiſe, thrive, riſe, ſmit, writ, abid, rid. In the preterite ſome are likewiſe formed by a, as brake, ſpake, bare, ſhare, ſware, tare, ware, clave, gat, begat, forgat, and perhaps ſome others, but more rarely. In the participle paſſive many of them are formed by en, as taken, ſhaken, forſaken, broken, ſpoken, born, ſhorn, ſworn, torn, worn, woven, cloven, thriven, driven, riſen, ſmitten, ridden, choſen, trodden, gotten, begotten, forgotten, ſodden. And many do likewiſe retain the analogy in both, as waked, awaked, ſheared, weaved, leaved, abided, ſeethed.

4. Give, bid, ſit, make in the preterite gave, bade, ſate; in the participle paſſive, given, bidden, ſitten; but in both bid.

5. Draw, know, grow, throw, blow, crow like a cock, fly, ſlay, ſee, ly, make their preterite drew, knew, grew, threw, blew, crew, flew, ſlew, ſaw, lay; their participles paſſive by n, drawn, known, grown, thrown, blown, flown, ſlain, ſeen, lien, lain. Yet from flee is made fled; from go, went, from the old wend, the participle is gone.

Of DERIVATION.

That the Engliſh language may be more eaſily underſtood, it is neceſſary to enquire how its derivative words are deduced from their primitives, and how the primitives are borrowed from other languages. In this enquiry I ſhall ſometimes copy Dr. Wallis, and ſometimes endeavour to ſupply his defects, and rectify his errours.

Nouns are derived from verbs.

The thing implied in the verb, as done or produced, is commonly either the preſent of the verb; as to love, love; to fright, a fright; to fight, a fight; or the preterite of the verb, as, to ſtrike, I ſtrick or ſtrook, a ſtroke.

The action is the ſame with the participle preſent, as loving, frighting, fighting, ſtriking.

The agent, or perſon acting, is denoted by the ſyllable er added to the verb, as lover, frighter, ſtriker.

Subſtantives, adjectives, and ſometimes other parts of ſpeech, are changed into verbs: in which caſe the vowel is often lengthened, or the conſonant ſoftened; as a houſe, to houſe; braſs, to braze; glaſs, to glaze; graſs, to graze; price, to prize; breath, to breathe; a fiſh, to fiſh; oil, to oil; further, to further; forward, to forward; hinder, to hinder.

Sometimes the termination en is added, eſpecially to adjectives; as haſte, to haſten; length, to lengthen; ſtrength, to ſtrengthen; ſhort, to ſhorten; faſt, to faſten; white, to whiten; black, to blacken; hard, to harden; ſoft, to ſoften.

From ſubſtantives are formed adjectives of plenty, by adding the termination y; as a louſe, louſy; wealth, wealthy; health, healthy; might, mighty; worth, worthy; wit, witty; luſt, luſty; water, watery; earth, earthy; wood, a wood, woody; air, airy; a heart, hearty; a hand, handy.

From ſubſtantives are formed adjectives of plenty, by adding the termination ful, denoting abundance; as joy, joyful; fruit, fruitful; youth, youthful; care, careful; uſe, uſeful; delight, delightful; plenty, plentiful; help, helpful.

Sometimes, in almoſt the ſame ſenſe, but with ſome kind of diminution thereof, the termination ſome is added, denoting ſomething, or in ſome degree; as delight, delightſome; game, gameſome; irk, irkſome; burden, burdenſome; trouble, troubleſome; light, lightſome; hand, handſome; alone, loneſome; toil, toilſome.

On the contrary, the termination leſs added to ſubſtantives, makes adjectives ſignifying want; as worthleſs, witleſs, heartleſs, joyleſs, careleſs, helpleſs. Thus comfort, comfortleſs; ſap, ſapleſs.

Privation or contrariety is very often denoted by the particle un prefixed to many adjectives, or in before words derived from the Latin; as pleaſant, unpleaſant; wiſe, unwiſe; profitable, unprofitable; patient, impatient. Thus unworthy, unhealthy, unfruitful, unuſeful, and many more.

The original Engliſh privative is un; but as we often borrow from the Latin, or its deſcendants, words already ſignifying privation, as inefficacious, impious, indiſcreet, the inſeparable particles un and in have fallen into confuſion, from which it is not eaſy to diſentangle them.

Un is prefixed to all words originally Engliſh; as untrue, untruth, untaught, unhandſome.

Un is prefixed to all participles made privative adjectives, as unfeeling, unaſſiſting, unaided, undelighted, unendeared.

Un ought never to be prefixed to a participle preſent, to mark a forbearance of action, as unſighing; but a privation of habit, as unpitying.

Un is prefixed to moſt ſubſtantives which have an Engliſh termination, as unfertileneſs, unperfectneſs, which, if they have borrowed terminations, take in or im, as infertility, imperfection; uncivil, incivility; unactive, inactivity.

In borrowing adjectives, if we receive them already compounded, it is uſual to retain the particle prefixed, as indecent, inelegant, improper; but if we borrow the adjective, and add the privative particle, we commonly prefix un, as unpolite, ungallant.

The prepoſitive particles dis and mis, derived from the des and mes of the French, ſignify almoſt the ſame as un; yet dis rather imports contrariety than privation, ſince it anſwers to the Latin prepoſition de. Mis inſinuates ſome error, and for the moſt part may be rendered by the Latin words male or perperam. To like, to diſlike; honour, diſhonour; to honour, to grace, to diſhonour, to diſgrace; to deign, to diſdeign; chance, hap, miſchance, miſhap; to take, to miſtake; deed, miſdeed; to uſe, to miſuſe; to employ, to miſemploy; to apply, to miſapply.

Words derived from Latin written with de or dis retain the ſame ſignification; as diſtinguiſh, diſtinguo; detract, detraho; defame, defamo; detain, detineo.

The termination ly added to ſubſtantives, and ſometimes to adjectives, forms adjectives that import ſome kind of ſimilitude or agreement, being formed by contraction of lick or like.

A giant, giantly, giantlike; earth, earthly; heaven, heavenly; world, worldly; God, godly; good, goodly.

The ſame termination ly added to adjectives, forms adverbs of like ſignification; as beautiful, beautifully; ſweet, ſweetly; that is, in a beautiful manner; with ſome degree of ſweetneſs.

The termination iſh added to adjectives, imports diminution; and added to ſubſtantives, imports ſimilitude or tendency to a character; as green, greeniſh; white, whitiſh; ſoft, ſoftiſh; a thief, thieviſh; a wolf, wolviſh; a child, childiſh.

We have forms of diminutives in ſubſtantives, though not frequent; as a hill, a hillock; a cock, a cockrel; a pike, a pickrel; this is a French termination: a gooſe, a goſling; this is a German termination: a lamb, a lambkin, a chick, a chicken; a man, a manikin; a pipe, a pipkin; and thus Halkin, whence the patronimick, Hawkins; Wilkin, Thomkin, and others.

Yet ſtill there is another form of diminution among the Engliſh, by leſſening the ſound itſelf, eſpecially of vowels; as there is a form of augmenting them by enlarging, or even lengthening it; and that ſometimes not ſo much by change of the letters, as of their pronunciation; as ſup, ſip, ſoop, ſop, ſippet, where, beſides the extenuation of the vowel, there is added the French termination et; top, tip; ſpit, ſpout; babe, baby; booby, βούπαις; great pronounced long, eſpecially if with a ſtronger ſound, grea-t; little pronounced long, lee-tle; ting, tang, tong, imports a ſucceſſion of ſmaller and then greater ſounds; and ſo in jingle, jangle, tingle, tangle, and many other made words.

Much however of this is arbitrary and fanciful, depending wholly on oral utterance, and therefore ſcarcely worthy the notice of Wallis.

Of concrete adjectives are made abſtract ſubſtantives, by adding the termination neſs, and a few in hood or head, noting character or qualities; as white, whiteneſs; hard, hardneſs; great, greatneſs; ſkilful, ſkilfulneſs, unſkilfulneſs; godhead, manhood, maidenhead, widowhood, knighthood, prieſthood, likelihood, falſehood.

There are other abſtracts, partly derived from the adjectives, and partly from verbs, which are formed by the addition of the termination th, a ſmall change being ſometimes made; as long, length; ſtrong, ſtrength; broad, breadth; wide, width; deep, depth; true, truth; warm, warmth; dear, dearth; ſlow, ſlowth; merry, mirth; heal, health; well, weal, wealth; dry, droughth; young, youth; and ſo moon, month.

Like theſe are ſome words derived from verbs; die, death; till, tilth; grow, growth; mow, later mowth, after mow'th; commonly ſpoken and written later math, after math; ſteal, ſtealth; bear, birth; rue, ruth; and probably earth from to ear or plow; fly, flight; weigh, weight; fray, fright; to draw, draught.

Theſe ſhould rather be written flighth, frighth, only that cuſtom will not ſuffer h to be twice repeated.

The ſame form retain faith, ſpight, wreathe, wrath, broth, froth, breath, ſooth, worth, light, wight, and the like, whoſe primitives are either entirely obſolete, or ſeldom occur. Perhaps they are derived from fey or foy, ſpry, wry, wreak, brew, mow, fry, bray, ſay, work.

Some ending in ſhip imply an office, employment, or condition; as kingſhip, wardſhip, guardianſhip, partnerſhip, ſtewardſhip, headſhip, lordſhip.

Thus worſhip, that is, worthſhip; whence worſhipful, and to worſhip.

Some few ending in dom, rick, wick, do eſpecially denote dominion, at leaſt ſtate or condition; as kingdom, dukedom, earldom, princedom, popedom, chriſtendom, freedom, wiſdom, whoredom, biſhoprick, bailywick.

Ment and age are plainly French terminations, and are of the ſame import with us as among them, ſcarcely ever occurring, except in words derived from the French, as commandment, uſage.

There are in Engliſh often long trains of words allied by their meaning and derivation; as to beat, a bat, batoon, a battle, a beetle, a battle-door, to batter, batter, a kind of glutinous compoſition for food, made by beating different bodies into one maſs. All theſe are of ſimilar ſignification, and perhaps derived from the Latin batuo. Thus take, touch, tickle, tack, tackle; all imply a local conjunction, from the Latin tango, tetigi, tactum.

From two are formed twain, twice, twenty, twelve, twins, twine, twiſt, twirl, twig, twitch, twinge, between, betwixt, twilight, twibil.

The following remarks, extracted from Wallis, are ingenious, but of more ſubtlety than ſolidity, and ſuch as perhaps might in every language be enlarged without end.

Sn uſually imply the noſe, and what relates to it. From the Latin naſus are derived the French nez and the Engliſh noſe; and neſſe, a promontory, as projecting like a noſe. But as if from the conſonants ns taken from naſus, and tranſpoſed, that they may the better correſpond, ſn denote naſus; and thence are derived many words that relate to the noſe, as ſnout, ſneeze, ſnore, ſnort, ſneer, ſnicker, ſnot, ſnevil, ſnite, ſnuff, ſnuffle, ſnaffle, ſnarle, ſnudge.

There is another ſn, which may perhaps be derived from the Latin ſinuo, as ſnake, ſneak, ſnail, ſnare; ſo likewiſe ſnap and ſnatch, ſnib, ſnub.

Bl imply a blaſt; as blow, blaſt, to blaſt, to blight, and, metaphorically, to blaſt one's reputation; bleat, bleak, a bleak place, to look bleak or weather-beaten, bleak, blay, bleach, bluſter, blurt, bliſter, blab, bladder, bleb, bliſter, blabber-lip't, blubber-cheek't, bloted, blote-herrings, blaſt, blaze, to blow, that is, bloſſom, bloom; and perhaps blood and bluſh.

In the native words of our tongue is to be found a great agreement between the letters and the thing ſignified; and therefore the ſounds of letters ſmaller, ſharper, louder, cloſer, ſofter, ſtronger, clearer, more obſcure, and more ſtridulous, do very often intimate the like effects in the thing ſignified.

Thus words that begin with ſtr intimate the force and effect of the thing ſignified, as if probably derived from ϛρώννυμι, or ſtrenuus; as ſtrong, ſtrength, ſtrew, ſtrike, ſtreake, ſtroke, ſtripe, ſtrive, ſtrife, ſtruggle, ſtrout, ſtrut, ſtretch, ſtrait, ſtrict, ſtreight, that is, narrow, diſtrain, ſtreſs, diſtreſs, ſtring, ſtrap, ſtream, ſtreamer, ſtrand, ſtrip, ſtray, ſtruggle, ſtrange, ſtride, ſtraddle.

St in like manner imply ſtrength, but in a leſs degree, ſo much only as is ſufficient to preſerve what has been already communicated, rather than acquire any new degree; as if it were derived from the Latin ſto: for example, ſtand, ſtay, that is, to remain, or to prop; ſtaff, ſtay, that is, to oppoſe; ſtop, to ſtuff, ſtifle, to ſtay, that is, to ſtop; a ſtay, that is, an obſtacle; ſtick, ſtut, ſtutter, ſtammer, ſtagger, ſtickle, ſtick, ſtake, a ſharp pale, and any thing depoſited at play; ſtock, ſtem, ſting, to ſting, ſtink, ſtitch, ſtud, ſtanchion, ſtub, ſtubble, to ſtub up, ſtump, whence ſtumble, ſtalk, to ſtalk, ſtep, to ſtamp with the feet, whence to ſtamp, that is, to make an impreſſion and a ſtamp; ſtow, to ſtow, to beſtow, ſteward or ſtoward, ſtead, ſteady, ſteadfaſt, ſtable, a ſtable, a ſtall, to ſtall, ſtool, ſtall, ſtill, ſtall, ſtallage, ſtall, ſtage, ſtill adj. and ſtill adv ſtale, ſtout, ſturdy, ſteed, ſtoat, ſtallion, ſtiff, ſtark-dead, to ſtarve with hunger or cold; ſtone, ſteel, ſtern, ſtanch, to ſtanch blood, to ſtare, ſteep, ſteeple, ſtair, ſtandard, a ſtated meaſure, ſtately. In all theſe, and perhaps ſome others, ſt denote ſomething firm and fixed.

Thr imply a more violent degree of motion, as throw, thruſt, throng, throb, through, threat, threaten, thrall, throws.

Wr imply ſome ſort of obliquity or diſtortion, as wry, to wreathe, wreſt, wreſtle, wring, wrong, wrinch, wrench, wrangle, wrinkle, wrath, wreak, wrack, wretch, wriſt, wrap.

Sw imply a ſilent agitation, or a ſofter kind of lateral motion; as ſway, ſwag, to ſway, ſwagger, ſwerve, ſweat, ſweep, ſwill, ſwim, ſwing, ſwift, ſweet, ſwitch, ſwinge.

Nor is there much difference of ſm in ſmooth, ſmug, ſmile, ſmirk, ſmite, which ſignifies the ſame as to ſtrike, but is a ſofter word; ſmall, ſmell, ſmack, ſmother, ſmart, a ſmart blow properly ſignifies ſuch a kind of ſtroke as with an originally ſilent motion, implied in ſm, proceeds to a quick violence, denoted by ar ſuddenly ended, as is ſhewn by t.

Cl denote a kind of adheſion or tenacity, as in cleave, clay, cling, climb, clamber, clammy, claſp, to claſp, to clip, to clinch, cloak, clog, cloſe, to cloſe, a clod, a clot, as a clot of blood, clouted cream, a clutter, a cluſter.

Sp imply a kind of diſſipation or expanſion, eſpecially a quick one, particularly if there be an r, as if it were from ſpargo, or ſeparo: for example, ſpread, ſpring, ſprig, ſprout, ſprinkle, ſplit, ſplinter, ſpill, ſpit, ſputter, ſpatter.

Sl denote a kind of ſilent fall, or a leſs obſervable motion; as in ſlime, ſlide, ſlip, ſlipper, ſly, ſleight, ſlit, ſlow, ſlack, ſlight, ſling, ſlap.

And ſo likewiſe aſh, in craſh, raſh, gaſh, flaſh, claſh, laſh, ſlaſh, plaſh, traſh, indicate ſomething acting more nimbly and ſharply. But uſh, in cruſh, ruſh, guſh, fluſh, bluſh, bruſh, huſh, puſh, implies ſomething as acting more obtuſely and dully. Yet in both there is indicated a ſwift and ſudden motion, not inſtantaneous, but gradual, by the continued ſound ſh.

Thus in fling, ſling, ding, ſwing, cling, ſing, wring, ſting, the tingling of the termination ng, and the ſharpneſs of the vowel i, imply the continuation of a very ſlender motion or tremor, at length indeed vaniſhing, but not ſuddenly interrupted. But in tink, wink, ſink, clink, chink, think, that end in a mute conſonant, there is alſo indicated a ſudden ending.

If there be an l, as in jingle, tingle, tinkle, mingle, ſprinkle, twinkle, there is implied a frequency, or iteration of ſmall acts. And the ſame frequency of acts, but leſs ſubtile by reaſon of the clearer vowel a, is indicated in jangle, tangle, ſpangle, mangle, wrangle, brangle, dangle; as alſo in mumble, grumble, jumble, tumble, ſtumble, rumble, crumble, fumble. But at the ſame time the cloſe u implies ſomething obſcure or obtunded; and a congeries of conſonants mbl, denotes a confuſed kind of rolling or tumbling, as in ramble, ſcamble, ſcramble, wamble, amble; but in theſe there is ſomething acute.

In nimble, the acuteneſs of the vowel denotes celerity. In ſparkle, ſp denotes diſſipation, ar an acute crackling, k a ſudden interruption, l a frequent iteration; and in like manner in ſprinkle, unleſs in may imply the ſubtilty of the diſſipated guttules. Thick and thin differ, in that the former ends with an obtuſe conſonant, and the latter with an acute.

In like manner, in ſqueek, ſqueak, ſqueal, ſquall, braul, wraul, yaul, ſpaul, ſcreek, ſhriek, ſhrill, ſharp, ſhrivel, wrinkle, crack, craſh, claſh, gnaſh, plaſh, cruſh, buſh, hiſſe, fiſſe, whiſt, ſoſt, jarr, hurl, curl, whirl, buz, buſtle, ſpindle, dwindle, twine, twiſt, and in many more, we may obſerve the agreement of ſuch ſort of ſounds with the things ſignified: and this ſo frequently happens, that ſcarce any language which I know can be compared with ours. So that one monoſyllable word, of which kind are almoſt all ours, emphatically expreſſes what in other languages can ſcarce be explained but by compounds, or decompounds, or ſometimes a tedious circumlocution.

We have many words borrowed from the Latin; but the greateſt part of them were communicated by the intervention of the French; as grace, face, elegant, elegance, reſemble.

Some verbs, which ſeem borrowed from the Latin, are formed from the preſent tenſe, and ſome from the ſupines.

From the preſent are formed ſpend, expend, expendo; conduce, conduco; deſpiſe, deſpicio; approve, approbo; conceive, concipio.

From the ſupines, ſupplicate, ſupplico; demonſtrate, demonſtro; diſpoſe, diſpono; expatiate, expatior; ſuppreſs, ſupprimo; exempt, eximo.

Nothing is more apparent, than that Wallis goes too far in queſt of originals. Many of theſe which ſeem ſelected as immediate deſcendants from the Latin, are apparently French, as conceive, approve, expoſe, exempt.

Some words purely French, not derived from the Latin, we have transferred into our language; as garden, garter, buckler, to advance, to cry, to plead, from the French, jardin, jartier, bouclier, avancer, crier, plaider; though indeed, even of theſe, part is of Latin original.

As to many words which we have in common with the Germans, it is doubtful whether the old Teutons borrowed them from the Latins, or the Latins from the Teutons, or both had them from ſome common original; as wine, vinum; wind, ventus; went, veni; way, via; wall, vallum; wallow, volvo; wool, vellus; will, volo; worm, vermis; worth, virtus; waſp, veſpa; day, dies; draw, traho; tame, domo, δαμάω; yoke, jugum, ζεῦγος; over, upper, ſuper, ὑπὲρ; am, ſum, ειμι; break, frango; fly, volo; blow, flo. I make no doubt but the Teutonick is more ancient than the Latin; and it is no leſs certain, that the Latin, which borrowed a great number of words, not only from the Greek, eſpecially the Æolick, but from other neighbouring languages, as the Oſcan and others, which have long become obſolete, received not a few from the Teutonick. It is certain, that the Engliſh, German, and other Teutonick languages, retained ſome derived from the Greek, which the Latin has not; as ax, achs, mit, ford, pfurd, daughter, tochter, mickle, mingle, moon, ſear, grave, graff, to grave, to ſcrape, whole, from ἀξίνη, μετα, πορθμος, θυγατὴρ, μεγάλος, μιγνύω, μῆνη, ξηρός, γράφω, ὅλος. Since they received theſe immediately from the Greeks, without the intervention of the Latin language, why may not other words be derived immediately from the ſame fountain, though they be likewiſe found among the Latins?

Our anceſtors were ſtudious to form borrowed words, however long, into monoſyllables; and not only cut off the formative terminations, but cropped the firſt ſyllable, eſpecially in words beginning with a vowel; and rejected not only vowels in the middle, but likewiſe conſonants of a weaker ſound, retaining the ſtronger, which ſeem the bones of words, or changing them for others of the ſame organ, in order that the ſound might become the ſofter; but eſpecially tranſpoſing their order, that they might the more readily be pronounced without the intermediate vowels. For example, in expendo, ſpend; exemplum, ſample; excipio, ſcape; extraneus, ſtrange; extractum, ſtretch'd; excrucio, to ſcrew; exſcorio, to ſcour; excorio, to ſcourge; excortico, to ſcratch; and others beginning with ex: as alſo, emendo, to mend; epiſcopus, biſhop; in Daniſh, biſp; epiſtola, epiſtle; hoſpitale, ſpittle; Hiſpania, Spain; hiſtoria, ſtory.

Many of theſe etymologies are doubtful, and ſome evidently miſtaken.

The following are ſomewhat harder, Alexander, Sander; Eliſabetha, Betty; apis, bee; aper, bar; p paſſing into b, as in biſhop; and by cutting off a from the beginning, which is reſtored in the middle: but for the old bar or bare, we now ſay boar; as for lang, long; for bain, bane; for ſtane, ſtone; aprugna, brawn, p being changed into b, and a tranſpoſed, as in aper, and g changed into w, as in pignus, pawn; lege, law; ἀλωπὴξ, fox; cutting off the beginning, and changing p into f, as in pellis, a fell; pullus, a foal; pater, father; pavor, fear; polio, file; pleo, impleo, fill, full; piſcis, fiſh; and tranſpoſing o into the middle, which was taken from the beginning; apex, a piece; peak, pike; zophorus, freeze; muſtum, ſtum; defenſio, fence; diſpenſator, ſpencer; aſculto, eſcouter, Fr. ſcout; exſcalpo, ſcrape, reſtoring l inſtead of r, and hence ſcrap, ſcrable, ſcrawl; exculpo, ſcoop; exterritus, ſtart; extonitus, attonitus, ſtonn'd; ſtomachus, maw; offendo, fined; obſtipo, ſtop; audere, dare; cavere, ware; whence a-ware, be-ware, wary, warn, warning, for the Latin v conſonant formerly ſounded like our w, and the modern ſound of the v conſonant was formerly that of the letter f, that is, the Æolick digamma, which had the ſound of φ, and the modern ſound of the letter f was that of the Greek φ or ph; ulcus, ulcere, ulcer, ſore, and hence ſorry, ſorrow, ſorrowful; ingenium, engine, gin; ſcalenus, leaning, unleſs you would rather derive it from κλινω, whence inclino; infundibulum, funnel; gagates, jett; projectum, to jett forth, a jetty; cucullus, a cowl.

There are ſyncopes ſomewhat harder; from tempore, time; from nomine, name; domina, dame; as the French homme, femme, nom, from homine, fœmina, nomine. Thus pagina, page; ποτήριον, pot; κύπελλα, cup; cantharus, can; tentorium, tent; precor, pray; præda, prey; ſpecio, ſpeculor, ſpy; plico, ply; implico, imply; replico, reply; complico, comply; ſedes epiſcopalis, ſee.

A vowel is alſo cut off in the middle, that the number of the ſyllables may be leſſened; as amita, aunt; ſpiritus, ſpright; debitum, debt; dubito, doubt; comes, comitis, count; clericus, clerk; quietus, quit, quite; acquieto, to acquit; ſeparo, to ſpare; ſtabilis, ſtable; ſtabulum, ſtable; pallatium, palace, place; rabula, rail; rawl, wraul, brawl, rable, brable; quæſitio, queſt.

As alſo a conſonant, or at leaſt one of a ſofter ſound, or even a whole ſyllable; rotundus, round; fragilis, frail; ſecurus, ſure; regula, rule; tegula, tile; ſubtilis, ſubtle; nomen, noun; decanus, dean; computo, count; ſubitaneus, ſuddain, ſoon; ſuperare, to ſoar; periculum, peril; mirabile, marvel; as magnus, main; dignor, deign; tingo, ſtain; tinctum, taint; pingo, paint; prædari, reach.

The contractions may ſeem harder, where many of them meet, as κυριακὴ, kyrk, church; preſbyter, prieſt; ſacriſtanus, ſexton; frango, fregi, break, breach; fagus, φῆγα, beech; f changed into b, and g into ch, which are letters near a-kin; frigeſco, freeze; frigeſco, freſh, ſc into ſh, as above in biſhop, fiſh, ſo in ſcapha, ſkiff, ſkip, and refrigeſco, refreſh; but vireſco, freſh; phlebotomus, fleam; bovina, beef; vitulina, veal; ſcutifer, ſquire; pœnitentia, penance; ſanctuarium, ſanctuary, ſentry; quæſitio, chaſe; perquiſitio, purchaſe; anguilla, eel; inſula, iſle, ile, iſland, iland; inſuletta, iſlet, ilet; eyght; and more contractedly ey, whence Owſney, Ruley, Ely; examinare, to ſcan, namely, by rejecting from the beginning and end e and o, according to the uſual manner, the remainder xamin, which the Saxons, who did not uſe x, write cſamen, or ſcamen, is contracted into ſcan; as from dominus, don; nomine, noun; abomino, ban; and indeed apum examen they turned into ſciame; for which we ſay ſwarme, by inſerting r to denote the murmuring; theſaurus, ſtore; ſedile, ſtool; ὑελὸς, wet; ſudo, ſweat; gaudium, gay; jocus, joy; ſuccus, juice; catena, chain; caliga, calga; chauſe, chauſſe, Fr. hoſe; extinguo, ſtanch, ſquench, quench, ſtint; foras, forth; ſpecies, ſpice; recito, read; adjuvo, aid; αἰων, ævum, ay, age, ever; floccus, lock; excerpo, ſcrape, ſcrabble, ſcrawl; extravagus, ſtray, ſtraggle; collectum, clot, clutch; colligo, coil; recolligo, recoil; ſevero, ſwear; ſtridulus, ſhrill; procurator, proxy; pulſo, to puſh; calamus, a quill; impetre, to impeach; augeo, auxi, wax; and vaneſco, vanui, wane; ſyllabare, to ſpell; puteus, pit; granum, corn; comprimo, cramp, crump, crumple, crinkle.

Some may ſeem harſher, yet may not be rejected, for it at leaſt appears, that ſome of them are derived from proper names, and there are others whoſe etymology is acknowledged by every body; as Alexander, Elick, Scander, Sander, Sanny, Sandy; Elizabetha, Elizabeth, Eliſabeth, Betty, Beſs; Margareta, Margaret, Marget, Meg, Peg; Maria, Mary, Mal, Pal, Malkin, Mawkin, Mawkes; Matthæus, Mattha, Matthew; Martha, Matt, Pat; Gulielmus, Wilhelmus, Girolamo, Guillaume, William, Will, Bill, Wilkin, Wicken, Wicks, Weeks.

Thus cariophyllus, flos; gerofilo, Ital. giriflée, gilofer, Fr. gilliflower, which the vulgar call julyflower, as if derived from the month July; petroſelinum, parſley; portulaca, purſlain; cydonium, quince; cydoniatum, quiddeny; perſicum, peach; eruca, eruke, which they corrupt to ear-wig, as if it took its name from the ear; annulus geminus, a gimmal, or gimbal ring; and thus the word gimbal and jumbal is transferred to other things thus interwoven, quelques choſes, kickſhaws. Since the origin of theſe, and many others, however forced, is evident, it ought to appear no wonder to any one if the ancients have thus disfigured many, eſpecially as they ſo much affected monoſyllables; and, to make them ſound the ſofter, took this liberty of maiming, taking away, changing, tranſpoſing and ſoftening them.

But while we derive theſe from the Latin, I do not mean to ſay, that many of them did not immediately come to us from the Saxon, Daniſh, Dutch, and Teutonick languages, and other dialects, and ſome taken more lately from the French, or Italians, or Spaniards.

The ſame word, according to its different ſignifications, often has a different origin; as to bear a burden, from fero; but to bear, whence birth, born, bairn, comes from pario; and a bear, at leaſt if it be of Latin original, from fera. Thus perch, a fiſh, from perca; but perch, a meaſure, from pertica, and likewiſe to perch. To ſpell is from ſyllaba; but ſpell, an inchantment, by which it is believed that the boundaries are ſo fixed in lands, that none can paſs them againſt the maſter's will, from expello; and ſpell, a meſſenger, from epiſtola; whence goſpel, good-ſpell, or god-ſpell. Thus, freeſe, or freeze, from frigeſco; but freeze, an architectonic word, from zophorus; but freeſe, for cloth, from Friſia, or perhaps from frigeſco, as being more fit than any other for keeping out the cold.

There are many words among us, even monoſyllables, compounded of two or more words, at leaſt ſerving inſtead of compounds, and compriſing the ſignification of more words than one; as from ſcrip and roll, comes ſcroll; from proud and dance, prance; from ſt of the verb ſtay, or ſtand and out, is made ſtout; from ſtout and hardy, ſturdy; from ſp of ſpit or ſpew, and out, comes ſpout; from the ſame ſp, with the termination in, is ſpin; and adding out, ſpin out; and from the ſame ſp, with it, is ſpit, which only differs from ſpout in that it is ſmaller, and with leſs noiſe and force; but ſputter is, becauſe of the obſcure u, ſomething between ſpit and ſpout; and by reaſon of adding r, it intimates a frequent iteration and noiſe, but obſcurely confuſed: whereas ſpatter, on account of the ſharper and clearer vowel a, intimates a more diſtinct noiſe, in which it chiefly differs from ſputter. From the ſame ſp, and the termination ark, comes ſpark, ſignifying a ſingle emiſſion of fire with a noiſe; namely, ſp the emiſſion, ar the more acute noiſe, and k the mute conſonant, intimates its being ſuddenly terminated; but adding l, is made the frequentative ſparkle. The ſame ſp, by adding r, that is ſpr, implies a more lively impetus of diffuſing or expanding itſelf; to which adding the termination ing, it becomes ſpring; its vigour ſpr imports, its ſharpneſs the termination ing; and laſt in acute and tremulous, ending in the mute conſonant g, denotes the ſudden ending of any motion, that it is meant in its primary ſignification, of a ſingle, not a complicated exilition. Hence we call ſpring whatever has an elaſtick force; as alſo a fountain of water, and thence the origin of any thing; and to ſpring, to germinate; and ſpring, one of the four ſeaſons. From the ſame ſpr and out, is formed ſprout, and with the termination ig, ſprig; of which the following, for the moſt part, is the difference: ſprout, of a groſſer ſound, imports a fatter or groſſer bud; ſprig, of a ſlenderer ſound, denotes a ſmaller ſhoot. In like manner, from ſtr of the verb ſtrive, and out, comes ſtrout and ſtrut. From the ſame ſtr, and the termination uggle, is made ſtruggle; and this g imports, but without any great noiſe, by reaſon of the obſcure ſound of the vowel u. In like manner from throw and roll is made troll; and almoſt in the ſame ſenſe is trundle, from throw or thruſt, and rundle. Thus graff or grough is compounded of grave and rough; and trudge from tread or trot, and drudge.

In theſe obſervations it is eaſy to diſcover great ſagacity and great extravagance, an ability to do much defeated by the deſire of doing more than enough. It may be remarked,

1. That Wallis's derivations are often ſo made, that by the ſame licence any language may be deduced from any other.

2. That he makes no diſtinction between words immediately derived by us from the Latin, and thoſe which, being copied from other languages, can therefore afford no example of the genius of the Engliſh language, or its laws of derivation.

3. That he derives from the Latin, often with great harſhneſs and violence, words apparently Teutonick; and therefore, according to his own declaration, probably older than the tongue to which he refers them.

4. That ſome of his derivations are apparently erroneous.

SYNTAX.

The eſtabliſhed practice of grammarians requires that I ſhould here treat of the Syntax; but our language has ſo little inflection, or variety of terminations, that its conſtruction neither requires nor admits many rules. Wallis therefore has totally neglected it; and Jonſon, whoſe deſire of following the writers upon the learned languages made him think a ſyntax indiſpenſably neceſſary, has publiſhed ſuch petty obſervations as were better omitted.

The verb, as in other languages, agrees with the nominative in number and perſon; as Thou flieſt from good; He runs to death.

Our adjectives are invariable.

Of two ſubſtantives the noun poſſeſſive is the genitive; as His father's glory, The ſun's heat.

Verbs tranſitive require an oblique caſe; as He loves me; You fear him.

All prepoſitions require an oblique caſe: He gave this to me; He took this from me; He ſays this of me; He came with me.

PROSODY.

It is common for thoſe that deliver the grammar of modern languages, to omit their Proſody. So that of the Italians is neglected by Buomattei; that of the French by Deſmarais; and that of the Engliſh by Wallis, Cooper, and even by Jonſon, though a poet. But as the laws of metre are included in the idea of a grammar, I have thought it proper to inſert them.

Proſody compriſes orthoepy, or the rules of pronunciation; and orthometry, or the laws of verſification.

PRONUNCIATION is juſt, when every letter has its proper ſound, and when every ſyllable has its proper accent, or, which in Engliſh verſification is the ſame, its proper quantity.

The ſounds of the letters have been already explained; and rules for the accent or quantity are not eaſily to be given, being ſubject to innumerable exceptions. Such however as I have read or formed, I ſhall here propoſe.

1. Of diſſyllables formed by affixing a termination, the former ſyllable is commonly accented, as chíldiſh, kíngdom, ácteſt, ácted, tóilſome, lóver, ſcóffer, fáirer, fóremoſt, zéalous, fúlneſs, gódly, méekly, ártiſt.

2. Diſſyllables formed by prefixing a ſyllable to the radical word, have commonly the accent on the latter; as to begét, to beſeém, to beſtów.

3. Of diſſyllables, which are at once nouns and verbs, the verb has commonly the accent on the latter, and the noun on the former ſyllable; as to deſcánt, a déſcant; to cemént, a cément; to contráct; a cóntract.

This rule has many exceptions. Though verbs ſeldom have their accent on the former, yet nouns often have it on the latter ſyllable; as, delíght, perfúme.

4. All diſſyllables ending in y, as cránny; in our, as lábour, fávour; in ow, as wíllow, wállow, except allów; in le, as báttle, bíble; in iſh, as bániſh; in ck, as cámbrick, cáſſock; in ter, as to bátter; in age, as cóurage; in en, as fáſten; in et, as quíet, accent the former ſyllable.

5. Diſſyllable nouns in er, as cánker, bútter, have the accent on the former ſyllable.

6. Diſſyllable verbs terminating in a conſonant and e final, as compríſe, eſcápe; or having a diphthong in the laſt ſyllable, as appéaſe, revéal; or ending in two conſonants, as atténd, have the accent on the latter ſyllable.

7. Diſſyllable nouns having a diphthong in the latter ſyllable, have commonly their accent on the latter ſyllable, as appláuſe; except words in ain, cértain, móuntain.

8. Triſſyllables formed by adding a termination, or prefixing a ſyllable, retain the accent of the radical word, as lóvelineſs, ténderneſs, contémner, wágonner, phýſical, beſpátter, cómmenting, comménding, aſſúrance.

9. Triſſyllables ending in ous, as grácious, árduous; in al, as cápital; in ion, as méntion, accent the firſt.

10. Triſſyllables ending in ce, ent, and ate, accent the firſt ſyllable, as cóuntenance, cóntinence, ármament, ímminent, élegant, própagate, except they be derived from words having the accent on the laſt, as connívance, acquáintance; or the middle ſyllable hath a vowel before two conſonants, as promúlgate.

11. Triſſyllables ending in y, as éntity, ſpécify, líberty, víctory, ſúbſidy, commonly accent the firſt ſyllable.

12. Triſſyllables in re or le accent the firſt ſyllable, as légible, théatre; except diſcíple, and ſome words which have a poſition, as exámple, epíſtle.

13. Triſſyllables in ude commonly accent the firſt ſyllable, as plénitude.

14. Triſſyllables ending in ator or atour, as creátour; or having in the middle ſyllable a diphthong, as endeávour; or a vowel before two conſonants, as doméſtick, accent the middle ſyllable.

15. Triſſyllables that have their accent on the laſt ſyllable are commonly French, as acquiéſce, repartée, magazíne; or words formed by prefixing one or two ſyllables to an acute ſyllable, as immatúre, overchárge.

16. Polyſyllables, or words of more than three ſyllables, follow the accent of the words from which they are derived, as árrogating, cóntinency, incóntinently, comméndable, commúnicableneſs. We ſhould therefore ſay diſpútable, indiſpútable, rather than díſputable, indíſputable; and advertíſement rather than advértiſement.

17. Words in ion have the accent upon the antepenult, as ſalvátion, perturbátion, concóction; words in atour or ator on the penult, as dedicátor.

18. Words ending in le commonly have the accent on the firſt ſyllable, as ámicable, unleſs the ſecond ſyllable have a vowel before two conſonants, as combúſtible.

19. Words ending in ous have the accent on the antepenult, as uxórious, volúptuous.

20. Words ending in ty have their accent on the antepenult, as puſillanímity, actívity.

Theſe rules are not advanced as complete or infallible, but propoſed as uſeful. Almoſt every rule of every language has its exceptions; and in Engliſh, as in other tongues, much muſt be learned by example and authority. Perhaps more and better rules may be given that have eſcaped my obſervation.

VERSIFICATION is the arrangement of a certain number of ſyllables according to certain laws.

The feet of our verſes are either iambick, as alóft, creáte; or trochaick, as hóly, lófty.

Our iambick meaſure compriſes verſes
Of four ſyllables,

Moſt good, moſt fair,
Or things as rare,
To call you 's loſt;
For all the coſt
Words can beſtow,
So poorly ſhow
Upon your praiſe,
That all the ways
Senſe hath, come ſhort. Drayton.

With raviſh'd ears
The monarch hears. Dryden.

Of ſix,

This while we are abroad,
Shall we not touch our lyre?
Shall we not ſing an ode?
Shall that holy fire,
In us that ſtrongly glow'd,
In this cold air expire?
Though in the utmoſt Peak
A while we do remain,
Among the mountains bleak,
Expos'd to ſleet and rain,
No ſport our hours ſhall break,
To exerciſe our vein.

What though bright Phœbus' beams
Refreſh the ſouthern ground,
And though the princely Thames,
With beauteous nymphs abound,
And by old Camber's ſtreams
Be many wonders found:

Yet many rivers clear
Here glide in ſilver ſwathes,
And what of all moſt dear,
Buxton's delicious baths,
Strong ale and noble chear,
T' aſſwage breem winter's ſcathes.

In places far or near,
Or famous, or obſcure,
Where wholſom is the air,
Or where the moſt impure,
All times, and every where,
The muſe is ſtill in ure.
Drayton.

Of eight, which is the uſual meaſure for ſhort poems,

And may at laſt my weary age
Find out the peaceful hermitage,
The hairy gown, and moſſy cell,
Where I may ſit, and nightly ſpell
Of ev'ry ſtar the ſky doth ſhew,
And ev'ry herb that ſips the dew. Milton.

Of ten, which is the common meaſure of heroick and tragick poetry,

Full in the midſt of this created ſpace,
Betwixt heav'n, earth, and ſkies, there ſtands a place
Confining on all three; with triple bound;
Whence all things, though remote, are view'd around,
And thither bring their undulating ſound.
The palace of loud Fame, her ſeat of pow'r,
Plac'd on the ſummit of a lofty tow'r;
A thouſand winding entries long and wide
Receive of freſh reports a flowing tide.
A thouſand crannies in the walls are made;
Nor gate nor bars exclude the buſy trade.
'Tis built of braſs, the better to diffuſe
The ſpreading ſounds, and multiply the news;
Where echoes in repeated echoes play:
A mart for ever full; and open night and day.
Nor ſilence is within, nor voice expreſs,
But a deaf noiſe of ſounds that never ceaſe;
Confus'd, and chiding, like the hollow roar
Of tides, receding from th' inſulted ſhore:
Or like the broken thunder, heard from far,
When Jove to diſtance drives the rolling war.
The courts are fill'd with a tumultuous din
Of crowds, or iſſuing forth, or ent'ring in:
A thorough-fare of news; where ſome deviſe
Things never heard, ſome mingle truth with lies:
The troubled air with empty ſounds they beat,
Intent to hear, and eager to repeat. Dryden.

In all theſe meaſures the accents are to be placed on even ſyllables; and every line conſidered by itſelf is more harmonious, as this rule is more ſtrictly obſerved. The variations neceſſary to pleaſure belong to the art of poetry, not the rules of grammar.

Our trochaick meaſures are Of three ſyllables,

Here we may Think and pray,
Before death
Stops our breath:
Other joys
Are but toys.
Walton's Angler.

Of five,
In the days of old,
Stories plainly told,
Lovers felt annoy. Old Ballad.

Of ſeven,
Faireſt piece of well-form'd earth,
Urge not thus your haughty birth. Waller.

In theſe meaſures the accent is to be placed on the odd ſyllables.

Theſe are the meaſures which are now in uſe, and above the reſt thoſe of ſeven, eight, and ten ſyllables. Our antient poets wrote verſes ſometimes of twelve ſyllables, as Drayton's Polyolbion.

Of all the Cambrian ſhires their heads that bear ſo high,
And farth'ſt ſurvey their ſoils with an ambitious eye,
Mervinia for her hills, as for their matchleſs crowds,
The neareſt that are ſaid to kiſs the wand'ring clouds,
Eſpecial audience craves, offended with the throng,
That ſhe of all the reſt neglected was ſo long;
Alleging for herſelf, when through the Saxon's pride,
The godlike race of Brute to Severn's ſetting ſide
Were cruelly inforc'd, her mountains did relieve
Thoſe whom devouring war elſe every where did grieve.
And when all Wales beſide (by fortune or by might)
Unto her ancient foe reſign'd her ancient right,
A conſtant maiden ſtill ſhe only did remain,
The laſt her genuine laws which ſtoutly did retain.
And as each one is prais'd for her peculiar things,
So only ſhe is rich in mountains, meres, and ſprings;
And holds herſelf as great in her ſuperfluous waſte,
As others by their towns and fruitful tillage grac'd.

And of fourteen, as Chapman's Homer.

And as the mind of ſuch a man, that hath a long way gone,
And either knoweth not his way, or elſe would let alone
His purpos'd journey, is diſtract.

The meaſures of twelve and fourteen ſyllables were often mingled by our old poets, ſometimes in alternate lines, and ſometimes in alternate couples.

The verſe of twelve ſyllables, called an Alexandrine, is now only uſed to diverſify heroick lines.

Waller was ſmooth, but Dryden taught to join
The varying verſe, the full-reſounding line,
The long majeſtic march, and energy divine. Pope.

The pauſe in the Alexandrine muſt be at the ſixth ſyllable.

The verſe of fourteen ſyllables is now broken into a ſoft lyrick meaſure of verſes conſiſting alternately of eight ſyllables and ſix.

She to receive thy radiant name,
Selects a whiter ſpace. Fenton.
When all ſhall praiſe, and ev'ry lay
Devote a wreath to thee,
That day, for come it will, that day
Shall I lament to ſee. Lewis to Pope.
Beneath this tomb an infant lies
To earth whoſe body lent,
Hereafter ſhall more glorious riſe,
But not more innocent.
When the Archangel's trump ſhall blow,
And ſouls to bodies join,
What crowds ſhall wiſh their lives below
Had been as ſhort as thine! Weſley.

We have another meaſure very quick and lively, and therefore much uſed in ſongs, which may be called the anapeſtick, in which the accent reſts upon every third ſyllable.

May I góvern my páſſions with ábſolute ſwáy,
And grow wíſer and bétter as lífe wears awáy. Dr. Pope.

In this meaſure a ſyllable is often retrenched from the firſt foot, as Diógenes ſúrly and proúd. Dr. Pope.

When préſent we lóve, and when ábſent agrée,
I thínk not of I'ris, nor I'ris of mé. Dryden.

Theſe meaſures are varied by many combinations, and ſometimes by double endings, either with or without rhyme, as in the heroick meaſure.

'Tis the Divinity that ſtirs within us,
'Tis Heav'n itſelf that points out an hereafter,
And intimates eternity to man. Addiſon.

So in that of eight ſyllables,

They neither added nor confounded,
They neither wanted nor abounded. Prior.

In that of ſeven,

For reſiſtance I could fear none,
But with twenty ſhips had done,
What thou, brave and happy Vernon,
Haſt atchiev'd with ſix alone. Glover.

In that of ſix,

'Twas when the ſeas were roaring,
With hollow blaſts of wind,
A damſel lay deploring,
All on a rock reclin'd. Gay.

In the anapeſtick,

When terrible tempeſts aſſail us,
And mountainous billows affright,
Nor grandeur or wealth can avail us,
But ſkilful induſtry ſteers right. Ballad.

To theſe meaſures, and their laws, may be reduced every ſpecies of Engliſh verſe.

Our verſification admits of few licences, except a ſynalæpha, or eliſion of e in the before a vowel, as th' eternal; and more rarely of a in to, as t' accept; and a ſynæreſis, by which two ſhort vowels coaleſce into one ſyllable, as queſtion, ſpecial; or a word is contracted by the expulſion of a ſhort vowel before a liquid, as av'rice, temp'rance.

Thus have I collected rules and examples, by which the Engliſh language may be learned, if the reader be already acquainted with grammatical terms, or taught by a maſter to thoſe that are more ignorant. To have written a grammar for ſuch as are not yet initiated in the ſchools, would have been tedious, and perhaps at laſt ineffectual.

OF THE
ENGLISH LANGUAGE.

A, THE firſt letter of the European alphabets, has, in the Engliſh language, three different ſounds; which may be termed the broad, open, and ſlender.

The broad ſound, reſembling that of the German a, is found in many of our monoſyllables, as all, wall, malt, ſalt; in which a is pronounced as au in cauſe, or aw in law. Many of theſe words were anciently written with au, as ſault, waulk; which happens to be ſtill retained in fault. This was probably the ancient ſound of the Saxons, ſince it is almoſt uniformly preſerved in the ruſtic pronunciation, and the Northern dialects, as maun for man, baund for band.

open, not unlike the a of the Italians, is found in father, rather, and more obſcurely in fancy, faſt, &c.

, ſlender or cloſe, is the peculiar a of the Engliſh language, reſembling the ſound of the French e maſculine, or diphthong ai in païs; or perhaps a middle ſound between them, or between the a and e: to this the Arabic a is ſaid nearly to approach. Of this ſound we have examples in the words place, face, waſte; and all thoſe that terminate in ation, as relation, nation, generation.

is ſhort, as, glaſs, graſs; or long, as, glaze, graze: it is marked long, generally, by an e final, plane; or by an i added, as plain. The ſhort a is open, the long a cloſe.

. A, an article ſet before nouns of the ſingular number; a man, a tree, denoting the number one; as, a man is coming, that is, no more than one; or an indefinite indication, as, a man may come this way, that is, any man. This article has no plural ſignification. Before a word beginning with a vowel, it is written an; as, an ox, an egg, of which a is the contraction.

2. A, taken materially, or for itſelf, is a noun; as, a great A, a little a.

3. A is placed before a participle, or participial noun; and is conſidered by Wallis as a contraction of at, when it is put before a word denoting ſome action not yet finiſhed; as, I am a walking. It alſo ſeems to be anciently contracted from at, when placed before local ſurnames; as, Thomas a Becket. In other caſes, it ſeems to ſignify to, like the French à.

A hunting Chloe went. Prior.

They go a begging to a bankrupt's door. Dryden.

May peace ſtill ſlumber by theſe purling fountains!
Which we may every year
Find, when we come a fiſhing here. Wotton.

Now the men fell a rubbing of armour, which a great while had lain oiled. Wotton.

He will knap the ſpears a pieces with his teeth. Mores Antid. Athm.

Another falls a ringing a Peſcennius Niger, and judiciouſly diſtinguiſhes the ſound of it to be modern. Addiſon on Medals.

4. A has a peculiar ſignification, denoting the proportion of one thing to another. Thus we ſay, The landlord hath a hundred a year; The ſhip's crew gained a thouſand pounds a man.

The river Inn paſſes through a wide open country, during all its courſe through Bavaria; which is a voyage of two days, after the rate of twenty leagues a day. Addiſon on Italy.

5. A is uſed in burleſque poetry, to lengthen out a ſyllable, without adding to the ſenſe.

For cloves and nutmegs to the line-a,
And even for oranges to China. Dryden.

6. A is ſometimes, in familiar writings, put by a barbarous corruption for he; as, will a come, for will he come.

7. A, in compoſition, ſeems to have ſometimes the power of the French a in theſe phraſes, a droit, a gauche, &c. and ſometimes to be contracted from at; as, aſide, aſlope, afoot, aſleep, athirſt, aware.

I gin to be a weary of the ſun;
And wiſh the ſtate of th' world were now undone.
Shakeſpeare's Macbeth.

And now a breeze from ſhore began to blow,
The ſailors ſhip their oars, and ceaſe to row;
Then hoiſt their yards a-trip, and all their ſails
Let fall, to court the wind, and catch the gales.
Dryden's Ceyx and Alcyone.

A little houſe with trees a row,
And, like its maſter, very low. Pope, Hor.

8. A is ſometimes redundant; as, ariſe, arouſe, awake; the ſame with riſe, rouſe, wake.

9. A, in abbreviations, ſtands for artium, or arts; as, A. B. batchelor of arts, artium baccalaureus; A. M. maſter of arts, artium magiſter; or, anno; as, A. D. anno domini.

AB, åb, at the beginning of the names of places, generally ſhews that they have ſome relation to an abbey, as Abingdon. Gibſon.

ABA'CKE, å-båk'. adv. [from back.] Backwards. Obſolete.

But when they came where thou thy ſkill didſt ſhow,
They drew abacke, as half with ſhame confound.
Spenſ. Paſt.

ABA'CTOR, å-båk'-tỏr. n. ſ. [Latin.] One who drives away or ſteals cattle in herds, or great numbers at once; in diſtinction from thoſe that ſteal only a ſheep or two. Blount.

A'BACUS, åb'-å-kůs. n. ſ. [Latin.]

1. A counting-table, anciently uſed in calculations.

2. [In architecture.] The uppermoſt member of a column, which ſerves as a ſort of crowning both to the capital and column. Dict.

ABA'FT, å-båf't. adv. [of abaftan, Sax. behind.] From the fore-part of the ſhip, towards the ſtern. Dict.

ABAI'SANCE, å-bå'-ſånſe. n. ſ. [from the French abaiſer, to depreſs, to bring down.] An act of reverence, a bow. Obeyſance is conſidered by Skinner as a corruption of abaiſance, but is now univerſally uſed.

To ABALIENATE, åb-å′-lyê-nåte. v. a. [from abalieno, Lat.] To make that another's, which was our own before. A term of the civil law, not much uſed in common ſpeech.

Abaliena'tion, åb-å-lyê-nå′-ſhûn. n. ſ. [Lat. abalienatio.] The act of giving up one's right to another perſon; or a making over an eſtate, goods, or chattels by ſale, or due courſe of law. Dict.

To Aba'nd, å-bån′d. v. a. [A word contracted from abandon, but not now in uſe. See Abandon.] To forſake.

They ſtronger are
Than they which ſought at firſt their helping hand,
And Vortiger enforced the kingdom to aband.
Spenſer's Fairy Queen, b. ii. cant. 10.

To ABA'NDON, å-bån′-dûn. v. a. [Fr. abandonner. Derived, according to Menage, from the Italian abandonare, which ſignifies to forſake his colours; bandum [vexillum] deſerere. Paſquier thinks it a coalition of a ban donner, to give up to a proſcription; in which ſenſe we, at this day, mention the ban of the empire. Ban, in our own old dialect, ſignifies a curſe; and to abandon, if conſidered as compounded between French and Saxon, is exactly equivalent to diris devovere.]

1. To give up, reſign, or quit; often followed by the particle to.

If ſhe be ſo abandon'd to her ſorrow,
As it is ſpoke, ſhe never will admit me.
Shakeſp. Twelfth Night.

The paſſive gods behold the Greeks defile
Their temples, and abandon to the ſpoil
Their own abodes; we, feeble few, conſpire
To ſave a ſinking town, involv'd in fire.
Dryd. Æneid.

Who is he ſo abandoned to ſottiſh credulity, as to think, that a clod of earth in a ſack, may ever, by eternal ſhaking, receive the fabric of man's body? Bentley's Sermons.

Muſt he, whoſe altars on the Phrygian ſhore,
With frequent rites, and pure, avow'd thy pow'r,
Be doom'd the worſt of human ills to prove,
Unbleſs'd, abandon'd to the wrath of Jove?
Pope's Odyſſey, b. i. l. 80.

2. To deſert; to forſake: in an ill ſenſe.

The princes uſing the paſſions of fearing evil, and deſiring to eſcape, only to ſerve the rule of virtue, not to abandon one's ſelf, leapt to a rib of the ſhip. Sidney, b. ii.

Seeing the hurt ſtag alone,
Left and abandon'd of his velvet friends,
'Tis right, quoth he; thus miſery doth part
The flux of company. Shakeſp. As you like it.

What fate a wretched fugitive attends,
Scorn'd by my foes, abandon'd by my friends.
Dryd. Æneid, 2.

But to the parting goddeſs thus ſhe pray'd;
Propitious ſtill be preſent to my aid,
Nor quite abandon your once-favour'd maid.
Dryd. Fab.

3. To forſake, to leave.

He boldly ſpake, Sir knight, if knight thou be,
Abandon this foreſtalled place at erſt,
For fear of further harm, I counſel thee.
Spenſer's Fairy Queen, b. ii. cant. 4. ſtanz. 39.

To Aba'ndon o'ver, å-bån′-dûn-ô′-vûr. v. a. [a form of writing not uſual, perhaps not exact.] To give up to, to reſign.

Look on me as a man abandon'd o'er
To an eternal lethargy of love;
To pull, and pinch, and wound me, cannot cure,
And but diſturb the quiet of my death.
Dryd. Sp. Friar.

Aba'ndoned, å-bån′-dûnd. particip. adj. Corrupted in the higheſt degree; as, an abandoned wretch. In this ſenſe, it is a contraction of a longer form, abandoned [given up] to wickedneſs.

Aba'ndoning, å-bån′-dûn-îng. [A verbal noun from abandon.] Deſertion, forſaking.

He hoped his paſt meritorious actions might outweigh his preſent abandoning the thought of future action. Clarend. b. viii.

Aba'ndonment, å-bån′-dûn-mênt. n. ſ. [abandonnement, Fr.]

1. The act of abandoning.

2. The ſtate of being abandoned. Dict.

Abanni'tion, å-bån-nî′-ſhûn. n. ſ. [Lat. abannitio.] A baniſhment for one or two years, for manſlaughter. Obſolete. Dict.

To Aba're, å-bå′re. v. a. [abarian, Sax.] To make bare, uncover, or diſcloſe. Dict.

Abarticula'tion, åb-år-tîk′-û-lå″-ſhûn. n. ſ. [from ab, from, and articulus, a joint, Lat.] A good and apt conſtruction of the bones, by which they move ſtrongly and eaſily; or that ſpecies of articulation that has manifeſt motion. Dict.

To Aba'se, å-bå′ſe. v. a. [Fr. abaiſſer, from the Lat. baſis, or baſſus, a barbarous word, ſignifying low, baſe.]

1. To depreſs, to lower.

It is a point of cunning to wait upon him with whom you ſpeak with your eye; yet with a demure abaſing of it ſometimes. Bacon.

2. To caſt down, to depreſs, to bring low, in a figurative and perſonal ſenſe, which is the common uſe.

Happy ſhepherd, to the gods be thankful, that to thy advancement their wiſdoms have thee abaſed. Sidney, b. i.

Behold every one that is proud, and abaſe him.
Job, xl. 11.

With unreſiſted might the monarch reigns;
He levels mountains, and he raiſes plains;
And, not regarding diff'rence of degree,
Abas'd your daughter, and exalted me.
Dryd. Fables.

If the mind be curbed and humbled too much in children; if their ſpirits be abaſed and broken much by too ſtrict an hand over them; they loſe all their vigour and induſtry.
Locke on Education, §. 46.

Aba'sed, å-bå′-ſêd. adj. [with heralds] a term uſed of the wings of eagles, when the top looks downwards towards the point of the ſhield; or when the wings are ſhut; the natural way of bearing them being ſpread with the top pointing to the chief of the angle. Bailey. Chambers.

Aba'sement, å-bå′ſe-mênt. n. ſ. The ſtate of being brought low; the act of bringing low; depreſſion.

There is an abaſement becauſe of glory; and there is that lifteth up his head from a low eſtate. Eccleſiaſticus, xx. 11.

To Aba'sh, å-båſh′. v. a. [See Bashful. Perhaps from abaiſſer, French.]

1. To put into confuſion; to make aſhamed. It generally implies a ſudden impreſſion of ſhame.

They heard, and were abaſh'd.
Milton's Paradiſe Loſt, b. i. l. 331.

This heard, th' imperious queen ſat mute with fear;
Nor further durſt incenſe the gloomy thunderer.
Silence was in the court at this rebuke:
Nor could the gods, abaſh'd, ſuſtain their ſovereign's look. Dryden's Fables.

2. The paſſive admits the particle at, ſometimes of, before the caſual noun.

In no wiſe ſpeak againſt the truth, but be abaſhed of the error of thy ignorance. Eccles. iv. 25.

I ſaid unto her, from whence is this kid? Is it not ſtolen? But ſhe replied upon me, it was given for a gift, more than the wages: however, I did not believe her, and I was abaſhed at her.
Tob. ii. 13, 14.

In the admiration only of weak minds
Led captive: ceaſe t' admire, and all her plumes
Fall flat, and ſink into a trivial toy,
At every ſudden ſlighting quite abaſht.
Milton's Paradiſe Loſt, b. ii. l. 223.

The little Cupids hov'ring round,
(As pictures prove) with garlands crown'd,
Abaſh'd at what they ſaw and heard,
Flew off, nor ever more appear'd.
Swift's Miſcellanies.

To ABATE, å-bå′te. v. a. [from the French abbatre, to beat down.]

1. To leſſen, to diminiſh.

Who can tell whether the divine wiſdom, to abate the glory of thoſe kings, did not reſerve this work to be done by a queen; that it might appear to be his own immediate work?
Sir John Davies on Ireland.

If you did know to whom I gave the ring;
And how unwillingly I left the ring,
You would abate the ſtrength of your diſpleaſure.
Shakeſpeare.

Here we ſee the hopes of great benefit and light from expoſitors and commentators, are in a great part abated; and thoſe who have moſt need of their help, can receive but little from them.
Locke's Eſſay on St. Paul's Epiſtles.

2. To deject, or depreſs the mind.

This iron world
Brings down the ſtouteſt hearts to loweſt ſtate;
For miſery doth braveſt minds abate.
Spenſ. Hubberd's Tale.

Have the power ſtill
To baniſh your defenders, till at length
Your ignorance deliver you,
As moſt abated captives to ſome nation
That won you without blows? Shakeſp. Coriol.

Time that changes all, yet changes us in vain;
The body, not the mind; nor can controul
Th' immortal vigour, or abate the ſoul.
Dryd. Æneid.

3. In commerce, to let down the price in ſelling, ſometimes to beat down the price in buying.

To Aba'te, å-bå′te. v. n.

1. To grow leſs; as, his paſſion abates; the ſtorm abates. It is uſed ſometimes with the particle of before the thing leſſened.

Our phyſicians have obſerved, that in proceſs of time, ſome diſeaſes have abated of their virulence, and have, in a manner, worn out their malignity, ſo as to be no longer mortal.
Dryden's Hind and Panther.

2. [In common law.]

It is in law uſed both actively and neuterly; as, to abate a caſtle, to beat it down; to abate a writ, is, by ſome exception, to defeat or overthrow it. A ſtranger abateth; that is, entereth upon a houſe or land void by the death of him that laſt poſſeſſed it, before the heir take his poſſeſſion; and ſo keepeth him out. Wherefore, as he that putteth out him in poſſeſſion, is ſaid to diſſeiſe; ſo he that ſteppeth in between the former poſſeſſor and his heir, is ſaid to abate. In the neuter ſignification thus: The writ of the demandant ſhall abate; that is, ſhall be diſabled, fruſtrated, or overthrown. The appeal abateth by covin; that is, that the accuſation is defeated by deceit. Cowell.

3. [In horſemanſhip.] A horſe is ſaid to abate or take down his curvets; when, working upon curvets, he puts his two hind legs to the ground both at once, and obſerves the ſame exactneſs in all the times. Dict.

Aba'tement, å-bå′te-mênt. n. ſ. [abatement, Fr.]

1. The act of abating or leſſening.

Xenophon tells us, that the city contained about ten thouſand houſes; and allowing one man to every houſe, who could have any ſhare in the government (the reſt conſiſting of women, children, and ſervants), and making other obvious abatements, theſe tyrants, if they had been careful to adhere together, might have been a majority even of the people collective.

Swift on the Conteſts of Athens and Rome.

2. The ſtate of being abated.

Coffee has, in common with all nuts, an oil ſtrongly combined and entangled with earthy particles. The moſt noxious part of the oil exhales in roaſting, to the abatement of near one quarter of its weight. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

The ſum or quantity taken away by the act of abating.

The law of works is that law, which requires perfect obedience, without remiſſion or abatement; ſo that, by that law, a man cannot be juſt, or juſtified, without an exact performance of every tittle. Locke.

The cauſe of abating; extenuation.

As our advantages towards practiſing and promoting piety and virtue were greater than thoſe of other men, ſo will our excuſe be leſs, if we neglect to make uſe of them. We cannot plead in abatement of our guilt, that we were ignorant of our duty, under the prepoſſeſſion of ill habits, and the bias of a wrong education. Atterbury's Sermons.

[In law.] The act of the abator; as, the abatement of the heir into the land before he hath agreed with the lord. The affection or paſſion of the thing abated; as, abatement of the writ. Cowell.

[With heralds.] An accidental mark, which being added to a coat of arms, the dignity of it is abaſed, by reaſon of ſome ſtain or diſhonourable quality of the bearer. Dict.

BA'TER, å-bå'-tůr. n. ſ. The agent or cauſe by which an abatement is procured; that by which any thing is leſſened.

Abaters of acrimony or ſharpneſs, are expreſſed oils of ripe vegetables, and all preparations of ſuch; as of almonds, piſtachioes, and other nuts. Arbuthnot on Diet.

BA'TOR, å-bå'-tůr. n. ſ. [a law term.] One who intrudes into houſes or land, void by the death of the former poſſeſſor, and yet not entered upon or taken up by his heir. Dict.

BATUDE, å'-bå-tůd. n. ſ. [old records.] Any thing diminiſhed. Bailey.

BATURE, å'-bå-tůr. n. ſ. [from abatre, French.] Thoſe ſprigs of graſs which are thrown down by a ſtag in his paſſing by. Dict.

B, åb'. n. ſ. The yarn on a weaver's warp; a term among clothiers. Chambers.

BBA, åb'-bå. n. ſ. [Heb. אבא] A Syriac word, which ſignifies father.

BBACY, åb'-bå-ſŷ. n. ſ. [Lat. abbatia.] The rights or privileges of an abbot. See Abbey.

According to Felinus, an abbacy is the dignity itſelf, ſince an abbot is a term or word of dignity, and not of office; and, therefore, even a ſecular perſon, who has the care of ſouls, is ſometimes, in the canon law, alſo ſtiled an abbot.

Ayliffe's Parergon Juris Canonici.

BBESS, åb'-beſs. n. ſ. [Lat. abbatiſſa, from whence the Saxon abudiſſe, then probably abbateſs, and by contraction abbeſſe in Fr. and abbeſs, Eng.] The ſuperiour or governeſs of a nunnery or monaſtery of women.

They fled
Into this abbey, whither we purſued them;
And here the abbeſs ſhuts the gate on us,
And will not ſuffer us to fetch him out.

Shakeſ. Com. of Errors.

I have a ſiſter, abbeſs in Terceras,
Who loſt her lover on her bridal-day.

Dryd. D. Sebaſt.

Conſtantia, as ſoon as the ſolemnities of her reception were over, retired with the abbeſs into her own apartment. Addiſon.

A'bbey, or Abby, åb'-bŷ. n. ſ. [Lat. abbatia; from whence probably firſt Abbacy; which ſee.] A monaſtery of religious perſons, whether men or women; diſtinguiſhed from religious houſes of other denominations by larger privileges. See Abbot.

With eaſy roads he came to Leiceſter;
Lodg'd in the abbey, where the reverend abbot,
With all his convent, honourably received him.

Shakeſ.

A'bbey-Lub'ber, åb'-bŷ-lůb'-bůr. n. ſ. [See Lubber.] A ſlothful loiterer in a religious houſe, under pretence of retirement and auſterity.

This is no Father Dominic, no huge overgrown abbey-lubber; this is but a diminutive ſucking friar. Dryd. Sp. Fr.

A'BBOT, åb'-bůt. n. ſ. [in the lower Latin abbas, from אב father, which ſenſe was ſtill implied; ſo that the abbots were called patres, and abbeſſes matres monaſterii. Thus Fortunatus to the abbot Paternus: Nominis officium jure, Paterne, geris.] The chief of a convent, or fellowſhip of canons. Of theſe, ſome in England were mitred, ſome not: thoſe that were mitred, were exempted from the juriſdiction of the dioceſan, having in themſelves epiſcopal authority within their precincts, and being alſo lords of parliament. The other ſort were ſubject to the dioceſan in all ſpiritual goverment. Cowell.

See Abbey.

A'bbotship, åb-'bůt-ſhip. n. ſ. The ſtate or privilege of an abbot. Dict.

To ABBRE'VIATE, åb-brê'-vyåte. v. a. [Lat. abbreviare.]

1. To ſhorten by contraction of parts without loſs of the main ſubſtance; to abridge.

It is one thing to abbreviate by contracting, another by cutting off. Bacon, Eſſay 26.

The only invention of late years, which hath contributed towards politeneſs in diſcourſe, is that of abbreviating or reducing words of many ſyllables into one, by lopping off the reſt. Swift.

2. To ſhorten, to cut ſhort.

Set the length of their days before the flood; which were abbreviated after, and contracted into hundreds and threeſcores.

Brown's Vulgar Errours, b. vi. c. 6.

Abbrevia'tion, åb-brêv-yå'-ſhůn. n. ſ.

1. The act of abbreviating.
2. The means uſed to abbreviate, as characters ſignifying whole words; words contracted.

Such is the propriety and energy in them all, that they never can be changed, but to diſadvantage, except in the circumſtance of uſing abbreviations. Swift.

Abbrevia'tor, åb-brêv-yå'-tůr. n. ſ. [abbreviateur, Fr.] One who abbreviates, or abridges.

Abbre'viature, åb-brê'-vyå-tůre. n. ſ. [abbreviatura, Lat.]

1. A mark uſed for the ſake of ſhortening.
2. A compendium or abridgment.

He is a good man, who grieves rather for him that injures him, than for his own ſuffering; who prays for him that wrongs him, forgiving all his faults; who ſooner ſhews mercy than anger; who offers violence to his appetite, in all things endeavouring to ſubdue the fleſh to the ſpirit. This is an excellent abbreviature of the whole duty of a Chriſtian. Taylor's Guide to Devotion.

ABBREUVOI'R, åb-brê'-voir. [in French a watering-place. Ital. abbeverato, dal verbo bevere. Lat. bibere. Abbeverari i cavalli. This word is derived by Menage, not much acquainted with the Teutonic dialects, from adbibare for adbibere; but more probably it comes from the ſame root with brew. See Brew.] Among maſons, the joint or juncture of two ſtones, or the interſtice between two ſtones to be filled up with mortar. Dict.

A'bby, åb'-bŷ. See Abbey.

A, B, C, å, bê, ſê.

1. The alphabet; as, he has not learned his a, b, c.
2. The little book by which the elements of reading are taught.

Then comes queſtion like an a, b, c, book.

Shakeſpeare.

To A'BDICATE, åb-dŷ-kåte. v. a. [Lat. abdico.] To give up right; to reſign; to lay down an office.

Old Saturn, here, with upcaſt eyes,
Beheld his abdicated ſkies. Addiſon.

Abdica'tion, åb-dŷ-kå'-ſhůn. n. ſ. [abdicatio, Lat.] The act of abdicating; reſignation; quitting an office by one's own proper act before the uſual or ſtated expiration.

Neither doth it appear how a prince's abdication can make any other ſort of vacancy in the throne, than would be cauſed by his death; ſince he cannot abdicate for his children, otherwiſe than by his own conſent in form to a bill from the two houſes.

Swift on the Sentiments of a Church of England Man.

A'bdicative, åb-dik'-kå-tiv. adj. That which cauſes or implies an abdication. Dict.

A'bdicative, åb-dik'-kå-tiv. adj. [from abdo, to hide.] That which has the power or quality of hiding. Dict.

ABDO'MEN, åb-dô'-mên. n. ſ. [Lat. from abdo, to hide.] A cavity commonly called the lower venter or belly: It contains the ſtomach, guts, liver, ſpleen, bladder, and is within lined with a membrane called the peritonæum. The lower part is called the hypogaſtrium; the foremoſt part is divided into the epigaſtrium, the right and left hypochondria, and the navel; 'tis bounded above by the cartilago enſiformis and the diaphragm, ſideways by the ſhort or lower ribs, and behind by the vertebræ of the loins, the bones of the coxendix, that of the pubes, and os ſacrum. It is covered with ſeveral muſcles, from whoſe alternate relaxations and contractions in reſpiration, digeſtion is forwarded, and the due motion of all the parts therein contained promoted, both for ſecretion and expulſion. Quincy.

The abdomen conſiſts of parts containing and contained. Wiſeman's Surgery.

Abdo'minal, åb-dôm'-mi-nål. } adj. Relating to Abdo'minous, åb-dôm'-mi-nůs. } the abdomen.

To ABDU'CE, åb-dů'ſe. v. a. [Lat. abduco.] To draw to a different part; to withdraw one part from another. A word chiefly uſed in phyſic or ſcience.

If we abduce the eye unto either corner, the object will not duplicate; for, in that poſition, the axis of the cones remain in the ſame plain, as is demonſtrated in the optics delivered by Galen.

Brown's Vulgar Errours, b. iii. c. 20.

ABDU′CENT, ăb-dŭ′-ſènt. adj. Muſcles abducent are thoſe which ſerve to open or pull back divers parts of the body; their oppoſites being called adducent. Dict.

ABDUC′TION, ăb-dŭk′-ſhŭn. n. ſ. [abductio, Lat.]

1. The art of drawing apart, or withdrawing one part from another.

2. A particular form of argument.

ABDU′CTOR, ăb-dŭk′-tòr. n. ſ. [abductor, Lat.] The name given by anatomiſts to the muſcles, which ſerve to draw back the ſeveral members.

He ſuppoſed the conſtrictors of the eyelids muſt be ſtrengthened in the ſupercilious; the abductors in drunkards, and contemplative men, who have the ſame ſteady and grave motion of the eye.
Arbuthnot and Pope's Martinus Scriblerus.

ABECEDA′RIAN, å-bè-ſè-då′-ryăn. n. ſ. [from the names of a, b, c, the three firſt letters of the alphabet.] He that teaches or learns the alphabet, or firſt rudiments of literature.

This word is uſed by Wood in his Athenæ Oxonienſes, where mentioning Farnaby the critic, he relates, that, in ſome part of his life, he was reduced to follow the trade of an abecedarian by his misfortunes.

A′BECEDARY, å-bè-ſè-då′-rỳ. adj. [See ABECEDARIAN.]

1. Belonging to the alphabet.

2. Inſcribed with the alphabet.

This is pretended from the ſympathy of two needles touched with the loadſtone, and placed in the centre of two abecedary circles, or rings of letters, deſcribed round about them, one friend keeping one, and another the other, and agreeing upon an hour wherein they will communicate.
Brown's Vulgar Errours, b. ii. c. 3.

ABE′D, å-bĕd′. adv. [from a, for at, and bed.] In bed.

It was a ſhame for them to mar their complexions, yea and conditions too, with long lying abed: when ſhe was of their age, ſhe would have made a handkerchief by that time o'day.
Sydney, b. ii.

She has not been abed, but in her chapel
All night devoutly watch'd. Dryd. Span. Friar.

ABE′RRANCE, ăb-ĕr′-rănſe. } n. ſ. [from ab-
ABE′RRANCY, ăb-ĕr′-răn-ſỳ. } erro, Lat. to wander from the right way.] A deviation from the right way; an errour; a miſtake; a falſe opinion.

They do not only ſwarm with errours, but vices depending thereon. Thus they commonly affect no man any farther than he deſerts his reaſon, or complies with their aberrancies.
Brown's Vulgar Errours, b. i. c. 3.

Could a man be compoſed to ſuch an advantage of conſtitution, that it ſhould not at all adulterate the images of his mind; yet this ſecond nature would alter the craſis of his underſtanding, and render it as obnoxious to aberrances, as now.
Glanville's Scepſis Scientifica, c. 16.

ABE′RRANT, ăb-ĕr′-rănt. adj. [from aberrans, Lat.] Deviating, wandering from the right or known way. Dict.

ABERRA′TION, ăb-ĕr-rå′-ſhŭn. n. ſ. [from aberratio, Lat.] The act of deviating from the common or from the right track.

If it be a miſtake, there is no hereſy in ſuch an harmleſs aberration; the probability of it will render it a lapſe of eaſy pardon.
Glanville's Scepſis Scientifica, c. 11.

ABE′RRING, ăb-ĕr′-ring. part. [from the verb aberr, of aberro, Lat.] Wandering, going aſtray.

Of the verb aberr I have found no example.

Divers were out in their account, aberring ſeveral ways from the true and juſt compute, and calling that one year, which perhaps might be another.
Brown's Vulgar Errours, b. iv. c. 12.

To ABERU′NCATE, ăb-ê-rŭn′-kåte. v. a. [averunco, Lat.] To pull up by the roots; to extirpate utterly. Dict.

To ABE′T, å-bĕt′. v. a. [from betan, Sax. ſignifying to enkindle or animate.] To puſh forward another, to ſupport him in his deſigns, by connivance, encouragement, or help. It was once indifferent, but is almoſt always taken by modern writers in an ill ſenſe; as may be ſeen in ABETTER.

To abet ſignifieth, in our common law, as much as to encourage or ſet on. Cowell.

Then ſhall I ſoon, quoth he, return again,
Abet that virgin's cauſe diſconſolate,
And ſhortly back return. Fairy Queen, b. i.

A widow who by ſolemn vows,
Contracted to me, for my ſpouſe,
Combin'd with him to break her word,
And has abetted all. Hudibras, p. iii. cant. 3.

Men lay ſo great weight upon right opinions, and eagerneſs of abetting them, that they account that the unum neceſſarium. Decay of Piety.

They abetted both parties in the civil war, and always furniſhed ſupplies to the weaker ſide, leſt there ſhould be an end put to theſe fatal diviſions.
Addiſon. Freeholder, N° 28.

ABE′TMENT, å-bĕt′-mènt. n. ſ. The act of abetting. Dict.

ABE′TTER, or ABE′TTOR, å-bĕt′-tŭr. n. ſ. He that abets; the ſupporter or encourager of another.

Whilſt calumny has two ſuch potent abbettors, we are not to wonder at its growth: as long as men are malicious and deſigning, they will be traducing. Govern. of the Tongue.

You ſhall be ſtill plain Torriſmond with me,
Th' abettor, partner (if you like the name),
The huſband of a tyrant, but no king;
Till you deſerve that title by your juſtice.
Dryden's Spaniſh Friar.

Theſe conſiderations, though they may have no influence on the multitude, ought to ſink into the minds of thoſe who are their abettors, and who, if they eſcape puniſhment here, muſt know, that theſe ſeveral miſchiefs will be one day laid to their charge. Addiſon. Freeholder, N° 30.

ABEY′ANCE, å-bè′-yănſe. n. ſ. [from the French aboyer, allatrare, to bark at.] This word, in Littleton, cap. Diſcontinuance, is thus uſed. The right of fee-ſimple lieth in abeyance, when it is all only in the remembrance, intendment and conſideration of the law. The frank tenement of the glebe of the parſonage, is in no man during the time that the parſonage is void, but is in abeyance. Cowell.

ABGREGA′TION, ăb-grê-gå′-ſhŭn. n. ſ. [abgregatio, Lat.] A ſeparation from the flock. Dict.

To ABHO′R, ăb-hòr′. v. a. [abhorreo, Lat.] To hate with acrimony; to deteſt to extremity; to loath; to abominate.

Whilſt I was big in clamour, came a man,
Who having ſeen me in my worſer ſtate,
Shunn'd my abhorr'd ſociety.
Shakeſpeare's K. Lear.

Juſtly thou abhorr'ſt
That ſon, who on the quiet ſtate of man
Such trouble brought, affecting to ſubdue
Rational liberty. Milt. Parad. Loſt, b. xii. l. 79.

The ſelf-ſame thing they will abhor
One way, and long another for.
Hudibras, p. i. cant. 1.

A church of England man abhors the humour of the age, in delighting to fling ſcandals upon the clergy in general; which, beſides the diſgrace to the reformation, and to religion itſelf, caſt an ignominy upon the kingdom. Swift. Ch. of Eng.

ABHO′RRENCE, ăb-hòr′-rènſe. } n. ſ. [from ABHO′RRENCY, ăb-hòr′-rèn-ſy. } abhor.]

1. The act of abhorring, deteſtation.

It draws upon him the hatred and abhorrence of all men here; and ſubjects him to the wrath of God hereafter. South's Sermons.

2. The diſpoſition to abhor, hatred.

Even a juſt and neceſſary defence does, by giving men acquaintance with war, take off ſomewhat from the abhorrence of it, and inſenſibly diſpoſe them to hoſtilities. Decay of Piety.

The firſt tendency to any injuſtice that appears, muſt be ſuppreſſed with a ſhow of wonder and abhorrency in the parents and governours.
Locke on Education, § 110.

ABHO′RRENT, ăb-hòr′-rènt. adj [from abhor.]

1. Struck with abhorrence; loathing.

For if the worlds
In worlds inclos'd could on his ſenſes burſt,
He would abhorrent turn.
Thomſon's Summer, l. 310.

2. Contrary to, foreign from, inconſiſtent with. It is uſed with the particles from or to, but more properly with from.

This I conceive to be an hypotheſis, well worthy a rational belief; and yet it is ſo abhorrent from the vulgar, that they would as ſoon believe Anaxagoras, that ſnow is black, as him that ſhould affirm it is not white.
Glanville's Scepſis Scient. c. 11.

Why then theſe foreign thoughts of ſtate employments,
Abhorrent to your function and your breeding?
Poor droning truants of unpractis'd cells,
Bred in the fellowſhip of bearded boys,
What wonder is it if you know not men?
Dryden.

ABHO′RRER, ăb-hòr′-rŭr. n. ſ. [from abhor.] The perſon that abhors; a hater; deteſter.

The lower clergy were railed at, for diſputing the power of the biſhops, by the known abhorrence of epiſcopacy, and abuſed for doing nothing in the convocations, by theſe very men who wanted to bind up their hands.
Swift. Examiner, N° 21.

ABHO′RRING, ăb-hòr′-ing. The object of abhorrence. This ſeems not to be the proper uſe of the participial noun.

They ſhall go forth, and look upon the carcaſes of the men that have tranſgreſſed againſt Me: for their worm ſhall not die, neither ſhall their fire be quenched, and they ſhall be an abhorring unto all fleſh. Iſaiah, lxvi. 24.

To ABI′DE, å-bì′de. v. n. I abode or abid. [from biðian, or aubiðian, Sax.]

1. To dwell in a place; not remove; to ſtay.

Thy ſervant became ſurety for the lad unto my father, ſaying, if I bring him not unto thee, then I ſhall bear the blame to my father for ever. Now therefore I pray thee, let thy ſervant abide inſtead of the lad, a bondman to my lord; and let the lad go up with his brethren. Gen. xliv. 32, 33.

2. To dwell.

The Marquis Dorſet, as I hear, is fled
To Richmond, in the parts where he abides.
Shakeſp. Richard III.

Thoſe who apply themſelves to learning, are forced to acknowledge one God, incorruptible and unbegotten; who is the only true being, and abides for ever above the higheſt heavens, from whence He beholds all the things that are done in heaven and earth.
Stillingfl. Defence of Diſc. on Rom. Idol.

To remain; not ceaſe or fail; to be immovable.

They that truſt in the Lord ſhall be as mount Zion, which cannot be removed, but abideth for ever. Pſalm cxxv. 1.

To continue in the ſame ſtate.

The fear of the Lord tendeth to life; and he that hath it ſhall abide ſatisfied. Prov. xix. 23.

There can be no ſtudy without time; and the mind muſt abide and dwell upon things, or be always a ſtranger to the inſide of them. South.

To endure without offence, anger, or contradiction.

Who can abide, that, againſt their own doctors, ſix whole books ſhould by their fatherhoods be imperiouſly obtruded upon God and his church? Hall.

It is uſed with the particle with before a perſon, and at or in before a place.

It is better that I give her to thee, than that I ſhould give her to another man: Abide with me. Gen. xxix. 19.

For thy ſervant vowed a vow, while I abode at Geſhur in Syria, ſaying, if the Lord ſhall bring me again indeed to Jeruſalem, then I will ſerve the Lord. 2 Sam. xv. 8.

It is uſed with by before a thing; as, to abide by his teſtimony; to abide by his own ſkill; that is, to rely upon them; to abide by an opinion; to maintain it; to abide by a man, is alſo, to defend or ſupport him. But theſe forms are ſomething low.

Of the participle abid, I have found only the example in Woodward, and ſhould rather determine that abide in the active ſenſe has no paſſive participle, or compounded preterite.

Abi'de, å-bī'de. v. a.

To wait for, expect, attend, wait upon, await; uſed of things prepared for perſons, as well as of perſons expecting things.

Home is he brought, and laid in ſumptuous bed,
Where many ſkilful leeches him abide,
To ſalve his hurts. Fairy Queen, b. i. c. 5. ſt. 17.

While lions war, and battle for their dens,
Poor harmleſs lambs abide their enmity.
Shakeſ. Hen. VI. p. 3.

Bonds and afflictions abide me. Acts, xx. 23.

To bear or ſupport the conſequences of a thing.

Ah me! they little know
How dearly I abide that boaſt ſo vain.
Milton's Par. Loſt.

To bear or ſupport, without being conquered or deſtroyed.

But the Lord he is the true God, he is the living God, and an everlaſting king: At his wrath the earth ſhall tremble, and the nations ſhall not be able to abide his indignation. Jer. x. 10.

It muſt be allowed a fair preſumption in favour of the truth of my doctrines, that they have abid a very rigorous teſt now for above thirty years, and the more ſtrictly they are looked into, the more they are confirmed. Woodward, Letter i.

To bear without averſion; in which ſenſe it is commonly uſed with a negative.

Thou canſt not abide Tiridates; this is but love of thyſelf. Sidney, b. ii.

Thy vile race,
Though thou didſt learn, had that in't, which good natures
Could not abide to be with; therefore waſt thou
Deſervedly confin'd unto this rock.
Shakeſp. Tempeſt.

To bear or ſuffer.

Girt with circumfluous tides,
He ſtill calamitous conſtraint abides.
Pope's Odyſſ. b. iv. l. 750.

Abi'der, å-bī'-dŭr. n. ſ. [from abide.] The perſon that abides or dwells in a place; perhaps that lives or endures. A word little in uſe.

Abi'ding, å-bī'-dĭng. n. ſ. [from abide.] Continuance; ſtay; fixed ſtate.

We are ſtrangers before Thee and ſojourners, as were all our fathers: our days on the earth are as a ſhadow, and there is none abiding. 1 Chron. xxix. 15.

The air in that region is ſo violently removed, and carried about with ſuch ſwiftneſs, as nothing in that place can conſiſt or have abiding. Rawleigh's Hiſtory of the World.

A'BJECT, åb'-jĕkt. adj. [abjectus. Lat. thrown away as of no value.

1. Mean; worthleſs; baſe; groveling: ſpoken of perſons, or their qualities.

Rebellion
Came like itſelf in baſe and abject routs,
Led on by bloody youth goaded with rage,
And countenanc'd by boys and beggary.
Shakeſpeare's Henry IV.

I was at firſt, as other beaſts that graze
The trodden herb, of abject thoughts and low.
Milt. Paradiſe Loſt, b. ix. l. 571.

Honeſt men, who tell their ſovereigns what they expect from them, and what obedience they ſhall be always ready to pay them, are not upon an equal foot with baſe and abject flatterers. Addiſon's Whig Examiner.

2. Being of no hope or regard; uſed of condition.

The rarer thy example ſtands,
By how much from the top of wond'rous glory,
Strongeſt of mortal men,
To loweſt pitch of abject fortune thou art fall'n.
Milton's Sampſon Agoniſtes.

We ſee man and woman in the higheſt innocence and perfection, and in the moſt abject ſtate of guilt and infirmity. Addiſon. Spectator, N° 279.

3. Mean and deſpicable; uſed of actions.

The rapine is ſo abject and profane,
They not from trifles, nor from gods refrain.
Dryden's Juvenal, Sat. 8.

To what baſe ends, and by what abject ways,
Are mortals urg'd through ſacred luſt of praiſe?
Pope's Eſſay on Criticiſm.

A'bject, åb'-jĕkt. n. ſ. A man without hope; a man whoſe miſeries are irretrievable; one of the loweſt condition.

Yea, the abjects gathered themſelves together againſt me. Pſalm xxxv. 15.

To Abje'ct, åb-jĕkt'. v. a. [abjicio, Lat.] To throw away. A word rarely uſed.

Abje'ctedness, åb-jĕk'-tĕd-nĕſs. n. ſ. [from abject.] The ſtate of an abject.

Our Saviour would love at no leſs rate than death; and, from the ſupereminent height of glory, ſtooped and abaſed himſelf to the ſufferance of the extremeſt of indignities, and ſunk himſelf to the bottom of abjectedneſs, to exalt our condition to the contrary extreme. Boyle's Works.

Abje'ction, åb-jĕk'-ſhŭn. n. ſ. [from abject.] Meanneſs of mind; want of ſpirit; ſervility; baſeneſs.

That this ſhould be termed baſeneſs, abjection of mind, or ſervility, is it credible? Hooker, b. v. § 47.

The juſt medium lies betwixt pride and abjection, the two extremes. L'Eſtrange.

A'bjectly, åb'-jĕkt-lŷ. adv. [from abject.] In an abject manner, meanly, baſely, ſervilely, contemptibly.

A'bjectness, åb'-jĕkt-nĕſs. n. ſ. [from abject.] Abjection, ſervility, meanneſs.

Servility and abjectneſs of humour is implicitly involved in the charge of lying. Government of the Tongue, § 8.

By humility I mean not the abjectneſs of a baſe mind: but a prudent care not to over-value ourſelves upon any account. Grew's Coſmologia Sacra, b. ii. c. 7.

Abi'lity, å-bĭl'-lĭ-tŷ. n. ſ. [Habileté, Fr.]

1. The power to do any thing, whether depending upon ſkill, or riches, or ſtrength, or any other quality.

Of ſinging thou haſt got the reputation,
Good Thyrſis, mine I yield to thy ability;
My heart doth ſeek another eſtimation.
Sidney, b. i.

If aught in my ability may ſerve
To lighten what thou ſuffer'ſt, and appeaſe
Thy mind with what amends is in my pow'r.
Milton's Sampſon Agoniſtes, l. 744.

They gave after their ability unto the treaſure. Ezra, ii. 69.

If any man miniſter, let him do it as of the ability which God giveth: that God in all things may be glorified through Jeſus Chriſt. 1 Pet. iv. 11.

Wherever we find our abilities too weak for the performance, he aſſures us of the aſſiſtance of his Holy Spirit. Rogers's Sermons.

2. Capacity of mind; force of underſtanding; mental power.

Children in whom there was no blemiſh, but well-favoured, and ſkilful in all wiſdom, and cunning in knowledge, and underſtanding ſcience, and ſuch as had ability in them to ſtand in the king's palace. Dan. i. 4.

3. When it has the plural number, abilities, it frequently ſignifies the faculties or powers of the mind, and ſometimes the force of underſtanding given by nature, as diſtinguiſhed from acquired qualifications.

Whether it may be thought neceſſary, that in certain tracts of country, like what we call pariſhes, there ſhould be one man, at leaſt, of abilities to read and write? Swift.

Abinte'state, åb-ĭn-tĕs'-tåt. adj. [of ab from, and inteſtatus, Lat.] A term of law, implying him that inherits from a man, who, though he had the power to make a will, yet did not make it.

To A'bjugate, åb'-jŭ-gåte. v. a. [abjugo, Lat.] To unyoke, to uncouple. Dict.

To ABJU'RE, åb-jŏ're. v. a. [abjuro, Lat.]

1. To caſt off upon oath, to ſwear not to do or not to have ſomething.

Either to die the death, or to abjure
For ever the ſociety of man.
Shakeſpeare's Midſum. Night's Dream.

No man, therefore, that hath not abjured his reaſon, and ſworn allegiance to a preconceived fantaſtical hypotheſis, can undertake the defence of ſuch a ſuppoſition. Hale.

2. To retract, recant, or abnegate a poſition upon oath.

Abjura'tion, åb-jŏ-rå'-ſhŭn. n. ſ. [from abjure.] The act of abjuring. The oath taken for that end.

Until Henry VIII. his time, if a man, having committed felony, could go into a church, or church-yard, before he were apprehended, he might not be taken from thence to the uſual trial of law, but confeſſing his fault to the juſtices, or to the coroner, gave his oath to forſake the realm for ever, which was called abjuration.

There are ſome abjurations ſtill in force among us here in England; as, by the ſtatute of the 25th of king Charles II. all perſons that are admitted into any office, civil or military, muſt take the teſt; which is an abjuration of ſome doctrines of the church of Rome.

There is likewiſe another oath of abjuration, which laymen and clergymen are both obliged to take; and that is to abjure the Pretender. Ayliffe's Parergon Juris Canonici.

To ABLAC'TATE, ȁb-lȁk'-tȁte. v. a. [ablacto, Lat.] To wean from the breaſt.

Ablacta'tion, ȁb-lȁk-tȁ'-ſhȕn. n. ſ. One of the methods of grafting; and, according to the ſignification of the word, as it were a weaning of a cyon by degrees from its mother ſtock; not cutting it off wholly from the ſtock, till it is firmly united to that on which it is grafted.

Ablaquea'tion, ȁb-lȁ-kwȇ-ȁ'-ſhȕn. n. ſ. [ablaqueatio, Lat.] The art or practice of opening the ground about the roots of trees, to let the air and water operate upon them.

Trench the ground, and make it ready for the ſpring: Prepare alſo ſoil, and uſe it where you have occaſion: Dig borders. Uncover as yet roots of trees, where ablaqueation is requiſite.
Evelyn's Kalendar.

The tenure in chief is the very root that doth maintain this ſilver ſtem, that by many rich and fruitful branches ſpreadeth itſelf: ſo if it be ſuffered to ſtarve, by want of ablaqueation, and other good huſbandry, this yearly fruit will much decreaſe. Bacon's Office of Alienations.

ABLA'TION, ȁb-lȁ'-ſhȕn. n. ſ. [ablatio, Lat.] The act of taking away.

Theſe then need cauſe no abortion. Sandys.

2. The produce of an untimely birth.

His wife miſcarried; but, as the abortion proved only a female fœtus, he comforted himſelf. Arbuthnot and Pope's Martinus Scriblerus.

Behold my arm thus blaſted, dry and wither'd,
Shrunk like a foul abortion, and decay'd,
Like ſome untimely product of the ſeaſons.
Rowe.

Abo'rtive, âb-ŏr′-tîv. n. ſ. That which is born before the due time. Perhaps anciently any thing irregularly produced.

No common wind, no cuſtomed event,
But they will pluck away its nat'ral cauſes,
And call them meteors, prodigies, and ſigns,
Abortives, and preſages, tongues of heav'n,
Plainly denouncing vengeance upon John.
Shakeſp. King John.

Take the fine ſkin of an abortive, and, with ſtarch thin laid on, prepare your ground or tablet. Peacham on Drawing.

Many are preſerved, and do ſignal ſervice to their country, who, without a proviſion, might have periſhed as abortives, or have come to an untimely end, and perhaps have brought upon their guilty parents the like deſtruction. Addiſon. Guardian, Nº 106.

Abo'rtive, âb-ŏr′-tîv. adj. [abortivus, Lat.]

1. That which is brought forth before the due time of birth.

If ever he have child, abortive be it,
Prodigious, and untimely brought to light.
Shakeſp. Richard III.

All th' unaccompliſhed works of nature's hand,
Abortive, monſtrous, or unkindly mix'd,
Diſſolv'd on earth, fleet hither.
Milton's Paradiſe Loſt, b. iii. l. 456.

Nor will his fruit expect
Th' autumnal ſeaſon, but, in ſummer's pride
When other orchards ſmile, abortive fail. Phillips.

2. Figuratively, that which fails for want of time.

How often haſt thou waited at my cup,
Remember it, and let it make thee creſt-faln;
Ay, and allay this thy abortive pride.
Shakeſp. Henry VI. p. ii.

3. That which brings forth nothing.

The void profound
Of uneſſential night receives him next,
Wide-gaping; and with utter loſs of being
Threatens him, plung'd in that abortive gulf.
Milton's Paradiſe Loſt, b. ii. l. 451.

4. That which fails or miſcarries, from whatever cauſe. This is leſs proper.

Many politic conceptions, ſo elaborately formed and wrought, and grown at length ripe for delivery, do yet, in the iſſue, miſcarry and prove abortive. South's Sermons.

Abo'rtively, âb-ŏr′-tîv-lŷ. adv. [from abortive.] Born without the due time; immaturely, untimely.

Theft is always a ſin, although the particular ſpecies of it, and the denomination of particular acts, doth ſuppoſe poſitive laws about dominion and property. Stillingfleet.

Children ſhould always be heard, and fairly and kindly anſwered, when they aſk after any thing they would know, and deſire to be informed about. Curioſity ſhould be as carefully cheriſhed in children, as other appetites ſuppreſſed. Locke.

It hath been practiſed as a method of making men's court, when they are aſked about the rate of lands, the abilities of tenants, the ſtate of trade, to anſwer that all things are in a flouriſhing condition. Swift's Short View of Ireland.

4. In a ſtate of being engaged in, or employed upon.

Our bleſſed Lord was pleaſed to command the repreſentation of his death and ſacrifice on the croſs ſhould be made by breaking of bread and effuſion of wine; to ſignify to us the nature and ſacredneſs of the liturgy we are about. Taylor.

Labour, for labour's ſake, is againſt nature. The underſtanding, as well as all the other faculties, chooſes always the ſhorteſt way to its end, would preſently obtain the knowledge it is about, and then ſet upon ſome new enquiry. But this, whether lazineſs or haſte, often miſleads it. Locke.

Our armies ought to be provided with ſecretaries, to tell their ſtory in plain Engliſh, and to let us know, in our mother tongue, what it is our brave countrymen are about. Addiſon. Spect. Nº 309.

5. Appendant to the perſon; as cloaths.

If you have this about you,
As I will give you when we go, you may
Boldly aſſault the necromancer's hall.
Milton's Comus.

It is not ſtrange to me, that perſons of the fairer ſex ſhould like, in all things about them, that handſomeneſs for which they find themſelves moſt liked. Boyle on Colours.

6. Relating to the perſon, as a ſervant, or dependant.

Liking very well the young gentleman, ſuch I took him to be, admitted this Deiphantus about me, who well ſhewed, there is no ſervice like his that ſerves becauſe he loves. Sidney, b. ii.

7. Relating to perſon, as an act or office.

Good corporal, for my old dame's ſake, ſtand my friend: ſhe hath no body to do any thing about her when I am gone, and ſhe is old and cannot help herſelf. Shakeſpeare's Henry IV.

Abo'ut, à-boŭ't. adv.

1. Circularly, in a round; circum.

The weyward ſiſters, hand in hand,
Poſters of the ſea and land,
Thus do go about, about,
Thrice to thine, and thrice to mine,
And thrice again to make up nine.
Shakeſp. Macbeth.

2. In circuit, in compaſs.

I'll tell you what I am about.—Two yards and more.—No quips now, Piſtol: indeed I am in the waiſt two yards about; but I am about no waſte, I am about thrift. Shakeſpeare.

A tun about was ev'ry pillar there,
A poliſh'd mirrour ſhone not half ſo clear.
Dryd. Fables.

3. Nearly; circiter.

When the boats were come within about ſixty yards of the pillar, they found themſelves all bound, and could go no farther; yet ſo as they might move to go about, but might not approach nearer. Bacon's New Atalantis.

4. Here and there; every way; circa.

Up roſe the gentle virgin from her place,
And looked all about, if ſhe might ſpy
Her lovely knight.
Fairy Queen, b. i. cant. ii. ſtanz. 33.

A wolf that was paſt labour, in his old age, borrows a habit, and ſo about he goes, begging charity from door to door, under the diſguiſe of a pilgrim. L'Eſtrange.

5. With to before a verb; as, about to fly; upon the point, within a ſmall diſtance of.

Theſe dying lovers, and their floating ſons,
Suſpend the fight, and ſilence all our guns:
Beauty and youth, about to periſh, finds
Such noble pity in brave Engliſh minds. Waller.

6. Round; the longeſt way, in oppoſition to the ſhort ſtraight way.

Gold hath theſe natures; greatneſs of weight; cloſeneſs of parts; fixation; pliantneſs, or ſoftneſs; immunity from ruſt; colour, or tincture of yellow: Therefore the ſure way (though moſt about) to make gold, is to know the cauſes of the ſeveral natures before rehearſed. Bacon's Natural Hiſt. Nº 328.

Spies of the Volſcians
Held me in chace, that I was forced to wheel
Three or four miles about; elſe had I, Sir,
Half an hour ſince brought my report.
Shakeſp. Coriolanus.

7. To bring about; to bring to the point or ſtate deſired; as, he has brought about his purpoſes.

Whether this will be brought about, by breaking his head, I very much queſtion. Spectator.

8. To come about; to come to ſome certain ſtate or point. It has commonly the idea of revolution, or gyration.

Wherefore it came to paſs, when the time was come about, after Hannah had conceived, that ſhe bare a ſon. 1 Sam. i. 20.

One evening it befel, that looking out,
The wind they long had wiſh'd was come about:
Well pleas'd, they went to reſt; and, if the gale
Till morn continu'd, both reſolv'd to ſail.
Dryd. Fables.

9. To go about; to prepare to do it.

Did not Moſes give you the law? and yet none of you keepeth the law. Why go ye about to kill me? John, vii. 19.

In common language they ſay, to come about a man, to circumvent him.

Some of theſe phraſes ſeem to derive their original, from the French à bout; venir à bout d'une choſe; venir à bout de quelqu'un.

A. Bp. for Archbiſhop; which ſee.

To ABRA'DE, åb-rå'-de. v. a. [abrado, Lat.] To rub off; to wear away from the other parts; to waſte by degrees.

By this means there may be a continued ſupply, of what is ſucceſſively abraded from them by decurſion of waters. Hale.

A"braham's Ba'lm, åb"-råm's bå'm. The name of an herb.

Abra'sion, åb-rå'-zhůn. n. ſ. [See Abrade.]

1. The act of abrading, or rubbing off.

2. [In medicine.] The wearing away of the natural mucus, which covers the membranes, particularly thoſe of the ſtomach and guts, by corroſive or ſharp medicines or humours. Quincy.

3. The matter, worn off by the attrition of bodies.

Abre'ast, å-brėſt'. adv. [See Breast.] Side by ſide; in ſuch a poſition, that the breaſts may bear againſt the ſame line.

My couſin Suffolk,
My ſoul ſhall thine keep company to heav'n:
Tarry, ſweet ſoul, for mine; then fly abreaſt.
Shakeſp. Henry V.

For honour travels in a ſtreight ſo narrow,
Where one but goes abreaſt.
Shakeſp. Troilus and Creſſida.

The riders rode abreaſt; and one his ſhield,
His lance of cornel wood another, held.
Dryden's Fables.

A'bricot, å'-prŷ-kŏt. See Apricot.

To ABRI'DGE, å-brid'je. v. a. [abreger, Fr. abbrevio, Lat.]

1. To make ſhorter in words, keeping ſtill the ſame ſubſtance.

All theſe ſayings, being declared by Jaſon of Cyrene in five books, we will eſſay to abridge in one volume. 2 Macc. ii. 23.

2. To contract, to diminiſh, to cut ſhort.

The determination of the will, upon enquiry, is following the direction of that guide; and he, that has a power to act or not to act, according as ſuch determination directs, is free. Such determination abridges not that power, wherein liberty conſiſts. Locke.

3. To deprive of; to cut off from. In which ſenſe it is followed by the particle from, or of, preceding the thing taken away.

I have diſabled mine eſtate,
By ſhewing ſomething a more ſwelling port,
Than my faint means would grant continuance;
Nor do I now make moan, to be abridg'd
From ſuch a noble rate.
Shakeſpeare's Merchant of Venice.

They were formerly, by the common law, diſcharged from pontage and murage; but this privilege has been abridged them ſince, by ſeveral ſtatutes. Ayliffe's Parergon Juris Canonici.

Abri'dged of, å-brid"-jėd ŏv'. part. Deprived of, debarred from, cut ſhort.

Abri'dger, å-brid'-jůr. n. ſ.

1. He, that abridges; a ſhortener.

2. A writer of compendiums or abridgments.

Abri'dgment, å-brid'je-mėnt. n. ſ. [abregement, French.]

1. The epitome of a larger work, contracted into a ſmall compaſs; a compend; a ſummary.

Surely this commandment containeth the law and the prophets; and, in this one word, is the abridgment of all volumes of ſcripture. Hooker, b. ii. § 5.

Idolatry is certainly the firſt-born of folly, the great and leading paradox; nay, the very abridgment and ſum-total of all abſurdities. South's Sermons.

2. A diminution in general.

All trying, by a love of littleneſs,
To make abridgments, and to draw to leſs,
Even that nothing, which at firſt we were.
Donne.

3. Contraction; reduction.

The conſtant deſire of happineſs, and the conſtraint it puts upon us, no body (I think) accounts an abridgment of liberty; or at leaſt an abridgment of liberty, to be complained of. Locke.

4. Reſtraint, from any thing pleaſing; contraction of any thing enjoyed.

It is not barely a man's abridgment in his external accommodations, which makes him miſerable; but, when his conſcience ſhall tell him, that it was his ſin and his folly which brought him under that abridgment. South.

Abro'ach, å-brŏ'tſh. adv. [See To Broach.]

1. In a poſture, to run out, or yield the liquor contained; properly ſpoken of veſſels.

The jarrs of gen'rous wine
He ſet abroach, and for the feaſt prepar'd.
Dryd. Virgil.

The Templer ſpruce, while ev'ry ſpout's abroach,
Stays till 'tis fair, yet ſeems to call a coach.
Swift's Miſcel.

2. In a figurative ſenſe; in a ſtate, to be diffuſed or extended; in a ſtate of ſuch beginning, as promiſes a progreſs.

That man, that ſits within a monarch's heart,
And ripens in the ſunſhine of his favour,
Would he abuſe the count'nance of the king,
Alack! what miſchiefs might be ſet abroach,
In ſhadow of ſuch greatneſs?
Shakeſpeare's Henry IV. p. ii.

Abro'ad, å-brå'd. adv. [compounded of a and broad. See Broad.]

1. Without confinement; widely; at large.

Intermit no watch,
Againſt a wakeful foe; while I abroad,
Thro' all the coaſts of dark deſtruction, ſeek
Deliverance. Milton's Paradiſe Loſt, b. ii. l. 463.

Again, the lonely fox roams far abroad,
On ſecret rapine bent, and midnight fraud;
Now haunts the cliff, now traverſes the lawn,
And flies the hated neighbourhood of man. Prior.

2. Out of the houſe.

Welcome, Sir!
This cell's my court; here have I few attendants,
And ſubjects none abroad. Shakeſpeare's Tempeſt.

Lady —— walked a whole hour abroad, without dying after it. Pope's Letters.

3. In another country.

They thought it better, to be ſomewhat hardly yoked at home; than for ever abroad, and diſcredited. Hooker, Pref.

Whoſoever offers at verbal tranſlation, ſhall have the misfortune of that young traveller; who loſt his own language abroad, and brought home no other inſtead of it. Sir J. Denham.

What learn our youth abroad, but to refine
The homely vices of their native land?
Dryd. Span. Friar.

He, who ſojourns in a foreign country, refers what he ſees and hears abroad, to the ſtate of things at home. Atterb. Serm.

4. In all directions, this way and that; with wide expanſion.

Full in the midſt of this infernal road,
An elm diſplays her duſky arms abroad.
Dryd. Virg. Æn. vi.

5. Without, not within.

Bodies politic, being ſubject (as much as natural) to diſſolution, by divers means; there are undoubtedly more ſtates overthrown, through diſeaſes bred within themſelves, than through violence from abroad. Hooker, Dedication.

To A'BROGATE, åb'-rŏ-gåte. v. a. [abrogo, Lat.] To take away from a law its force; to repeal; to annul.

Laws have been made, upon ſpecial occaſions; which occaſions ceaſing, laws of that kind do abrogate themſelves. Hooker, b. iv. § 14.

The negative precepts of men may ceaſe, by many inſtruments; by contrary cuſtoms, by public diſreliſh, by long omiſſion: but the negative precepts of God never can ceaſe, but when they are expreſsly abrogated by the ſame authority. Taylor's Rule of living holy.

Abroga'tion, åb-rŏ-gå'-ſhůn. n. ſ. [abrogatio, Lat.] The act of abrogating; the repeal of a law.

The commiſſioners from the confederate Roman catholics demanded the abrogation and repeal of all thoſe laws, which were in force againſt the exerciſe of the Roman religion. Clarendon, b. viii.

To Abro'ok, å-brŏ'k. v. a. [from To brook, with a ſuperabundant, a word not in uſe.] To brook, to bear, to endure.

Sweet Nell, ill can thy noble mind abrook
The abject people, gazing on thy face
With envious looks, ſtill laughing at thy ſhame.
Shakeſpeare's Henry VI. p. ii.

ABRU'PT, åb-rŭp't. adj. [abruptus, Lat. broken off.]

1. Broken, craggy.

Reſiſtleſs, roaring, dreadful, down it comes
From the rude mountain and the moſſy wild,
Tumbling through rocks abrupt. Thomſ. Winter.

2. Divided, without any thing intervening.

Or ſpread his airy flight,
Upborn with indefatigable wings,
Over the vaſt abrupt, ere he arrive
The happy iſle.
Milton's Paradiſe Loſt, b. ii. l. 409.

3. Sudden, without the cuſtomary or proper preparatives.

My lady craves
To know the cauſe of your abrupt departure.
Shakeſpeare.

The abrupt and unkind breaking of the two firſt parliaments was wholly imputed, to the duke of Buckingham. Clarendon.

Abrupt, with eagle-ſpeed ſhe cut the ſky,
Inſtant inviſible to mortal eye:
Then firſt he recogniz'd th' ethereal gueſt.
Pope's Odyſſ. b. i.

4. Unconnected.

The abrupt ſtile, which hath many breaches, and doth not ſeem to end but fall. Ben Jonſon's Diſcovery.

Abru'pted, åb-rŭp't-ėd. adj. [abruptus, Lat. a word little in uſe.] Broken off ſuddenly.

The effects of their activity are not precipitouſly abrupted, but gradually proceed to their ceſſations. Brown's Vulgar Errours, b. vi. 10.

Abru'ption, ab-rup'-ſhun. n. ſ. [abruptio, Lat.] Breaking off, violent and ſudden ſeparation.

Thoſe, which are incloſed in ſtone, marble, or ſuch other ſolid matter; being difficultly ſeparable from it, becauſe of its adheſion to all ſides of them; have commonly ſome of that matter ſtill adhering to them, or at leaſt marks of its abruption from them, on all their ſides. Woodw. Nat. Hiſt. p. 4.

Abru'ptly, ab-rup't-ly. adv. [See Abrupt.] Haſtily, without the due forms of preparation.

The ſweetneſs of virtue's diſpoſition, jealous even over itſelf, ſuffered her not, to enter abruptly into queſtions of Muſidorus. Sidney, b. ii.

Now miſſing from their joy, ſo lately found,
So lately found, and ſo abruptly gone.
Par. Regain. b. ii.

That they (both of them) punctually obſerved the time, thus agreed upon; and that, whatever company or buſineſs they were engaged in, they left it abruptly as ſoon as the clock warned them to retire. Addiſon Spectator, N° 241.

Abru'ptness, ab-rup't-neſs. n. ſ. [from abrupt.]

1. An abrupt manner, haſte, ſuddenneſs, untimely vehemence.

2. The ſtate of an abrupt or broken thing; roughneſs, cragginеſs; as of a fragment violently disjoined.

The cryſtallized bodies, found in the perpendicular intervals, have always their root, as the jewellers call it; which is only the abruptneſs at the end of the body, whereby it adhered to the ſtone or ſides of the intervals: which abruptneſs is cauſed, by its being broke-off from the ſaid ſtone. Woodw. Nat. Hiſt. p. 4.

A'bscess, ab'-ſeſs. n. ſ. [abſceſſus, Lat.] A morbid cavity in the body; a tumour, filled with matter; a term of chirurgery.

If the patient is not relieved, nor dies, in eight days; the inflammation ends in a ſuppuration and an abſceſs in the lungs, and ſometimes in ſome other part of the body. Arbuth. of Diet.

Lindanus conjectured, it might be ſome hidden abſceſs in the meſentery; which, breaking ſome few days after, was diſcovered to be an apoſtem of the meſentery. Harvey on Conſumptions.

To Absci'nd, ab-ſind'. v. a. To cut off, either in a natural or figurative ſenſe.

ABSCI'SSA, ab-ſis'-ſa. [Lat.] Part of the diameter of a conic ſection, intercepted between the vertex and a ſemi-ordinate.

Absci'ssion, ab-ſis'-ſhun. n. ſ. [abſciſſio, Lat.]

1. The act of cutting off.

Fabricius ab Aquapendente renders the abſciſſion of them difficult enough, and not without danger. Wiſeman's Surgery.

2. The ſtate of being cut off.

By ceſſation of oracles, with Montacutius, we may underſtand this intercision, not abſciſſion or conſummate deſolation. Brown's Vulgar Errours, b. vi. c. 12.

To ABSCO'ND, ab-ſkond. v. n. [abſcondo, Lat.] To hide one's ſelf; to retire from the public view: generally uſed of perſons in debt, or criminals eluding the law.

The marmotte or mus alpinus, which abſconds all winter, lives on its own fat: for in autumn, when it ſhuts itſelf up in its hole, it is very fat; but in the ſpring-time, when it comes forth again, very lean. Ray on the Creation.

Absco'nder, ab-ſkon'-dur. n. ſ. [from abſcond.] The perſon, that abſconds.

A'bsence, ab'-ſenſe. n. ſ. [See Absent.]

1. The ſtate of being abſent, oppoſed to preſence.

Sir, 'tis fit,
You have ſtrong party to defend yourſelf,
By calmneſs, or by abſence: all's in danger.
Shakeſpeare's Coriolanus.

His friends beheld, and pity'd him in vain,
For, what advice can eaſe a lover's pain?
Abſence, the beſt expedient they could find,
Might ſave the fortune, if not cure the mind.
Dryd. Fab.

You have given no diſſertation, upon the abſence of lovers; nor laid down any methods, how they ſhould ſupport themſelves under thoſe ſeparations. Addiſon, Spectator, N° 241.

2. Want of appearance, in the legal ſenſe.

Abſence is of a fourfold kind or ſpecies. The firſt is a neceſſary abſence, as in baniſhed perſons; this is entirely neceſſary. A ſecond, neceſſary and voluntary; as, upon the account of the commonwealth, or in the ſervice of the church. The third kind the civilians call a probable abſence; as, that of ſtudents on the ſcore of ſtudy. And the fourth, an abſence entirely voluntary; as, on the account of trade, merchandiſe, and the like. Some add a fifth kind of abſence, which is committed cum dolo & culpâ, by a man's non-appearance on a citation; as, in a contumacious perſon, who, in hatred to his contumacy, is (by the law) in ſome reſpects, reputed as a perſon preſent. Ayliffe's Parergon Juris Canonici.

3. Inattention, heedleſſneſs, neglect of the preſent object.

I continued my walk, reflecting on the little abſences and diſtractions of mankind. Addiſon, Spectator, N° 77.

4. It is uſed with the particle from.

His abſence from his mother oft he'll mourn;
And, with his eyes, look wiſhes to return.
Dryd. Juv. Sat. ii.

A'BSENT, ab'-ſent. adj. [abſens, Lat.]

1. Not preſent: uſed with the particle from.

In ſpring the fields, in autumn hills I love;
At morn the plains, at noon the ſhady grove;
But Delia always: abſent from her ſight,
Nor plains at morn, nor groves at noon delight.
Pope's Paſt.

Where there is advantage to be given,
Both more and leſs have given him the revolt;
And none ſerve with him, but conſtrained things,
Whoſe hearts are abſent too. Shakeſp. Macbeth.

Whether they were abſent or preſent, they were vexed alike. Wiſd. xi. 11.

2. Abſent in mind, inattentive; regardleſs of the preſent object.

I diſtinguiſh a man that is abſent, becauſe he thinks of ſomething elſe; from him that is abſent, becauſe he thinks of nothing. Addiſon, Spectator, N° 77.

To Abse'nt, ab-ſent'. v. a. To withdraw, to forbear to come into preſence.

If thou didſt ever hold me in thy heart,
Abſent thee from felicity a while;
And in this harſh world draw thy breath in pain,
To tell my tale. Shakeſpeare's Hamlet.

Go!—for thy ſtay, not free, abſents thee more.
Milton's Paradiſe Loſt, b. ix. l. 372.

Tho' I am forc'd thus to abſent myſelf,
From all I love; I ſhall contrive ſome means,
Some friendly intervals, to viſit thee.
Southern's Spartan Dame.

The Arengo is ſtill called together in caſes of importance; and if, after due ſummons, any member abſents himſelf, he is to be fined to the value of about a penny Engliſh. Addiſon's Remarks on Italy.

Absenta'neous, ab'-ſen-ta"-nyus. adj. Relating to abſence; abſent. Dict.

Absente'e, ab-ſen-te'. n. ſ. He, that is abſent from his ſtation, or employment, or country. A word uſed commonly with regard to Iriſhmen, living out of their country.

Then was the firſt ſtatute made againſt abſentees; commanding all ſuch, as had land in Ireland, to return and reſide thereupon. Sir John Davies on Ireland.

A great part of eſtates in Ireland are owned by abſentees; and ſuch, as draw over the profits raiſed out of Ireland, refunding nothing. Child's Diſcourſe on Trade.

Absi'nthiated, ab-ſin'-thya-ted. part. [from abſinthium, Lat. wormwood.] Imbittered, impregnated with wormwood. Dict.

To Absi'st, ab-ſiſt'. v. n. [abſiſto, Lat.] To ſtand off, to leave off. Dict.

To ABSO'LVE, ab-zolv'. v. a. [abſolvo, Lat.]

1. To clear, to acquit of a crime, in a judicial ſenſe.

Your great goodneſs, out of holy pity,
Abſolv'd him with an axe. Shakeſp. Henry VIII.

Our victors, bleſt in peace, forget their wars,
Enjoy paſt dangers, and abſolve the ſtars. Tickell.

As he hopes, and gives out, by the influence of his wealth to be here abſolved; in condemning this man, you have an opportunity of belying that general ſcandal, of redeeming the credit loſt by former judgments. Swift's Miſcellanies.

2. To ſet free from an engagement or promiſe.

Compell'd by threats to take that bloody oath,
And the act ill, I am abſolv'd by both.
Waller's Maid's Tragedy.

This command, which muſt neceſſarily comprehend the perſons of our natural fathers, muſt mean a duty we owe them, diſtinct from our obedience to the magiſtrate, and from which the moſt abſolute power of princes cannot abſolve us. Locke.

3. To pronounce ſin remitted, in the eccleſiaſtical ſenſe.

But all is calm, in this eternal ſleep:
Here grief forgets to groan, and love to weep;
Ev'n ſuperſtition loſes ev'ry fear;
For God, not man, abſolves our frailties here.
Pope's Eloiſa to Abelard.

4. To finiſh, to complete. This uſe is not common.

What cauſe
Mov'd the Creator, in his holy reſt
Through all eternity, ſo late to build
In chaos; and the work begun, how ſoon
Abſolv'd. Milton's Paradiſe Loſt, b. vii. l. 94.

If that, which is ſo ſuppoſed infinitely diſtant from what is now current, is diſtant from us by a finite interval, and not infinitely; then that one circulation, which preceded it, muſt neceſſarily be like ours; and conſequently abſolved in the ſpace of twenty-four hours. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

A'bsolute, ab'-ſo-lute. adj. [abſolutus, Lat.]

1. Complete; applied, as well to perſons, as to things.

Becauſe the things, that proceed from him, are perfect, without any manner of defect or maim; it cannot be, but that the words of his mouth are abſolute, and lack nothing which they ſhould have, for performance of that thing whereunto they tend. Hooker, b. ii. § 6.

What is his ſtrength by land?—
—Great and increaſing: but, by ſea,
He is an abſolute maſter.
Shakeſpeare's Antony and Cleopatra.

2. Unconditional; as an abſolute promiſe.

Although it runs in forms abſolute, yet it is indeed conditional; as depending upon the qualification of the perſon, to whom it is pronounced. South's Sermons.

3. Not relative; as, abſolute ſpace.

I ſee ſtill the diſtinctions of ſovereign and inferior, of abſolute and relative worſhip, will bear any man out in the worſhip of any creature with reſpect to God; as well at leaſt, as it doth in the worſhip of images. Stillingfl. Def. of Diſc. on Rom. Idol.

An abſolute mode is that, which belongs to its ſubject, without reſpect to any other beings whatſoever; but a relative mode is derived from the regard, that one being has to others. Watts's Logic.

In this ſenſe we ſpeak of the ablative caſe abſolute in grammar.

4. Not limited; as, abſolute power.

> My crown is abſolute, and holds of none:
> I cannot in a baſe ſubjection live;
> Nor ſuffer you to take, tho' I would give.
> Dryd. Ind. Emp.

5. Poſitive; certain; without any heſitation. In this ſenſe it rarely occurs.

> Long is it, ſince I ſaw him:
> But time hath nothing blurr'd thoſe lines of favour,
> Which then he wore, the ſnatches in his voice,
> And burſt of ſpeaking, were as his: I'm abſolute,
> 'Twas very Cloten. Shakeſpeare's Cymbeline.

A'bsolutely, ȧb'-sȯ-lůte-lẏ. adv. [from abſolute.]

1. Completely, without reſtriction.

All the contradictions, which grow in thoſe minds, that neither abſolutely climb the rock of virtue, nor freely ſink into the ſea of vanity. Sidney.

What merit they can build, upon having joined with a proteſtant army, under a king they acknowledge, to defend their own liberties and properties; is, to me, abſolutely inconceivable; and, I believe, will equally be ſo for ever. Swift's Preſb. Plea.

2. Without relation; in a ſtate unconnected.

Abſolutely we cannot diſcommend, we cannot abſolutely approve, either willingneſs to live, or forwardneſs to die. Hooker, b. v.

Theſe then being the perpetual cauſes of zeal; the greateſt good, or the greateſt evil; either abſolutely ſo in themſelves, or relatively ſo to us; it is therefore good, to be zealouſly affected for the one againſt the other. Sprat's Sermons.

No ſenſible quality (as light, and colour, and heat, and ſound) can be ſubſiſtent in the bodies themſelves abſolutely conſidered, without a relation to our eyes and ears and other organs of ſenſe. Theſe qualities are only the effects of our ſenſation; which ariſe from the different motions, upon our nerves, from objects without, according to their various modifications and poſitions. Bentley's Sermons.

3. Without limits or dependence.

> The prince long time had courted fortune's love;
> But, once poſſeſs'd, did abſolutely reign:
> Thus, with their Amazons, the heroes ſtrove;
> And conquer'd firſt thoſe beauties they would gain.
> Dryden's Annus Mirabilis.

4. Without condition.

And of that nature (for the moſt part) are things, abſolutely unto all men's ſalvation neceſſary, either to be held or denied, either to be done or avoided. Hooker's Preface.

5. Peremptorily, poſitively.

> Being as I am, why didſt not thou
> Command me abſolutely not to go,
> Going into ſuch danger, as thou ſaidſt?
> Parad. Loſt, b. ix.

A'bsoluteness, ȧb'-sȯ-lůte-neſs. n. ſ. [from abſolute.]

1. Completeneſs.
2. Freedom from dependence, or limits.

The abſoluteneſs and illimitedneſs of his commiſſion was generally much ſpoken of. Clarendon, b. viii.

There is nothing, that can raiſe a man to that generous abſoluteneſs of condition, as neither to cringe, to fawn, or to depend meanly; but that, which gives him that happineſs within himſelf, for which men depend upon others. South's Serm.

3. Deſpotiſm.

He kept a ſtrait hand on his nobility; and choſe rather to advance clergymen and lawyers, which were more obſequious to him, but had leſs intereſt in the people: which made for his abſoluteneſs, but not for his ſafety. Bacon's Henry VII.

They dreſs up power, with all the ſplendor and temptation abſoluteneſs can add to it. Locke.

Absolu'tion, ȧb-sȯ-lů'-ſhůn. n. ſ. [abſolutio, Lat.].

1. Acquittal.

Abſolution, in the civil law, imports a full acquittal of a perſon by ſome final ſentence of law; alſo, a temporary diſcharge of his farther attendance upon a meſne proceſs, through a failure or defect in pleading: as it does likewiſe in the canon law; where and among divines it likewiſe ſignifies a relaxation of him from the obligation of ſome ſentence, pronounced either in a court of law, or elſe in foro pœnitentiali. Thus there is, in this kind of law, one kind of abſolution, termed judicial; and another, ſtyled a declaratory or extrajudicial abſolution. Ayliffe's Parergon Juris Canonici.

2. The remiſſion of ſins, or penance, declared by eccleſiaſtical authority.

The abſolution pronounced by a prieſt, whether papiſt or proteſtant, is not a certain infallible ground to give the perſon, ſo abſolved, confidence towards God. South's Sermons.

A'bsolutory, ȧb''-sȯl-lů-tůr'-ẏ. adj. [abſolutorius, Lat.] That, which abſolves.

Though an abſolutory ſentence ſhould be pronounced in favour of the perſons, upon the account of nearneſs of blood; yet, if adultery ſhall afterwards be truly proved, he may be again proceeded againſt as an adulterer. Ayliffe's Parergon.

A'bsonant, ȧb'-sȯ-nȧnt. adj. [See Absonous.] Contrary to reaſon, wide from the purpoſe.

A'bsonous, ȧb'-sȯ-nůs. adj. [abſonus, Lat. ill-ſounding.] Abſurd, contrary to reaſon. It is not much in uſe; and it may be doubted, whether it ſhould be followed by to or from.

To ſuppoſe an uniter of a middle conſtitution, that ſhould partake of ſome of the qualities of both, is unwarranted by any of our faculties; yea, moſt abſonous to our reaſon. Glanville's Scepſis Scientifica, c. 4.

To Abso'rb, ȧb-sȧ'rb. v. a. [abſorbeo, Lat. preter. abſorbed; part. pret. abſorbed, or abſorpt.]

1. To ſwallow up.

Moſes imputed the deluge, to the diſruption of the abyſs; and St. Peter, to the particular conſtitution of that earth, which made it obnoxious to be abſorpt in water. Burn. Theory.

> Some tokens ſhew
> Of fearleſs friendſhip, and their ſinking mates
> Suſtain; vain love, tho' laudable, abſorpt
> By a fierce eddy, they together found
> The vaſt profundity. Phillips.

2. To ſuck up. See Absorbent.

The evils that come of exerciſe are, that it doth abſorb and attenuate the moiſture of the body. Bacon.

Suppoſing the forementioned conſumption ſhould prove ſo durable, as to abſorb and extenuate the ſaid ſanguine parts to an extreme degree; it is evident, that the fundamental parts muſt neceſſarily come into danger. Harvey on Conſumptions.

While we perſpire, we abſorb the outward air. Arbuthnot.

Abso'rbent, ȧb-sȧ'r-bėnt. n. ſ. [abſorbens, Lat.] A medicine that, by the ſoftneſs or poroſity of its parts, either eaſes the aſperities of pungent humours, or dries away ſuperfluous moiſture in the body. Quincy.

There is a third claſs of ſubſtances, commonly called abſorbents; as, the various kinds of ſhells, coral, chalk, crabs eye, &c. which likewiſe raiſe an efferveſcence with acids, and are therefore called alkalis; though not ſo properly, for they are not ſalts. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

Abso'rpt, ȧb-sȧ'rpt. part. [from abſorb.] Swallowed up; uſed as well in a figurative ſenſe, of perſons; as in the primitive, of things.

What can you expect from a man, who has not talked theſe five days? who is withdrawing his thoughts, as far as he can, from all the preſent world, its cuſtoms and its manners, to be fully poſſeſſed and abſorpt in the paſt. Pope's Letters.

Abso'rption, ȧb-sȧ'rp-ſhůn. n. ſ. [from abſorb.] The act of ſwallowing up.

It was below the dignity of thoſe ſacred penmen, or the Spirit of God that directed them, to ſhew us the cauſes of this diſruption, or of this abſorption: this is left to the enquiries of men. Burnet's Theory of the Earth.

To ABSTA'IN, ȧb-ſtȧ'n. v. n. [abſtineo, Lat.] To forbear, to deny one's ſelf any gratification; with the particle from.

> If thou judge it hard and difficult,
> Converſing, looking, loving, to abſtain
> From love's due rites, nuptial embraces ſweet;
> And, with deſires, to languiſh without hope.
> Milton's Paradiſe Loſt, b. x. l. 993.

To be perpetually longing, and impatiently deſirous of any thing, ſo that a man cannot abſtain from it; is to loſe a man's liberty, and to become a ſervant of meat and drink or ſmoke. Taylor's Rule of living holy.

> Even then the doubtful billows ſcarce abſtain
> From the toſs'd veſſel on the troubled main.
> Dryd. Virgil.

ABSTE'MIOUS, ȧb-ſtė'-myůs. adj. [abſtemius, Lat.] Temperate, ſober, abſtinent, refraining from exceſs or pleaſures. It is uſed of perſons; as, an abſtemious hermit: and of things; as, an abſtemious diet. It is ſpoken likewiſe of things, that cauſe temperance.

The inſtances of longevity are chiefly amongſt the abſtemious. Abſtinence in extremity will prove a mortal diſeaſe; but the experiments of it are very rare. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

> Clytorean ſtreams the love of wine expel;
> Such is the virtue of th' abſtemious well:
> Whether the colder nymph that rules the flood,
> Extinguiſhes, and balks the drunken god;
> Or that Melampus (ſo have ſome aſſur'd)
> When the mad Prætides with charms he cur'd,
> And pow'rful herbs, both charms and ſimples caſt
> Into the ſober ſpring, where ſtill their virtues laſt.
> Dryd. Fab.

Abste'miously, ȧb-ſtė'-myůs-lẏ. adv. [from abſtemious.] Temperately, ſoberly, without indulgence.

Abste'miousness, ȧb-ſtė'-myůs-neſs. n. ſ. [See Abstemious.] The quality, of being abſtemious.

Abste'ntion, ȧb-ſtė'n-ſhůn. n. ſ. [from abſtineo, Lat.] The act of holding off, or reſtraining; reſtraint. Dict.

To ABSTE'RGE, ȧb-ſtėr'je. v. a. [abſtergo, Lat.] To cleanſe by wiping; to wipe.

Abste'rgent, ȧb-ſtėr'-jėnt. adj. Cleanſing; having a cleanſing quality.

To Abste'rse, ȧb-ſtėr'ſe. [See Absterge.] To cleanſe, to purify: a word very little in uſe, and leſs analogical than abſterge.

Nor will we affirm, that iron receiveth, in the ſtomach of the oſtrich, no alteration; but we ſuſpect this effect, rather from corroſion than digeſtion; not any tendence to chilification by the natural heat, but rather ſome attrition from an acid and vitriolous humidity in the ſtomach, which may abſterſe and ſhave the ſcorious parts thereof. Brown's Vulgar Errours, b. iii.

Abste'rsion, ȧb-ſtėr'-ſhůn. n. ſ. [abſterſio, Lat.] The act of cleanſing. See Absterge.

Abſterſion is plainly a ſcouring off, or inciſion of the more viſcous humours, and making the humours more fluid, and cutting between them and the part; as is found in nitrous water, which ſcoureth linen cloth ſpeedily from the foulneſs. Bacon's Natural Hiſtory, № 42.

ABSTE'RSIVE, åb-ſtĕr'-sĭv. adj. [from abſterge.] That has the quality of abſterging or cleanſing.

It is good, after purging, to uſe apozemes and broths; not ſo much opening, as thoſe uſed before purging: but abſterſive and mundifying clyſters alſo are good to conclude with, to draw away the reliques of the humours. Bacon's Natural Hiſtory.

A tablet ſtood of that abſterſive tree,
Where Æthiops' ſwarthy bird did build to neſt.
Sir John Denham.

There, many a flow'r abſterſive grew,
Thy fav'rite flow'rs of yellow hue. Swift's Miſcel.

A'BSTINENCE, åb's-tý-nĕnſe. n. ſ. [abſtinentia, Lat.]

1. Forbearance of any thing; with the particle from.

Becauſe the abſtinence from a preſent pleaſure, that offers itſelf, is a pain; nay, oftentimes a very great one: it is no wonder that, that operates after the ſame manner pain does; and leſſens, in our thoughts, what is future; and ſo forces us, as it were, blindfold into its embraces. Locke.

2. Faſting, or forbearance of neceſſary food. It is generally diſtinguiſhed from temperance, as the greater degree from the leſs: ſometimes as ſingle performances, from habits; as, a day of abſtinence, and a life of temperance.

Say, can you faſt? your ſtomachs are too young:
And abſtinence ingenders maladies.
Shakeſp. Love's Labour Loſt.

And the faces of them, which have uſed abſtinence, ſhall ſhine above the ſtars; whereas our faces ſhall be blacker than darkneſs.
2 Eſdras, vii. 55.

Religious men, who hither muſt be ſent,
As awful guides of heavenly government;
To teach you penance, faſts, and abſtinence,
To puniſh bodies for the ſoul's offence.
Dryden's Indian Emp.

A'BSTINENCY, åb's-tý-nĕn-ſý. n. ſ The ſame with ABSTINENCE.

Were our rewards, for the abſtinencies or riots of this preſent life, under the prejudices of ſhort or finite; the promiſes and threats of Chriſt would loſe much of their virtue and energy.
Hammond's Fundam.

A'BSTINENT, åb's-tý-nĕnt. adj. [abſtinens, Lat.] That uſes abſtinence; in oppoſition to covetous, rapacious, or luxurious. It is uſed chiefly of perſons.

ABSTO'RTED, åb's-tårt'-ĕd. adj. [abſtortus, Lat.] Forced away, wrung from another by violence. Dict.

To ABSTRA'CT, åbs-trå'ct. v. a. [abſtrabo, Lat.]

1. To take one thing from another.

Could we abſtract from theſe pernicious effects, and ſuppoſe this were innocent; it would be too light, to be matter of praiſe. Decay of Piety.

2. To ſeparate by diſtillation.

Having dephlegmed ſpirit of ſalt, and gently abſtracted the whole ſpirit, there remaineth in the retort a ſtyptical ſubſtance. Boyle.

3. To ſeparate ideas.

Thoſe, who cannot diſtinguiſh, compare, and abſtract, would hardly be able to underſtand and make uſe of language, or judge or reaſon to any tolerable degree. Locke.

4. To reduce to an epitome.

If we would fix in the memory the diſcourſes we hear, or what we deſign to ſpeak; let us abſtract them into brief compends, and review them often. Watts's Imp. of the Mind.

A'BSTRACT, åb's-tråkt. adj. [abſtractus, Lat. See the verb To ABSTRACT.]

1. Separated from ſomething elſe: generally uſed, with relation to mental perceptions; as, abſtract mathematics, abſtract terms, in oppoſition to concrete.

Mathematics, in its latitude, is uſually divided into pure and mixed: and, though the pure do handle only abſtract quantity in general, as geometry, arithmetic; yet that, which is mixed, doth conſider the quantity of ſome particular determinate ſubject: ſo aſtronomy handles the quantity of heavenly motions; muſic, of ſounds; and mechanics, of weights and powers.
Wilkins's Mathematical Magick.

Abſtract terms ſignify the mode or quality of a being, without any regard to the ſubject in which it is; as, whiteneſs, roundneſs, length, breadth, wiſdom, mortality, life, death. Watts's Logick.

2. With the particle from.

Another fruit from the conſidering things in themſelves, abſtract from our opinions and other men's notions and diſcourſes on them, will be; that each man will purſue his thoughts in that method, which will be moſt agreeable to the nature of the thing, and to his apprehenſion of what it ſuggeſts to him. Locke.

A'BSTRACT, åb's-tråkt. n. ſ. [from the verb.]

1. A ſmaller quantity, containing the virtue or power of a greater.

You ſhall there find a man, who is the abſtract
Of all faults all men follow.
Shakeſp. Antony and Cleopatra.

If you are falſe, theſe epithets are ſmall;
You're then the things, and abſtract of them all.
Dryd. Aur.

2. An epitome, made by taking out the principal parts.

When Mnemon came to the end of a chapter, he recollected the ſentiments he had remarked; ſo that he could give a tolerable analyſis and abſtract of every treatiſe he had read, juſt after he had finiſhed it. Watts's Imp. of the Mind.

3. The ſtate of being abſtracted, or disjoined.

The hearts of great princes, if they be conſidered, as it were in abſtract, without the neceſſity of ſtates, and circumſtances of time, can take no full and proportional pleaſure in the exerciſe of any narrow bounty. Wotton.

ABSTRA'CTED, åb-ſtråk'-tĕd. part. adj. [from abſtract.]

1. Separated; disjoined.

That ſpace, the evil one abſtracted ſtood
From his own evil; and, for the time, remain'd
Stupidly good. Milton.

2. Refined, purified.

Abſtracted ſpiritual love, they like
Their ſouls exhal'd. Donne.

3. Abſtruſe; difficult.

4. Abſent of mind, inattentive to preſent objects; as, an abſtracted ſcholar.

ABSTRA'CTEDLY, åb-ſtråk'-tĕd-lý. adv. With abſtraction, ſimply, ſeparately from all contingent circumſtances.

Or whether more abſtractedly we look,
Or on the writers, or the written book;
Whence, but from heav'n, could men unſkill'd in arts,
In ſeveral ages born, in ſeveral parts,
Weave ſuch agreeing truths? or how, or why
Should all conſpire, to cheat us with a lie?
Unaſk'd their pains, ungrateful their advice,
Starving their gain, and martyrdom their price!
Dryden's Religio Laici.

ABSTRA'CTION, åb-ſtråk'-ſhŭn. n. ſ. [abſtractio, Lat.]

1. The act of abſtracting.

The word abſtraction ſignifies a withdrawing ſome part of an idea, from other parts of it; by which means ſuch abſtracted ideas are formed, as neither repreſent any thing corporeal or ſpiritual; that is, any thing peculiar or proper to mind or body. Watts's Logick.

2. The ſtate of being abſtracted.

3. Abſence of mind; inattention.

4. Diſregard of worldly objects.

A hermit wiſhes, to be praiſed for his abſtraction.
Pope's Letters.

ABSTRA'CTIVE, åb-ſtråk'-tĭv. adj. [from abſtract.] Having the power or quality of abſtracting.

ABSTRA'CTLY, åb-ſtråk't-lý. adv. [from abſtract.] In an abſtract manner, abſolutely, without reference to any thing elſe.

Matter, abſtractly and abſolutely conſidered, cannot have born an infinite duration now paſt and expired. Bentley's Sermons.

ABSTRA'CTNESS, åb-ſtråk't-nĕſs. n. ſ. [from abſtract.] Subtilty; ſeparation from all matter or common notion.

I have taken ſome pains, to make plain and familiar to your thoughts, truths; which, eſtabliſhed prejudice, or the abſtractneſs of the ideas themſelves, might render difficult. Locke.

ABSTRI'CTED, åb-ſtrĭk'-tĕd. part. adj. [abſtrictus, Lat.] Unbound. Dict.

To ABSTRI'NGE, åb-ſtrĭ'ndzh. v. a. To unbind. Dict.

To ABSTRU'DE, åb-ſtrŏ'd. v. a. [abſtrudo, Lat.] To thruſt off, or pull away. Dict.

ABSTRU'SE, åbſtrŏ'ſe. adj. [abſtruſus, Lat. thruſt out of ſight.]

1. Hidden.

Th' eternal eye, whoſe ſight diſcerns
Abſtruſeſt thoughts, from forth his holy mount,
And from within the golden lamps that burn
Nightly before him, ſaw, without their light,
Rebellion riſing.
Milton's Paradiſe Loſt, b. v. l. 712.

2. Difficult; remote from conception or apprehenſion. It is oppoſed to obvious and eaſy.

So ſpake our Sire, and by his countenance ſeem'd
Ent'ring on ſtudious thoughts abſtruſe.
Paradiſe Loſt, b. viii.

The motions and figures within the mouth are abſtruſe, and not eaſy to be diſtinguiſhed, eſpecially thoſe of the tongue; which is moved, through the help of many muſcles, ſo eaſily and habitually and variouſly; that we are ſcarce able, to give a judgment of motions and figures thereby framed.
Holder.

No man could give a rule of the greateſt beauties, and the knowledge of them was ſo abſtruſe; that there was no manner of ſpeaking, which could expreſs them. Dryd. Dufreſnoy.

ABSTRU'SELY, åb-ſtrŏ'ſe-lý. adv. In an abſtruſe manner; obſcurely, not plainly, or obviouſly.

ABSTRU'SENESS, åb-ſtrŏ'ſe-nĕſs. n. ſ. [from abſtruſe.] The quality of being abſtruſe; difficulty, obſcurity.

It is not oftentimes ſo much, what the ſcripture ſays, as what ſome men perſuade others it ſays, that makes it ſeem obſcure; and that, as to ſome other paſſages that are ſo indeed (ſince it is the abſtruſeneſs of what is taught in them, that makes them almoſt inevitably ſo) it is little leſs ſaucy, upon ſuch a ſcore to find fault with the ſtyle of the ſcripture, than to do ſo with the author for making us but men. Boyle on the Scripture.

ABSTRU'SITY, åb-ſtrŏ'-ſý-tý. n. ſ. [from abſtruſe.]

1. Abſtruſeneſs.

2. That, which is abſtruſe. A word ſeldom uſed.

Authors are alſo ſuſpicious, nor greedily to be ſwallowed; who pretend to write of ſecrets, to deliver antipathies, ſympathies, and the occult abſtruſities of things. Brown's Vulg. Errours.

To ABSU'ME, åb-ſŭ'me. v. a. [abſumo, Lat.] To bring to an end, by a gradual waſte; to eat up. An uncommon word.

That, which had been burning an infinite time could never be burnt; no, not ſo much as any part of it: for, if it had burned part after part, the whole muſt needs be abſumed in a portion of time.
Hale's Origin of Mankind.

ABSU'RD, åb ſŭrd'. adj. [abſurdus, Lat.]

1. Unreaſonable;

Unreaſonable; without judgment, as uſed of men.

Seeming wiſe men may make ſhift to get opinion; but let no man chuſe them for employment: for certainly you had better take for buſineſs a man ſomewhat abſurd, than over formal. Bacon.

A man, who cannot write with wit on a proper ſubject, is dull and ſtupid; but one, who ſhews it in an improper place, is as impertinent and abſurd. Addiſon, Spectator, N° 291.

Inconſiſtent, contrary to reaſon; uſed of ſentiments or practices.

The thing itſelf appeared deſirable to him; and accordingly he could not but like and deſire it: but then, it was after a very irrational abſurd way; and contrary to all the methods and principles of a rational agent; which never wills a thing really and properly, but it applies to the means, by which it is to be acquired. South's Sermons.

But grant, that thoſe can conquer, theſe can cheat;
'Tis phraſe abſurd, to call a villain great:
Who wickedly is wiſe, or madly brave,
Is but the more a fool, the more a knave.
Pope's Eſſay on Man.

Absu'rdity, ȧb-sůr'-dỷ-tỷ. n.ſ. [from abſurd.]

The quality of being abſurd; want of judgment, applied to men; want of propriety, applied to things.

How clear ſoever this idea of the infinity of number be, there is nothing more evident, than the abſurdity of the actual idea of an infinite number. Locke.

That, which is abſurd; as, his travels were full of abſurdities. In which ſenſe it has a plural.

That ſatisfaction we receive from the opinion of ſome pre-eminence in ourſelves, when we ſee the abſurdities of another, or when we reflect on any paſt abſurdities of our own. Addiſon.

Absu'rdly, ȧb-sůrd'-lỷ. adv. [from abſurd.] After an abſurd manner; improperly; unreaſonably.

But man, we find the only creature;
Who, led by folly, combats nature;
Who, when ſhe loudly cries Forbear,
With obſtinacy fixes there;
And, where his genius leaſt inclines,
Abſurdly bends his whole deſigns. Swift's Miſcel.

We may proceed yet further, with the atheiſt; and convince him, that not only his principle is abſurd, but his conſequences alſo as abſurdly deduced from it. Bentley's Sermons.

Absur'dness, ȧb-sůrd'-neſs. n. ſ. [from abſurd.] The quality of being abſurd; injudiciouſneſs; impropriety. See Absurdity; which is more frequently uſed.

bu'ndance, ȧ-bůn'-dånſe. n. ſ. [abondance,] Fr.]

Plenty; a ſenſe, chiefly poetical.

At the whiſper of thy word,
Crown'd abundance ſpreads my board. Craſhaw.
The doubled charge, his ſubjects' love ſupplies;
Who, in that bounty, to themſelves are kind:
So glad Egyptians ſee their Nilus riſe;
And, in his plenty, their abundance find.
Dryd. Ann. Mir.

Great numbers.

The river Inn is ſhut-up between mountains, covered with woods of fir-trees. Abundance of peaſants are employed, in hewing down the largeſt of theſe trees; that, after they are barked and cut into ſhape, are tumbled down. Addiſon on Italy.

A great quantity.

Their chief enterprize was the recovery of the Holy Land; in which worthy, but extremely difficult, action, it is lamentable to remember, what abundance of noble blood hath been ſhed, with very ſmall benefit unto the Chriſtian ſtate. Sir Walter Raleigh's Eſſays.

Exuberance; more, than enough.

For well I wot, moſt mighty ſovereign,
That all this famous antique hiſtory,
Of ſome, th' abundance of an idle brain,
Will judged be, and painted forgery. Spenſer.

Abu'ndant, ȧ-bůn'-dȧnt. adj. [abundans, Lat.]

1. Plentiful.

Good, the more
Communicated, more abundant grows;
The author not impair'd, but honour'd more.
Paradiſe Loſt, b. v.

2. Exuberant.

If the veſſels are in a ſtate of too great rigidity, ſo as not to yield; a ſtrong projectile motion occaſions their rupture, and hæmorrhages; eſpecially in the lungs, where the blood is abundant. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

3. Fully ſtored. It is followed ſometimes by in, commonly by with.

The world began but ſome ages, before theſe were found out; and was abundant with all things at firſt and men not very numerous; and therefore were not put ſo much to the uſe of their wits, to find out ways for living commodiouſly. Burnet.

4. It is applied, generally to things, ſometimes to perſons.

The Lord, the Lord God, merciful and gracious, long-ſuffering and abundant in goodneſs and truth. Exod. xxxiv. 6.

Abu'ndantly, ȧ-bůn'-dȧnt-lỷ. [adv. from abundant.]

1. In plenty.

Let the waters bring forth abundantly the moving creature that hath life. Geneſis, i. 20.

God on thee
Abundantly his gifts hath alſo pour'd;
Inward and outward both, his image fair.
Paradiſe Loſt, b. viii.

2. Amply, liberally, more than ſufficiently.

Ye ſaw the French tongue abundantly purified. Sprat.

Heroic poetry has ever been eſteemed the greateſt work of human nature. In that rank has Ariſtotle placed it; and Longinus is ſo full of the like expreſſions, that he abundantly confirms the other's teſtimony. Dryden's State of Innocence, Pref.

What the example of our equals wants of authority, is abundantly ſupplied in the imaginations of friendſhip, and the repeated influences of a conſtant converſation. Rogers's Serm.

To ABU'SE, ȧ-bů'ze. v.a. [abutor, abuſus, Lat.] In abuſe the verb, ſ has the ſound of z; in the noun, the common ſound.

1. To make an ill uſe of.

They, that uſe this world, as not abuſing it; for the faſhion of this world paſſeth away. 1 Cor. vii. 31.

He has fixed and determined the time for our repentance, beyond which he will no longer await the perverſeneſs of men, no longer ſuffer his compaſſion to be abuſed. Rogers's Sermons.

2. To violate; to defile.

Arachne figured, how Jove did abuſe
Europa like a bull, and on his back
Her through the ſea did bear. Spenſer.

3. To deceive; to impoſe upon.

He perhaps,
Out of my weakneſs and my melancholy,
As he is very potent with ſuch ſpirits,
Abuſes me to damn me. Shakeſpeare's Hamlet.

The world hath been much abuſed, by the opinion of making gold: the work itſelf, I judge to be poſſible; but the means, hitherto propounded, are (in the practice) full of error. Bacon's Natural Hiſtory, N° 126.

It imports the miſrepreſentation of the qualities of things and actions, to the common apprehenſions of men, abuſing their minds with falſe notions; and ſo, by this artifice, making evil paſs for good, and good for evil, in all the great concerns of life. South's Sermons.

Nor be with all theſe tempting words abus'd;
Theſe tempting words were all to Sappho us'd.
Pope.

4. To treat with rudeneſs; to reproach.

I am no ſtrumpet; but of life as honeſt,
As you that thus abuſe me. Shakeſp. Othello.

But he mocked them, and laughed at them; and abuſed them ſhamefully, and ſpake proudly. 1 Mac. vii. 34.

Some praiſe at morning, what they blame at night;
But always think the laſt opinion right.
A muſe by theſe is, like a miſtreſs, us'd;
This hour ſhe's idoliz'd, the next abus'd.
Pope's Eſſay on Criticiſm.

The next criticiſm ſeems to be introduced for no other reaſon, but to mention Mr. Bickerſtaff, whom the author every where endeavours to imitate and abuſe. Addiſon.

Abu'se, ȧ-bů'se. n. ſ. [from the verb abuſe.]

1. The ill uſe of any thing.

The caſting away things profitable for the ſuſtenance of man's life, is an unthankful abuſe of the fruits of God's good providence towards mankind. Hooker, b. v. § 9.

Little knows
Any, but God alone, to value right
The good before him, but perverts beſt things
To worſt abuſe, or to their meaneſt uſe.
Paradiſe Loſt, b. iv.

2. A corrupt practice, bad cuſtom.

The nature of things is ſuch; that, if abuſes be not remedied, they will certainly encreaſe. Swift for Advancement of Religion.

3. Seducement.

Was it not enough for him, to have deceived me; and, through the deceit, abuſed me; and, after the abuſe, forſaken me: but, that he muſt now, of all the company, and before all the company, lay want of beauty to my charge? Sidney, b. ii.

4. Unjuſt cenſure, rude reproach, contumely.

I dark in light, expos'd
To daily fraud, contempt, abuſe, and wrong.
Samſon Agoniſtes.

Abu'ser, ȧ-bů'-zůr. n. ſ. [from the verb abuſe.]

1. He, that makes an ill uſe.

2. He, that deceives.

Next thou, the abuſer of thy prince's ear.
Denham's Sophy.

3. He, that reproaches with rudeneſs.

4. A raviſher, a violater.

Abu'sive, ȧ-bů'-sįv. adj. [from abuſe]

1. Practiſing abuſe.

The tongue mov'd gently firſt, and ſpeech was low;
Till wrangling ſcience taught it noiſe and ſhow,
And wicked wit aroſe, thy moſt abuſive foe.
Pope's Miſcellanies.

Dame Nature, as the learned ſhew,
Provides each animal its foe:
Hounds hunt the hare; the wily fox
Devours your geeſe, the wolf your flocks:
Thus envy pleads a natural claim,
To perſecute the muſe's fame;
On poets, in all times, abuſive;
From Homer, down to Pope, incluſive.
Swift's Miſcel.

2. Containing abuſe; as, an abuſive lampoon.

Next, Comedy appear'd with great applauſe,
Till her licentious and abuſive tongue
Waken'd the magiſtrates coercive power. Roſcom.

3. Deceitful; a ſenſe little uſed, yet not improper.

It is verified, by a number of examples; that whatſoever is gained by an abuſive treaty, ought to be reſtored in integrum. Bacon's Conſiderations on War with Spain.

Abu'sively, ȧ-bů'-sįv-lỷ. adv. [from abuſe]

1. Improperly, by a wrong uſe.

The oil (abuſively called ſpirit) of roſes ſwims at the top of the water, in the form of a white butter; which I remember not to have obſerved, in any other oil drawn in any limbeck. Boyle's Sceptical Chymiſt.

2. Reproachfully.

ABU'SIVENESS, å-bů'-siv-neſs. n. ſ. [from abuſe.] The quality of being abuſive; foulneſs of language.

Pick out of mirth, like ſtones out of thy ground,
Profaneneſs, filthineſs, abuſiveneſs:
Theſe are the ſcum, with which coarſe wits abound;
The fine may ſpare theſe well, yet not go leſs.
Herbert.

To ABU'T, å-bůt'. v. n. obſolete. [aboutir, to touch at the end, Fr.] To end at, to border upon; to meet, or approach to, with the particle upon.

Two mighty monarchies,
Whoſe high upreared and abutting fronts
The narrow perilous ocean parts aſunder.
Shakeſpeare's Henry V.

The Looes are two ſeveral corporations, diſtinguiſhed by the addition of eaſt and weſt, abutting upon a navigable creek, and joined by a fair bridge of many arches. Carew.

ABU'TTAL, å-bůt'-ål. n. ſ. [from abut.] The butting or boundaries of any land. A writing, declaring on what lands, high ways, or other places, it does abut. Dict.

ABU'TMENT, å-bůt'-měnt. n. ſ. [from abut.] That, which abuts, or borders, upon another.

ABY'SM, å-bě'sm. n. ſ. [abyſme, old Fr. now written contractedly abime.] A gulf; the ſame with abyſs.

My good ſtars, that were my former guides,
Have empty left their orbs, and ſhot their fires
Into the abyſm of hell.
Shakeſpeare's Anthony and Cleopatra

ABY'SS, å-bìſs'. n. ſ. [abyſſus, Lat. ἄϐυσσος bottomleſs, Gr.]

1. A depth without bottom.

Who ſhall tempt with wand'ring feet
The dark, unbottom'd, infinite abyſs;
And, through the palpable obſcure, find out
This uncouth way.
Milton's Paradiſe Loſt, b. ii. l. 405.

Thy throne is darkneſs, in th' abyſs of light;
A blaze of glory, that forbids the ſight.
O teach me, to believe thee thus conceal'd;
And ſearch no farther, than thyſelf reveal'd.
Dryden.

Jove was not more pleas'd
With infant nature; when his ſpacious hand
Had rounded this huge ball of earth and ſeas,
To give it the firſt puſh, and ſee it roll
Along the vaſt abyſs. Addiſon, Guard. N° 110.

2. A great depth, a gulf; hyperbolically.

The yawning earth diſclos'd th' abyſs of hell.
Dryden's Virg. Georg. i.

3. In a figurative ſenſe; that, in which any thing is loſt.

For ſepulchres themſelves muſt crumbling fall
In time's abyſs, the common grave of all.
Dryden's Juvenal, Sat. x.

If, diſcovering how far we have clear and diſtinct ideas, we confine our thoughts within the contemplation of thoſe things, that are within the reach of our underſtandings; and launch not out into that abyſs of darkneſs, out of a preſumption that nothing is beyond our comprehenſion. Locke.

4. The body of waters, ſuppoſed at the centre of the earth.

We are here to conſider, what is generally underſtood by the great abyſs, in the common explication of the deluge; and 'tis commonly interpreted, either to be the ſea, or ſubterraneous waters, hid in the bowels of the earth. Burnet's Theory.

5. In the language of divines, hell.

From that inſatiable abyſs,
Where flames devour, and ſerpents hiſs,
Promote me to thy ſeat of bliſs. Roſcommon.

AC, AK, or AKE, åk, åk, å'ke.

Being initials in the names of places, as Acton, ſignify an oak, from the Saxon ac, an oak. Gibſon's Camden.

ACA'CIA, å-kå'-ſhå. n. ſ. [Lat.]

1. A drug, brought from Egypt; which, being ſuppoſed the inſpiſſated juice of a tree, is imitated by the juice of ſloes, boiled to the ſame conſiſtence.

Dictionaire de Comm. Savary. Trevoux.

2. A tree, commonly ſo called here; though different from that, which produces the true acacia; and therefore termed pſeudocacia, or Virginian acacia. Miller.

ACADE'MIAL, åk-kå-dě'-myål. adj. [from academy.] Relating to an academy, belonging to an academy.

ACADE'MIAN, åk-kå-dě'-myån. n. ſ. [from academy.] A ſcholar of an academy or univerſity; a member of an univerſity. Wood, in his Athenæ Oxonienſes, mentions a great feaſt made for the academians.

ACADE'MICK, åk-kå-děm'-mìk. n. ſ. [from academy.] A ſtudent of an univerſity.

A young academic ſhall dwell upon a journal, that treats of trade, and be laviſh in the praiſe of the author; while perſons, ſkilled in thoſe ſubjects, hear the tattle with contempt.
Watts's Improvement of the Mind.

ACADE'MICK, åk-kå-děm'-mìk. adj. [academicus, Lat.] Relating to an univerſity.

While through poetic ſcenes the genius roves,
Or wanders wild in academic groves.
Dunciad, b. iv. l. 481.

ACADE'MICAL, åk-kå-děm'-mỳ-kål. adj. [academicus, Lat.] Belonging to an univerſity.

He drew him firſt into the fatal circle, from a kind of reſolved privateneſs: where, after the academical life, he had taken ſuch a taſte of the rural; as I have heard him ſay, that he could well have bent his mind to a retired courſe. Wotton.

ACADEMI'CIAN, åk-kå-dě-mìſh'-ån. n. ſ. [academicien, Fr.] The member of an academy. It is generally uſed, in ſpeaking of the profeſſors in the academies of France.

ACA'DEMIST, å-kåd'-dě-mìſt. n. ſ. [from academy.] The member of an academy. This is not often uſed.

It is obſerved, by the Pariſian academiſts; that ſome amphibious quadrupeds, particularly the ſea-calf or ſeal, hath his epiglottis extraordinarily large. Ray on the Creation.

ACA'DEMY, å-kåd'-dě-mỳ. n. ſ. [anciently, and properly, with the accent on the firſt ſyllable, now frequently on the ſecond. Academia, Lat. from Academus of Athens, whoſe houſe was turned into a ſchool, from whom the Groves of Academe, in Milton.]

1. An aſſembly or ſociety of men, uniting for the promotion of ſome art.

Our court ſhall be a little academy,
Still and contemplative in living arts.
Shakeſpeare's Love's Labour Loſt.

2. The place, where ſciences are taught.

Amongſt the academies, which were compoſed by the rare genius of thoſe great men, theſe four are reckoned as the principal; namely, the Athenian ſchool, that of Sicyon, that of Rhodes, and that of Corinth. Dryden's Dufreſnoy.

3. An univerſity.

4. A place of education, in contradiſtinction to the univerſities or public ſchools. The thing, and therefore the name, is modern.

ACA'NTHUS, å-kån'-thůs. n. ſ. [Lat.] The name of the herb Bear's-breech; remarkable, for being the model of the foliage on the Corinthian chapiter.

On either ſide
Acanthus, and each od'rous buſhy ſhrub,
Fenc'd up the verdant wall.
Milt. Parad. Loſt, b. iv. l. 696.

ACATALE'CTIC, å-kåt-å-lěk'-tìk. n. ſ. [ἀκαταληκτικὸς, Gr.] A verſe, which has the complete number of ſyllables, without defect or ſuperfluity.

To ACCE'DE, åk-sě'de. v. n. [accedo, Lat.] To be added to, to come to; generally uſed in political accounts; as, another power has acceded to the treaty; that is, has become a party.

To ACCE'LERATE, åk-sěl'-lě-råte. v. a. [accelero, Lat.]

1. To make quick, to haſten, to quicken motion; to give a continual impulſe to motion, ſo as perpetually to increaſe.

Take new beer, and put in ſome quantity of ſtale beer into it; and ſee, whether it will not accelerate the clarification, by opening the body of the beer, whereby the groſſer parts may fall down into lees. Bacon's Natural Hiſtory, N° 307.

By a ſkilful application of thoſe notices, may be gained the accelerating and bettering of fruits, and the emptying of mines, at much more eaſy rates, than by the common methods. Glanville, Scepſis.

If the rays endeavour to recede, from the denſeſt part of the vibration; they may be alternately accelerated and retarded, by the vibrations overtaking them. Newton's Opticks.

Spices quicken the pulſe, and accelerate the motion of the blood, and diſſipate the fluids; from whence leanneſs, pains in the ſtomach, loathings, and fevers. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

Lo! from the dread immenſity of ſpace
Returning, with accelerated courſe,
The ruſhing comet to the ſun deſcends.
Thomſ. Sum. l. 1690.

2. It is generally applied to matter, and uſed chiefly in philoſophical language; but it is ſometimes uſed on other occaſions.

In which council the king himſelf (whoſe continual vigilancy did ſuck-in ſometimes cauſeleſs ſuſpicions, which few elſe knew) inclined to the accelerating a battle. Bacon's Henry VII.

Perhaps it may point out to a ſtudent now and then, what may employ the moſt uſeful labours of his thoughts, and accelerate his diligence in the moſt momentous enquiries. Watts.

ACCELERA'TION, åk-sěl-lě-rå'-ſhůn. n. ſ. [acceleratio, Lat.]

1. The act of quickening motion.

The law of the acceleration of falling bodies, diſcovered firſt by Galileo, is; that the velocities, acquired by falling, being as the time in which the body falls; the ſpaces, through which it paſſes, will be as the ſquares of the velocities; and the velocity and time taken together, as in a quadruplicate ratio of the ſpaces.

2. The ſtate of the body accelerated, or quickened in its motion.

The degrees of acceleration of motion, the gravitation of the air, the exiſtence or non-exiſtence of empty ſpaces, either coacervate or interſperſed, and many the like, have taken-up the thoughts and times of men in diſputes concerning them.
Hale's Origin of Mankind.

3. The act of haſtening.

Conſidering the languor enſuing that action in ſome, and the viſible acceleration it maketh of age in moſt; we cannot but think, venery much abridgeth our days. Brown.

To ACCE'ND, åk-sěnd'. v. a. [accendo, Lat.] To kindle, to ſet on fire; a word very rarely uſed.

Our devotion, if ſufficiently accended, would (as theirs) burn up innumerable books of this ſort.
Decay of Piety.

ACCE'NSION, åk-sěn'-ſhůn. n. ſ. [accenſio, Lat.] The act of kindling, or the ſtate of being kindled.

The fulminating damp will take fire, at a candle or other flame; and, upon its accenſion, gives a crack or report, like the diſcharge of a gun; and makes an exploſion ſo forcible, as ſometimes to kill the miners, ſhake the earth, and force bodies (of great weight and bulk) from the bottom of the pit or mine. Woodward's Natural Hiſtory.

'CCENT, åk'-sĕnt. n. ſ. [accentus, Lat.]

The manner of ſpeaking or pronouncing, with regard either to force or elegance.

I know, Sir, I am no flatterer: he, that beguiled you in a plain accent, was a plain knave; which, for my part, I will not be. Shakeſpeare's King Lear.

The ſound, given to the ſyllable pronounced.

Your accent is ſomething finer, than you could purchaſe in ſo removed a dwelling. Shakeſpeare's As you like it.

In grammar, the marks made upon ſyllables, to regulate their pronunciation.

Accent, as in the Greek names and uſage, ſeems to have regarded the tune of the voice; the acute accent, raiſing the voice in ſome certain ſyllables, to a higher, (i. e. more acute) pitch or tone; and the grave, depreſſing it lower; and both, having ſome emphaſis, i. e. more vigorous pronunciation. Holder.

Poetically, language or words.

How many ages hence
Shall this our lofty ſcene be acted o'er,
In ſtates unborn, and accents yet unknown.
Shakeſpeare's Julius Cæſar.

Winds! on your wings to heav'n her accents bear!
Such words, as heav'n alone is fit to hear.
Dryd. Virg. Paſt. 3.

A modification of the voice, expreſſive of the paſſions or ſentiments.

The tender accent of a woman's cry
Will paſs unheard, will unregarded die;
When the rough ſeaman's louder ſhouts prevail,
When fair occaſion ſhews the ſpringing gale.
Prior.

To A'ccent, åk-sĕnt'. v. a. [from accentus, Lat.] formerly elevated at the ſecond ſyllable, now at the firſt.

To pronounce, to ſpeak words with particular regard to the grammatical marks or rules.

Having got ſomebody to mark the laſt ſyllable but one, where it is long, in words above two ſyllables; which is enough, to regulate her pronunciation, and accenting the words; let her read daily in the goſpels, and avoid underſtanding them in Latin, if ſhe can. Locke on Education, § 177.

In poetry; to pronounce or utter in general.

O my unhappy lines! you, that before
Have ſerv'd my youth, to vent ſome wanton cries;
And now, congeal'd with grief, can ſcarce implore
Strength to accent, Here my Albertus lies!
Wotton.

3. To write or note the accents.

To Acce'ntuate, åk-sĕn'-tů-åte. v. a. [accentuer, Fr.] To place the proper accents over the vowels.

ccentua'tion, åk-sĕn-tů-å'-ſhŭn. n. ſ. [from accentuate.]

The act of placing the accent in pronunciation.

Marking the accent in writing.

To ACCE'PT, åk-sĕpt'. v. a. [accipio, Lat. accepter, Fr.]

To take with pleaſure; to receive kindly; to admit with approbation. It is diſtinguiſhed from receive, as ſpecific from general; noting a particular manner of receiving.

Neither do ye kindle fire on my altar for nought. I have no pleaſure in you, ſaith the Lord of hoſts, neither will I accept an offering at your hand. Malachi, i. 10.

God is no reſpecter of perſons: but, in every nation, he, that feareth him, and worketh righteouſneſs, is accepted with him. Acts, x. 34, 35.

You have been graciouſly pleaſed, to accept this tender of my duty. Dryden's Dedication to his Fables.

Charm by accepting, by ſubmitting ſway;
Yet have your humour moſt, when you obey.
Pope.

2. It is uſed in a kind of juridical ſenſe; as, to accept terms, accept a treaty.

They ſlaughter'd many of the gentry; for whom no ſex or age could be accepted for excuſe. Sidney.

His promiſe Palamon accepts; but pray'd
To keep it better, than the firſt he made.
Dryden's Fables.

Thoſe, who have defended the proceedings of our negociators at the treaty of Gertruydenburgh, dwell upon their zeal and patience in endeavouring to work the French up to their demands, but ſay nothing of the probability, that France would ever accept them. Swift.

3. In the language of the Bible, to accept perſons, is to act with perſonal and partial regard.

He will ſurely reprove you, if ye do ſecretly accept perſons. Job, xiii. 10.

4. It is ſometimes uſed with the particle of.

I will appeaſe him with the preſent, that goeth before me; and afterward I will ſee his face: peradventure he will accept of me. Geneſis, xxxii. 20.

Acceptabi'lity, åk-sĕp-tå-bĭl'-lĭ-tŷ. n. ſ. The quality of being acceptable. See Acceptable.

He hath given us his natural blood to be ſhed, for the remiſſion of our ſins, and for the obtaining the grace and acceptability of repentance. Taylor's Worthy Communicant.

Acce'ptable, åk'-sĕp-tåbl. adj. [acceptable, Fr. from the Latin.] It is pronounced by ſome, with the accent on the firſt ſyllable, as by Milton; by others, with the accent on the ſecond, which is more analogical.

1. That, which is likely to be accepted; grateful; pleaſing. It is uſed with the particle to, before the perſon accepting.

This woman, whom thou mad'ſt to be my help,
And gav'ſt me as thy perfect gift, ſo good,
So fit, ſo acceptable, ſo divine,
That from her hand I could expect no ill.
Paradiſe Loſt, b. ii.

I do not ſee any other method left, for men of that function to take, in order to reform the world, than by uſing all honeſt arts, to make themſelves acceptable to the laity. Swift.

After he had made a peace ſo acceptable to the church, and ſo honourable to himſelf, he died with an extraordinary reputation of ſanctity. Addiſon on Italy.

Acce'ptableness, åk'-sĕp-tåbl-nĕſs. n. ſ. [from acceptable.] The quality of being acceptable.

It will thereby take away the acceptableneſs of that conjunction. Grew's Coſmologia Sacra, b. ii. c. 2.

Acce'ptably, åk'-sĕp-tå-blŷ. adv. [from acceptable.] In an acceptable manner; ſo as to pleaſe; with the particle to. For the accent, ſee Acceptable.

Do not omit thy prayers, for want of a good oratory: for he, that prayeth upon God's account, cares not what he ſuffers, ſo he be the friend of Chriſt; nor where nor when he prays, ſo he may do it frequently, fervently, and acceptably. Taylor.

If you can teach them, to love and reſpect other people; they will, as your age requires it, find ways to expreſs it acceptably to every one. Locke on Education, § 145.

Acce'ptance, åk-sĕp'-tånſe. n. ſ. [acceptance, Fr.]

1. Reception with approbation.

By that acceptance of his ſovereignty, they alſo accepted of his laws; why then ſhould any other laws now be uſed amongſt them? Spenſer's State of Ireland.

If he tells us his noble deeds, we muſt alſo tell him our noble acceptance of them. Shakeſpeare's Coriolanus.

Thus I imbolden'd ſpake, and freedom us'd
Permiſſive, and acceptance found.
Paradiſe Loſt, b. viii. l. 435.

Some men cannot be fools with ſo good acceptance, as others. South's Sermons.

2. The meaning of a word, as it is received or underſtood; acceptation is the word now commonly uſed.

That pleaſure is man's chiefeſt good, becauſe indeed it is the perception of good that is properly pleaſure, is an aſſertion moſt certainly true; though, under the common acceptance of it, not only falſe but odious: for, according to this, pleaſure and ſenſuality paſs for terms equivalent; and therefore he, who takes it in this ſenſe, alters the ſubject of the diſcourſe. South.

Acce'ptance, åk-sĕp'-tånſe. [in law.] The receiving of a rent, whereby the giver binds himſelf for ever, to allow a former act done by another, whether it be in itſelf good or not. Cowell.

Accepta'tion, åk-sĕp-tå'-ſhŭn. n. ſ. [from accept.]

1. Reception, whether good or bad. This large ſenſe ſeems now wholly out of uſe.

Yet, poor ſoul! knows he no other, but that I do ſuſpect, neglect, yea, and deteſt him? For, every day, he finds one way or other, to ſet forth himſelf unto me; but all are rewarded with like coldneſs of acceptation. Sidney, b. ii.

What is new, finds better acceptation, than what is good or great. Denham's Sophy.

2. Good reception, acceptance.

Cain, envious of the acceptation of his brother's prayer and ſacrifice, ſlew him; making himſelf the firſt manſlayer, and his brother the firſt martyr. Raleigh's Hiſtory of the World, b. i.

3. The ſtate of being acceptable; regard.

Some things, although not ſo required of neceſſity; that, to leave them undone, excludeth from ſalvation; are, notwithſtanding, of ſo great dignity and acceptation with God, that moſt ample reward in heaven is laid-up for them. Hooker, b. ii.

They have thoſe enjoyments, only as the conſequences of the ſtate of eſteem and acceptation they are in with their parents and governours. Locke on Education, § 53.

4. Acceptance in the juridical ſenſe. This ſenſe occurs rarely.

As, in order to the paſſing away a thing by gift, there is required a ſurrender of all right, on his part that gives; ſo there is required alſo an acceptation on his part, to whom it is given. South's Sermons.

5. The meaning of a word, as it is commonly received.

Thereupon the earl of Lauderdale made a diſcourſe upon the ſeveral queſtions, and what acceptation theſe words and expreſſions had. Clarendon, b. viii.

All matter is either fluid or ſolid, in a large acceptation of the words; that they may comprehend even all the middle degrees, between extreme fixedneſs and coherency, and the moſt rapid inteſtine motion of the particles of bodies. Bentley's Serm.

Acce'pter, åk-sĕp'-tŭr. n. ſ. [from accept.] The perſon, that accepts.

Acceptila'tion, åk-sĕp'-tĭ-lå''-ſhŭn. n. ſ. [acceptilatio, Lat.] A term of the civil law; importing the remiſſion of a debt, by an acquittance from the creditor; teſtifying the receipt of money, which has never been paid.

Acce'ption, åk-sĕp'-ſhŭn. n. ſ. [acception, Fr. from acceptio, Lat.] The received ſenſe of a word; the meaning. Not in uſe.

That this hath been eſteemed the due and proper acception of this word, I ſhall teſtify by one evidence, which gave me the firſt hint of this notion. Hammond on Fundamentals.

ACCE'SS, åk'-sĕſs. n. ſ. [In ſome of its ſenſes, it ſeems derived from acceſſus; in others, from acceſſio, Lat. acces, Fr.]

1. The way, by which any thing may be approached.

The acceſs of the town was only by a neck of land. Bacon.

There remained very advantageous acceſſes, for temptations to enter and invade men; the fortifications being very ſlender, little knowledge of immortality, or any thing beyond this life; and no aſſurance, that repentance would be admitted for ſin. Hammond on Fundamentals.

And here th' acceſs a gloomy grove defends;
And here th' unnavigable lake extends;
O'er whoſe unhappy waters, void of light,
No bird preſumes to ſteer his airy flight.
Dryden's Æneid, vi.

2. The means, or liberty, of approaching either to things or men.

When we are wrong'd, and would unfold our grieſs;
We are deny'd acceſs unto his perſon,
Ev'n by thoſe men, that moſt have done us wrong.
Shakeſpeare.

They go, commiſſion'd to require a peace;
And carry preſents, to procure acceſs.
Dryden's Æneid, vii. l. 209.

He grants what they beſought;
Inſtructed, that to God is no acceſs
Without Mediator; whoſe high office now
Moſes in figure bears.
Milton's Par. Loſt, b. xii. l. 239.

3. Encreaſe, enlargement, addition.

The gold was accumulated, and ſtore treaſures, for the moſt part; but the ſilver is ſtill growing. Beſides, infinite is the acceſs of territory and empire, by the ſame enterprize. Bacon.

Nor think ſuperfluous their aid:
I, from the influence of thy looks, receive
Acceſs in every virtue; in thy ſight
More wiſe, more watchful, ſtronger.
Paradiſe Loſt, b. ix.

Although to opinion, there be many gods, may ſeem an acceſs in religion, and ſuch as cannot at all conſiſt with atheiſm; yet doth it deductively, and upon inference, include the ſame: for unity is the inſeparable and eſſential attribute of Deity. Brown's Vulgar Errours, b. i. c. 10.

The reputation
Of virtuous actions paſt, if not kept-up
With an acceſs and freſh ſupply of new ones,
Is loſt and ſoon forgotten. Denham's Sophy.

4. It is ſometimes uſed, after the French, to ſignify the returns or fits of a diſtemper; but this ſenſe ſeems yet ſcarcely received into our language.

For, as relapſes make diſeaſes
More deſperate, than their firſt acceſſes. Hudibras.

A'CCESSARINESS, åk″-sê-sår′-rŷ-nêſs. n. ſ. [from acceſſary.] The ſtate of being acceſſary.

Perhaps this will draw us into a negative acceſſarineſs to the miſchiefs. Decay of Piety.

A'CCESSARY, åk′-sês-sår-rŷ. adj. [A corruption, as it ſeems, of the word acceſſory, which ſee; but now more commonly uſed, than the proper word.] That which, without being the chief conſtituent of a crime, contributes to it. But it had formerly a good and general ſenſe.

As for thoſe things, that are acceſſary hereunto; thoſe things, that ſo belong to the way of ſalvation, &c. Hooker, b. iii. § 3.

He hath taken upon him the government of Hull, without any apprehenſion or imagination, that it would ever make him acceſſary to rebellion. Clarendon, b. viii.

ACCE'SSIBLE, åk-sês′-sîbl. adj. [acceſſibilis, Lat. acceſſible, Fr.] That, which may be approached; that, which we may reach or arrive at.

It is applied, both to perſons and things, with the particle to.

Some lie more open, to our ſenſes and daily obſervation; others are more occult and hidden; and, though acceſſible (in ſome meaſure) to our ſenſes, yet not without great ſearch and ſcrutiny, or ſome happy accident. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

Thoſe things, which were indeed inexplicable, have been rackt and tortured to diſcover themſelves; while the plainer and more acceſſible truths, as if deſpicable while eaſy, are clouded and obſcured. Decay of Piety.

As an iſland, we are acceſſible on every ſide, and expoſed to perpetual invaſions; againſt which it is impoſſible to fortify ourſelves ſufficiently, without a power at ſea. Addiſon's Freeholder.

In converſation, the tempers of men are open and acceſſible, their attention is awake, and their minds diſpoſed to receive the ſtrongeſt impreſſions; and, what is ſpoken, is generally more affecting, and more appoſite to particular occaſions. Rogers.

ACCE'SSION, åk-sês′-ſhûn. n. ſ. [acceſſio, Lat. acceſſion, Fr.]

1. Increaſe, by ſomething added; enlargement, augmentation.

Nor could all the king's bounties, nor his own large acceſſions, raiſe a fortune to his heir; but, after vaſt ſums of money, and great wealth gotten, he died unlamented. Clarendon.

There would not have been found the difference (here ſet down) betwixt the force of the air, when expanded, and what that force ſhould have been according to the theory; but that the included inch of air received ſome little acceſſion, during the trial. Boyle's Spring of the Air.

The wiſeſt among the nobles began to apprehend the growing power of the people; and therefore, knowing what an acceſſion thereof would accrue to them, by ſuch an addition of property, uſed all means to prevent it. Swift.

Charity indeed, and works of munificence, are the proper diſcharge of ſuch over-proportioned acceſſions, and the only virtuous enjoyment of them. Rogers's Sermons.

2. The act of coming to, or joining one's ſelf to; as, acceſſion to a confederacy.

Beſide, what wiſe objections he prepares,
Againſt my late acceſſion to the wars?
Does not the fool perceive, his argument
Is with more force againſt Achilles bent?
Dryden's Fables.

3. The act of arriving at; as, the King's acceſſion to the throne.

A'CCESSORILY, åk″-sês-sûr′-rŷ-lŷ. adv. [from acceſſory.] In the manner of an acceſſory.

A'CCESSORY, åk-sês-sûr-rŷ. adj. Joined to another thing, ſo as to increaſe it; additional.

In this kind there is not the leaſt action, but it doth ſomewhat make to the acceſſory augmentation of our bliſs. Hooker.

A'CCESSORY, åk′-sês-sûr-rŷ. n. ſ. [acceſſorius, Lat. acceſſoire, Fr.] This word, which had anciently a general ſignification, is now almoſt confined to forms of law.]

1. Applied to perſons.

A man, that is guilty of a felonious offence, not principally, but by participation; as, by commandment, advice, or concealment. And a man may be acceſſory to the offence of another, after two ſorts; by the common law, or by ſtatute: and, by the common law, two ways alſo; that is, before or after the fact. Before the fact; as, when one commandeth or adviſeth another to commit a felony, and is not preſent at the execution thereof; for his preſence makes him alſo a principal: wherefore there cannot be an acceſſory before the fact, in manſlaughter; becauſe manſlaughter is ſudden and not prepenſed. Acceſſory after the fact is, when one receiveth him, whom he knoweth to have committed felony. Acceſſory by ſtatute is he, that abets, counſels, or hides any man committing, or having committed, an offence made felony by ſtatute. Cowell.

By the common law, the acceſſories cannot be proceeded againſt, till the principal has received his trial. Spenſ. State of Ireland.

But pauſe, my ſoul! and ſtudy, ere thou fall
On accidental joys, th' eſſential.
Still, before acceſſories do abide
A trial, muſt the principal be try'd. Donne.

Now were all transform'd
Alike, to ſerpents all, as acceſſories
To his bold riot. Milton's Par. Loſt, b. x. l. 52

2. Applied to things.

An acceſſory is ſaid to be that, which does accede under ſome principal fact or thing in law; and, as ſuch, generally ſpeaking, follows the reaſon and nature of its principal. Ayliffe.

A'CCIDENCE, åk′-sŷ-dênſe. n. ſ. [a corruption of accidents, from accidentia, Lat.] The little book, containing the firſt rudiments of grammar, and explaining the properties of the eight parts of ſpeech.

I do confeſs, I do want eloquence;
And never yet did learn mine accidence.
Taylor the Water-poet.

A'CCIDENT, åk′-sŷ-dênt. n. ſ. [accidens, Lat.]

1. The property or quality of any being, which may be ſeparated from it, at leaſt in thought.

If ſhe were but the body's accident,
And her ſole being did in it ſubſiſt,
As white in ſnow; ſhe might herſelf abſent,
And in the body's ſubſtance not be miſs'd.
Sir J. Davies.

An accidental mode, or an accident, is ſuch a mode, as is not neceſſary to the being of a thing; for the ſubject may be without it, and yet remain of the ſame nature that it was before; or it is that mode, which may be ſeparated or aboliſhed from its ſubject. Watts's Logick.

2. In grammar, the property of a word.

The learning of a language is nothing elſe, but the informing of ourſelves; what compoſures of letters are, by conſent and inſtitution, to ſignify ſuch certain notions of things, with their modalities and accidents. Holder's Elements of Speech.

3. That, which happens unforeſeen; caſualty, chance.

General laws are like general rules in phyſick; according whereunto, as no wiſe man will deſire himſelf to be cured, if there be joined with his diſeaſe ſome ſpecial accident; in regard whereof, that, whereby others (in the ſame infirmity, but without the like accident) recover health, would be to him either hurtful, or at the leaſt unprofitable. Hooker, b. v. § 9.

The flood, and other accidents of time, made it one common field and paſture with the land of Eden. Raleigh's Hiſt. of World.

Our joy is turn'd,
Into perplexity and new amaze;
For, whither is he gone? What accident
Hath rapt him from us? Paradiſe Regained.

And trivial accidents ſhall be forborn,
That others may have time to take their turn.
Dryden's Fables.

The reformation owed nothing to the good intentions of king Henry. He was only an inſtrument of it (as the logicians ſpeak) by accident. Swift's Miſcellanies.

ACCIDE'NTAL, åk-sŷ-dên′-tål. n. ſ. [accidental, Fr. See ACCIDENT.] A property non-eſſential.

Conceive, as much as you can, of the eſſentials of any ſubject, before you conſider its accidentals. Watts's Logick.

ACCIDE'NTAL, åk-sŷ-dên′-tal. adj. [from accident.]

1. Having the quality of an accident, non-eſſential; uſed with the particle to, before that, in which the accident inheres.

A diſtinction is to be made, between what pleaſes naturally in itſelf, and what pleaſes upon the account of machines, actors, dances, and circumſtances, which are merely accidental to the tragedy. Rymer's Tragedies of the laſt Age.

This is accidental to a ſtate of religion, and therefore ought to be reckoned among the ordinary difficulties of it. Tillotſon.

2. Caſual, fortuitous, happening by chance.

Thy ſin's not accidental, but a trade.
Shakeſp. Meaſ. for Meaſ.

So ſhall you hear
Of accidental judgments, caſual ſlaughters;
Of deaths, put on by cunning and forc'd cauſe.
Shakeſp. Hamlet.

Look upon things of the moſt accidental and mutable nature; accidental, in their production; and mutable, in their continuance: yet God's preſcience of them is as certain in him, as the memory of them is, or can be, in us. South's Sermons.

3. In the following paſſage, it ſeems to ſignify adventitious.

Ay, ſuch a miniſter, as wind to fire;
That adds an accidental fierceneſs, to
Its natural fury. Denham's Sophy.

Accide′ntally, åk-ſŷ-dĕn′-tål-lŷ. adv. [from accidental.]

1. After an accidental manner; noneſſentially.

Other points no leſs concern the commonwealth, though but accidentally depending upon the former. Spenſer's St. of Irel.

I conclude choler accidentally bitter and acrimonious, but not in itſelf. Harvey on Conſumptions.

2. Caſually, fortuitouſly.

Although virtuous men do ſometimes accidentally make their way to preferment; yet the world is ſo corrupted, that no man can reaſonably hope to be rewarded in it, merely upon account of his virtue. Swift's Miſcellanies.

Accide′ntalness, åk-ſŷ-dĕn′-tål-nĕſs. n. ſ. [from accidental.] The quality of being accidental. Dict.

Acci′pient, åk-ſĕ′-pyĕnt. n. ſ. [accipiens, Lat.] A receiver, perhaps ſometimes uſed for recipient. Dict.

To Acci′te, åk-ſī′te. v. a. [accito, Lat.] To call, to ſummons; a word, not in uſe now.

Our coronation done, we will accite
(As I before remember'd) all our ſtate;
And (heav'n conſigning to my good intents)
No prince, no peer, ſhall have juſt cauſe to ſay,
Heav'n ſhorten Harry's happy life one day.
Shakeſp. Henry IV.

Accla′im, åk-klā′m. n. ſ. [acclamo, Lat. from which probably firſt the verb acclaim, now loſt, and then the noun.] A ſhout of praiſe, acclamation.

Back from purſuit thy pow'rs, with loud acclaim,
Thee only extoll'd. Milton's Par. Loſt, b. iii. l. 397.

The herald ends; the vaulted firmament
With loud acclaims and vaſt applauſe, is rent.
Dryd. Fables.

Acclama′tion, åk-klå-mā′-ſhŭn. n. ſ. [acclamatio, Lat.] Shouts of applauſe; ſuch as thoſe, with which a victorious army ſalutes the general.

It hath been the cuſtom of Chriſtian men, in token of the greater reverence, to ſtand, to utter certain words of acclamation; and, at the name of Jeſus, to bow. Hooker, b. v. § 29.

Gladly then he mix'd
Among thoſe friendly pow'rs, who him receiv'd
With joy and acclamations loud, that one,
That (of ſo many myriads fall'n) yet one
Return'd, not loſt. Milt. Parad. Loſt, b. vi. l. 23.

Such an enchantment is there in words; and ſo fine a thing does it ſeem to ſome, to be ruined plauſibly, and to be uſhered to their deſtruction with panegyrick and acclamation. South.

Accli′vity, åk-klĭ′-vĭ-tŷ. n. ſ. [from acclivus, Lat.] The ſteepneſs or ſlope of a line inclining to the horizon, reckoned upwards; as, the aſcent of an hill is the acclivity, the deſcent is the declivity. Quincy.

The men, leaving their wives and younger children below, do (not without ſome difficulty) clamber up the acclivities, dragging their kine with them; where they feed them, and milk them, and make butter and cheeſe, and do all the dairy-work. Ray on the Creation.

Accli′vous, åk-klī′-vŭs. adj. [acclivus, Lat.] Riſing with a ſlope.

To Acclo′y, åk-klŏy′. v. a. [See CLOY.]

1. To fill up, in an ill ſenſe; to crowd, to ſtuff full; a word almoſt obſolete.

At the well head the pureſt ſtreams ariſe:
But mucky filth his branching arms annoys,
And with uncomely weeds the gentle wave accloys.
Fairy Queen.

2. To fill to ſatiety; in which ſenſe, cloy is ſtill in uſe.

They, that eſcape beſt in the temperate zone, would be accloyed with long nights, very tedious, no leſs than forty days. Ray on the Creation.

To Acco′il, åk-kŏĭ′l. v. n. [See Coil.] To crowd, to keep a coil about, to buſtle, to be in a hurry: a word now out of uſe.

About the cauldron many cooks accoil'd,
With hooks and ladles, as need did require;
The while the viands in the veſſel boil'd,
They did about their buſineſs ſweat, and ſorely toil'd. Fairy Queen.

A′ccolent, åk′-kŏ-lĕnt. n. ſ. [accolens, Lat.] He, that inhabits near a place; a borderer. Dict.

Acco′mmodable, åk-kŏm′-mŏ-dåbl. adj. [accommodabilis, Lat.] That, which may be fitted; with the particle to.

As there is infinite variety in the circumſtances of perſons, things, actions, times, and places; ſo we muſt be furniſhed with ſuch general rules, as are accommodable to all this variety, by a wiſe judgment and diſcretion. Watts's Logick.

To ACCO′MMODATE, åk-kŏm′-mŏ-dåte. v. a. [accommodo, Lat.]

1. To ſupply with conveniences of any kind. It has with before the thing.

These three
(The reſt do nothing) with this word, ſtand! ſtand!
Accommodated by the place (more charming
With their own nobleneſs, which could have turn'd
A diſtaff to a lance) gilded pale looks.
Shakeſp. Cymbeline.

2. With the particle to; to adapt, to fit, to make conſiſtent with.

He had altered many things: not, that they were not natural before; but that he might accommodate himſelf, to the age in which he lived. Dryden on Dramatic Poetry.

'Twas his misfortune, to light upon an hypotheſis, that could not be accommodated to the nature of things and human affairs: his principles could not be made to agree with that conſtitution and order, which God hath ſettled in the world. Locke.

3. To reconcile; to adjuſt, what ſeems inconſiſtent or at variance; to make conſiſtency appear.

Part know, how to accommodate St. James and St. Paul, better than ſome late reconcilers. Norris.

To Acco′mmodate, åk-kŏm′-mŏ-dåte. v. n. To be conformable to.

They make the particular enſigns of the twelve tribes accommodate, unto the twelve ſigns of the zodiac. Brown.

Neither ſort of chymiſts have duly conſidered, how great variety there is in the textures and conſiſtencies of compound bodies; and how little the conſiſtence and duration of many of them ſeem to accommodate and be explicable by the propoſed notion. Boyle's Scept. Chym.

Acco′mmodate, åk-kŏm′-mŏ-dåte. adj. [accommodatus, Lat.] Suitable, fit; uſed ſometimes with the particle for, but more frequently with to.

They are ſo acted and directed by nature, as to caſt their eggs in ſuch places, as are moſt accommodate for the excluſion of their young; and where there is food ready for them, ſo ſoon as they be hatched. Ray on the Creation.

In theſe caſes we examine the why, the what, and the how, of things; and propoſe means, accommodate to the end. L'Eſtrange.

God did not primarily intend, to appoint this way of worſhip; and to impoſe it upon them as that, which was moſt proper and agreeable to him: but that he condeſcended to it, as moſt accommodate to their preſent ſtate and inclination. Tillotſon.

Acco′mmodately, åk-kŏm′-mŏ-dåte-lŷ. adv. [from accommodate.] Suitably, fitly.

Accommoda′tion, åk-kŏm-mŏ-dā′-ſhŭn. n. ſ. [from accommodate.]

1. Proviſion of conveniencies.

2. In the plural, conveniencies, things requiſite to eaſe or refreſhment.

The king's commiſſioners were to have ſuch accommodations, as the other thought fit to leave to them; who had been very civil to the king's commiſſioners. Clarendon, b. viii.

3. Adaptation, fitneſs; with the particle to.

Indeed that diſputing phyſiology is no accommodation to your deſigns; which are not to teach men, to cant endleſsly about materia and forma. Glanville's Scepſis.

The organization of the body, with accommodation to its functions, is fitted with the moſt curious mechaniſm. Hale's Origin.

4. Compoſition of a difference, reconciliation, adjuſtment.

Acco′mpanable, åk-kŭm′-på-nåbl. adj. [from accompany.] Sociable: a word now not uſed.

A ſhow (as it were) of an accompanable ſolitarineſs, and of a civil wildneſs. Sidney, b. i.

Acco′mpanier, åk-kŭm′-på-nŷ-ŭr. n. ſ. [from accompany.] The perſon, that makes part of the company; companion. Dict.

To ACCO′MPANY, åk-kŭm′-på-nŷ. v. a. [accompagner, Fr.] To be with another, as a companion. It is uſed, both of perſons and things.

Go viſit her, in her chaſte bower of reſt,
Accompany'd with angel-like delights.
Spenſer, Sonnet iii.

The great buſineſs of the ſenſes being to make us take notice of what hurts or advantages the body, it is wiſely ordered by nature, that pain ſhould accompany the reception of ſeveral ideas. Locke.

As folly is uſually accompanied with perverſeneſs, ſo it is here. Swift's Short View of Ireland.

To Acco′mpany, åk-kŭm′-på-nŷ. v. n. To aſſociate with; to become a companion to.

No man in effect doth accompany with others, but he learneth, ere he is aware, ſome geſture, voice, or faſhion. Bacon's Nat. Hiſt.

Acco′mplice, åk-kŏm′-plĭs. n. ſ. [complice, Fr. from complex, a word in the barbarous Latin, much in uſe.]

1. An aſſociate, a partaker; uſually in an ill ſenſe.

There were ſeveral ſcandalous reports, induſtriouſly ſpread by Wood and his accomplices, to diſcourage all oppoſition againſt his infamous project. Swift.

2. A partner, or co-operator; in a ſenſe indifferent.

If a tongue would be talking, without a mouth; what could it have done, when it had all its organs of ſpeech, and accomplices of ſound, about it? Addiſon, Spectator, N° 247.

3. It is uſed with the particle to, before a thing; and with, before a perſon.

Childleſs Arturius, vaſtly rich before,
Thus by his loſſes multiplies his ſtore;
Suſpected for accomplice to the fire,
That burnt his palace, but to build it higher.
Dryd. Juv. Sat.

Who, ſhould they ſteal for want of his relief,
He judg'd himſelf accomplice with the thief.
Dryden's Fables.

To ACCO'MPLISH, ăk-kŏm'-pliſh. v. a. [accomplir, Fr. from compleo, Lat.]

1. To complete, to execute fully; as, to accompliſh a deſign.

He, that is far off, ſhall die of the peſtilence; and he, that is near, ſhall fall by the ſword; and he, that remaineth, and is beſieged, ſhall die by the famine. Thus will I accompliſh my fury upon them. Ezekiel, vi. 12.

2. To complete a period of time.

He would accompliſh ſeventy years, in the deſolations of Jeruſalem. Daniel, ix. 2.

3. To fulfil; as, a prophecy.

The viſion,
Which I made known to Lucius ere the ſtroke
Of this yet ſcarce cold battle, at this inſtant
Is full accompliſh'd. Shakeſp. Cymbeline.

We ſee every day thoſe events exactly accompliſhed, which our Saviour foretold at ſo great a diſtance. Addiſon.

4. To gain, to obtain.

Tell him from me (as he will win my love)
He bear himſelf with honourable action;
Such, as he hath obſerv'd in noble ladies
Unto their lords, by them accompliſhed.
Shakeſp. Tam. of a Shrew.

I'll make my heaven in a lady's lap.
Oh miſerable thought, and more unlikely,
Than to accompliſh twenty golden crowns.
Shakeſp. Henry V.

5. To adorn, or furniſh, either mind or body.

From the tents,
The armourers accompliſhing the knights,
With buſy hammers cloſing rivets up,
Give dreadful note of preparation.
Shakeſp. Henry V.

ACCO'MPLISHED, ăk-kŏm'-pliſh-ĕd. participial adj.

1. Complete, in ſome qualification.

For, who expects, that under a tutor a young gentleman ſhould be an accompliſhed publick orator or logician. Locke.

2. Elegant; finiſhed, in reſpect of embelliſhments; uſed commonly of acquired qualifications, without including moral excellence.

The next I took to wife,
(O, that I never had! fond wiſh too late)
Was in the vale of Sorec, Dalila;
That ſpecious monſter, my accompliſh'd ſnare.
Samſon Agon.

ACCO'MPLISHER, ăk-kŏm'-pliſh-ŭr. n. ſ. [from accompliſh.] The perſon, that accompliſhes. Dict.

ACCO'MPLISHMENT, ăk-kŏm'-pliſh-mĕnt. n. ſ. [accompliſſement, Fr.]

1. Completion, full performance, perfection.

This would be the accompliſhment of their common felicity; in caſe, by their evil, either through deſtiny or advice, they ſuffered not the occaſion to be loſt. Sir John Hayward.

Thereby he might evade the accompliſhment of thoſe afflictions, he now but gradually endureth. Brown's Vulg. Errours.

He thought it impoſſible to find, in any one body, all thoſe perfections, which he ſought for the accompliſhment of a Helena; becauſe nature, in any individual perſon, makes nothing, that is perfect in all its parts. Dryden's Dufreſnoy, Pref.

2. Completion; as, of a prophecy.

The miraculous ſucceſs of the apoſtles, preaching, and the accompliſhment of many of their predictions, which to thoſe early Chriſtians were matters of faith only, are to us matters of ſight and experience. Atterbury's Sermons.

3. Embelliſhment, elegance, ornament of mind or body.

Young heirs and elder brothers, from their own reflecting upon the eſtates they are born to, and therefore thinking all other accompliſhments unneceſſary, are of no manner of uſe, but to keep up their families. Addiſon, Spectator, Nº 123.

4. The act of obtaining or perfecting any thing; attainment; completion.

The means, ſuggeſted by policy and worldly wiſdom, for the attainment of thoſe earthly enjoyments, are unfit for that purpoſe; not only upon the account of their inſufficiency for, but alſo of their frequent oppoſition and contrariety to, the accompliſhment of ſuch ends. South's Serm.

ACCO'MPT, ăk-kount'. n. ſ. [Fr. compter and compte, anciently accompter. Skinner.] An account, a reckoning. See ACCOUNT.

The ſoul may have time, to call itſelf to a juſt accompt of all things paſt; by means whereof, repentance is perfected. Hooker, b. v. § 46.

Each Chriſtmas, they accompts did clear,
And wound their bottom round the year. Prior.

ACCO'MPTANT, ăk-koun'-tănt. n. ſ. [accomptant, Fr.] A reckoner, computer. See ACCOUNTANT.

As the accompt runs on, generally the accomptant goes backward. South's Sermons.

ACCO'MPTING DAY, ak-koun'-tĭng då'. The day, on which the reckoning is to be ſettled.

To whom thou much doſt owe, thou much
muſt pay;
Think on the debt againſt th' accompting day.
Sir J. Denham.

To ACCO'RD, ăk-kå'rd. v. a. [derived, by ſome from corda, the ſtring of a muſical inſtrument; by others from corda, hearts: in the firſt, implying harmony; in the other, unanimity.]

1. To make agree; to adjuſt one thing to another; with the particle to.

The firſt ſports, the ſhepherds ſhewed, were full of ſuch leaps and gambols; as, being accorded to the pipe which they bore in their mouths, even as they danced, made a right picture of their chief god Pan, and his companions the ſatyrs. Sidn. b. i.

Her hands accorded the lute's muſick to the voice; her panting heart danced to the muſick. Sidn. b. ii.

The lights and ſhades, whoſe well accorded ſtrife
Gives all the ſtrength and colour of our life.
Pope's Epiſt.

2. To bring to agreement; to compoſe; to accommodate.

Men would not reſt upon bare contracts, without reducing the debt, into a ſpecialty; which created much certainty, and accorded many ſuits. Sir M. Hale.

To ACCO'RD, ăk-kå'rd. v. n. To agree, to ſuit one with another; with the particle with.

Things are often ſpoke, and ſeldom meant:
But (that my heart accordeth with my tongue,
Seeing the deed is meritorious,
And to preſerve my ſovereign from his foe)
Say but the word, and I will be his prieſt.
Shakeſp. Hen. VI.

Several of the main parts of Moſes's hiſtory, as concerning the flood, and the firſt fathers of the ſev'ral nations of the world, do very well accord with the moſt ancient accounts of profane hiſtory. Tillotſon, Sermon i.

Jarring int'reſts of themſelves create
Th' according muſick of a well-mixt ſtate. Pope.

ACCO'RD, ăk-kå'rd. n. ſ. [accord, Fr.]

1. A compact; an agreement; adjuſtment of a difference.

There was no means for him, to ſatisfy all obligations to God and man; but to offer himſelf, for a mediator of an accord and peace between them. Bacon's Hen. VII.

If both are ſatisfy'd with this accord,
Swear by the laws of knighthood on my ſword.
Dryden. Fab.

2. Concurrence, union of mind.

At laſt ſuch grace I found, and means I wrought,
That I that lady to my ſpouſe had won;
Accord of friends, conſent of parents ſought,
Affiance made, my happineſs begun.
Spenſer's Fairy Queen.

They gathered themſelves together, to fight with Joſhua and Iſrael, with one accord. Joſhua, ix. 2.

3. Harmony, ſymmetry, juſt correſpondence of one thing with another.

Beauty is nothing elſe but a juſt accord and mutual harmony of the members, animated by a healthful conſtitution. Dryden's Dufreſnoy, Pref.

4. Muſical note.

Try, if there were in one ſteeple two bells of uniſon, whether the ſtriking of the one would move the other, more than if it were another accord. Bacon's Natural Hiſtory, Nº 281.

We muſt not blame Apollo, but his lute,
If falſe accords from her falſe ſtrings be ſent.
Sir J. Davies.

5. Own accord; voluntary motion: uſed both of perſons and things.

Ne Guyon yet ſpake word,
Till that they came unto an iron door,
Which to them open'd of its own accord.
Fairy Queen.

Will you blame any man for doing that of his own accord, which all men ſhould be compelled to do, that are not willing of themſelves. Hooker.

All animal ſubſtances, expoſed to the air, turn alkaline of their own accord; and ſome vegetables, by heat, will not turn acid, but alkaline. Arbuthnot on Elements.

6. Action in ſpeaking, correſpondent to the words.

Titus, I am come to talk with thee;—
—No, not a word: how can I grace my talk,
Wanting a hand to give it that accord?
Shakeſpeare's Titus And.

ACCO'RDANCE, ăk-kå'r-dănſe. n. ſ. [from accord.]

1. Agreement with a perſon; with the particle with.

And prays he may in long accordanse bide,
With that great worth, which hath ſuch wonders wrought. Fairfax, b. ii. ſtanza 63.

2. Conformity to ſomething.

The only way of defining of ſin, is by the contrariety to the will of God; as of good, by the accordance with that will. Hammond's Fundamentals.

ACCO'RDANT, ăk-kå'r-dănt. adj. [accordant, Fr.] Willing; in a good humour. Not in uſe.

The prince diſcovered, that he loved your niece; and meant to acknowledge it this night, in a dance; and, if he found her accordant, he meant to take the preſent time by the top, and inſtantly break with you of it. Shakeſp. Much ado about Nothing.

ACCO'RDING, ăk-kå'r-dĭng. prep. [from accord, of which it is properly a participle, and is therefore never uſed but with to.]

1. In a manner ſuitable to, agreeably to, in proportion.

Our churches are places provided, that the people might there aſſemble themſelves in due and decent manner, according to their ſeveral degrees and orders. Hooker, b. v. § 13.

Our zeal then ſhould be, according to knowledge: and what kind of knowledge? Without all queſtion, firſt, according to the true, ſaving, evangelical knowledge. It ſhould be according to the goſpel, the whole goſpel: not only according to its truths, but precepts; not only according to its free grace, but neceſſary duties; not only according to its myſteries, but alſo its commandments. Sprat's Sermons.

Noble is the fame, that is built on candour and ingenuity, according to thoſe beautiful lines of Sir John Denham. Addiſon, Spectator.

2. With regard to.

God made all things, in number, weight, and meaſure; and gave them, to be conſidered by us according to theſe properties, which are inherent in created beings. Holder on Time.

3. In proportion. The following phraſe is, I think, vitious.

A man may, with prudence and a good conſcience, approve of the profeſſed principles of one party more than the other, according as he thinks they beſt promote the good of church and ſtate. Swift's Church of England Man.

ACCO'UNT, åk-kòunt'. n. ſ. [from the old French accompt, from computus, Lat. It was originally written accompt, which ſee; but by gradually ſoftening the pronunciation, in time the orthography changed to account.]

1. A computation of debts or expences; a regiſter of facts relating to money.

At many times I brought in my accounts,
Laid them before you: you would throw them off;
And ſay, you found them in mine honeſty.
Shakeſpeare's Timon.

When my young maſter has once got the ſkill of keeping accounts (which is a buſineſs of reaſon, more than arithmetic) perhaps it will not be amiſs, that his father from thenceforth require him to do it in all his concernments. Locke on Educ.

2. The ſtate or reſult of a computation; as, the account ſtands thus between us.

Behold, this have I found, ſaith the Preacher; counting one by one, to find out the account. Eccleſiaſticus, vii. 27.

3. Such a ſtate of perſons or things, as may make them more or leſs worthy of being conſidered in the reckoning. Value, or eſtimation.

For the care, that they took for their wives and their children, their brethren and kinsfolks, was in leaſt account with them: but the greateſt and principal fear was, for the holy temple.
2 Maccab. xv. 18.

That good affection, which things of ſmaller account have once ſet on work, is by ſo much the more eaſily raiſed higher. Hooker, b. v. § 35.

I ſhould make more account of their judgment, who are men of ſenſe, and yet have never touched a pencil; than of the opinion, given by the greateſt part of painters. Dryden's Dufreſn.

4. Profit; advantage; to turn to account is to produce advantage.

We would eſtabliſh our ſouls in ſuch a ſolid and ſubſtantial virtue, as will turn to account in that great day, when it muſt ſtand the teſt of infinite wiſdom and juſtice. Add. Spect. N° 399.

5. Diſtinction, dignity, rank.

There is ſuch a peculiarity in Homer's manner of apoſtrophizing Eumæus: it is generally applied, by that poet, only to men of account and diſtinction. Pope's Odyſſey; notes.

6. A reckoning verified, by finding the value of a thing, equal to what it was accounted.

Conſidering the uſual motives of human actions, which are pleaſure, profit, and ambition; I cannot yet comprehend, how thoſe perſons find their account in any of the three. Swift.

7. A reckoning referred to, or ſum charged upon any particular perſon; and thence, figuratively, regard; conſideration; ſake.

If he hath wronged thee, or oweth thee aught, put that on my account. Philemon, i. 8.

This muſt be always remembered; that nothing can come into the account of recreation, that is not done with delight. Locke on Education, § 197.

In matters, where his judgment led him to oppoſe men on a public account, he would do it vigorouſly and heartily. Atterbury's Sermons.

The aſſertion is our Saviour's, though uttered by him in the perſon of Abraham the father of the faithful; who, on the account of that character, is very fitly introduced. Atterbury.

Theſe tribunes kindled great diſſenſions between the nobles and the commons, on the account of Coriolanus, a nobleman, whom the latter had impeached. Swift's Conteſts in Athens and Rome.

Nothing can recommend itſelf to our love, on any other account, but either as it promotes our preſent, or is a means to aſſure to us a future happineſs. Rogers's Sermon v.

Sempronius gives no thanks on this account.
Addiſon's Cato.

8. A narrative, relation; in this uſe it may ſeem to be derived from conte, Fr. a tale, a narration.

9. The review or examination of an affair taken by authority; as, the magiſtrate took an account of the tumult.

Therefore is the kingdom of heaven likened unto a certain king, which would take account of his ſervants; and, when he had begun to reckon, one was brought unto him, which owed him ten thouſand talents. Matt. xix. 23, 24.

10. The relation and reaſons of a tranſaction, given to a perſon in authority.

What need we fear, who knows it, when none can call our power to account?
Shakeſpeare's Macbeth.

The true ground of morality can only be the will and law of a God, who ſees men in the dark, has in his hands rewards and puniſhments, and power enough to call to account the proudeſt offender. Locke.

11. Explanation; aſſignment of cauſes.

It is eaſy to give account, how it comes to paſs, that though all men deſire happineſs, yet their wills carry them ſo contrarily. Locke.

It being, in our author's account, a right acquired by begetting, to rule over thoſe he had begotten, it was not a power poſſible to be inherited; becauſe the right, being conſequent to, and built on, an act perfectly perſonal, made that power ſo too, and impoſſible to be inherited. Locke.

12. An opinion, previouſly eſtabliſhed.

Theſe were deſigned, to join with the forces at ſea; there being prepared a number of flat-bottomed boats, to tranſport the land forces under the wing of the great navy: for they made no account, but that the navy ſhould be abſolutely maſter of the ſeas.
Bacon's Conſiderations on War with Spain.

A prodigal young fellow, that had ſold his clothes; upon the ſight of a ſwallow made account, that ſummer was at hand, and away went his ſhirt too. L'Eſtrange, Fab. cxxvii.

13. The reaſons of any thing collected.

Being convinced, upon all accounts, that they had the ſame reaſon to believe the hiſtory of our Saviour; as that of any other perſon, to which they themſelves were not actually eye-witneſſes; they were bound, by all the rules of hiſtorical faith and of right reaſon, to give credit to this hiſtory. Addiſon.

14. In law.

Account is, in the common law, taken for a writ or action, brought againſt a man; that, by means of office or buſineſs undertaken, is to render an account unto another; as a bailiff toward his maſter, a guardian to his ward. Cowell.

2. To give an account, to aſſign the cauſes; in which ſenſe it is followed by the particle for.

If any one ſhould aſk, why our general continued ſo eaſy to the laſt? I know no other way to account for it, but by that unmeaſurable love of wealth, which his beſt friends allow to be his predominant paſſion. Swift.

3. To make up the reckoning; to anſwer; with for.

Then thou ſhalt ſee him plung'd, when leaſt he fears;
At once accounting, for his deep arrears.
Dryden's Juv. Sat. xiii.

They have no uneaſy preſages of a future reckoning, wherein the pleaſures they now taſte muſt be accounted for; and may perhaps be outweighed by the pains, which ſhall then lay hold of them.
Atterbury's Sermons.

4. To appear as the medium, by which any thing may be explained.

Such, as have a faulty circulation through the lungs, ought to eat very little at a time; becauſe the increaſe of the quantity of freſh chyle muſt make that circulation ſtill more uneaſy: which, indeed, is the caſe of conſumptive and ſome aſthmatic perſons; and accounts for the ſymptoms, they are troubled with after eating. Arbuth. on Aliments.

Acco'untable, åk-kòun'-tåbl. adj. [from account.] Of whom an account may be required; who muſt anſwer for: followed by the particle to, before the perſon; and for, before the thing.

Accountable to none,
But to my conſcience and my God alone.
Oldham.

Thinking themſelves excuſed, from ſtanding upon their own legs, or being accountable for their own conduct, they very ſeldom trouble themſelves with enquiries. Locke on Education.

The good magiſtrate will make no diſtinction: for the judgment is God's; and he will look upon himſelf, as accountable at his bar for the equity of it. Atterbury's Sermons.

Acco'untant, åk-kòun'-tånt. adj. [from account.] Accountable to; reſponſible for. Not in uſe.

His offence is ſo, as it appears
Accountant to the law upon that pain.
Shakeſpeare's Meaſ. for Meaſ.

I love her too;
Not out of abſolute uſt (though peradventure
I ſtand accountant for as great a ſin)
But partly led to diet my revenge.
Shakeſpeare's Othello.

Acco′untant, åk-koun′-tånt. n. ſ. [See Accomptant.] A computer; a man, ſkilled or employed in accounts.

The different compute of divers ſtates; the ſhort and irreconcileable years of ſome; the exceeding errour in the natural frame of others; and the falſe deductions of ordinary accountants in moſt. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

Acco′unt-book, åk-kount′-bồk. n. ſ. A book containing accounts.

I would endeavour, to comfort myſelf upon the loſs of friends, as I do upon the loſs of money; by turning to my account-book, and ſeeing whether I have enough left for my ſupport. Swift.

Acco′unting, åk-koůn′-tîng n. ſ. [from account.] The act of reckoning, or making up of accounts.

This method, faithfully obſerved, muſt keep a man from breaking, or running behind-hand, in his ſpiritual eſtate; which, without frequent accountings, he will hardly be able to prevent.
South's Sermons.

To Acco′uple, åk-kůp′l. v. a. [accoupler, Fr.] To join, to link together. We now uſe couple.

He ſent a ſolemn embaſſage, to treat a peace and league with the king; accoupling it with an article in the nature of a requeſt.
Bacon's Henry VII.

To Acco′urage, åk-kůr′-rîdge. v. a. [Obſolete. See Courage.] To animate.

That forward pair ſhe ever would aſſuage,
When they would ſtrive due reaſon to exceed;
But that ſame froward twain would accourage,
And of her plenty add unto her need.
Fairy Queen, b. ii. c. 2.

To Acco′urt, åk-kồ′rt. v. a. [See To COURT.] To entertain with courtſhip, or courteſy; a word, now not in uſe.

Is it for this, they ſtudy? to grow pale,
And miſs the pleaſures of a glorious meal?
For this, in rags accoutred are they ſeen,
And made the May-game of the public ſpleen?
Dryden.

Acco′utrement, åk-kồ′-tůr-mènt. n. ſ. [accoûtrement, Fr.] Dreſs, equipage; furniture, relating to the perſon; trappings, ornaments.

I profeſs requital to a hair's breadth; not only in the ſimple office of love, but in all the accoutrement, complement, and ceremony of it.
Shakeſpeare's Merry Wives of Windſor.

Chriſtianity is loſt among them, in the trappings and accoutrements of it; with which, inſtead of adorning religion, they have ſtrangely diſguiſed it; and quite ſtifled it, in the crowd of external rites and ceremonies. Tillotſon, Sermon xxviii.

I have ſeen the pope officiate at St. Peter's; where, for two hours together, he was buſied in putting on or off his different accoutrements, according to the different parts he was to act in them.
Addiſon, Spectator, N° 201.

How gay with all th' accoutrements of war,
The Britons come, with gold well-fraught they come. Phil.

ACCRE′TION, åk-krè′-ſhůn. n. ſ. [accretio, Lat.] The act of growing to another, ſo as to increaſe it.

Plants do nouriſh; inanimate bodies do not: they have an accretion, but no alimentation.
Bacon's Nat. Hiſt. N° 602.

The changes ſeem to be effected by the exhaling of the moiſture; which may leave the tinging corpuſcles more denſe, and ſomething augmented by the accretion of the oily and earthy parts of that moiſture. Newton's Optics.

Infants ſupport abſtinence worſt, from the quantity of aliment conſumed in accretion.
Arbuthnot on Aliments.

Accre′tive, åk-krè′-tîv. adj. [from accretion.] Growing; that, which by growth is added.

If the motion be very ſlow, we perceive it not: we have no ſenſe of the accretive motion of plants and animals; and the ſly ſhadow ſteals away upon the dial; and the quickeſt eye can diſcover no more, but that it is gone. Glanville's Scepſis.

To ACCRO′ACH, åk-krồ′tſh. v. a. [accrocher, Fr.] To draw to one, as with a hook; to gripe; to draw away by degrees, what is another's.

'Tis the moſt certain ſign the world's accurſt,
That the beſt things corrupted are and worſt. Denham.

2. That, which deſerves the curſe; execrable, hateful, deteſtable; and, by conſequence, wicked, malignant.

A ſwift bleſſing
May ſoon return, to this our ſuffering country,
Under a hand accurs'd! Shakeſpeare's Macbeth.

The chief part of the miſery of wicked men, and thoſe accurſed ſpirits, the devils, is this; that they are of a diſpoſition contrary to God. Tillotſon.

They, like the ſeed from which they ſprung, accurſt,
Againſt the gods immortal hatred nurſt. Dryden.

ACCU'SABLE, åk-ků'-zåbl. adj. [from the verb accuſe.] That, which may be cenſured; blameable, culpable.

There would be a manifeſt defect, and Nature's improviſion were juſtly accuſable; if animals, ſo ſubject unto diſeaſes from bilious cauſes, ſhould want a proper conveyance for choler. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

ACCUSA'TION, åk-ků-zå'-ſhůn. n. ſ. [from accuſe.]

1. The act of accuſing.

Thus they in mutual accuſation ſpent
The fruitleſs hours, but neither ſelf-condemning;
And, of their vain conteſt, appear'd no end. Milt.

2. The charge, brought againſt any one by the accuſer.

You read
Theſe accuſations; and theſe grievous crimes,
Committed by your perſon and your followers. Shakeſpeare.

All accuſation, in the very nature of the thing, ſtill ſuppoſing, and being founded upon ſome law: for, where there is no law, there can be no tranſgreſſion; and, where there can be no tranſgreſſion, I am ſure, there ought to be no accuſation. South.

3. [In the ſenſe of the courts.] A declaration of ſome crime, preferred before a competent judge, in order to inflict ſome judgment on the guilty perſon. Ayliffe's Parergon.

ACCU'SATIVE, åk-ků'-zå-tiv. adj. [accuſativus, Lat.] A term of grammar, ſignifying the relation of the noun, on which the action implied in the verb terminates.

ACCU'SATORY, åk-ků'-zå-tůr-rỳ. adj. [from accuſe.] That, which produceth or containeth an accuſation.

In a charge of adultery, the accuſer ought to ſet forth, in the accuſatory libel, ſome certain and definite time. Ayliffe.

To ACCU'SE, åk-ků'ze. v. a. [from accuſo, Lat.]

1. To charge with a crime. It requires the particle of, before the ſubject of accuſation.

He ſtripp'd the bears-foot of its leafy growth;
And, calling weſtern winds, accus'd the ſpring of ſloth. Dryden's Virgil.

The profeſſors are accuſed of all the ill practices, which may ſeem to be the ill conſequences of their principles. Addiſon.

2. It ſometimes admits the particle for.

Never ſend up a leg of a fowl at ſupper, while there is a cat or dog in the houſe, that can be accuſed for running away with it: but, if there happen to be neither, you muſt lay it upon the rats, or a ſtrange greyhound. Swift.

And therefore, like themſelves, they princes chooſe. Dryden's Tyrannick Love.

ACCU'SER, åk-ků'-zůr. n. ſ. [from accuſe.] He, that brings a charge againſt another.

There are ſome perſons forbidden to be accuſers, on the ſcore of their ſex, as women; others, of their age, as pupils and infants; others, upon the account of ſome crimes committed by them; and others, on the ſcore of ſome filthy lucre they propoſe to gain thereby; others, on the ſcore of their conditions, as libertines againſt their patrons; and others, through a ſuſpicion of calumny, as having once already given falſe evidence; and laſtly others, on account of their poverty, as not being worth more than fifty aurei. Ayliffe's Parergon.

—That good man, who drank the pois'nous draught,
With mind ſerene; and could not wiſh, to ſee
His vile accuſer drink as deep as he. Dryden.

If the perſon accuſed maketh his innocence plainly to appear upon his trial, the accuſer is immediately put to an ignominious death; and, out of his goods and lands, the innocent perſon is quadruply recompenſed. Gulliver's Travels.

To ACCU'STOM, åk-kůs'-tům. v. a. [accoûtumer, Fr.] To habituate, to inure; with the particle to. It is uſed chiefly of perſons.

How ſhall we breathe in other air
Leſs pure, accuſtom'd to immortal fruits? Milton.

It has been ſome advantage, to accuſtom one's ſelf to books of the ſame edition. Watts's Improvement of the Mind.

To ACCU'STOM, åk-kůs'-tům. v. n. To be wont to do any thing. Obſolete.

A boat over-freighted ſunk, and all drowned, ſaving one woman, that in her firſt popping-up again (which moſt living things accuſtom) got hold of the boat. Carew.

ACCU'STOMABLE, åk-kůs'-tům-måbl. adj. [from accuſtom.] Of long cuſtom or habit; habitual, cuſtomary.

Animals (even of the ſame original, extraction, and ſpecies) may be diverſified by accuſtomable reſidence in one climate, from what they are in another. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

ACCU'STOMABLY, åk-kůs'-tům-måb-lỳ. adv. According to cuſtom.

Touching the king's fines, accuſtomably paid for the purchaſing of writs original, I find no certain beginning of them; and do therefore think, that they grew up with the chancery. Bacon's Alienation.

ACCU'STOMANCE, åk-kůs'-tům-månſe. n. ſ. [accoûtumance, Fr.] Cuſtom, habit, uſe.

Through accuſtomance and negligence, and perhaps ſome other cauſes, we neither feel it in our own bodies, nor take notice of it in others. Boyle.

ACCU'STOMARILY, åk-kůs'-tům-må-rỳ-lỳ. adv. In a cuſtomary manner; according to common or cuſtomary practice.

Go on, rhetorick; and expoſe the peculiar eminency, which you accuſtomarily marſhal before logic to public view. Cleaveland.

ACCU'STOMARY, åk-kůs'-tům-må-rỳ. adj. [from accuſtom.] Uſual, practiſed; according to cuſtom.

ACCU'STOMED, åk-kůs'-tům-mėd. adj. [from accuſtom.] According to cuſtom; frequent; uſual.

Look, how ſhe rubs her hands!—It is an accuſtomed action with her, to ſeem thus waſhing her hands: I have known her continue in this, a quarter of an hour. Shakeſpeare's Macbeth.

ACE, å'ſe. n. ſ. [As not only ſignified a piece of money, but any integer: from whence is derived the word ace, or unit. Thus As ſignified the whole inheritance. Arbuthnot on Coins.]

1. An unit; a ſingle point, on cards or dice.

When lots are ſhuffled together in a lap, urn, or pitcher; or if a man blindfold caſts a die; what reaſon in the world can he have to preſume, that he ſhall draw a white ſtone rather than a black, or throw an ace rather than a ſice? South.

2. A ſmall quantity; a particle; an atom.

He will not bate an ace of abſolute certainty; but, however doubtful or improbable the thing is, coming from him it muſt go for an indiſputable truth. Government of the Tongue.

I'll not wag an ace farther: the whole world ſhall not bribe me to it. Dryden's Spaniſh Friar.

ACE'PHALOUS, å-ſė-phå'l-ous. adj. [ἀκέφαλος, Gr.] Without a head. Dict.

ACE'RB, å-ſė'rb. adj. [acerbus, Lat.] Acid, with an addition of roughneſs; as moſt fruits are, before they are ripe. Quincy.

ACE'RBITY, å-ſėr'-bỳ-tỳ. n. ſ. [acerbitas, Lat.]

1. A rough ſour taſte.

2. Applied to men, ſharpneſs of temper; ſeverity.

True it is, that the talents for criticiſm (namely, ſmartneſs, quick cenſure, vivacity of remark; indeed all, but acerbity) ſeem rather the gifts of youth, than of old age. Pope.

To ACE'RVATE, å-ſėr'-våte. v. a. [acervo, Lat.] To heap up. Dict.

ACERVA'TION, å-ſėr-vå'-ſhůn. n. ſ. [from acervate.] The act of heaping together.

ACE'RVOSE, å-cė'r-vòs. adj. Full of heaps. Dict.

ACE'SCENT, å-ſės'-ſėnt. adj. [aceſcens, Lat.] That, which has a tendency to ſourneſs or acidity.

The ſame perſons (perhaps) had enjoyed their health as well, with a mixture of animal diet, qualified with a ſufficient quantity of aceſcents; as, bread, vinegar, and fermented liquors. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

ACETO'SE, å-ſė-to'ſe. adj. That, which has in it any thing ſour.

ACETO'SITY, å-ſė-tos'-ſỳ-tỳ. n. ſ. [from acetoſe.] The ſtate of being acetoſe, or of containing ſourneſs. Dict.

ACE'TOUS, å-ſė'-tůs. adj. [from acetum vinegar, Lat.] Having the quality of vinegar; ſour.

Raiſins, which conſiſt chiefly of the juice of grapes, inſpiſſated in the ſkins or huſks by the avolation of the ſuperfluous moiſture through their pores, being diſtilled in a retort, did not afford any vinous, but rather an acetous, ſpirit. Boyle.

Ache, å'ke. n. ſ. [ace, Sax. ἄχος, Gr. now generally written ake, and in the plural akes, of one ſyllable; the primitive manner being preſerved chiefly in poetry, for the ſake of the meaſure.] A continued pain. See Ake.

I'll rack thee with old cramps;
Fill all thy bones with aches, make thee roar,
That beaſts ſhall tremble at thy din. Shakeſp.

A coming ſhow'r your ſhooting corns preſage,
Old aches throb, your hollow tooth will rage.
Swift.

To Ache, å'ke. v. n. [See Ache.] To be in pain.

Upon this account, our ſenſes are dulled and ſpent by any extraordinary intention; and our very eyes will ache, if long fixed upon any difficultly diſcerned object. Glanville.

To ACHI'EVE, åt-tſhė'v. v. a. [achever, Fr. to complete.]

1. To perform, to finiſh a deſign proſperouſly.

Our toils, my friends, are crown'd with ſure ſucceſs:
The greater part perform'd, achieve the leſs. Dryd.

2. To gain, to obtain.

Experience is by induſtry achiev'd,
And perfected by the ſwift courſe of time. Shakeſp.
Tranio, I burn, I pine; I periſh, Tranio,
If I achieve not this young modeſt girl.
Shakeſpeare.

Thou haſt achiev'd our liberty, confin'd
Within hell-gates till now. Milton.
Show all the ſpoils by valiant kings achiev'd,
And groaning nations by their arms reliev'd.
Prior.

Achi'ever, åt-tſhė'-vůr. n. ſ. He, that performs; he, that obtains, what he endeavours after.

A victory is twice itſelf, when the achiever brings home full numbers.
Shakeſpeare's Much ado about Nothing.

Achi'evement, åt-tſhė'v-mėnt. n. ſ. [achevement, Fr.]

1. The performance of an action.

From every coaſt, that heaven walks about,
Have thither come the noble martial crew,
That famous hard achievements ſtill purſue.
Fairy Queen.

2. The eſcutcheon or enſigns armorial, granted to any man for the performance of great actions.

Then ſhall the war, and ſtern debate, and ſtrife
Immortal, be the bus'neſs of my life;
And in thy fane, the duſty ſpoils among,
High on the burniſh'd roof, my banner ſhall be hung,
Rank'd with my champion's bucklers; and below,
With arms revers'd, th' achievements of the foe.
Dryden.

Achievement, in the firſt ſenſe, is derived from achieve, as it ſignifies to perform; in the ſecond, from achieve, as it imports to gain.

A'ching, å'king. n. ſ. [from ache.] Pain; uneaſineſs.

When old age comes, to wait upon a great and worſhipful ſinner; it comes, attended with many painful girds and achings, called the gout. South.

A'CHOR, å'-kor. n. ſ. [achor, Lat. ἀχὼρ, Gr. furfur.] A ſpecies of the herpes; it appears with a cruſty ſcab, which cauſes an itching on the ſurface of the head, occaſioned by a ſalt ſharp ſerum oozing through the ſkin. Quincy.

A'CID, ås'-ſid. adj. [acidus, Lat. acide, Fr.] Sour, ſharp.

Wild trees laſt longer, than garden trees; and in the ſame kind, thoſe, whoſe fruit is acid, more than thoſe, whoſe fruit is ſweet.
Bacon's Natural Hiſtory.

Acid or ſour proceeds, from a ſalt of the ſame nature, without mixture of oil; in auſtere taſtes, the oily parts have not diſentangled themſelves, from the ſalts and earthy parts; ſuch is the taſte of unripe fruits. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

Liquors and ſubſtances are called acids, which, being compoſed of pointed particles, affect the taſte in a ſharp and piercing manner. The common way of trying, whether any particular liquor hath in it any particles of this kind, is by mixing it with ſyrup of violets, when it will turn of a red colour; but if it contains alkaline or lixivial particles, it changes that ſyrup green. Quincy.

Aci'dity, å-ſid'-di-tỳ. n. ſ. [from acid.] The quality of being acid; an acid taſte; ſharpneſs; ſourneſs.

Fiſhes, by the help of a diſſolvent liquor, corrode and reduce their meat, ſkin, bones, and all, into a chylus or cremor; and yet this liquor manifeſts nothing of acidity to the taſte. Ray.

When the taſte of the mouth is bitter, it is a ſign of a redundance of a bilious alkali; and demands a quite different diet, from the caſe of acidity or ſourneſs. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

A'cidness, ås'-ſid-nėſs. n. ſ. [from acid.] The quality of being acid; acidity. See Acidity.

ACI'DULÆ, å-ſid'-dů-lå. n. ſ. [that is, aquæ acidulæ.] Medicinal ſprings, impregnated with ſharp particles; as all the nitrous, chalybeate, and alum ſprings are. Quincy.

The acidulæ, or medical ſprings, emit a greater quantity of their minerals than uſual; and even the ordinary ſprings, which were before clear, freſh, and limpid, become thick and turbid, and are impregnated with ſulphur and other minerals, as long as the earthquake laſts.
Woodward's Natural Hiſtory.

To Aci'dulate, å-ſid'-dů-låte. v. a. [aciduler, Fr.] To impregnate or tinge with acids in a ſlight degree.

A diet of freſh unſalted things, watery liquors acidulated, farinaceous emollient ſubſtances, ſour milk, butter, and acid fruits.
Arbuthnot on Aliments.

To ACKNO'WLEDGE, åk-nol-lėdzh. v. a. [a word formed, as it ſeems, between the Latin and Engliſh, from agnoſco, and knowledge; which is deduced from the Saxon cnaƿan to know.]

1. To own the knowledge of; to own any thing or perſon in a particular character.

My people do already know my mind;
And will acknowledge you and Jeſſica,
In place of lord Baſſanio and myſelf. Shakeſ.
None, that acknowledge God or providence,
Their ſouls eternity did ever doubt. Davies.

2. To confeſs; as, a fault.

For I acknowledge my tranſgreſſions; and my ſin is ever before me. Pſalm li. 3.

3. To own; as, a benefit; ſometimes with the particle to, before the perſon conferring the benefit.

His ſpirit
Taught them; but they his gifts acknowledg'd not. Milton.

In the firſt place therefore, I thankfully acknowledge to the Almighty power the aſſiſtance he has given me, in the beginning and the proſecution of my preſent ſtudies. Dryden.

Ackno'wledging, åk-nol'-lė-jing. adj. [from acknowledge.] Grateful; ready to acknowledge benefits received. A Galliciſm, reconnoiſſant.

He has ſhewn his hero acknowledging and ungrateful, compaſſionate and hard-hearted; but, at the bottom, fickle and ſelf-intereſted.
Dryden's Virgil.

Ackno'wledgment, åk-nol'-lėdzh-mėnt. n. ſ. [from acknowledge.]

1. Conceſſion of any character in another; as, exiſtence, ſuperiority.

The due contemplation of the human nature doth, by a neceſſary connection and chain of cauſes, carry us up to the unavoidable acknowledgment of the Deity; becauſe it carries every thinking man, to an original of every ſucceſſive individual. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

2. Conceſſion of the truth of any poſition.

Immediately upon the acknowledgment of the chriſtian faith, the eunuch was baptized by Philip. Hooker.

3. Confeſſion of a fault.
4. Confeſſion of a benefit received; gratitude.
5. Act of atteſtation to any conceſſion; ſuch as homage.

There be many wide countries in Ireland, in which the laws of England were never eſtabliſhed, nor any acknowledgment of ſubjection made.
Spenſer's State of Ireland.

6. Something given or done, in confeſſion of a benefit received.

The ſecond is an acknowledgment to his majeſty, for the leave of fiſhing upon his coaſts; and though this may not be grounded upon any treaty, yet, if it appear to be an ancient right on our ſide, and cuſtom on theirs, not determined or extinguiſhed by any treaty between us, it may with juſtice be inſiſted on. Temple's Miſcellanies.

A'CME, åk'-mė. n. ſ. [ἀκμὴ, Gr.] The height of any thing; more eſpecially uſed to denote the height of a diſtemper, which is divided into four periods. 1. The arche, the beginning or firſt attack. 2. Anabaſis, the growth. 3. Acme, the height. And, 4. Paracme, which is the declenſion of the diſtemper. Quincy.

Aco'lothist, å-kol'-lo-thiſt. n. ſ. [ἀκολουθεῖν, Gr.] One of the loweſt order, in the Romiſh church; whoſe office is, to prepare the elements for the offices, to light the church, &c.

It is duty, according to the papal law, when the biſhop ſings maſs, to order all the inferior clergy to appear in their proper habits; and to ſee that all the offices of the church be rightly performed; to ordain the acolothiſt, to keep the ſacred veſſels. Ayliffe's Parergon.

A'colyte, åk'-ko-lîte. n. ſ. [The ſame with Acolothist.

A'conite, åk'-ko-nîte. n. ſ. [aconitum, Lat.] Properly the herb wolfs-bane; but commonly uſed in poetical language, for poiſon in general.

Our land is from the rage of tygers freed,
Nor nouriſhes the lion's angry ſeed;
Nor pois'nous aconite is here produc'd,
Or grows unknown, or is (when known) refus'd.
Dryden.

Deſpair, that aconite does prove,
And certain death to others love,
That poiſon never yet withſtood,
Does nouriſh mine, and turns to blood.
Granville.

A'corn, åk'-korn. n. ſ. [Æceꞃn, Sax. from ac, an oak, and coꞃn, corn or grain; that is, the grain or fruit of the oak.] The ſeed or fruit, born by the oak.

Errours, ſuch as are but acorns in our younger brows, grow oaks in our older heads, and become inflexible. Brown.

Content with food, which nature freely bred,
On wildings and on ſtrawberries they fed:
Cornel

Cornels and bramble-berries gave the reſt;
And falling acorns furniſh'd out a feaſt.
Dryden's Ovid.

He, that is nouriſhed by the acorns he picked up under an oak, or the apples he gathered from the trees in the wood, has certainly appropriated them to himſelf. Locke.

A'corned, åk'-kỏrnd. adj. [from acorn.] Stored with acorns.

Like a full acorn'd boar. Shakeſpeare.

Aco'usticks, å-kous'-tỉks. n. ſ. [ἀκυςικὰ, of ἀκύω, Gr. to hear.]

1. The doctrine or theory of ſounds.

2. Medicines to help the hearing. Quincy.

To ACQUA'INT, åk-kwå'nt. v. a. [accointer, Fr.]

1. To make familiar with; applied either to perſons or things. It has with, before the object.

We, that acquaint ourſelves with ev'ry zone,
And paſs the tropicks, and behold each pole;
When we come home, are to ourſelves unknown,
And unacquainted ſtill with our own ſoul.
Davies.

There with thee, new welcome ſaint,
Like fortunes may her ſoul acquaint. Milton.

Before a man can ſpeak on any ſubject, it is neceſſary to be acquainted with it.
Locke on Education.

Acquaint yourſelves with things ancient and modern, natural, civil, and religious, domeſtic and national, things of your own and foreign countries; and, above all, be well acquainted with God and yourſelves; learn animal nature, and the workings of your own ſpirits. Watts's Logick.

2. To inform. With is more in uſe before the object, than of.

But for ſome other reaſons, my grave Sir,
Which is not fit you know, I not acquaint
My father of this buſineſs.
Shakeſpeare's Twelfth Night.

A friend in the country acquaints me, that two or three men of the town are got among them, and have brought words and phraſes, which were never before in thoſe parts. Tatler.

Acqua'intance, åk-kwå'n-tånſe. n. ſ. [accointance, Fr.]

1. The ſtate of being acquainted with; familiarity, knowledge. It is applied, as well to perſons as things, with the particle with.

Nor was his acquaintance leſs, with the fam poets of his age, than with the noblemen and ladies.
Dryden.

Our admiration of a famous man leſſens, upon our nearer acquaintance with him; and we ſeldom hear of a celebrated perſon, without a catalogue of ſome notorious weakneſſes and infirmities.
Addiſon.

Would we be admitted into an acquaintance with God, let us ſtudy to reſemble him. We muſt be partakers of a divine nature, in order to partake of this high privilege and alliance. Atterbury.

2. Familiar knowledge; ſimply, without a prepoſition.

Brave ſoldier, pardon me,
That any accent, breaking from my tongue,
Should 'ſcape the true acquaintance of mine ear.
Shakeſpeare.

This keeps the underſtanding long in converſe with an object, and long converſe brings acquaintance. South.

In what manner he lived with thoſe, who were of his neighbourhood and acquaintance; how obliging his carriage was to them, what kind offices he did, and was always ready to do them; I forbear, particularly to ſay. Atterbury.

3. A ſlight or initial knowledge, ſhort of friendſhip, as applied to perſons.

I hope, I am pretty near ſeeing you; and therefore I would cultivate an acquaintance; becauſe, if you do not know me, when we meet; you need only keep one of my letters, and compare it with my face; for my face and letters are counterparts of my heart. Swift to Pope.

A long noviciate of acquaintance ſhould precede the vows of friendſhip. Bolingbroke.

4. The, perſon with whom we are acquainted; him, of whom we have ſome knowledge, without the intimacy of friendſhip.

In this ſenſe, the plural is, in ſome authors, acquaintance; in others, acquaintances.

But ſhe, all vow'd unto the red-croſs knight,
His wand'ring peril cloſely did lament;
Ne in this new acquaintance could delight,
But her dear heart with anguiſh did torment.
Fairy Queen.

That young men travel under ſome tutor, I allow well; ſo that he be ſuch a one, that may be able to tell them, what acquaintances they are to ſeek, what exerciſe or diſcipline the place yieldeth.
Bacon.

This, my lord, has juſtly acquired you as many friends, as there are perſons, who have the honour to be known to you; mere acquaintance you have none; you have drawn them all into a nearer line; and they, who have converſed with you, are for ever after inviolably yours. Dryden.

We ſee, he is aſhamed of his neareſt acquaintances.
Boyle againſt Bentley.

Acqua'inted, åk-kwå'n-tėd. adj. [from acquaint.] Familiar, well known; not new.

Now call we our high court of parliament;
That war or peace, or both at once, may be
As things acquainted and familiar to us. Shakeſp.

Acque'st, åk-kwėſt'. n. ſ. [acqueſt, Fr. from acquerir; written by ſome acquiſt, with a view to the word acquire, or acquiſita.] Attachment, acquiſition; the thing gained.

New acqueſts are more burden than ſtrength.
Bacon.

Mud, repoſed near the oſtea of rivers, makes continual additions to the land, thereby excluding the ſea; and preſerving theſe ſhells, as trophies and ſigns of its new acqueſts and encroachments.
Woodward.

To ACQUIE'SCE, åk-kwỳ-eſs'. v. n. [acquieſcer, Fr. acquieſcere, Lat.] To reſt in, or remain ſatisfied with, without oppoſition or diſcontent. It has in, before the object.

Others will, upon account of the receivedneſs of the propoſed opinion, think it rather worthy to be examined, than acquieſced in. Boyle.

Neither a bare approbation of, nor a mere wiſhing, nor unactive complacency in; nor, laſtly, a natural inclination to things virtuous and good, can paſs before God for a man's willing of ſuch things: and, conſequently, if men, upon this account, will needs take up and acquieſce in an airy ungrounded perſuaſion, that they will thoſe things which really they not will; they fall thereby, into a groſs and fatal deluſion. South.

He hath employed his tranſcendent wiſdom and power, that by theſe he might make way for his benignity; as the end, wherein they ultimately acquieſce. Grew.

Acquie'scence, åk-kwỳ-eſs'-ėnſe. n. ſ. [from acquieſce.]

1. A ſilent appearance of content; diſtinguiſhed on one ſide, from avowed conſent; on the other, from oppoſition.

Neither from any of the nobility, nor of the clergy, who were thought moſt averſe from it, there appeared any ſign of contradicting to that; but an entire acquieſcence in all, the biſhops thought to do. Clarendon.

2. Satisfaction, reſt, content.

Many indeed have given over their purſuits after fame, either from diſappointment, or from experience of the little pleaſure which attends it, or the better informations or natural coldneſs of old age; but ſeldom from a full ſatisfaction and acquieſcense in their preſent enjoyments of it.
Addiſon.

3. Submiſſion, confidence.

The greateſt part of the world take up their perſuaſions concerning good and evil, by an implicit faith, and a full acquieſcence in the word of thoſe, who ſhall repreſent things to them under theſe characters. South.

Acqui'rable, åk-kwỉ'-råbl. adj. [from acquire.] That, which may be acquired or obtained; attainable.

Thoſe rational inſtincts, the connate principles engraven in the human ſoul, though they are truths acquirable and deducible by rational conſequence and argumentation, yet ſeem to be inſcribed in the very craſis and texture of the ſoul, antecedent to any acquiſition by induſtry or the exerciſe of the diſcurſive faculty in man.
Hale's Origin of Mankind.

If the powers of cogitation and volition and ſenſation, are neither inherent in matter as ſuch, nor acquirable to matter by any motion or modification of it; it neceſſarily follows, that they proceed from ſome cogitative ſubſtance, ſome incorporeal inhabitant within us, which we call ſpirit and ſoul. Bentley.

To ACQUI'RE, åk-kwỉ're. v. a. [acquerir, Fr. acquiro, Lat.]

1. To gain, by one's own labour or power; to obtain, what is not received from nature, or tranſmitted by inheritance.

Better to leave undone, than by our deed
Acquire too high a fame; while he, we ſerve, is away. Shakeſp. Antony and Cleopatra.

2. To come to; to attain.

Motion cannot be perceived, without the perception of its terms; viz. the parts of ſpace, which it immediately left; and thoſe, which it next acquires. Glanville's Scepſis.

Acqui'red, åk-kwỉ'-rėd. particip. adj [from acquire.] Gained by one's ſelf; in oppoſition to thoſe things, which are beſtowed by nature.

We are ſeldom at eaſe, and free enough from the ſolicitation of our natural or adopted deſires; but a conſtant ſucceſſion of uneaſineſs, out of that ſtock, which natural wants or acquired habits have heaped up, take the will in their turns.
Locke.

Acqui'rer, åk-kwỉ'-růr. n. ſ. [from acquire.] The perſon, that acquires; a gainer.

Acqui'rement, åk-kwỉ're-mėnt. n. ſ. [from acquire.] That, which is acquired; gain; attainment. The word may be properly uſed, in oppoſition to the gifts of nature.

Theſe his acquirements, by induſtry, were exceedingly both enriched and enlarged, by many excellent endowments of nature.
Hayward on Edward VI.

By a content and acquieſcence in every ſpecies of truth, we embrace the ſhadow thereof; or ſo much, as may palliate its juſt and ſubſtantial acquirements. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

It is very difficult, to lay down rules for the acquirement of a taſte: the faculty muſt, in ſome degree, be born with us. Addiſon.

Acquisi'tion, åk-kwỳ-zỉsh'-ſhůn. n. ſ. [acquiſitio, Lat.]

1. The act of acquiring or gaining.

Each man has but a limited right to the good things of the world; and the natural allowed way, by which he is to compaſs the poſſeſſion of theſe things, is by his own induſtrious acquiſition of them. South.

2. The thing gained; acquirement.

Great ſir, all acquiſition
Of glory as of empire, here I lay before
Your royal feet. Denham's Sophy.

A ſtate can never arrive to its period, in a more deplorable criſis; than, when ſome prince lies hovering like a vulture, to diſmember its dying carcaſe; by which means it becomes only an acquiſition to ſome mighty monarchy, without hopes of a reſurrection. Swift.

Acqui'sitive, åk-kwìz'-zì-tìv. adj. [acquiſitivus, Lat.] That, which is acquired or gained.

He died, not in his acquiſitive, but in his native ſoil; nature herſelf, as it were, claiming a final intereſt in his body, when fortune had done with him. Wotton.

Acqui'st, åk-kwìſt'. n. ſ. [See Acquest.] Acquirement; attainment; gain. Not in uſe.

> His ſervant he, with new acquiſt
> Of true experience from this great event,
> With peace and conſolation hath diſmiſt. Milton.

To ACQUI'T, åk-kwìt'. v. a. [acquiter, Fr. See Quit.]

1. To ſet free.

> Ne do I wiſh (for wiſhing were but vain)
> To be acquit from my continual ſmart;
> But joy, her thrall for ever to remain,
> And yield for pledge my poor captived heart. Spenſer.

2. To clear from a charge of guilt; to abſolve; oppoſed to condemn, either ſimply with an accuſative, as, the jury acquitted him; or with the particles from or of, which is more common, before the crime.

If I ſin, then thou markeſt me, and thou wilt not acquit me from mine iniquity. Job, x. 14.

By the ſuffrage of the moſt and beſt, he is already acquitted; and, by the ſentence of ſome, condemned. Dryden.

He that judges, without informing himſelf to the utmoſt that he is capable, cannot acquit himſelf of judging amiſs. Locke.

Neither do I reflect upon the memory of his majeſty, whom I entirely acquit of any imputation. Swift.

3. To clear from any obligation.

Steady to my principles, and not diſpirited with my afflictions, I have, by the bleſſing of God on my endeavours, overcome all difficulties; and, in ſome meaſure, acquitted myſelf of the debt, which I owed the publick, when I undertook this work. Dryden.

4. In a ſimilar ſenſe, it is ſaid, The man hath acquitted himſelf well; that is, he hath diſcharged his duty.

Acqui'tment, åk-kwìt'-mènt. n. ſ. [from acquit.] The ſtate of being acquitted; or act of acquitting.

The word imports properly an acquitment or diſcharge of a man, upon ſome precedent accuſation; and a full trial and cognizance of his cauſe, had thereupon. South.

Acqui'ttal, åk-kwìt'-tål. n. ſ. In law, is a deliverance and ſetting free, from the ſuſpicion or guiltineſs of an offence. Cowell.

The conſtant deſign of both theſe orators was, to drive ſome one particular point, either the condemnation or acquittal of an accuſed perſon. Swift.

To Acqui'ttance, åk-kwìt'-tånſe. v. a. To procure an acquittance; to acquit; a word not in preſent uſe.

> But, if black ſcandal and foul-fac'd reproach
> Attend the ſequel of your impoſition;
> Your mere enforcement ſhall acquittance me,
> From all the impure blots and ſtains thereof. Shakeſpeare.

Acqui'ttance, åk-kwìt'-tånſe. n. ſ. [from acquit.]

1. The act of diſcharging from a debt.

> But ſoon ſhall find
> Forbearance, no acquittance, ere day end
> Juſtice ſhall not return, as beauty, ſcorn'd. Milton.

2. A writing, teſtifying the receipt of a debt.

> You can produce acquittances
> For ſuch a ſum, from ſpecial officers
> Of Charles his father.
> Shakeſpeare's Love's Labour Loſt.
> They quickly pay their debt; and then
> Take no acquittances, but pay again. Donne.

The ſame man bought and ſold to himſelf, paid the money, and gave the acquittance. Arbuthnot.

A'cre, å'-kůr. n. ſ. [Æcꞃe, Sax.] A quantity of land containing, in length forty perches, and four in breadth, or four thouſand eight hundred and forty ſquare yards. Dict.

> Search every acre in the high-grown field,
> And bring him to our eye. Shakeſp. King Lear.

A'crid, åk'-krìd. adj. [acer, Lat.] Of a hot biting taſte; bitter; ſo, as to leave a painful heat upon the organs of taſte.

Bitter and acrid differ, only by the ſharp particles of the firſt being involved in a greater quantity of oil, than thoſe of the laſt. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

Acrimo'nious, åk-krŷ-mô'-nyůs. adj. Abounding with acrimony; ſharp; corroſive.

If gall cannot be rendered acrimonious and bitter of itſelf; then, whatever acrimony or amaritude redounds in it, muſt be from the admixture of melancholy. Harvey on Conſumptions.

A'crimony, åk'-krŷ-můn-nŷ. n. ſ. [acrimonia, Lat.]

1. Sharpneſs, corroſiveneſs.

There be plants, that have a milk in them when they are cut; as, figs, old lettuce, ſow-thiſtles, ſpurge. The cauſe may be an inception of putrefaction; for thoſe milks have all an acrimony, though one would think they ſhould be lenitive. Bacon's Natural Hiſtory.

The chymiſts define ſalt, from ſome of its properties, to be a body fuſible in the fire; congealable again by cold, into brittle glebes or cryſtals; ſoluble in water, ſo as to diſappear; not malleable; and having ſomething in it, which affects the organs of taſte with a ſenſation of acrimony or ſharpneſs. Arbuthnot.

2. Sharpneſs of temper, ſeverity, bitterneſs of thought or language.

John the Baptiſt ſet himſelf, with much acrimony and indignation, to baffle this ſenſeleſs arrogant conceit of theirs; which made them huff at the doctrine of repentance, as a thing below them, and not at all belonging to them. South.

A'critude, åk'-krŷ-tůde. n. ſ. [from acrid.] An acrid taſte; a biting heat on the palate.

In green vitriol, with its aſtringent and ſweetiſh taſtes, is joined ſome acritude. Grew's Muſæum.

Acroama'tical, åk-krô-å-måt'-tì-kål. adj. ἀκροάομαι, Gr. I hear.] Of or pertaining to deep learning; the oppoſite of exoterical.

Acroa'ticks, åk-krô'-å-tìx. n. ſ. [ἀκροατικὰ, Gr.] Ariſtotle's lectures, on the more nice and principal parts of philoſophy; to which, none but friends and ſcholars were admitted by him.

Acro'nycal, åk-krô'-nì-cål. adj. [from ἄκρος ſummus, and νὺξ nox; importing the beginning of night.] A term of aſtronomy, applied to the ſtars; of which the riſing or ſetting is called acronycal, when they either appear above or ſink below the horizon at the time of ſunſet. It is oppoſed to coſmical.

Acro'nycally, åk-krô-nì-cålly. adv. [from acronycal.] At the acronycal time.

He is tempeſtuous in the ſummer, when he riſes heliacally; and rainy in the winter, when he riſes acronycally. Dryden.

A'crospire, åk'-krô-ſpìre. n. ſ. [from ἄκρος and σπείρω, Gr.] A ſhoot or ſprout from the end of ſeeds, before they are put in the ground.

Many corns will ſmilt, or have their pulp turned into a ſubſtance like thick cream; and will ſend forth their ſubſtance in an acroſpire. Mortimer.

A'crospired, åk'-krô-ſpì rèd. part. adj. Having ſprouts, or having ſhot out.

For want of turning, when the malt is ſpread on the floor, it comes and ſprouts at both ends; which is called acroſpired, and is fit only for ſwine. Mortimer.

Acro'ss, å-krôſs'. adv. [from a for at, or the French à, as it is uſed in à travers, and croſs.] Athwart; laid over ſomething ſo, as to croſs it.

The harp hath the concave, not along the ſtrings, but acroſs the ſtrings; and no harp hath the ſound ſo melting and prolonged, as the Iriſh harp. Bacon.

> This view'd, but not enjoy'd, with arms acroſs
> He ſtood, reflecting on his country's loſs. Dryden.

There is a ſet of artiſans; who, by the help of ſeveral poles, which they lay acroſs each others ſhoulders, build themſelves up into a kind of pyramid; ſo that you ſee a pile of men in the air, of four or five rows, riſing one above another. Addiſon.

Acro'stick, å-krôſs'-tìk. n. ſ. [from ἄκρος and στίχος, Gr.] A poem, in which the firſt letter of every line being taken, makes up the name of the perſon or thing, on which the poem is written.

Acro'stick, å-krôſs'-tìk. adj.

1. That, which relates to an acroſtick.
2. That, which contains acroſticks.

> Leave writing plays; and chooſe for thy command
> Some peaceful province in acroſtick land:
> There thou may'ſt wings diſplay, and altars raiſe,
> And torture one poor word ten thouſand ways. Dryden.

A'CROTERS, or ACROTE'RIA, å-krô't-èrs. n. ſ. [from ἄκρον, Gr. the extremity of any body.] Little pedeſtals without baſes, placed at the middle and the two extremes of pediments; ſometimes ſerving, to ſupport ſtatues.

To ACT, åkt'. v. n. [ago, actum, Lat.]

1. To be in action, not to reſt.

He hangs between, in doubt to act or reſt. Pope.

2. To perform the proper functions.

Albeit the will is not capable, of being compelled to any of its actings; yet it is capable, of being made to act with more or leſs difficulty, according to the different impreſſions it receives from motives or objects. South.

3. To practiſe arts or duties; to conduct one's ſelf.

> 'Tis plain, that ſhe (who for a kingdom now
> Would ſacrifice her love, and break her vow)
> Not out of love, but intereſt, acts alone;
> And would, ev'n in my arms, lie thinking of a throne. Dryden's Conqueſt of Granada.

The deſire of happineſs, and the conſtraint it puts upon us to act for it, no body accounts an abridgment of liberty. Locke.

The ſplendor of his office, is the token of that ſacred character, which he inwardly bears; and one of theſe ought conſtantly to put him in mind of the other, and excite him to act up to it, through the whole courſe of his adminiſtration. Atterbury's Sermons.

It is our part and duty, to co-operate with this grace, vigorouſly to exert thoſe powers, and act up to thoſe advantages to which it reſtores us. He has given eyes to the blind, and feet to the lame. Rogers's Sermons.

4. To produce effects, in ſome paſſive ſubject.

> Hence, 'tis we wait the wond'rous cauſe to find,
> How body acts upon impaſſive mind. Garth's Diſpenſary.

The ſtomach, the inteſtines, the muſcles of the lower belly, all act upon the aliment: beſides, the chyle is not ſucked, but ſqueezed, into the mouths of the lacteals, by the action of the fibres of the guts. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

To Act, åkt'. v. a.

1. To bear a borrowed character, as a ſtage-player.

Honour and ſhame from no condition riſe:
Act well your part; there all the honour lies. Pope.

2. To counterfeit; to feign by action.

His former trembling once again renew'd,
With acted fear the villain thus purſu'd. Dryden.

3. To actuate; to put in motion; to regulate the movements.

Moſt people in the world are acted by levity and humour, by ſtrange and irrational changes. South.

Perhaps they are as proud as Lucifer, as covetous as Demas, as falſe as Judas; and, in the whole courſe of their converſation, act and are acted, not by devotion, but deſign. South.

We ſuppoſe two diſtinct incommunicable conſciouſneſſes, acting the ſame body; the one conſtantly by day, the other by night; and, on the other ſide, the ſame conſciouſneſs acting by intervals two diſtinct bodies. Locke.

Act, åkt′. n. ſ. [actum, Lat.]

1. Something done; a deed; an exploit, whether good or ill.

A lower place, not well,
May make too great an act:
Better to leave undone, than by our deed
Acquire too high a fame.
Shakeſp. Ant. and Cleopatra.

The conſcious wretch muſt all his acts reveal;
Loth to confeſs, unable to conceal;
From the firſt moment of his vital breath,
To his laſt hour of unrepenting death. Dryden.

2. Agency; the power of producing an effect.

I will try the forces
Of theſe thy compounds on ſuch creatures, as
We count not worth the hanging, but none human;
To try the vigour of them, and apply
Allayments to their act; and by them gather
Their ſeveral virtues and effects.
Shakeſpeare's Cymbeline.

3. Action; the performance of exploits; production of effects.

'Tis ſo much in your nature to do good, that your life is but one continued act of placing benefits on many; as the ſun is always carrying his light, to ſome part or other of the world. Dryden's Fables.

Who forth from nothing call'd this comely frame,
His will and act, his word and work the ſame.
Prior.

4. The doing of ſome particular thing; a ſtep taken; a purpoſe executed.

This act perſuades me,
That this remotion of the duke and her
Is practice only. Shakeſpeare's King Lear.

5. A ſtate of reality; effect.

The ſeeds of herbs and plants at the firſt are not in act (but in poſſibility), that, which they afterwards grow to be. Hooker.

God alone excepted; who actually and everlaſtingly is, whatſoever he may be; and which cannot hereafter be that, which now he is not: all other things beſides are ſomewhat in poſſibility, which as yet they are not in act. Hooker.

Sure, they're conſcious
Of ſome intended miſchief; and are fled,
To put it into act. Denham's Sophy

6. Incipient agency; tendency to an effort.

Her legs were buſkin'd; and the left before,
In act to ſhoot: a ſilver bow ſhe bore. Dryden.

7. A part of a play, during which the action proceeds without interruption.

Many never doubt, but the whole condition required by Chriſt (the repentance, he came to preach) will, in that laſt ſcene of their laſt act, immediately before the exit, be as opportunely and acceptably performed, as at any other point of their lives. Hammond's Fundamentals.

Five acts are the juſt meaſure of a play.
Roſcommon.

8. A decree of a court of juſtice, or edict of a legiſlature.

They make edicts for uſury, to ſupport uſurers; repeal daily any wholeſome act, eſtabliſhed againſt the rich; and provide more piercing ſtatutes daily, to chain-up and reſtrain the poor.
Shakeſpeare's Coriolanus.

You, that are king, though he do wear the crown,
Have caus'd him, by new act of parliament,
To blot out me. Shakeſpeare's Henry VI.

9. Record of judicial proceedings.

Judicial acts are all thoſe matters, which relate to judicial proceedings; and, being reduced into writing by a public notary, are recorded by the authority of the judge. Ayliffe.

A′ction, åk-ſhůn. n. ſ. [action, Fr. actio, Lat.]

1. The quality or ſtate of acting, oppoſite to reſt.

O noble Engliſh! that could entertain,
With half their forces, the full power of France;
And let another half ſtand laughing by,
All out of work, and cold for action.
Shakeſpeare's Henry V.

2. An act or thing done; a deed.

This action, I now go on,
Is for my better grace. Shakeſpeare's Winter's Tale.

God never accepts a good inclination inſtead of a good action, where that action may be done; nay, ſo much the contrary, that, if a good inclination be not ſeconded by a good action, the want of that action is made ſo much the more criminal and inexcuſable. South.

3. Agency, operation.

It is better therefore, that the earth ſhould move about its own center, and make thoſe uſeful viciſſitudes of night and day, than expoſe always the ſame ſide to the action of the ſun. Bentley.

He has ſettled laws, and laid down rules; conformable to which, natural bodies are governed in their actions upon one another. Cheyne.

4. The ſeries of events, repreſented in a fable.

This action ſhould have three qualifications. Firſt, it ſhould be but one action; ſecondly, it ſhould be an entire action; and, thirdly, it ſhould be a great action. Addiſon.

5. Geſticulation; the accordance of the motions of the body, with the words ſpoken; a part of oratory.

—He, that ſpeaks, doth gripe the hearer's wriſt;
While he, that hears, makes fearful action
With wrinkled bows. Shakeſpeare's King John.

Our orators are obſerved, to make uſe of leſs geſture or action, than thoſe of other countries.
Addiſon.

6. [In law.] It is uſed with the prepoſition againſt, before the perſon; and for, before the thing.

Actions are perſonal, real, and mixed. Action perſonal belongs to a man againſt another, by reaſon of any contract, offence, or cauſe; of like force with a contract or offence, made or done by him or ſome other, for whoſe fact he is to anſwer. Action real is given to any man againſt another, that poſſeſſes the thing required or ſued for, in his own name, and no other man's. Action mixt is that, which lies as well againſt or for the thing, which we ſeek; as againſt the perſon, that hath it: called mixt, becauſe it hath a mixt reſpect, both to the thing and to the perſon.

Action is divided into civil, penal, and mixt. Action civil is that, which tends only to the recovery of that, which is due to us; as a ſum of money formerly lent. Action penal is that, which aims at ſome penalty or puniſhment in the party ſued, be it corporal or pecuniary; as, in common law, the next friends of a man feloniouſly ſlain ſhall purſue the law againſt the murderer. Action mixt is that, which ſeeks both, the thing whereof we are deprived, and a penalty alſo for the unjuſt detaining of the ſame.

Action upon the caſe, is an action given for redreſs of wrongs, done without force againſt any man, by law not ſpecially provided for.

Action upon the ſtatute, is an action brought againſt a man upon breach of a ſtatute. Cowell.

There was never man, could have a juſter action againſt filthy fortune, than I; ſince, all other things being granted me, her blindneſs is the only lett. Sidney.

For our reward then;
Firſt, all our debts are paid; dangers of law,
Actions, decrees, judgments, againſt us, quitted.
B. Jonſon.

7. In the plural, in France, the ſame as ſtocks in England.

A′ctionable, åk′-ſhô-nåbl. adj. [from action.] That, which admits an action in law to be brought againſt it; puniſhable.

His proceſs was formed; whereby he was found guilty of nought elſe, that I could learn, which was actionable, but of ambition.
Howel's Vocal Foreſt.

No man's face is actionable: theſe ſingularities are interpretable from more innocent cauſes.
Collier.

A′ctionary, or A′ctionist, åk′-ſhô-nėr-ŷ, åk′-ſhô-nîſt. n. ſ. [from action.] One, that has a ſhare in actions or ſtocks.

A′ction-ta′king, åk″-ſhůn-tå′-kîng. adj. Accuſtomed, to reſent by means of law; litigious.

A knave, a raſcal, a filthy worſted-ſtocking knave; a lily-liver'd action-taking knave. Shakeſp.

Actita′tion, åk-tî-tå′-ſhůn. n. ſ. [from actito, Lat.] Action quick and frequent. Dict.

To A′ctivate, åk-tî-våt. v. a. [from active.] To make active. This word is perhaps uſed only by the author alleged.

As ſnow and ice, eſpecially being holpen, and their cold activated by nitre or ſalt, will turn water into ice, and that in a few hours; ſo, it may be, it will turn wood or ſtiff clay into ſtone, in longer time. Bacon.

A′ctive, åk′-tîv. adj. [activus, Lat.]

1. That, which has the power or quality of acting.

Theſe particles have not only a vis inertiæ, accompanied with ſuch paſſive laws of motion, as naturally reſult from that force; but alſo they are moved by certain active principles, ſuch as is that of gravity; and that, which cauſes fermentation, and the coheſion of bodies. Newton's Opticks.

2. That, which acts; oppoſed to paſſive, or that which ſuffers.

—When an even flame two hearts did touch;
His office was, indulgently to fit
Actives to paſſives: correſpondency
Only his ſubject was. Donne.

If you think that, by multiplying the additaments in the ſame proportion that you multiply the ore, the work will follow, you may be deceived: for quantity in the paſſive will add more reſiſtance, than the quantity in the active will add force. Bacon.

3. Buſy, engaged in action; oppoſed to idle or ſedentary, or any ſtate of which the duties are performed only by the mental powers.

'Tis virtuous action, that muſt praiſe bring forth;
Without which, ſlow advice is little worth:
Yet they, who give good counſel, praiſe deſerve;
Tho', in the active part, they cannot ſerve. Denham.

4. Practical; not merely theoretical.

The world hath had in theſe men freſh experience, how dangerous ſuch active errors are.
Hooker.

5. Nimble; agile; quick.

Some bend the ſtubborn bow for victory;
And ſome with darts their active ſinews try. Dryd.

6. In grammar.

A verb active is that, which ſignifies action; as I teach. Clarke's Latin Grammar.

A′ctively, åk′-tîv-lŷ. adv. [from active.] In an active manner; buſily; nimbly. In an active ſignification; as, the word is uſed actively.

A'CTIVENESS, åk'-tiv-nėſs. n. ſ. [from active.] The quality of being active; quickneſs; nimbleneſs. This is a word more rarely uſed than activity.

What ſtrange agility and activeneſs, do our common tumblers and dancers on the rope attain to, by continual exerciſe! Wilkins's Math. Magick.

ACTI'VITY, åk-tiv'-vi-tŷ. n. ſ. [from active.] The quality of being active, applied either to things or perſons.

Salt put to ice, as in the producing of the artificial ice, increaſeth the activity of cold. Bacon.

Our adverſary will not be idle, though we are: he watches every turn of our ſoul, and incident of our life; and, if we remit our activity, will take advantage of our indolence. Rogers.

A'CTOR, åk'-tůr. n. ſ. [actor, Lat.]

1. He, that acts, or performs any thing.

The virtues of either age may correct the defects of both: and good for ſucceſſion, that young men may be learners, while men in age are actors. Bacon.

He, who writes an Encomium Neronis, if he does it heartily, is himſelf but a tranſcript of Nero in his mind; and would gladly enough ſee ſuch pranks, as he was famous for, acted again, though he dares not be the actor of them himſelf. South.

2. He, that perſonates a character; a ſtage-player.

Would you have
Such an Herculean actor in the ſcene,
And not this hydra? They muſt ſweat no leſs,
To fit their properties, than t' expreſs their parts. Ben Jonſon.

When a good actor doth his part preſent,
In every act he our attention draws;
That, at the laſt, he may find juſt applauſe. Denham.

Theſe falſe beauties of the ſtage are no more laſting, than a rainbow; when the actor ceaſes to ſhine upon them, they vaniſh in a twinkling. Dryden's Spaniſh Friar.

A'CTRESS, åk'-treſs. n. ſ. [actrice, Fr.]

1. She, that performs any thing.

Virgil has indeed admitted Fame, as an actreſs, in the Æneid: but the part ſhe acts, is very ſhort; and none of the moſt admired circumſtances of that divine work. Addiſon.

We ſprights have juſt ſuch natures,
We had (for all the world) when human creatures;
And therefore I, that was an actreſs here,
Play all my tricks in hell, a goblin there. Dryden.

2. A woman, that plays on the ſtage.

A'CTUAL, åk'-tů-ål. adj. [actuel, Fr.]

1. That, which compriſes action.

In this ſlumbry agitation, beſides her walking and other actual performances, what at any time have you heard her ſay? Shakeſpeare's Macbeth.

2. Really in act; not merely potential.

Sin, there in pow'r, before
Once actual; now in body, and to dwell
Habitual habitant. Milton.

3. In act; not purely in ſpeculation.

For he, that but conceives a crime in thought,
Contracts the danger of an actual fault:
Then, what muſt he expect, that ſtill proceeds
To finiſh ſin, and work-up thoughts to deeds? Dryden.

ACTUA'LITY, åk-tů-ål'-lŷ-tŷ. n. ſ. [from actual.] The ſtate of being actual.

Th' actuality of theſe ſpiritual qualities is thus impriſoned, though their potentiality be not quite deſtroyed: and thus a craſs, extended, impenetrable, paſſive, diviſible, unintelligent ſubſtance is generated, which we call matter. Cheyne.

A'CTUALLY, åk'-tů-ål-lŷ. adv. [from actual.] In act; in effect; really.

All mankind acknowledge themſelves able and ſufficient to do many things, which actually they never do. South.

Read one of the Chronicles; and you will think, you were reading a hiſtory of the kings of Iſrael or Judah, where the hiſtorians were actually inſpired; and where, by a particular ſcheme of providence, the kings were diſtinguiſhed by judgments or bleſſings, according as they promoted idolatry, or the worſhip of the true God. Addiſon.

Though our temporal proſpects ſhould be full of danger, or though the days of ſorrow ſhould actually overtake us, yet ſtill we muſt repoſe ourſelves on God. Rogers.

A'CTUALNESS, åk'-tů-ål-nėſs. n. ſ. [from actual.] The quality of being actual.

A'CTUARY, åk'-tů-år-rŷ. n. ſ. [actuarius, Lat.] The regiſter, who compiles the minutes of the proceedings of a court; a term of the civil law.

Suppoſe the judge ſhould ſay, that he would have the keeping of the acts of court remain with him, and the notary will have the cuſtody of them with himſelf: certainly, in this caſe, the actuary or writer of them ought to be preferred. Ayliffe.

A'CTUATE, åk'-tů-åte. adj. [from the verb To actuate.] Put into action; animated; brought into effect.

The active informations of the intellect, filling the paſſive reception of the will, like form cloſing with matter, grew actuate into a third and diſtinct perfection of practice. South.

To A'CTUATE, åk'-tů-åte. v. a. [from ago, actum, Lat.] To put into action; to invigorate, or increaſe the powers of motion.

The light, made by this animal, depends upon a living ſpirit; and ſeems by ſome vital irradiation, to be actuated into this luſtre. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

Such is every man, who has not actuated the grace given him, to the ſubduing of every reigning ſin. Decay of Piety.

Men of the greateſt abilities are moſt fired with ambition; and, on the contrary, mean and narrow minds are the leaſt actuated by it. Addiſon.

Our paſſions are the ſprings, which actuate the powers of our nature. Rogers.

ACTUO'SE, åk'-tů-ôs. adj. [from act.] That, which hath ſtrong powers of action; a word little uſed.

To A'CUATE, åk'-uåte. v. a. [acuo, Lat.] To ſharpen; to invigorate, with any powers of ſharpneſs.

Immoderate feeding upon powdered beef, pickled meats, and debauching with ſtrong wines, do inflame and acuate the blood; whereby it is capacitated, to corrode the lungs. Harvey on Conſumptions.

ACU'LEATE, å-ků'-lyåte. adj. [aculeatus, Lat.] That, which has a point or ſting; prickly; that, which terminates in a ſharp point.

ACU'MEN, å-ků'-mėn. n. ſ. [Lat.] A ſharp point; figuratively, quickneſs of intellects.

The word was much affected by the learned Ariſtarchus in common converſation, to ſignify genius or natural acumen. Pope.

ACU'MINATED, å-ků'-mŷ-nå-tėd. particip. adj. Ending in a point; ſharp-pointed.

This is not acuminated and pointed, as in the reſt; but ſeemeth, as it were, cut off. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

I appropriate this word, Noli me tangere, to a ſmall round acuminated tubercle; which hath not much pain, unleſs touched or rubbed, or exaſperated by topicks. Wiſeman.

ACU'TE, å-ků'te. adj. [acutus, Lat.]

1. Sharp, ending in a point; oppoſed to obtuſe or blunt.

Having the ideas of an obtuſe and an acute angled triangle, both drawn from equal baſes and between parallels; I can, by intuitive knowledge, perceive the one not to be the other; but cannot that way know, whether they be equal. Locke.

2. In a figurative ſenſe, applied to men; ingenious; penetrating; oppoſed to dull or ſtupid.

The acute and ingenious author, among many very fine thoughts and uncommon reflections, has ſtarted the notion of ſeeing all things in God. Locke.

3. Spoken of the ſenſes, vigorous; powerful in operation.

Were our ſenſes altered, and made much quicker and acuter, the appearance and outward ſcheme of things would have quite another face to us. Locke.

4. Acute diſeaſe. Any diſeaſe, which is attended with an increaſed velocity of blood, and terminates in a few days; oppoſed to chronical. Quincy.

5. Acute accent; that, which raiſes or ſharpens the voice.

ACU'TELY, å-ků'te-lŷ. adv. [from acute.] After an acute manner; ſharply: it is uſed, as well in the figurative, as primitive ſenſe.

He, that will look into many parts of Aſia and America, will find men reaſon there, perhaps as acutely as himſelf, who yet never heard of a ſyllogiſm. Locke.

ACU'TENESS, å-ků'te-nės. n. ſ. [from acute, which ſee.]

1. Sharpneſs.

2. Force of intellects.

They would not be ſo apt to think, that there could be nothing added to the acuteneſs and penetration of their underſtandings. Locke.

3. Quickneſs and vigour of ſenſes.

If eyes ſo framed could not view at once the hand and the hour-plate, their owner could not be benefited by that acuteneſs; which, whilſt it diſcovered the ſecret contrivance of the machine, made him loſe its uſe. Locke.

4. Violence and ſpeedy criſis of a malady.

We apply preſent remedies, according to indications; reſpecting rather the acuteneſs of the diſeaſe, and precipitancy of the occaſion, than the riſing and ſetting of ſtars. Brown.

5. Sharpneſs of ſound.

This acuteneſs of ſound will ſhew that, whilſt to the eye the bell ſeems to be at reſt, yet the minute parts of it continue in a very briſk motion, without which they could not ſtrike the air. Boyle.

ADA'CTED, åd-åk'-tėd. particip. adj. [adactus, Lat.] Driven by force; a word little uſed. The verb adact is not uſed. Dict.

A'DAGE, åd'-åje. n. ſ. [adagium, Lat.] A maxim, handed down from antiquity; a proverb.

Shallow unimproved intellects are confident pretenders to certainty; as if, contrary to the adage, ſcience had no friend but ignorance. Glanville's Scepſis Scientifica.

Fine fruits of learning! old ambitious fool,
Dar'ſt thou apply that adage of the ſchool:
As if 'tis nothing worth, that lies conceal'd;
And ſcience is not ſcience, till reveal'd? Dryden.

ADA'GIO, å-då-jô. n. ſ. [Italian, at leiſure.] A term uſed by muſicians, to mark a ſlow time.

A'DAMANT, åd'-å-månt. n. ſ. [adamas, Lat. ἀδάμας, Gr. from ἀ and δαμάω, to tame or ſubdue; that is inſuperable, infrangible.]

1. A ſtone, imagined by writers, of impenetrable hardneſs.

So great a fear my name amongſt them ſpread;
That they ſuppos'd, I could rend bars of ſteel,
And ſpurn in pieces poſts of adamant. Shakeſpeare.

Satan, with vaſt and haughty ſtrides advanc'd,
Came tow'ring, arm'd in adamant and gold. Milt.

Eternal Deities,
Who rule the world with abſolute decrees;
And write, whatever time ſhall bring to paſs,
With pens of adamant, on plates of braſs. Dryden.

2. The diamond.

Hardneſs, wherein ſome ſtones exceed all other bodies; and among them, the adamant all other ſtones, being exalted to that degree thereof, that art in vain endeavours to counterfeit it: the factitious ſtones of chymiſts in imitation, being eaſily detected by an ordinary lapidiſt. Ray on the Creation.

3. Adamant is taken for the loadſtone.

You draw me, you hard-hearted adamant!
But yet you draw not iron; for my heart
Is true, as ſteel. Shakeſpeare.

Let him change his lodging from one part of the town to another, which is a great adamant of acquaintance. Bacon.

ADAMANTE'AN, ăd′-ă-măn-tē″-ăn. adj. [from adamant.] Hard, as adamant.

He weaponleſs himſelf,
Made arms ridiculous, uſeleſs the forgery
Of brazen ſhield and ſpear, the hammer'd cuiraſs,
Chalybean temper'd ſteel, and frock of mail

This word occurs perhaps only in this paſſage.

ADAMA'NTINE, ăd-ă-măn′-tĭn. adj. [adamantinus, Lat.]

1. Made of adamant.

Wide is the fronting gate; and, rais'd on high
With adamantine columns, threats the ſky. Dryd.

2. Having the qualities of adamant; as, hardneſs, indiſſolubility.

Could Eve's weak hand, extended to the tree,
In ſunder rend that adamantine chain;
Whoſe golden links, effects and cauſes be;
And which, to God's own chair, doth fix'd remain? Davies.

An eternal ſterility muſt have poſſeſſed the world, where all things had been fixed and faſtened everlaſtingly with the adamantine chains of ſpecific gravity; if the Almighty had not ſpoken and ſaid, 'Let the earth bring forth graſs, the herb yielding ſeed, and the fruit-tree yielding fruit, after its kind:' and it was ſo. Bentley.

In adamantine chains ſhall death be bound,
And hell's grim tyrant feel th' eternal wound. Pope.

Tho' adamantine bonds the chief reſtrain,
The dire reſtraint his wiſdom will defeat,
And ſoon reſtore him to his regal ſeat. Pope.

A'DAM'S-A'PPLE, ăd″-dămz-ăp′l. n. ſ. [in anatomy.] A prominent part of the throat.

To ADAPT, ă-dăpt. v. a. [adapto, Lat.] To fit one thing to another; to ſuit; to proportion.

'Tis true, but let it not be known,
My eyes are ſomewhat dimmiſh grown;
For nature, always in the right,
To your decays adapts my ſight. Swift.

It is not enough, that nothing offends the ear; but a good poet will adapt the very ſounds, as well as words, to the things he treats of. Pope's Letters.

ADAPTA'TION, ăd-ăp-tā′-ſhŭn. n. ſ. [from adapt.] The act, of fitting one thing to another; the fitneſs of one thing to another.

Some ſpecies there be of middle natures; that is, of bird and beaſt, as batts: yet are their parts ſo ſet together, that we cannot define the beginning or end of either; there being a commixtion of both, rather than adaptation or cement of the one unto the other. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

Adheſion may be in part aſcribed, either to ſome elaſtical motion in the preſſed glaſs; or to the exquiſite adaptation of the almoſt numberleſs (though very ſmall) aſperities of the one, and the numerous little cavities of the other; whereby the ſurfaces do lock in with one another, or are (as it were) claſped together. Boyle.

ADA'PTION, ăd-ăp′-ſhŭn. n. ſ. [from adapt.] The act of fitting.

It were alone a ſufficient work, to ſhew all the neceſſities, the wiſe contrivances, and prudent adaptions, of theſe admirable machines, for the benefit of the whole. Cheyne.

ADA'PTNESS, ă-dăpt′-nĕſs. n. ſ. [for adaptedneſs, from adapt.]

Some notes are, to diſplay the adaptneſs of the ſound to the ſenſe. Dr. Newton.

This word I have found no where elſe.

To ADCO'RPORATE, ăd-kă′r-pō-rāt. v. a. [from ad and corpus.] To unite one body with another; more uſually wrote accorporate; which ſee.

To ADD, ăd′. v. a. [addo, Lat.]

1. To join ſomething to that, which was before.

Mark, if his birth makes any difference;
If, to his words, it adds one grain of ſenſe. Dryd.
They, whoſe muſes have the higheſt flown,
Add not to his immortal memory,
But do an act of friendſhip to their own. Dryd.

2. To perform the mental operation, of adding one number or conception to another. To add to, is proper; but, to add together, ſeems a ſoleciſm.

Whatſoever poſitive idea a man has in his mind, of any quantity; he can repeat it, and add it to the former, as eaſily, as he can add together the ideas of two days or two years. Locke.

A'DDABLE, ăd′-dăbl. adj. [from add.] That, to which ſomething may be added: Addible is more proper. It ſignifies more properly that, which may be added.

The firſt number, in every addition, is called the addable number; the other, the number or numbers added; and the number, invented by the addition, the aggregate or ſum. Cocker.

To ADDE'CIMATE, ăd-dĕs′-ĭm-āte. v. a. [addecimo, Lat.] To take or aſcertain tithes. Dict.

To ADDE'EM, ăd-dē′m. v. a. [from deem.] To eſteem; to account. This word is now out of uſe.

She ſcorns to be addeem'd ſo worthleſs-baſe,
As to be mov'd to ſuch an infamy.
Daniel's Civil Wars.

A'DDER, ăd′-dŭr. n. ſ. [Æꞇꞇeꞃ, Æꞇꞇeꞃ, Naꝺꝺꞃe, as it ſeems from æꞇꞇeꞃ, Sax. poiſon.] A ſerpent, a viper, a poiſonous reptile; perhaps of any ſpecies. In common language, adders and ſnakes are not the ſame.

Or is the adder better than the eel,
Becauſe his painted ſkin contents the eye?
Shakeſpeare.

An adder did it; for, with doubler tongue
Than thine, thou ſerpent, never adder ſtung.
Shakeſpeare.

The adder teaches us where to ſtrike, by her curious and fearful defending of her head. Taylor.

A'DDER'S-GRA'SS, ăd″-dŭrz-grăſs′. n. ſ. The name of a plant, imagined by Skinner to be ſo named, becauſe ſerpents lurk about it.

A'DDER'S-TO'NGUE, ăd″-dŭrz-tŭng′. n. ſ. [ophiogloſſum, Lat.] The name of an herb.

It hath no viſible flower; but the ſeeds are produced on a ſpike, which reſembles a ſerpent's tongue; which ſeed is contained in many longitudinal cells. Miller.

The moſt common ſimples are comfrey, bugle, agrimony, ſanicle, paul's-betony, fluellin, periwinkle, adder's-tongue. Wiſeman's Surgery.

A'DDER'S-WO'RT, ăd″-dŭrz-wŭrt′. n. ſ. An herb; ſo named, on account of its virtue, real or ſuppoſed, of curing the bite of ſerpents.

A'DDIBLE, ăd′-dĭbl. adj. [from add.] Poſſible to be added. See ADDABLE.

The cleareſt idea it can get of infinity, is the confuſed incomprehenſible remainder of endleſs addible numbers, which affords no proſpect of ſtop or boundary. Locke.

ADDIBI'LITY, ăd′-dȳ-bĭl″-lȳ-tȳ. n. ſ. [from addible.] The poſſibility of being added.

This endleſs addition or addibility (if any one like the word better) of numbers, ſo apparent to the mind, is that, which gives us the cleareſt and moſt diſtinct idea of infinity. Locke.

A'DDICE, ăd′-dĭs. n. ſ. [for which we corruptly ſpeak and write adz, from adeſe, Sax. an axe.]

The addice hath its blade made thin, and ſomewhat arching. As the axe hath its edge parallel to its handle, ſo the addice hath its edge athwart the handle, and is ground to a baſil on its inſide to its outer edge. Moxon's Mechanical Exerciſes.

To ADDI'CT, ăd-dĭkt′. v. a. [addico, Lat.]

1. To devote, to dedicate, in a good ſenſe; which is rarely uſed.

Ye know the houſe of Stephanus; that they have addicted themſelves, to the miniſtry of the ſaints. 1 Cor. xvi. 15.

2. It is commonly taken in a bad ſenſe; as, he addicted himſelf to vice.

3. To devote one's ſelf, to any perſon, party, or perſuaſion. A Latiniſm.

I am neither author or fautor of any ſect: I will have no man addict himſelf to me; but, if I have any thing right, defend it as truth's. Ben Jonſon.

ADDI'CTEDNESS, ăd-dĭk′-tĕd-nĕſs. n. ſ. [from addicted.] The quality or ſtate of being addicted.

Thoſe know, how little I have remitted of my former addictedneſs to make chymical experiments. Boyle.

ADDI'CTION, ăd-dĭk′-ſhŭn. n. ſ. [addictio, Lat.]

1. The act, of devoting or giving up.

2. The ſtate, of being devoted.

It is a wonder, how his grace ſhould glean it;
Since his addiction was, to courſes vain;
His companies, unletter'd, rude, and ſhallow;
His hours, fill'd-up with riots, banquets, ſports.
Shakeſp.

A'DDITAMENT, ăd″-dȳ-tă-mĕnt′. n. ſ. [additamentum, Lat.] The addition, or thing added.

Iron will not incorporate with braſs, nor other metals, of itſelf, by ſimple fire; ſo as the enquiry muſt be upon the calcination, and the additament, and the charge of them. Bacon.

In a palace, there is firſt the caſe or fabrick, or moles of the ſtructure itſelf; and, beſides that, there are certain additaments, that contribute to its ornament and uſe; as, various furniture, rare fountains and aqueducts, divers things appendicated to it. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

ADDI'TION, ăd-dĭſh′-ſhŭn. n. ſ. [from add.]

1. The act, of adding one thing to another; oppoſed to diminution.

The infinite diſtance, between the Creator and the nobleſt of all creatures, can never be meaſured, nor exhauſted by endleſs addition of finite degrees. Bentley.

2. Additament, or the thing added.

It will not be modeſtly done, if any of our own wiſdom intrude or interpoſe, or be willing to make additions, to what Chriſt and his apoſtles have deſigned. Hammond.

Some ſuch reſemblances, methinks, I find
Of our laſt evening's talk, in this thy dream;
But, with addition ſtrange! Milton.

The aboliſhing of villanage, together with the cuſtom (permitted among the nobles) of ſelling their lands, was a mighty addition to the power of the commons. Swift.

3. In arithmetick.

Addition is the reduction of two or more numbers of like kind together into one ſum or total. Cocker's Arithmetick.

4. In law. A title given to a man, over and above his chriſtian name and ſurname; ſhewing his eſtate, degree, occupation, trade, age, place of dwelling. Cowell.

Only retain
The name, and all th' addition to a king;
The ſway, revenue, execution,
Beloved ſons, be yours; which to confirm,
This coronet part between you. Shakeſp. K. Lear.

From this time,
For what he did before Corioli, call him,
With all th' applauſe and clamour of the hoſt,
Caius Marcius Coriolanus. Bear th' addition nobly ever. Shakeſpeare's Coriolanus.

There aroſe new diſputes, upon the perſons named by the king; or rather, againſt the additions and appellations of title, which were made to their names. Clarendon.

Addi′tional, ȧd-dĭſh′-ſhȯ-nȧl. adj. [from addition.] That which is added.

Our kalendar being once reformed and ſet right, it may be kept ſo, without any conſiderable variation, for many ages, by omitting one leap-year; i. e. the additional day, at the end of every 134 years. Holder on Time.

The greateſt wits, that ever were produced in one age, lived together in ſo good an underſtanding, and celebrated one another with ſo much generoſity; that each of them receives an additional luſtre, from his cotemporaries. Addiſon.

They include in them that very kind of evidence, which is ſuppoſed to be powerful: and do (withal) afford us ſeveral other additional proofs, of great force and clearneſs. Atterbury.

Addi′tional, ȧd-dĭſh′-ſhȯ-nȧl. n. ſ. Additament; ſomething added. Not in uſe.

May be, ſome little additional may further the incorporation. Bacon.

A′dditory, ȧd′-dȳ-tŭr-rȳ. adj. [from add.] That, which has the power or quality of adding.

The additory fiction gives to a great man a larger ſhare of reputation, than belongs to him; to enable him, to ſerve ſome good end or purpoſe. Arbuthnot.

A′DDLE, ȧd′l. adj. [from adel, a diſeaſe, Sax. according to Skinner and Junius: perhaps from ydel, idle, barren, unfruitful.] Originally applied to eggs; and ſignifying ſuch, as produce nothing, but grow rotten under the hen: thence transferred to brains, that produce nothing.

There's one with truncheon, like a ladle;
That carries eggs too freſh or addle;
And ſtill at random, as he goes,
Among the rabble-rout beſtows. Hudibras.

After much ſolitarineſs, faſting, or long ſickneſs, their brains were addle; and their bellies as empty of meat, as their heads of wit. Burton on Melancholy.

Thus far the poet: but his brains grow addle;
And all the reſt is purely from this noddle. Dryd.

To A′ddle, ȧ-d′l. v. a. [from addle, adj.] To make addle; to corrupt; to make barren.

This is alſo evidenced in eggs, whereof the ſound ones ſink, and ſuch, as are addled, ſwim; as do alſo thoſe, that are termed hypanemiæ, or wind-eggs. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

To A′ddle, ȧd′l. v. n. To grow; to increaſe. Obſolete.

Where ivy embraceth the tree very ſore,
Kill ivy, elſe tree will addle no more. Tuſſer's Huſbandry.

A′ddle-pa′ted, ȧd′l-pȧ′-tĕd. adj. Having addled brains. See Addle.

Poor ſlaves in metre, dull and addle-pated;
Who rhyme, below even David's pſalms tranſlated. Dryden.

To ADDRE′SS, ȧd-drĕſs′. v. a. [addreſſer, Fr. from dereçar, Span. from dirigo, directum, Lat.]

1. To prepare one's ſelf, to enter upon any action; as, he addreſſed himſelf to the work. It has to, before the thing.

With him the Palmer eke, in habit ſad,
Himſelf addreſt to that adventure hard. Fairy Queen.

It lifted up its head, and did addreſs
Itſelf to motion, like as it would ſpeak. Shakeſp. Hamlet.

Then Turnus, from his chariot leaping light,
Addreſs'd himſelf on foot to ſingle fight. Dryden.

2. To get ready; to put in a ſtate, for immediate uſe.

They fell directly on the Engliſh battle; whereupon the earl of Warwick addreſſed his men, to take the flank. Hayward.

Duke Frederick hearing, how that every day
Men of great worth reſorted to this foreſt,
Addreſs'd a mighty power, which were on foot,
In his own conduct purpoſely to take
His brother here. Shakeſpeare, As you like it.

To-night in Harfleur we will be your gueſt;
To-morrow for the march we are addreſt. Shakeſp.

3. To apply to another by words, with various forms of conſtruction.

4. Sometimes without a prepoſition.

To ſuch I would addreſs, with this moſt affectionate petition. Decay of Piety.

Among the crowd, but far above the reſt,
Young Turnus to the beauteous maid addreſt. Dryden.

Are not your orders to addreſs the ſenate? Addiſon.

5. Sometimes with to.

Addreſſing to Pollio, his great patron, and himſelf no vulgar poet, he began to aſſert his native character, which is ſublimity. Dryden.

6. Sometimes with the reciprocal pronoun; as, he addreſſed himſelf to the general.

7. Sometimes with the accuſative of the matter of the addreſs, which may be the nominative to the paſſive.

The young hero had addreſſed his prayers to him for his aſſiſtance. Dryden.

The prince himſelf, with awful dread poſſeſs'd,
His vows to great Apollo thus addreſt. Dryden.

His ſuit was common; but, above the reſt,
To both the brother-princes thus addreſt. Dryden.

8. To addreſs [in law] is, to apply to the king in form.

The repreſentatives of the nation in parliament, and the privy-council, addreſs'd the king, to have it recalled. Swift.

Addre′ss, ȧd-drĕſs. n. ſ. [addreſſe, Fr.]

1. Verbal application to any one, by way of perſuaſion; petition.

Henry, in knots involving Emma's name,
Had half-confeſs'd and half-conceal'd his flame,
Upon this tree: and, as the tender mark
Grew with the year, and widen'd with the bark,
Venus had heard the virgin's ſoft addreſs;
That, as the wound, the paſſion might increaſe. Prior.

Moſt of the perſons, to whom theſe addreſſes are made, are not wiſe and ſkilful judges; but are influenced, by their own ſinful appetites and paſſions. Watts's Improvement of the Mind.

2. Courtſhip.

They often have reveal'd their paſſion to me:
But, tell me, whoſe addreſs thou favour'ſt moſt;
I long to know, and yet I dread to hear it. Addiſon.

A gentleman, whom (I am ſure) you yourſelf would have approved, made his addreſſes to me. Addiſon.

3. Manner of addreſſing another; as, we ſay, a man of an happy or a pleaſing addreſs; a man of an awkward addreſs.

4. Skill, dexterity.

I could produce innumerable inſtances from my own obſervation, of events imputed to the profound ſkill and addreſs of a miniſter; which, in reality, were either mere effects of negligence, weakneſs, humour, paſſion, or pride; or at beſt, but the natural courſe of things, left to themſelves. Swift.

5. Manner of directing a letter; a ſenſe chiefly mercantile.

Addre′sser, ȧd-drĕs′-ſŭr. n. ſ. [from addreſs.] The perſon, that addreſſes or petitions.

Addu′cent, ȧd-dŭ-ſĕnt. adj. [adducens, Lat.] A word applied to thoſe muſcles, that bring forward, cloſe, or draw together, the parts of the body, to which they are annexed. Quincy.

To Addu′lce, ȧd-dŭl′ſe. v. a. [addoucir, Fr. dulcis, Lat.] To ſweeten; a word, not in uſe now.

Thus did the French embaſſadors, with great ſhow of their king's affection, and many ſugared words, ſeek to addulce all matters between the two kings. Bacon's Henry VII.

A′deling, ȧ′-dĕl-ĭng. n. ſ. [from æðel, Sax. illuſtrious.] A word of honour among the Angles, properly appertaining to the king's children: king Edward the Confeſſor, being without iſſue, and intending to make Edgar his heir, called him Adeling. Cowell.

Adeno′graphy, ȧd-dē-nŏg′-grȧ-fȳ. n. ſ. [from ἀδὴν a gland, and γράφω to write, Gr.] A treatiſe of the glands.

Ade′mption, ȧ-dĕmp′-ſhŭn. n. ſ. [adimo, ademptum, Lat.] Taking away; privation. Dict.

Ade′pt, ȧ-dĕp′t. n. ſ. [from adeptus, Lat. that is, adeptus artem.] He, that is completely ſkilled in all the ſecrets of his art. It is, in its original ſignification, appropriated to the chymiſts; but is now extended, to other artiſts.

The preſervation of chaſtity is eaſy to true adepts. Pope.

Ade′pt, ȧ-dĕp′t. adj. Skilful; throughly verſed.

If there be really ſuch adept philoſophers, as we are told of; I am apt to think that, among their arcana, they are maſters of extremely potent menſtruums. Boyle.

A′dequate, ȧd′-ē-qwȧt. adj. [adequatus, Lat.] Equal to; proportionate; correſpondent to, ſo as to bear an exact reſemblance or proportion. It is uſed generally in a figurative ſenſe, and often with the particle to.

Contingent death ſeems to be the whole adequate object of popular courage; but a neceſſary and unavoidable coffin ſtrikes paleneſs into the ſtouteſt heart. Harvey on Conſumptions.

The arguments were proper, adequate, and ſufficient to compaſs their reſpective ends. South.

All our ſimple ideas are adequate; becauſe, being nothing but the effects of certain powers in things, fitted and ordained by God to produce ſuch ſenſations in us, they cannot but be correſpondent and adequate to thoſe powers. Locke.

Thoſe are adequate ideas, which perfectly repreſent their archetypes or objects. Inadequate are but a partial or incomplete repreſentation of thoſe archetypes, to which they are referred. Watts's Logick.

A′dequately, ȧd′-ē-kwȧt-lȳ. adv. [from adequate.]

1. In an adequate manner; with juſtneſs of repreſentation; with exactneſs of proportion.

Gratitude conſiſts adequately, in theſe two things: firſt, that it is a debt; and, ſecondly, that it is ſuch a debt, as is left to every man's ingenuity, whether he will pay or no. South.

2. It is uſed with the particle to.

Piety is the neceſſary Chriſtian virtue, proportioned adequately to the omniſcience and ſpirituality of that infinite Deity. Hammond's Fundamentals.

A′dequateness, ȧd′-ē-kwȧt-nĕſs. n. ſ. [from adequate.] The ſtate of being adequate; juſtneſs of repreſentation; exactneſs of proportion.

Adespo′tick, ȧ′-dĕs-pŏt″-ĭk. adj. Not abſolute; not deſpotick. Dict.

To ADHE'RE, åd-hė're. v. n. [adhæreo, Lat.]

1. To ſtick to; as, wax to the finger; with to, before the thing.

2. To ſtick, in a figurative ſenſe; to be conſiſtent; to hold together.

Why every thing adheres together, that no dram of a ſcruple, no ſcruple of a ſcruple, no incredulous or unſafe circumſtance— Shakeſpeare's Twelfth Night.

3. To remain firmly fixed, to a party, perſon, or opinion.

Good gentlemen, he hath much talk'd of you;
And ſure I am, two men there are not living,
To whom he more adheres. Shakeſp. Hamlet.

Every man of ſenſe will agree with me, that ſingularity is laudable; when, in contradiction to a multitude, it adheres to the dictates of conſcience, morality, and honour. Boyle.

ADHE'RENCE, åd-hė'-rėnſe. n. ſ. [from adhere.] See ADHESION.

1. The quality of adhering or ſticking; tenacity.

2. In a figurative ſenſe, fixedneſs of mind; ſteadineſs; fidelity.

The firm adherence of the Jews to their religion is no leſs remarkable, than their diſperſion; conſidering it, as perſecuted or contemned over the whole earth. Addiſon.

A conſtant adherence to one ſort of diet may have bad effects on any conſtitution. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

Plain good ſenſe, and a firm adherence to the point, have proved more effectual, than thoſe arts, which are contemptuouſly called the ſpirit of negociating. Swift.

ADHE'RENCY, åd-hė'-rėn-ſỳ. n. ſ. [The ſame with adherence.]

1. Steady attachment.

2. That, which adheres.

Vices have a native adherency of vexation. Decay of Piety.

ADHE'RENT, åd-hė'-rėnt. adj. [from adhere.]

1. Sticking to.

Cloſe to the cliff, with both his hands he clung;
And ſtuck adherent, and ſuſpended hung. Pope.

2. United with.

Modes are ſaid to be inherent or adherent; that is, proper or improper. Adherent or improper modes ariſe, from the joining of ſome accidental ſubſtance to the chief ſubject, which yet may be ſeparated from it: ſo, when a bowl is wet, or a boy is clothed, theſe are adherent modes; for the water and the clothes are diſtinct ſubſtances, which adhere to the bowl, or to the boy. Watts's Logick.

ADHE'RENT, åd-hė'-rėnt. n. ſ. [from adhere.]

1. The perſon, that adheres; one, that ſupports the cauſe, or follows the fortune of another; a follower, a partiſan.

Princes muſt give protection to their ſubjects and adherents when worthy occaſion ſhall require it. Raleigh.

A new war muſt be undertaken, upon the advice of thoſe; who, with their partiſans and adherents, were to be the ſole gainers by it. Swift.

2. Any thing, outwardly belonging to a perſon.

When they cannot ſhake the main fort, they muſt try, if they can poſſeſs themſelves of the outworks; raiſe ſome prejudice againſt his diſcretion, his humour, his carriage, and his extrinſic adherents. Government of the Tongue.

ADHE'RER, åd-hė'-rŭr. n. ſ. [from adhere.] He, that adheres.

He ought to be indulgent to tender conſciences; but, at the ſame time, a firm adherer to the eſtabliſhed church. Swift.

ADHE'SION, åd-hė'-zhŭn. n. ſ. [adhæſio, Lat.]

1. The act or ſtate, of ſticking to ſomething. Adheſion is generally uſed, in the natural; and adherence, in the metaphorical ſenſe: as, the adheſion of iron to the magnet; and adherence of a client to his patron.

Why therefore may not the minute parts of other bodies, if they be conveniently ſhaped for adheſion, ſtick to one another as well, as ſtick to this ſpirit? Boyle.

The reſt (conſiſting wholly in the ſenſible configuration, as ſmooth and rough; or elſe more or leſs firm adheſion of the parts, as hard and ſoft, tough and brittle) are obvious. Locke.

——Prove, that all things (on occaſion)
Love union, and deſire adheſion. Prior.

2. It is ſometimes taken (like adherence) figuratively, for firmneſs in an opinion, or ſteadineſs in a practice.

The ſame want of ſincerity, the ſame adheſion to vice, and averſion from goodneſs, will be equally a reaſon for their rejecting any proof whatſoever. Atterbury.

ADHE'SIVE, åd-hė'-ſǐv. adj. [from adheſion.] Sticking; tenacious.

If ſlow, yet ſure, adheſive to the tract,
Hot-ſteaming up. Thomſon.

To ADHI'BIT, åd-hǐb'-bǐt. v. a. [adhibeo, Lat.] To apply; to make uſe of.

Salt, a neceſſary ingredient in all ſacrifices, was adhibited and required in this view only, as an emblem of purification. Preſident Forbes's Letter to a Biſhop.

ADHIBI'TION, åd-hỳ-bǐſh'-ſhŭn. n. ſ. [from adhibit.] Application; uſe. Dict.

ADJA'CENCY, åd-jå'-ſėn-ſỳ. n. ſ. [from adjaceo, Lat.]

1. The ſtate, of lying cloſe to another thing.

2. That, which is adjacent. See ADJACENT.

Becauſe the Cape hath ſea on both ſides near it, and other lands (remote as it were) equidiſtant from it; therefore, at that point, the needle is not diſtracted by the vicinity of adjacencies. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

ADJA'CENT, åd-jå'-ſėnt. adj. [adjacens, Lat.] Lying near or cloſe; bordering upon ſomething.

It may corrupt within itſelf, although no part of it iſſue into the body adjacent. Bacon.

Uniform pellucid mediums, ſuch as water, have no ſenſible reflection, but in their external ſuperficies, where they are adjacent to other mediums of a different denſity. Newton.

ADJA'CENT, åd-jå'-ſėnt. n. ſ. That, which lies next another.

The ſenſe of the author goes viſibly, in its own train; and the words, receiving a determined ſenſe from their companions and adjacents, will not conſent to give countenance and colour, to what muſt be ſupported at any rate. Locke.

ADIA'PHOROUS, å-dǐ-åf'-fô-rŭs. adj. [ἀδιάφορος, Gr.] Neutral; particularly uſed of ſome ſpirits and ſalts, which are neither of an acid or alkaline nature. Quincy.

Our adiaphorous ſpirit may be obtained, by diſtilling the liquor, that is afforded by woods and divers other bodies. Boyle.

ADIA'PHORY, å-dǐ-åf'-fô-rỳ. n. ſ. [ἀδιαφορία, Gr.] Neutrality; indifference.

To ADJE'CT, åd-jėct'. v. a. [adjicio, adjectum, Lat.] To add to; to put to another thing.

ADJE'CTION, åd-jėk'-ſhŭn. n. ſ. [adjectio, Lat.]

1. The act of adjecting or adding.

2. The thing, adjected or added.

That unto every pound of ſulphur, an adjection of one ounce of quickſilver; or unto every pound of petre, one ounce of ſal-ammoniac, will much intend the force, and conſequently the report, I find no verity. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

ADJECTI'TIOUS, åd-jėk-tǐſh'-ſhŭs. adj. [from adjection.] Added; thrown-in upon the reſt.

A'DJECTIVE, åd'-jėk-tǐv. n. ſ. [adjectivum, Lat.] A word added to a noun, to ſignify the addition or ſeparation of ſome quality, circumſtance, or manner of being; as, good, bad, are adjectives; becauſe, in ſpeech, they are applied to nouns, to modify their ſignification, or intimate the manner of exiſtence in the things ſignified thereby. Clarke's Latin Gram.

All the verſification of Claudian is included within the compaſs of four or five lines, perpetually cloſing his ſenſe at the end of a verſe; and that verſe commonly, which they call golden; or two ſubſtantives and two adjectives, with a verb betwixt them, to keep the peace. Dryden.

A'DJECTIVELY, åd'-jėk-tǐv-lỳ. adv. [from adjective.] After the manner of an adjective; a term of grammar.

ADIEU', å-dů'. adv. [from à Dieu, uſed elliptically for à Dieu je vous commende, uſed at the departure of friends.] The form of parting, originally importing a commendation to the Divine care; but now uſed, in a popular ſenſe, ſometimes to things inanimate; farewell!

Ne gave him leave, to bid that aged ſire
Adieu; but nimbly ran her wonted courſe. Fairy Queen.

Uſe a more ſpacious ceremony, to the noble lords; you reſtrained yourſelf, within the liſt of too cold an adieu: be more expreſſive to them. Shakeſpeare's All's well that ends well.

While now I take my laſt adieu,
Heave thou no ſigh, nor ſhed a tear;
Leſt yet my half-clos'd eye may view
On earth an object worth its care. Prior.

To ADJO'IN, åd-joi'n. v. a. [adjoindre, Fr. adjungo, Lat.]

1. To join to; to unite to; to put to.

As one, who long in populous city pent,
Forth iſſuing on a ſummer's morn to breathe
Among the pleaſant villages and farms
Adjoin'd, from each thing met conceives delight. Milton.

Corrections or improvements ſhould be as remarks adjoined, by way of note or commentary, in their proper places; and ſuperadded, to a regular treatiſe. Watts.

2. To faſten by a joint or juncture.

As a maſſy wheel,
Fixt on the ſummit of the higheſt mount,
To whoſe huge ſpoke ten thouſand leſſer things
Are mortis'd and adjoined. Shakeſpeare.

To ADJO'IN, åd-joi'n. v. n. To be contiguous to; to lie next, ſo as to have nothing between.

Th' adjoining fane, th' aſſembled Greeks expreſs'd,
And hunting of the Caledonian beaſt. Dryden.

In learning any thing, as little ſhould be propoſed to the mind at once, as is poſſible; and, that being underſtood and fully maſtered, proceed to the next adjoining, yet unknown, ſimple, unperplexed propoſition, belonging to the matter in hand, and tending to the clearing what is principally deſigned. Locke.

To ADJOU'RN, åd-jŭ'rn. v. a. [adjourner, Fr.]

1. To put off to another day, naming the time; a term uſed in juridical proceedings; as, of parliaments, or courts of juſtice.

The queen being abſent, 'tis needful fitneſs,
That we adjourn this court to further day. Shakeſpeare.

By the king's authority alone, and by his writs, they are aſſembled; and, by him alone, are they prorogued and diſſolved: but each houſe may adjourn itſelf. Bacon.

2. To put-off; to defer; to let ſtay to a future time.

Then, Jupiter, thou king of gods,
Why haſt thou thus adjourn'd
The graces for his merits due,
Being all to dolours turn'd. Shakeſp. Cymb.

Crown high the goblets with a chearful draught:
Enjoy the preſent hour, adjourn the future thought. Dryden.

The formation of animals being foreign to my purpoſe, I ſhall adjourn the conſideration of it to another occaſion. Woodward's Natural Hiſtory.

ADJO'URNMENT, ȁd-jŭrn'-mȅnt. n. ſ. [adjournement, Fr.]

1. An aſſignment of a day; or a putting off, till another day.

Adjournment in eyre, an appointment of a day, when the juſtices in eyre mean to ſit again. Cowell.

2. Delay; procraſtination; diſmiſſion to a future time.

We will, and we will not; and then we will not again, and we will. At this rate we run our lives out, in adjournments from time to time; out of a fantaſtical levity, that holds us off and on, betwixt hawk and buzzard. L'Eſtrange.

A'DIPOUS, ȁd'-dȳ-pŭs. adj. [adipoſus, Lat.] Fat. Dict.

A'DIT, ȁd'-ȉt. n. ſ. [aditus, Lat.] A paſſage, for the conveyance of water under ground; a paſſage under ground in general; a term among the minemen.

For conveying away the water, they ſtand in aid of ſundry devices; as, adits, pumps, and wheels, driven by a ſtream, and interchangeably filling and emptying two buckets. Carew.

The delfs would be ſo flown with waters (it being impoſſible, to make any adits or ſoughs to drain them) that no gins or machines could ſuffice, to lay and keep them dry. Ray.

ADI'TION, ȁd-ȉſh'-ſhŭn. n. ſ. [from adeo, aditum, Lat.] The act, of going to another. Dict.

To ADJU'DGE, ȁd-jŭdzh'. v. a. [adjudico, Lat.]

1. To give the thing controverted, to one of the parties, by a judicial ſentence; with the particle to, before the perſon.

The way of diſputing in the ſchools is, by inſiſting on one topical argument; by the ſucceſs of which, victory is adjudged to the opponent or defendant. Locke.

The great competitors for Rome,
Cæſar and Pompey, on Pharſalian plains;
Where ſtern Bellona, with one final ſtroke,
Adjudg'd the empire of this globe to one. Phillips.

2. To ſentence, or condemn to a puniſhment; with to before the thing.

But, though thou art adjudged to the death;
Yet I will favour thee, in what I can. Shakeſp.

3. Simply, to judge; to decree; to determine.

He adjudged him unworthy of his friendſhip, purpoſing ſharply to revenge the wrong he had received. Knolles.

ADJUDICA'TION, ȁd-jȍ-dȳ-kā'-ſhŭn. n. ſ. [adjudicatio, Lat.] The act of judging, or of granting ſomething to a litigant, by a judicial ſentence.

To ADJU'DICATE, ȁd-jȍ'-dȳ-kāte. v. a. [adjudico, Lat.] To adjudge; to give ſomething controverted to one of the litigants, by a ſentence or deciſion.

To A'DJUGATE, ȁd-jȍ'-gāte. v. a. [adjugo, Lat.] To yoke to; to join to another by a yoke. Dict.

A'DJUMENT, ȁd'-jȍ-mȅnt. n. ſ. [adjumentum, Lat.] Help; ſupport. Dict.

A'DJUNCT, ȁd'-jŭnkt. n. ſ. [adjunctum, Lat.]

1. Something adherent or united to another, though not eſſentially part of it.

Learning is but an adjunct to ourſelf;
And, where we are, our learning likewiſe is. Shak.

But I make haſte, to conſider you as abſtracted from a court; which (if you will give me leave to uſe a term of logick) is only an adjunct, not a propriety, of happineſs. Dryden.

The talent of diſcretion, in its ſeveral adjuncts and circumſtances, is no where ſo ſerviceable as to the clergy. Swift.

2. A perſon joined to another. This ſenſe rarely occurs.

He made him the aſſociate of his heir-apparent, together with the lord Cottington (as an adjunct of ſingular experience and truſt) in foreign travels, and in a buſineſs of love. Wotton.

A'DJUNCT, ȁd'-jŭnkt. adj. United with; immediately conſequent.

So well, that what you bid me undertake,
Though that my death were adjunct to my act,
I'd do't. Shakeſp. King John.

ADJU'NCTION, ȁd-jŭnk'-ſhŭn. n. ſ. [adjunctio, Lat.]

1. The act, of adjoining or coupling together.
2. The thing joined.

ADJU'NCTIVE, ȁd-jŭnk'-tȉv. n. ſ. [adjunctivus, Lat.]

1. He, that joins.
2. That, which is joined.

ADJURA'TION, ȁd-jȍ-rā'-ſhŭn. n. ſ. [adjuratio, Lat.]

1. The act of adjuring, or propoſing an oath to another.
2. The form of oath, propoſed to another.

When theſe learned men ſaw ſickneſs and frenzy cured, the dead raiſed, the oracles put to ſilence, the dæmons and evil ſpirits forced to confeſs themſelves no gods, by perſons, who only made uſe of prayer and adjurations in the name of their crucified Saviour; how could they doubt of their Saviour's power, on the like occaſions? Addiſon on the Chriſtian Religion.

To ADJU'RE, ȁd-jȍ'r. v. a. [adjuro, Lat.] To impoſe an oath upon another, preſcribing the form in which he ſhall ſwear.

Thou know'ſt, the magiſtrates
And princes of my country came in perſon;
Solicited, commanded, threaten'd, urg'd,
Adjur'd by all the bonds of civil duty
And of religion; preſs'd, how juſt it was,
How honourable. Milton.

Ye lamps of heaven! (he ſaid, and lifted high
His hands now free) thou venerable ſky!
Ye ſacred altars, from whoſe flames I fled!
Be all of you adjured. Dryden.

To ADJU'ST, ȁd-jŭſt'. v. a. [adjuſter, Fr.]

1. To regulate; to put in order; to ſettle in the right form.

Your lordſhip removes all our difficulties, and ſupplies all our wants, faſter than the moſt viſionary projector can adjuſt his ſchemes. Swift.

2. To reduce to the true ſtate or ſtandard; to make accurate.

The names of mixed modes, for the moſt part, want ſtandards in nature, whereby men may rectify and adjuſt their ſignification; therefore they are very various and doubtful. Locke.

3. To make conformable. It requires the particle to, before the thing, to which the conformity is made.

As to the accompliſhment of this remarkable prophecy, whoever reads the account given by Joſephus, without knowing his character; and compares it, with what our Saviour foretold; would think, the hiſtorian had been a Chriſtian; and that he had nothing elſe in view, but to adjuſt the event to the prediction. Addiſon.

ADJU'STMENT, ȁd-jŭſt'-mȅnt. n. ſ. [adjuſtement, Fr.]

1. Regulation; the act of putting in method; ſettlement.

The farther and clearer adjuſtment of this affair, I am conſtrained to adjourn to the larger treatiſe. Woodward.

2. The ſtate, of being put in method, or regulated.

It is a vulgar idea we have of a watch or clock, when we conceive of it, as an inſtrument made to ſhew the hour: but it is a learned idea, which the watch-maker has of it; who knows all the ſeveral parts of it, together with the various connections and adjuſtments of each part. Watts's Logick.

A'DJUTANT, ȁd'-jȍ-tȁnt. n. ſ. A petty officer, whoſe duty is to aſſiſt the major, by diſtributing the pay, and overſeeing the puniſhment, of the common men.

To ADJU'TE, ȁd-jȍ't. v. a. [adjuvo, adjutum, Lat.] To help; to concur: a word not now in uſe.

For there be
Six bachelors as bold as he,
Adjuting to his company;
And each one hath his livery. Ben Jonſon's Underwoods.

ADJU'TOR, ȁd-jȍ'-tŭr. n. ſ. [adjutor, Lat.] A helper. Dict.

ADJU'TORY, ȁd'-jȍ-tŭr-rȳ. adj. [adjutorius, Lat.] That, which helps. Dict.

ADJU'TRIX, ȁd-jȍ'-trȉks. n. ſ. [Lat.] She, who helps. Dict.

A'DJUVANT, ȁd'-jȍ-vȁnt. adj. [adjuvans, Lat.] Helpful; uſeful. Dict.

To A'DJUVATE, ȁd'-jȍ-vāt. v. a. [adjuvo, Lat.] To help; to further; to put forward. Dict.

ADME'ASUREMENT, ȁd-mȅz'-zhŭr-mȅnt. n. ſ. [See MEASURE.] The adjuſtment of proportions; the act or practice of meaſuring according to rule.

Admeaſurement is a writ, which lieth for the bringing of thoſe to a mediocrity, that uſurp more than their part. It lieth in two caſes: one is termed admeaſurement of dower, where the widow of the deceaſed holdeth (from the heir or his guardian) more in the name of her dower, than belongeth to her: the other is admeaſurement of paſture, which lieth between thoſe, that have common of paſture appendant to their freehold, or common by vicinage; in caſe, any one of them (or more) do ſurcharge the common with more cattle, than they ought. Cowell.

In ſome counties they are not much acquainted, with admeaſurement by acre; and thereby the writs contain twice or thrice ſo many acres more, than the land hath. Bacon.

ADMENSURA'TION, ȁd-mȅn-ſhȍ'-rā-ſhŭn. n. ſ. [ad and menſura, Lat.] The act, or practice, of meaſuring out to each his part.

ADMI'NICLE, ȁd-mȉn'-ȉkl. n. ſ. [adminiculum, Lat.] Help; ſupport; furtherance. Dict.

ADMINI'CULAR, ȁd-mȳ-nȉk'-ū-lȁr. adj. [from adminiculum, Lat.] That, which gives help. Dict.

To ADMI'NISTER, ȁd-mȉn'-nȉs-tŭr. v. a. [adminiſtro, Lat.]

1. To give; to afford; to ſupply.

Let zephyrs bland
Adminiſter their tepid genial airs;
Naught fear he from the weſt, whoſe gentle warmth
Diſcloſes well the earth's all-teeming womb. Philips.

2. To act, as the miniſter or agent in any employment or office; generally, but not always, with ſome hint of ſubordination: as, to adminiſter the government.

For forms of government let fools conteſt;
Whate'er is beſt adminiſter'd, is beſt. Pope.

3. To adminiſter juſtice; to diſtribute right.

. To adminiſter the ſacraments, to diſpenſe them.

Have not they the old popiſh cuſtom of adminiſtering the bleſſed ſacrament of the holy euchariſt with wafer-cakes? Hooker.

. To adminiſter an oath; to propoſe or require an oath authoritatively; to tender an oath.

Swear by the duty that you owe to heav'n,
To keep the oath that we adminiſter. Shakeſpeare.

. To adminiſter phyſick; to give phyſick, as it is wanted.

I was carried on men's ſhoulders, adminiſtering phyſick and phlebotomy. Wafer's Voyage.

. To adminiſter to; to contribute; to bring ſupplies.

I muſt not omit, that there is a fountain riſing in the upper part of my garden, which forms a little wandering rill; and adminiſters to the pleaſure, as well as the plenty, of the place. Spectator.

. To perform the office of an adminiſtrator, in law. See Administrator.

Neal's order was never performed, becauſe the executors durſt not adminiſter. Arbuthnot and Pope.

To Admi'nistrate, åd-mìn'-nìs-tràte. v. a. [adminiſtro, Lat.] To exhibit; to give as phyſick. Not in uſe.

They have the ſame effects in medicine, when inwardly adminiſtrated to animal bodies. Woodward.

Administra'tion, åd-mìn-nìs-trà'-ſhùn. n. ſ. [adminiſtratio, Lat.]

. The act of adminiſtering or conducting any employment; as, the conducting the public affairs; diſpenſing the laws.

I then did uſe the perſon of your father;
The image of his power lay then in me:
And in th' adminiſtration of his law,
While I was buſy for the commonwealth,
Your highneſs pleaſed to forget my place. Shakeſpeare.

In the ſhort time of his adminiſtration, he ſhone ſo powerfully upon me; that, like the heat of a Ruſſian ſummer, he ripened the fruits of poetry in a cold climate. Dryden.

. The active or executive part of government.

It may paſs for a maxim in ſtate, that the adminiſtration cannot be placed in too few hands, nor the legiſlature in too many. Swift.

. Collectively; thoſe, to whom the care of public affairs is committed; as,

The adminiſtration has been oppoſed in parliament.

. Diſtribution; exhibition; diſpenſation.

There is, in ſacraments, to be obſerved their force, and their form of adminiſtration. Hooker.

By the univerſal adminiſtration of grace (begun by our bleſſed Saviour, enlarged by his apoſtles, carried on by their immediate ſucceſſors, and to be completed by the reſt to the world's end) all types, that darkened this faith, are enlightened. Sprat's Sermons.

Admi'nistrative, åd-mìn'-nìs-trà-tìv. adj. [from adminiſtrate.] That, which adminiſters; that, by which any one adminiſters.

Administra'tor, åd-mìn''-nìs-trà'-tùr. n. ſ. [adminiſtrator, Lat.]

. It is properly taken for him, that has the goods of a man dying inteſtate, committed to his charge by the ordinary; and is accountable for the ſame, whenever it ſhall pleaſe the ordinary to call upon him thereunto. Cowell.

He was wonderfully diligent to enquire and obſerve, what became of the king of Arragon, in holding the kingdom of Caſtille; and whether he did hold it in his own right, or as adminiſtrator to his daughter. Bacon's Henry VII.

. He, that officiates in divine rites.

I feel my conſcience bound to remember the death of Chriſt, with ſome ſociety of Chriſtians or other, ſince it is a moſt plain command; whether the perſon, who diſtributes theſe elements, be only an occaſional or a ſettled adminiſtrator. Watts.

3. He, that conducts the government.

The reſidence of the prince, or chief adminiſtrator of the civil power. Swift.

Admi'nistratrix, åd-mìn''-nìs-trà'-trìks. n. ſ. [Lat.] She, who adminiſters in conſequence of a will.

Administra'torship, åd-mìn'-nìs-trà''-tùr-ſhìp. n. ſ. [from adminiſtrator.] The office of adminiſtrator.

Admirabi'lity, åd'-mỳ-rà-bìl''-lỳ-tỳ. n. ſ. [admirabilis, Lat.] The quality or ſtate of being admirable. Dict.

A'dmirable, åd'-mỳ-ràbl. adj. [admirabilis, Lat.] To be admired; worthy of admiration; of power to excite wonder: always taken in a good ſenſe, and applied either to perſons or things.

The more power he hath to hurt, the more admirable is his praiſe, that he will not hurt. Sidney.

God was with them, in all their afflictions; and at length, by working their admirable deliverance, did teſtify that they ſerved him not in vain. Hooker.

What admirable things occur, in the remains of ſeveral other philoſophers! Short, I confeſs, of the rules of chriſtianity, but generally above the lives of chriſtians. South's Sermons.

You can at moſt
To an indiff'rent lover's praiſe pretend:
But you would ſpoil an admirable friend. Dryden.

A'dmirableness, åd''-mỳ-ràbl'-nèſs' n. ſ. [from admirable.] The quality of being admirable; the power of raiſing wonder.

A'dmirably, åd'-mỳ-ràb-lỳ. v. a. [from admirable.] So, as to raiſe wonder; in an admirable manner.

The theatre is the moſt ſpacious, of any I ever ſaw; and ſo admirably well contrived, that, from the very depth of the ſtage, the loweſt ſound may be heard diſtinctly to the fartheſt part of the audience, as in a whiſpering place; and yet, raiſe your voice as high as you pleaſe, there is nothing (like an echo) to cauſe the leaſt confuſion. Addiſon.

A'DMIRAL, åd'-mỳ-ràl. n. ſ. [amiral, Fr. of uncertain etymology.]

1. An officer or magiſtrate, that has the government of the king's navy, and the hearing and determining all cauſes (as well civil as criminal) belonging to the ſea. Cowell.

2. The chief commander of a fleet.

He alſo, in battle at ſea, overthrew Rodericus Rotundus, admiral of Spain; in which fight, the admiral with his ſon were both ſlain, and ſeven of his gallies taken. Knolles.

Make the ſea ſhine with gallantry, and all
The Engliſh youth flock to their admiral. Waller.

3. The ſhip, which carries the admiral or commander of the fleet.

The admiral galley, wherein the emperor himſelf was, by great miſchance ſtruck upon a ſand. Knolles.

A'dmiralship, åd''-mỳ-ràl-ſhìp'. n. ſ. [from admiral.] The office or power of an admiral.

A'dmiralty, åd'-mỳ-ràl-tỳ. n. ſ. [amiraulté, Fr.] The power or officers, appointed for the adminiſtration of naval affairs.

Admira'tion, åd-mỳ-rà'-ſhùn. n. ſ. [admiratio, Lat.]

1. Wonder; the act of admiring or wondering.

Indu'd with human voice and human ſenſe,
Reaſoning to admiration. Milton.

The paſſions always move, and therefore (conſequently) pleaſe: for, without motion, there can be no delight; which cannot be conſidered, but as an active paſſion. When we view thoſe elevated ideas of nature, the reſult of that view is admiration, which is always the cauſe of pleaſure. Dryden.

There is a pleaſure in admiration; and this is that, which properly cauſeth admiration; when we diſcover a great deal in an object, which we underſtand to be excellent; and yet we ſee (we know not how much) more beyond that, which our underſtandings cannot fully reach and comprehend. Tillotſon.

2. It is taken ſometimes in a bad ſenſe, though generally in a good.

Your boldneſs I with admiration ſee.
What hope had you, to gain a queen like me?
Becauſe a hero forc'd me once away,
Am I thought fit to be a ſecond prey? Dryden.

To ADMI'RE, åd-mì're. v. a. [admiro, Lat.] admirer, Fr.]

1. To regard with wonder: generally in a good ſenſe.

'Tis here, that knowledge wonders; and there is an admiration, that is not the daughter of ignorance. This indeed ſtupidly gazeth at the unwonted effect; but the philoſophic paſſion truly admires and adores the ſupreme efficient. Glanville.

2. It is ſometimes uſed, in more familiar ſpeech, for to regard with love.

3. It is uſed, but rarely, in an ill ſenſe.

You have diſplac'd the mirth, broke the good meeting,
With moſt admir'd diſorder. Shakeſp. Macbeth.

To Adm'ire, åd-mì're. v. n. To wonder; ſometimes with the particle at.

The eye is already ſo perfect, that I believe the reaſon of a man would eaſily have reſted here, and admir'd at his own contrivance. Ray on the Creation.

Admi'rer, åd-mì'-rùr. n. ſ. [from admire.]

1. The perſon, that wonders, or regards with admiration.

Neither Virgil nor Horace would have gained ſo great reputation, had they not been the friends and admirers of each other. Addiſon.

Who moſt, to ſhun or hate mankind, pretend;
Seek an admirer, or would fix a friend. Pope.

2. In common ſpeech, a lover.

Admi'ringly, åd-mì'-rìng-lỳ. adv. [from admire.] With admiration; in the manner of an admirer.

The king very lately ſpoke of him admiringly and mournfully. Shakeſp. All's well that ends well.

We may yet further admiringly obſerve, that men uſually give freelieſt, where they have not given before. Boyle.

Admi'ssible, åd-mìs'-sìbl. adj. [admitto, admiſſum, Lat.] That, which may be admitted.

Suppoſe that this ſuppoſition were admiſſible; yet this would not any way be inconſiſtent, with the eternity of the divine nature and eſſence. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

Admi'ssion, åd-mìs'-ſhùn. n. ſ. [admiſſio, Lat.]

1. The act or practice of admitting.

There was alſo enacted that charitable law, for the admiſſion of poor ſuitors without fee; whereby poor men became rather able to vex, than unable to ſue. Bacon's Henry VII.

By means of our ſolitary ſituation, and our rare admiſſion of ſtrangers, we know moſt part of the habitable world, and are ourſelves unknown. Bacon's New Atalantis.

2. The ſtate of being admitted.

My father ſaw you ill deſigns purſue;
And my admiſſion ſhew'd his fear of you. Dryden.

God did then exerciſe man's hopes with the expectations, of a better paradiſe, or a more intimate admiſſion to himſelf. South's Sermons.

Our king deſcends from Jove:
And hither are we come, by his command,
To crave admiſſion in your happy land. Dryden.

3. Admittance; the power of entering, or being admitted.

All ſprings have ſome degree of heat, none ever freezing, no not in the longeſt and ſevereſt froſts; eſpecially thoſe, where there is ſuch a ſite and diſpoſition of the ſtrata, as gives free and eaſy admiſſion to this heat. Woodward's Natural Hiſtory.

4. [In the eccleſiaſtical law.] It is, when the patron preſents a clerk to a church that is vacant; and the biſhop, upon examination, admits and allows of ſuch clerk to be fitly qualified, by ſaying, Admitto te habilem. Ayliffe's Parergon.

5. The allowance of an argument; the grant of a poſition not fully proved.

To ADMI'T, ad-mit'. v. a. [admitto, Lat.]

1. To ſuffer to enter; to grant entrance.

Mirth, admit me of thy crew. Milton.

Does not one table Bavius ſtill admit? Pope.

2. To ſuffer to enter upon an office; in which ſenſe the phraſe of admiſſion into a college, &c. is uſed.

The treaſurer found it no hard matter, ſo far to terrify him; that, for the king's ſervice, as was pretended, he admitted, for a ſix-clerk, a perſon recommended by him. Clarendon.

3. To allow an argument or poſition.

Suppoſe, no weapon can thy valour's pride
Subdue; that, by no force, thou may'ſt be won;
Admit, no ſteel can hurt or wound thy ſide;
And be it, heav'n hath thee ſuch favour done. Fairfax.

This argument is like to have the leſs effect on me, ſeeing I cannot eaſily admit the inference. Locke.

4. To allow or grant, in general; ſometimes with the particle of.

If you once admit of a latitude, that thoughts may be exalted, and images raiſed above the life; that leads you inſenſibly, from your own principles to mine. Dryden.

Admi'ttable, ad-mit'-tabl. adj. [from admit.] The perſon or thing, which may be admitted.

Becauſe they have not a bladder, like thoſe we obſerve in others, they have no gall at all, is a paralogiſm not admittable; a fallacy, that needs not the ſun to ſcatter it. Brown.

The clerk, who is preſented, ought to prove to the biſhop, that he is a deacon, and that he has orders; otherwiſe, the biſhop is not bound to admit him: for, as the law then ſtood, a deacon was admittable. Ayliffe's Parergon.

Admi'ttance, ad-mit'-tanſe. n. ſ. [from admit.]

1. The act of admitting; allowance or permiſſion to enter.

It cannot enter any man's conceit to think it lawful, that every man which liſteth ſhould take upon him charge in the church; and therefore a ſolemn admittance is of ſuch neceſſity, that, without it, there can be no church polity. Hooker.

As to the admittance of the weighty elaſtic parts of the air into the blood, through the coats of the veſſels; it ſeems contrary to experiments upon dead bodies. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

2. The power or right of entering.

What,
if I do line one of their hands?—'tis gold,
Which buys admittance. Shakeſpeare's Cymbeline.

Surely a daily expectation at the gate is the readieſt way, to gain admittance into the houſe. South's Sermons.

There's news from Bertran: he deſires
Admittance to the king; and cries aloud,
This day ſhall end our fears. Dryden.

There are ſome ideas, which have admittance only through one ſenſe, which is peculiarly adapted to receive them. Locke.

3. Cuſtom or prerogative, of being admitted to great perſons: a ſenſe now out of uſe.

Sir John, you are a gentleman of excellent breeding, of great admittance; authentick, in your place and perſon; generally allowed for your many warlike, courtlike, and learned preparations. Shakeſpeare.

4. Conceſſion of a poſition.

Nor could the Pythagorean give eaſy admittance thereto; for, holding that ſeparate ſouls ſucceſſively ſupplied other bodies, they could hardly allow the raiſing of ſouls from other worlds. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

To Admi'x, ad-miks. v. a. [admiſceo, Lat.] To mingle with ſomething elſe.

Admi'xtion, ad-miks'-tſhun. n. ſ. [from admix.] The union of one body with another, by mingling them.

All metals may be calcined, by ſtrong waters; or by admixtion of ſalt, ſulphur, and mercury. Bacon.

The elements are no where pure, in theſe lower regions; and, if there is any free from the admixtion of another, ſure it is above the concave of the moon. Glanville.

There is no way, to make a ſtrong and vigorous powder of ſaltpetre, without the admixtion of ſulphur. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

Admi'xture, ad-miks'-tſhur. n. ſ. [from admix.] The body, mingled with another; perhaps ſometimes the act of mingling.

Whatever acrimony or amaritude at any time redounds in it, muſt be derived from the admixture of another ſharp bitter ſubſtance. Harvey on Conſumptions.

A maſs, which to the eye appears to be nothing but mere ſimple earth, ſhall, to the ſmell or taſte, diſcover a plentiful admixture of ſulphur, alum, or ſome other mineral. Woodward's Natural Hiſtory.

To ADMO'NISH, ad-mon'-niſh. v. a. [admoneo, Lat.] To warn of a fault; to reprove gently; to counſel againſt wrong practices; to put in mind of a fault or a duty: with the particle of, or againſt; which latter is more rare: or the infinitive mood of a verb.

One of his cardinals, who better knew the intrigues of affairs, admoniſhed him againſt that unſkilful piece of ingenuity. Decay of Piety.

He of their wicked ways
Shall them admoniſh, and before them ſet
The paths of righteouſneſs. Milton.

But, when he was admoniſhed by his ſubject to deſcend, he came down, gently circling in the air and ſinging, to the ground. Dryden.

Admo'nisher, ad-mon'-niſh-ur. n. ſ. [from admoniſh.] The perſon, that admoniſhes, or puts another in mind of his faults or duty.

Horace was a mild admoniſher; a court-ſatiriſt, fit for the gentle times of Auguſtus. Dryden.

Admo'nishment, ad-mon'-niſh-ment. n. ſ. [from admoniſh.] Admonition; the notice, by which one is put in mind of faults or duties: a word not often uſed.

But yet be wary, in thy ſtudious care.—
—Thy grave admoniſhments prevail with me. Shakeſpeare's Henry V. p. 1.

To th' infinitely Good we owe
Immortal thanks; and his admoniſhment
Receive, with ſolemn purpoſe to obſerve
Immutably his ſovereign will, the end
Of what we are. Milton.

Admoni'tion, ad-mo-niſh'-un. n. ſ. [admonitio, Lat.] The hint of a fault or duty; counſel; gentle reproof.

They muſt give our teachers leave, for the ſaving of ſouls, to intermingle ſometimes with other more neceſſary things, admonition concerning theſe not unneceſſary. Hooker.

From this admonition they took only occaſion, to redouble their fault, and to ſleep again; ſo that, upon a ſecond and third admonition, they had nothing to plead for their unſeaſonable drowſineſs. South's Sermons.

Admoni'tioner, ad-mon-niſh'-un-ur. n. ſ. [from admonition.] A liberal diſpenſer of admonition; a general adviſer. A ludicrous term.

Albeit, the admonitioners did ſeem at firſt, to like no preſcript form of prayer at all; but thought it the beſt, that their miniſter ſhould always be left at liberty to pray, as his own diſcretion did ſerve; their defender, and his aſſociates, have ſithence propoſed to the world a form as themſelves did like. Hooker.

Admo'nitory, ad-mon''-ny-tur'-ry. adj. [admonitorius, Lat.] That, which admoniſhes.

The ſentence of reaſon is either mandatory, ſhewing what muſt be done; or elſe permiſſive, declaring only what may be done; or thirdly, admonitory, opening what is the moſt convenient for us to do. Hooker.

Admurmura'tion, ad-mur-mu-ra'-ſhun. n. ſ. [admurmuro, Lat.] The act of murmuring or whiſpering to another. Dict.

To Admo've, ad-move. v. a. [admoveo, Lat.] To bring one thing to another. A word not in uſe.

If, unto the powder of loadſtone or iron, we admove the north-pole of the loadſtone; the powders, or ſmall diviſions, will erect and conform themſelves thereto. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

Ado', a-do'. n. ſ. [from the verb to do, with a before it, as the French affaire, from à and faire.]

1. Trouble, difficulty.

He took Clitophon priſoner; whom, with much ado, he keepeth alive; the Helots being villainouſly cruel. Sidney.

They moved, and in the end perſuaded (with much ado) the people, to bind themſelves by ſolemn oath. Hooker.

He kept the borders and marches of the pale, with much ado; he held many parliaments, wherein ſundry laws were made. Sir John Davies.

With much ado, he partly kept awake;
Not ſuff'ring all his eyes, repoſe to take. Dryden.

2. Buſtle; tumult; buſineſs; ſometimes with the particle about.

Let's follow, to ſee the end of this ado. Shakeſp.

All this ado, about Adam's fatherhood and the greatneſs of its power, helps nothing to eſtabliſh the power of thoſe that govern. Locke.

3. It has a light and ludicrous ſenſe, implying more tumult and ſhow of buſineſs, than the affair is worth: in this ſenſe it is of late generally uſed.

I made no more ado, but took all their ſeven points in my target, thus. Shakeſp. Henry IV.

We'll keep no great ado:—a friend or two.—
It may be thought, we held him careleſsly,
Being our kinſman, if we revel much. Shakeſp.

Come, ſays Puſs, without any more ado, 'tis time to go to breakfaſt; cats don't live upon dialogues. L'Eſtrange.

Adole'scence, a-do-les'-ſenſe. } n. ſ. [adoleſcentia,
Adole'scency, a-do-les'-ſen-ſy. } Lat.] The age, ſucceeding childhood, and ſucceeded by puberty: more largely, that part of life, in which the body has not yet reached its full perfection.

He was ſo far from a boy, that he was a man born, and at his full ſtature; if we believe Joſephus, who places him in the laſt adoleſcency, and makes him twenty-five years old. Brown.

The ſons muſt have a tedious time of childhood and adoleſcency, before they can either themſelves aſſiſt their parents, or encourage them with new hopes of poſterity. Bentley.

To ADO'PT, à-dópt'. v. a. [adopto, Lat.]

1. To take a ſon by choice; to make him a ſon, who was not ſo by birth.

Were none of all my father's ſiſters left;
Nay, were I of my mother's kin bereft;
None, by an uncle's or a grandame's ſide;
Yet I could ſome adopted heir provide. Dryden.

2. To place any perſon or thing, in a nearer relation, than they have by nature, to ſomething elſe.

Whether, adopted to ſome neighb'ring ſtar,
Thou roll'ſt above us in thy wand'ring race;
Or, in proceſſion fix'd and regular,
Mov'd with the heav'ns majeſtic pace;
Or call'd to more celeſtial bliſs,
Thou tread'ſt with ſeraphims the vaſt abyſs. Dryd.

We are ſeldom at eaſe, from the ſolicitation of our natural or adopted deſires; but a conſtant ſucceſſion of uneaſineſſes (out of that ſtock, which natural wants or acquired habits have heaped-up) take the will in their turns. Locke.

ADO'PTEDLY, à-dóp'-têd-lŷ. adv. [from adopted.] After the manner of ſomething adopted.

Adoptedly, as ſchool-maids change their names,
By vain (though apt) affection. Shakeſpeare.

ADOP'TER, à-dóp'-tûr. n. ſ. [from adopt.] He, that gives ſome one by choice the rights of a ſon.

ADO'PTION, à-dóp'-ſhûn. n. ſ. [adoptio, Lat.]

1. The act of adopting, or taking to one's ſelf what is not native.

2. The ſtate of being adopted.

My bed ſhall be abuſed, my reputation gnawn at; and I ſhall not only receive this villainous wrong, but ſtand under the adoption of abominable terms; and by him, that does me the wrong. Shakeſpeare.

She purpos'd,
When ſhe had fitted you with her craft, to work
Her ſon into th' adoption of the crown. Shakeſpeare.

In every act of our Chriſtian worſhip, we are taught to call upon him under the endearing character of our Father, to remind us of our adoption; that we are made heirs of God, and joint-heirs of Chriſt. Rogers's Sermons.

ADO'PTIVE, à-dóp'-tîv. adj. [adoptivus, Lat.]

1. He, that is adopted by another, and made his ſon.

It is impoſſible, an elective monarch ſhould be ſo free and abſolute, as an hereditary; no more than it is poſſible for a father, to have ſo full power and intereſt in an adoptive ſon, as in a natural. Bacon.

2. He, that adopts another, and makes him his ſon.

An adopted ſon cannot cite his adoptive father into court, without his leave. Ayliffe's Parergon.

ADO'RABLE, à-dó'-râbl. adj. [adorable, Fr.] That, which ought to be adored; that, which is worthy of divine honours.

'On theſe two, the love of God and our neighbour, hang both the law and the prophets,' ſays the adorable Author of Chriſtianity; and the Apoſtle ſays, 'the end of the law is charity.' Cheyne.

ADO'RABLENESS, à-dó'-râbl-nêſs. n. ſ. [from adorable.] The quality of being adorable; worthineſs of divine honours.

ADO'RABLY, à-dó'-râ-blŷ. adv. [from adorable.] In a manner worthy of adoration.

ADORA'TION, âd-dô-râ'-ſhûn. n. ſ. [adoratio, Lat.]

1. The external homage, paid to the Divinity, diſtinct from mental reverence.

Solemn and ſerviceable worſhip we name, for diſtinction ſake, whatſoever belongeth to the church (or publick ſociety) of God, by way of external adoration. Hooker.

It is poſſible to ſuppoſe, that thoſe, who believe a ſupreme excellent Being, may yet give him no external adoration at all. Stilling fleet.

2. Homage, paid to perſons in high place or eſteem.

O ceremony! ſhew me but thy worth!
What is thy toll, O adoration!
Art thou naught elſe, but place, degree, and form,
Creating awe and fear in other men?
Wherein thou art leſs happy, being fear'd,
Than they in fearing.
What drink'ſt thou oft, inſtead of homage ſweet,
But poiſon'd flattery? Shakeſpeare's Henry V.

To ADO'RE, à-dó're. v. a. [adoro, Lat.]

1. To worſhip with external homage; to pay divine honours.

The mountain nymphs and Themis they adore,
And from her oracles relief implore. Dryden.

2. It is uſed popularly, to denote a high degree of reverence or regard; to reverence; to honour; to love.

The people appear adoring their prince, and their prince adoring God. Tatler, N° 57.

Make future times, thy equal act adore;
And be, what brave Oreſtes was before.
Pope's Odyſſey.

ADO'REMENT, à-dó're-mênt. n. ſ. [from adore.] Adoration; worſhip: a word ſcarcely uſed.

The prieſts of elder times deluded their apprehenſions, with ſooth-ſaying, and ſuch oblique idolatries; and won their credulities to the literal and downright adorement, of cats, lizards, and beetles. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

ADO'RER, à-dó'-rûr. n. ſ. [from adore.]

1. He, that adores; a worſhipper; a term, generally uſed in a low ſenſe; as, by lovers, or admirers.

Being ſo far provoked (as I was) in France, I would abate her nothing; though I profeſs myſelf her adorer, not her friend. Shakeſp. Cymbeline.

Whilſt as th' approaching pageant does appear,
And echoing crowds ſpeak mighty Venus near;
I, her adorer, too, devoutly ſtand,
Faſt on the utmoſt margin of the land. Prior.

2. A worſhipper: in a ſerious ſenſe.

He was ſo ſevere an adorer of truth, as not to diſſemble; or to ſuffer any man to think, that he would do any thing, which he reſolved not to do. Clarendon.

To ADO'RN, à-dâ'rn. v. a. [adorno, Lat.]

1. To dreſs; to deck the perſon with ornaments.

He hath clothed me, with the garments of ſalvation; he hath covered me, with the robe of righteouſneſs; as a bridegroom decketh himſelf with ornaments, and as a bride adorneth herſelf with her jewels. Iſa. lxi. 10.

Yet 'tis not to adorn and gild each part,
That ſhews more coſt than art;
Jewels, at noſe and lips, but ill appear. Cowley.

2. To ſet-out any place or thing, with decorations.

A gallery, adorned with the pictures or ſtatues of the invention of things uſeful to human life. Cowley.

3. To embelliſh with oratory, or elegance of language.

This will ſupply men's tongues, with many new things; to be named, adorned, and deſcribed, in their diſcourſe. Sprat.

Thouſands there are, in darker fame that dwell,
Whoſe names ſome nobler poem ſhall adorn;
For, tho' unknown to me, they ſure fought well.
Dryden.

ADO'RN, à-dâ'rn. adj. [from the verb.] Adorned; decorated: a word, peculiar to Milton.

She'll to realities yield all her ſhows;
Made ſo adorn, for thy delight the more. Milton.

ADO'RNMENT, à-dâ'rn-mênt. n. ſ. [from adorn.] Ornament; embelliſhment; elegance: not now in uſe.

This attribute was not given to the earth, while it was confuſed; nor to the heavens, before they had motion and adornment.
Raleigh's Hiſtory of the World.

She held the very garment of Poſthumus in more reſpect, than my noble and natural perſon, together with the adornment of my qualities.
Shakeſp. Cymbeline.

ADO'WN, à-dow'n. adv. [from a and down.] Down; on the ground.

Thrice did ſhe ſink adown, in deadly ſound;
And thrice he her reviv'd, with buſy pain.
Fairy Queen.

ADO'WN, à-dow'n. prep. Down; towards the ground; from a higher ſituation, towards a lower.

In this remembrance, Emily ere day
Aroſe, and dreſs'd herſelf in rich array;
Freſh as the month, and as the morning fair:
Adown her ſhoulders fell her length of hair. Dryd.

ADRE'AD, à-drêd'. adv. [from a and dread; as, aſide, athirſt, aſleep.] In a ſtate of fear; frighted; terrified: now obſolete.

And thinking, to make all men adread to ſuch a one; an enemy, who would not ſpare nor fear, to kill ſo great a prince. Sidney.

ADRI'FT, à-drîft. adv. [from a and drift, from drive.] Floating at random; as any impulſe may drive.

Then ſhall this mount
Of paradiſe, by might of waves, be moved
Out of his place; puſh'd by the horned flood
(With all his verdure ſpoil'd, and trees adrift)
Down the great river, to the opening gulf;
And there take root. Milton.

It ſeem'd a corps adrift, to diſtant ſight;
But, at a diſtance, who could judge aright? Dryd.

The cuſtom of frequent reflection will keep their minds, from running adrift; and call their thoughts home, from uſeleſs unattentive roving.
Locke on Education.

ADRO'IT, à-droit'. adj. [French.] Dextrous; active; ſkilful.

An adroit ſtout fellow would ſometimes deſtroy a whole family, with juſtice apparently againſt him the whole time. Jervas's Don Quixote.

ADROI'TNESS, à-droit'-nêſs. n. ſ. [from adroit.] Dexterity; readineſs; activity. Neither this word, nor adroit, ſeem yet completely naturalized.

ADRY', à-drŷ'. adv. [from a and dry.] Athirſt; thirſty; in want of drink.

He never told any of them, that he was his humble ſervant, but his well-wiſher; and would rather be thought a malecontent, than drink the king's health when he was not adry. Spectator.

ADSCITI'TIOUS, âd-ſŷ-tîſh'-ûs. adj. [adſcititious, Lat.] That, which is taken in, to complete ſomething elſe, though originally extrinſick; ſupplemental; additional.

ADSTRI'CTION, âd-ſtrîk'-ſhûn. n. ſ. [adſtrictio, Lat.] The act of binding together; and applied generally, to medicaments and applications, which have the power of making the part contract.

To ADVA'NCE, âd-vân'ſe. v. a. [avancer, Fr.]

1. To bring forward, in the local ſenſe.

Now morn, her roſy ſteps in th' eaſtern clime
Advancing, ſow'd the earth with orient pearl. Milt.

2. To raiſe to preferment; to aggrandize.

He hath been ever conſtant, in his courſe of advancing me: from a private gentlewoman, he made me a marchioneſs; and from a marchioneſs, a queen; and now he intends to crown my innocency, with the glory of martyrdom. Bacon.

The declaration of the greatneſs of Mordecai, whereunto the king advanced him. Eſther, x. 2.

3. To improve.

What laws can be adviſed more proper and effectual, to advance the nature of man to its higheſt perfection, than theſe precepts of Chriſtianity? Tillotſon.

4. To heighten; to grace; to give luſtre to.

As the calling dignifies the man, ſo the man much more advances his calling. As a garment, though it warms the body, has a return with an advantage, being much more warmed by it. South's Sermons.

5. To forward; to accelerate.

Theſe three laſt were ſlower, than the ordinary Indian wheat of itſelf; and this culture did rather retard than advance. Bacon.

6. To propoſe; to offer to the publick; to bring to view or notice.

Phedon I hight, quoth he; and to advance
My anceſtry from famous Coradin. Fairy Queen.

I dare not advance my opinion, againſt the judgment of ſo great an author; but I think it fair, to leave the deciſion to the publick. Dryden.

Some ne'er advance a judgment of their own,
But catch the ſpreading notion of the town. Pope.

To ADVA'NCE, ȧd-vȧn'se. v. n.

1. To come forward.

At this the youth, whoſe vent'rous ſoul
No fears of magick art controul,
Advanc'd in open ſight. Parnel.

2. To make improvement.

They, who would advance in knowledge, and not deceive and ſwell themſelves with a little articulated air, ſhould not take words for real entities in nature, till they can frame clear and diſtinct ideas of thoſe entities. Locke.

ADVA'NCE, ȧd-vȧn'se. n. ſ. [from To advance.]

1. The act of coming forward.

All the foot were put into Abington, with a reſolution to quit or defend the town, according to the manner of the enemy's advance towards it. Clarendon.

So, like the ſun's advance, your titles ſhew;
Which, as he riſes, does the warmer grow. Waller.

2. A tendency, to come forward to meet a lover; an act of invitation.

In vain are all the practis'd wiles,
In vain thoſe eyes would love impart;
Not all th' advances, all the ſmiles,
Can move one unrelenting heart. Walſh.

His genius was below
The ſkill of ev'ry common beau;
Who, though he cannot ſpell, is wiſe
Enough to read a lady's eyes;
And will each accidental glance
Interpret, for a kind advance. Swift.

He has deſcribed the unworthy paſſion of the goddeſs Calypſo, and the indecent advances ſhe made to detain him from his own country. Pope.

That prince applied himſelf, firſt to the Church of England; and, upon their refuſal to fall-in with his meaſures, made the like advances to the Diſſenters. Swift.

3. Gradual progreſſion; riſe, from one point to another.

Our Saviour raiſed the ruler's daughter, the widow's ſon, and Lazarus; the firſt of theſe, when ſhe had juſt expired; the ſecond, as he was carried to the grave on his bier; and the third, after he had been ſome time buried. And, having (by theſe gradual advances) manifeſted his divine power, he at laſt exerted the higheſt and moſt glorious degree of it; and raiſed himſelf alſo, by his own all-quickening virtue, and according to his own expreſs prediction. Atterbury.

Men of ſtudy and thought, that reaſon right, and are lovers of truth, do make no great advances in their diſcoveries of it. Locke.

4. Improvement; progreſs towards perfection.

The principle and object, of the greateſt importance (in the world) to the good of mankind, and for the advance and perfecting of human nature. Hale.

ADVA'NCEMENT, ȧd-vȧn'se-ment. n. ſ. [advancement, Fr.]

1. The act of coming forward.

This refinement makes daily advancements; and, I hope, in time will raiſe our language to the utmoſt perfection. Swift.

2. The ſtate of being advanced; preferment.

The Percies of the North,
Finding his uſurpation moſt unjuſt,
Endeavour'd my advancement to the throne. Shakeſp.

3. The act of advancing another.

In his own grace, he doth exalt himſelf
More, than in your advancement. Shakeſpeare's King Lear.

4. Improvement; promotion to a higher ſtate of excellence.

Nor can we conceive it unwelcome unto thoſe worthies, who endeavour the advancement of learning. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

5. Settlement on a wife. This ſenſe is now diſuſed.

The jointure or advancement of the lady was the third part of the principality of Wales. Bacon.

ADVA'NCER, ȧd-vȧn'-sũr. n. ſ. [from advance.] He, that advances any thing; a promoter; forwarder.

Soon after the death of a great officer, who was judged no advancer of the king's matters; the king ſaid to his ſolicitor, 'Tell me truly, what ſay you 'of your couſin that is gone?' Bacon.

The reporters are greater advancers of defamatory deſigns, than the very firſt contrivers. Government of the Tongue.

ADVA'NTAGE, ȧd-vȧn'-tȧdzh. n. ſ. [avantage, Fr.]

1. Superiority: often with of or over, before a perſon.

In the practical prudence of managing ſuch gifts, the laity may have ſome advantage over the clergy; whoſe experience is, and ought to be, leſs of this world than the other. Sprat.

All other ſorts and ſects of men would evidently have the advantage of us, and a much ſurer title to happineſs than we. Atterbury.

2. Superiority, gained by ſtratagem or unlawful means.

The common law hath left them this benefit, whereof they make advantage, and wreſt it to their bad purpoſes. Spenſer's State of Ireland.

But ſpecially he took advantage of the night, for ſuch privy attempts; inſomuch, that the bruit of his manlineſs was ſpread every where. 2 Macc. viii. 7.

Great malice, backed with a great intereſt, yet can have no advantage of a man; but from his own expectations of ſomething, that is without him. South's Sermons.

As ſoon, as he was got to Sicily, they ſent for him back; deſigning to take advantage, and proſecute him in the abſence of his friends. Swift.

3. Opportunity; convenience.

Give me advantage, of ſome brief diſcourſe
With Deſdemona alone. Shakeſ.

4. Favourable circumſtances.

Her beauty by the ſhade does get. Waller.

A face, which is over-fluſhed, appears to advantage in the deepeſt ſcarlet; and the darkeſt complexion is not a little alleviated, by a black hood. Addiſon.

True wit is nature, to advantage dreſs'd;
What oft was thought, but ne'er ſo well expreſs'd. Pope.

5. Superior excellence.

A man, born with ſuch advantage of conſtitution, that it adulterates not the images of his mind. Glanville.

6. Gain; profit.

For thou ſaidſt, 'What advantage will it be 'unto thee, and what profit ſhall I have, if I be 'cleanſed from my ſin?' Job.

Certain it is, that advantage now ſits in the room of conſcience; and ſteers all. South's Sermons.

7. Overplus; ſomething more, than the mere lawful gain.

We owe thee much: within this wall of fleſh,
There is a ſoul, counts thee her creditor;
And, with advantage, means to pay thy love. Shakeſp.

You ſaid, you neither lend nor borrow
Upon advantage. Shakeſp. Merch. of Venice.

8. Preponderation, on one ſide of the compariſon.

Much more ſhould the conſideration of this pattern arm us with patience, againſt ordinary calamities; eſpecially, if we conſider his example with this advantage; that though his ſufferings were wholly undeſerved, and not for himſelf but for us, yet he bore them patiently. Tillotſon.

To ADVA'NTAGE, ȧd-vȧn'-tȧdzh. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To benefit.

Convey, what I ſet down, to my lady; it ſhall advantage more, than ever the bearing of letter did. Shakeſp.

The trial hath endamag'd thee no way;
Rather more honour left, and more eſteem;
Me naught advantag'd, miſſing what I aim'd. Milton.

The great buſineſs of the ſenſes being, to make us take notice of what hurts or advantages the body; it is wiſely ordered by nature, that pain ſhould accompany the reception of ſeveral ideas. Locke.

We ſhould have purſued ſome other way, more effectual, for diſtreſſing the common enemy, and advantaging ourſelves. Swift.

2. To promote; to bring forward; to gain ground to.

The ſtoics (that opinioned, the ſouls of wiſe men dwelt about the moon, and thoſe of fools wandered about the earth) advantaged the conceit of this effect. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

To ennoble it with the ſpirit, that inſpires the Royal Society, were to advantage it in one of the beſt capacities, in which it is improveable. Glanville's Scepſis Scientifica.

ADVA'NTAGEABLE, ȧd-vȧn'-tȧ-jȧbl. adj. [from advantage.] Profitable; convenient; gainful.

As it is advantageable to a phyſician, to be called to the cure of a declining diſeaſe; ſo it is for a commander, to ſuppreſs a ſedition which has paſſed the height. Sir J. Hayward.

ADVA'NTAGED, ȧd-vȧn'-tȧ-jėd. adj. [from To advantage.] Poſſeſſed of advantages; commodiouſly ſituated or diſpoſed.

In the moſt advantaged tempers, this diſpoſition is but comparative; whereas the moſt of men labour under diſadvantages, which nothing can rid them of. Glanville.

ADVA'NTAGE-GROUND, ȧd-vȧn''-tȧje-grȯun'd. n. ſ. Ground, that gives ſuperiority, and opportunities of annoyance or reſiſtance.

This excellent man, who ſtood not upon the advantage-ground before; from the time of his promotion to the archbiſhoprick, provoked or underwent the envy, and reproach, and malice, of men of all qualities and conditions; who agreed in nothing elſe. Clarendon.

ADVANTA'GEOUS, ȧd-vȧn-tȧ'-jũs. adj. [avantageux, Fr.]

1. Of advantage; profitable; uſeful; opportune; convenient.

The time of ſickneſs or affliction is, like the cool of the day to Adam, a ſeaſon of peculiar propriety for the voice of God to be heard: and may be improved, into a very advantageous opportunity of begetting or increaſing ſpiritual life. Hammond.

Here perhaps
Some advantageous act may be achiev'd,
By ſudden onſet; either with hell-fire
To waſte his whole creation, or poſſeſs
All as our own. Milton.

2. It is uſed, with relation to perſons; and followed, by to.

Since every painter paints himſelf in his own works, 'tis advantageous to him to know himſelf; to the end, that he may cultivate thoſe talents, which make his genius. Dryden.

Advanta'geously, ȧd-vȧn-tȧ'-jůs-lẏ. adv. [from advantageous.] Conveniently; opportunely; profitably.

It was advantageouſly ſituated; there being an eaſy paſſage, from it to India, by ſea. Arbuthnot.

Advanta'geousness, ȧd-vȧn-tȧ'-jůs-nėſs. n. ſ. [from advantageous.] Quality of being advantageous; profitableneſs; uſefulneſs; convenience.

The laſt property, which qualifies God for the fitteſt object of our love, is the advantageouſneſs of his to us, both in the preſent and the future life. Boyle's Seraphic Love.

To ADVE'NE, ȧd-vė'ne. v. n. [advenio, Lat.] To accede to ſomething; to become part of ſomething elſe, without being eſſential; to be ſuperadded.

A cauſe, conſidered in judicature, is ſtiled an accidental cauſe; and the accidental of any act is ſaid to be, whatever advenes to the act itſelf already ſubſtantiated. Ayliffe's Parergon.

Adve'nient, ȧd-vė'-nyėnt. adj. [adveniens, Lat.] Advening; coming, from outward cauſes; ſuperadded.

Being thus divided from truth in themſelves, they are yet farther removed by advenient deception; for they are daily mocked into errour, by ſubtler deviſers. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

If, to ſuppoſe the ſoul a diſtinct ſubſtance from the body, and extrinſically advenient, be a great error in philoſophy; almoſt all the world hath been miſtaken. Glanville's Vanity of Dogmatiſm.

A'dvent, ȧd'-vėnt. n. ſ. [from adventus; that is, adventus Redemptoris.] The name of one of the holy ſeaſons, ſignifying the coming; that is, the coming of our Saviour: which is made the ſubject of our devotion, during the four weeks before Chriſtmas. Common Prayer.

Adve'ntine, ȧd-vėn'-tin. adj. [from advenio, adventum.] Adventitious; that, which is extrinſically added; that, which comes from outward cauſes: a word ſcarcely in uſe.

As for the peregrine heat, it is thus far true; that, if the proportion of the adventine heat be greatly predominant to the natural heat and ſpirits of the body, it tendeth to diſſolution or notable alteration. Bacon.

Adventi'tious, ȧd-vėn-tiſh'-ůs. adj. [adventitius, Lat.] That, which advenes; accidental; ſupervenient; extrinſically added, not eſſentially inherent.

Diſeaſes of continuance get an adventitious ſtrength from cuſtom, beſides their material cauſe from the humours. Bacon.

Though we may call the obvious colours natural, and the other adventitious; yet ſuch changes of colours, from whatſoever cauſe they proceed, may be properly taken-in. Boyle.

If his blood boil, and the adventitious fire
(Rais'd by high meats, and higher wines) require
To temper and allay the burning heat;
Waters are brought, which by decoction get
New coolneſs. Dryden.

In the gem-kind, of all the many ſorts reckoned-up by lapidaries, there are not above three or four that are original; their diverſities, as to luſtre, colour, and hardneſs, ariſing from the different admixture of other adventitious mineral matter. Woodward.

Adve'ntive, ȧd-vėn'-tiv. n. ſ. [from advenio, Lat.] The thing or perſon, that comes from without: a word not now in uſe.

That the natives be not ſo many, but that there may be elbow-room enough for them, and for the adventives alſo. Bacon.

Adve'ntual, ȧd-vėn'-tů-ȧl. adj. [from advent.] Relating to the ſeaſon of advent.

I do alſo daily uſe one other collect; as, namely, the collects adventual, quadrageſimal, paſchal, or pentecoſtal, for their proper ſeaſons. Biſhop Saunderſon.

ADVE'NTURE, ȧd-vėn'-tſhůr. n. ſ. [Fr.]

1. An accident; a chance; a hazard; an event, of which we have no direction.

The general ſummoned three caſtles: one, deſperate of ſuccour, and not deſirous to diſpute the defence, preſently yielded; but two ſtood upon their adventure. Hayward.

2. In this ſenſe is uſed the phraſe, at all adventures; [à l' adventure, Fr.] By chance; without any rational ſcheme.

Blows flew at all adventures; wounds and deaths, given and taken unexpected; many ſcarce knowing their enemies, from their friends. Hayward.

Where the mind does not perceive probable connection, there men's opinions are the effects of chance and hazard; of a mind, floating at all adventures, without choice and without direction. Locke.

3. The occaſion of caſual events; an enterpriſe, in which ſomething muſt be left to hazard.

For I muſt love, and am reſolv'd to try
My fate; or, failing in th' adventure, die. Dryden.

4. This noun, with all its derivatives, is frequently written without ad; as, venture, venturous.

To Adve'nture, ȧd-vėn'-tſhůr. v. n. [adventurer, Fr.]

1. To try the chance; to dare.

Be not angry,
Moſt mighty princeſs, that I have adventur'd
To try your taking of a falſe report. Shakeſpeare.

The tender and delicate woman among you, which would not adventure to ſet the ſole of her foot upon the ground, for delicateneſs and tenderneſs. Deuter. xxviii. 26.

To Adve'nture, ȧd-vėn'-tſhůr. v. a. To put into the power of chance.

For my father fought for you, and adventured his life far; and delivered you, out of the hand of Midian. Judges, ix. 17.

It is often uſed, with the reciprocal pronoun; as, he adventured himſelf.

Adve'nturer, ȧd-vėn'-tſhůr-ůr. n. ſ. [adventurier, Fr.] He, that ſeeks occaſions of hazard; he, that puts himſelf in the hands of chance.

He is a great adventurer, ſaid he,
That hath his ſword through hard aſſay foregone. Spenſer.

The kings of England did not make the conqueſt of Ireland: it was begun, by particular adventurers, and other voluntaries, who came to ſeek their fortunes. Sir J. Davies.

He intended, to hazard his own action; that ſo the more eaſily he might win adventurers, who elſe were like to be leſs forward. Raleigh.

Had it not been for the Britiſh, which the late wars drew over; and adventurers or ſoldiers, ſeated here; Ireland had, by the laſt war and plague, been left deſtitute. Temple.

Their wealthy trade from pirates' rapine free,
Our merchants ſhall no more advent'rers be. Dryden.

Adve'nturous, ȧd-vėn'-tſhůr-ůs. adj. [adventureux, Fr.]

1. He, that is inclined to adventures; and, conſequently, bold, daring, courageous.

At land and ſea, in many a doubtful fight,
Was never known a more advent'rous knight;
Who oftner drew his ſword, and always for the right. Dryden.

2. Applied to things: that, which is full of hazard; which requires courage; dangerous.

But I've already troubled you too long;
Nor dare attempt a more advent'rous ſong:
My humble verſe demands a ſofter theme;
A painted meadow, or a purling ſtream. Addiſon.

Adve'nturously, ȧd-vėn'-tſhů-růs-lẏ. adv. [from adventurous.] After an adventurous manner; boldly; daringly.

They are both hanged; and ſo would this be, if he durſt ſteal any thing adventurouſly. Shakeſpeare's Henry V.

Adve'nturesome, ȧd-vėn''-tſhůr-ſům'. adv. [from adventure.] The ſame, with adventurous: a low word, ſcarcely uſed in writing.

Adve'nturesomeness, ȧd-vėn''-tſhůr-ſům'-nėſs. n. ſ. [from adventureſome.] The quality of being adventureſome. Dict.

A'DVERB, ȧd'-vėrb. n. ſ. [adverbium, Lat.] A word, joined to a verb or adjective; and ſolely applied, to the uſe of qualifying and reſtraining the latitude of their ſignification, by the intimation of ſome circumſtance thereof; as, of quality, manner, degree. Clarke's Latin Grammar.

Thus we ſay, he runs ſwiftly; the bird flies aloft; he lives virtuouſly.

Adve'rbial, ȧd-vėr'-byȧl. adv. [adverbialis, Lat.] That, which has the quality or ſtructure of an adverb.

Adve'rbially, ȧd-vėr'-byȧl-lẏ. adv. [adverbialiter, Lat.] Like an adverb; in the manner of an adverb.

I ſhould think, alta was joined adverbially with tremit; did Virgil make uſe of ſo equivocal a ſyntax. Addiſon.

Adve'rsable, ȧd-vėr'-ſȧbl. adj. [from adverſe.] Contrary to; oppoſite to. Dict.

ADVERSA'RIA, ȧd-vėr'-ſȧ-rẏ. n. ſ [Lat. A book, as it ſhould ſeem, in which Debtor and Creditor were ſet in oppoſition.] A common-place; a book, to note in.

Theſe parchments are ſuppoſed to have been St. Paul's adverſaria. Bull's Sermons.

A'dversary, ȧd'-vėr-ſȧ-rẏ. n. ſ. [adverſaire, Fr. adverſarius, Lat.] An opponent; antagoniſt; enemy: generally applied to thoſe, that have verbal or judicial quarrels; as, controvertiſts or litigants: ſometimes, to an opponent in ſingle combat. It may ſometimes imply an open profeſſion of enmity; as we ſay, a ſecret enemy is worſe, than an open adverſary.

Yet am I noble, as the adverſary
I come to cope. Shakeſpeare's King Lear.

Thoſe rites and ceremonies of the church therefore (which are the ſelf-ſame now, that they were, when holy and virtuous men maintained them, againſt profane and deriding adverſaries) her own children have in deriſion. Hooker.

Mean while th' adverſary of God and man,
Satan, with thoughts inflam'd of higheſt deſign,
Puts on ſwift wings. Milton.

An adverſary makes a ſtricter ſearch into us, and diſcovers every flaw and imperfection in our tempers: a friend exaggerates a man's virtues; an enemy inflames his crimes. Addiſon.

Adve'rsative, ȧd-vėr'-ſȧ-tiv. adj. [adverſativus, Lat.] A term of grammar, applied to a word, which makes ſome oppoſition or variety; as, in this ſentence; This diamond is orient, but it is rough: But is an adverſative conjunction.

A'dverse, ȧd'-vėrſe. adj. [adverſus, Lat.]

In proſe, it has now the accent on the firſt ſyllable; in verſe, it is accented on the firſt by Shakeſpeare; on either, indifferently, rently, by Milton; on the laſt, by Dryden; on the firſt, by Roſcommon.

1. Acting with contrary directions; as, two bodies in colliſion.

Was I, for this, nigh wreckt upon the ſea;
And twice, by adverſe winds, from England's bank
Drove back again unto my native clime? Shakeſp.

As, when two polar winds, blowing adverſe,
Upon the Cronian ſea together drive
Mountains of ice. Milton.

With adverſe blaſt upturns them from the ſouth,
Notus and Afer. Milton.

A cloud of ſmoke envelopes either hoſt;
And, all at once, the combatants are loſt;
Darkling they join adverſe, and ſhock unſeen;
Courſers with courſers juſtling, men with men. Dryden.

2. Figuratively; contrary to the wiſh or deſire; thence, calamitous; afflictive; pernicious. It is oppoſed to proſperous.

What, if he hath decreed, that I ſhall firſt
Be try'd in humble ſtate, and things adverſe;
By tribulations, injuries, inſults,
Contempts, and ſcorns, and ſnares, and violence? Milton.

Some, the prevailing malice of the great
(Unhappy men!) or adverſe fate
Sunk deep, into the gulfs of an afflicted ſtate. Roſcommon.

3. Perſonally opponent; the perſon, that counteracts another, or conteſts any thing.

Well ſhe ſaw her father was grown her adverſe party; and yet her fortune ſuch, as ſhe muſt favour her rivals. Sidney.

Adve'rsity, ȧd-vĕr-ſy̆-ty̆. n. ſ. [adverſité, Fr.] Affliction; calamity; that is, oppoſition to our wiſhes.

1. The cauſe of our ſorrow; affliction; misfortune. In this ſenſe, it may have a plural.

Let me embrace theſe four adverſities;
For wiſe men ſay, it is the wiſeſt courſe. Shakeſpeare's Henry VI.

2. The ſtate of unhappineſs; miſery.

Concerning deliverance itſelf from all adverſity, we uſe not to ſay 'Men are in adverſity,' whenſoever they feel any ſmall hindrance of their welfare in this world; but, when ſome notable affliction or croſs, ſome great calamity or trouble, befalleth them. Hooker.

Sweet are the uſes of adverſity;
Which, like the toad, ugly and venomous,
Wears yet a precious jewel in his head. Shakeſpeare.

A remembrance of the good uſe he had made of proſperity, contributed to ſupport his mind under the heavy weight of adverſity, which then lay upon him. Atterbury.

A'dversely, ȧd'-vĕrs-ly̆. adv. [from adverſe.] In an adverſe manner; oppoſitely; unfortunately.

What I think, I utter, and ſpend my malice in my breath: if the drink you give me, touch my palate adverſely; I make a crooked face at it. Shakeſpeare.

To ADVE'RT, ȧd-vĕ'rt. n. v. [adverto, Lat.] To attend to; to regard; to obſerve: with the particle to, before the object of regard.

The mind of man being not capable, at once to advert to more than one thing; a particular view and examination of ſuch an innumerable number of vaſt bodies, will afford matter of admiration. Ray on the Creation.

Now to the univerſal whole advert:
The earth regard, as of that whole a part;
In which wide frame, more noble worlds abound;
Witneſs, ye glorious orbs, which hang around. Blackmore.

We ſometimes ſay, To advert the mind to an object.

Adve'rtence, ȧd-vĕr'-tĕnſe. n. ſ. [from advert.] Attention to; regard to; conſideration.

Chriſtianity may make Archimedes his challenge: give it, but where it may ſet its foot; allow, but a ſober advertence to its propoſals; and it will move the whole world. Decay of Piety.

Adve'rtency, ȧd-vĕr'-tĕn-ſy̆. n. ſ. [from advert.] The ſame with advertence. Attention; regard; heedfulneſs.

Too much advertency is not your talent; or elſe you had fled from that text, as from a rock. Swift.

Adve'rtent, ȧd-vĕr-tĕnt. adj. [from advert.] Attentive; vigilant; heedful.

This requires choice parts, great attention of mind, ſequeſtration from the importunity of ſecular employments, and a long advertent and deliberate connexion of conſequents. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

To ADVERTI'SE, ȧd-vĕr-tī'ze. v. a. [advertir, Fr. It is now ſpoken with the accent upon the laſt ſyllable; but appears, to have been anciently accented on the ſecond.]

1. To inform another; to give intelligence: with an accuſative, of the perſon informed.

The biſhop did require a reſpite,
Wherein he might the king his lord advertiſe,
Whether our daughter were legitimate. Shakeſpeare.

As I by friends am well advertiſed;
Sir Edmund Courtney, and the haughty prelate,
With many more confederates, are in arms. Shakeſ.

The king was not ſo ſhallow, nor ſo ill advertiſed, as not to perceive the intention of the French king. Bacon.

I hope, ye will advertiſe me fairly, of what they diſlike. Digby.

2. To inform; to give notice: with of, before the ſubject of information.

Ferhates, underſtanding that Solyman expected more aſſured advertiſement, unto the other Baſſas declared the death of the emperor; of which they advertiſed Solyman, firming thoſe letters with all their hands and ſeals. Knolles's Hiſtory of the Turks.

They were to advertiſe the chief hero, of the diſtreſſes of his ſubjects occaſioned by his abſence. Dryden.

3. To give notice of any thing, by means of an advertiſement in the public prints; as, He advertiſed his loſs.

Adverti'sement, or Adve'rtisement, ȧd vĕr'-tiz-mĕnt, or ȧd-vĕr-tī'ze-mĕnt. n. ſ. [advertiſſement, Fr.]

1. Inſtruction; admonition.

—'Tis all men's office, to ſpeak patience
To thoſe, that wring under the load of ſorrow;
But no man's virtue nor ſufficiency,
To be ſo moral, when he ſhall endure
The like himſelf: therefore give me no counſel;
My griefs are louder than advertiſement. Shakeſpeare's Much ado about Nothing.

Cyrus was once minded, to have put Crœſus to death; but, hearing him report the advertiſement of Solon, he ſpared his life. Abbot's Deſcription of the World.

2. Intelligence; information.

Then, as a cunning prince that uſeth ſpies,
If they return no news, doth nothing know;
But, if they make advertiſement of lies,
The prince's counſels all awry do go. Sir John Davies.

He had received advertiſement, that the party, which was ſent for his relief, had received ſome bruſh, which would much retard their march. Clarendon.

The drum and trumpet, by their ſeveral ſounds, ſerve for many kinds of advertiſements, in military affairs: the bells ſerve, to proclaim a ſcarefire; and, in ſome places, water-breaches; the departure of a man, woman, or child; time of divine ſervice; the hour of the day; day of the month. Holder.

3. Notice of any thing, publiſhed in a paper of intelligence.

Adverti'ser, ȧd-vĕr-tī'-zŭr. n. ſ. [advertiſeur, Fr.]

1. He, that gives intelligence or information.
2. The paper, in which advertiſements are publiſhed.

Adve'rtising, or Adverti'sing, ȧd-vĕr-tī'-zĭng. part. adj. [from advertiſe.] Active, in giving intelligence; monitory: a word, not now in uſe.

As I was then
Advertiſing, and holy to your buſineſs,
Not changing heart with habit; I am ſtill
Attornied at your ſervice. Shakeſp. Meaſ. for Meaſ.

To Adve'sperate, ȧd-vĕs'-pĕ-rāte. v. n. [adveſpero, Lat.] To draw towards evening. Dict.

Advi'ce, ȧd-vī'ſe. n. ſ. [avis, advis, Fr. from adviſo, low Lat.]

1. Counſel; inſtruction: except that, inſtruction implies ſuperiority, and advice may be given by equals or inferiors.

Break we our watch up; and, by my advice,
Let us impart, what we have ſeen to-night,
Unto young Hamlet. Shakeſp. Hamlet.

O trouble, weak and coward as thou art!
Without thy poor advice, the lab'ring heart
To worſe extremes with ſwifter ſteps would run;
Not ſav'd by virtue, yet by vice undone. Prior.

2. Reflection; prudent conſideration: as, he always acts, with good advice.

What he hath won, that he hath fortified:
So hot a ſpeed, with ſuch advice diſpos'd;
Such temperate order, in ſo fierce a courſe;
Doth want example. Shakeſp. King John.

3. Conſultation; deliberation: with the particle with.

Great princes, taking advice with workmen, with no leſs coſt ſet their things together. Bacon's Eſſays.

4. Intelligence: as, the merchants received advice of their loſs. This ſenſe is ſomewhat low, and chiefly commercial.

Advi'ce-bo'at, ȧd-vī'ſĕ-bōte. n. ſ. A veſſel, employed to bring intelligence.

Advi'sable, ȧd-vī'-zȧbl. adj. [from adviſe.] Prudent; fit to be adviſed.

Some judge it adviſable for a man, to account with his heart every day; and this, no doubt, is the beſt and ſureſt courſe: for ſtill, the oftner, the better. South's Sermons.

It is not adviſable to reward, where men have the tenderneſs not to puniſh. L'Eſtrange's Fables.

Advi'sableness, ȧd-vī'-zȧbl-nĕſs. n. ſ. [from adviſable.] The quality of being adviſable, or fit; fitneſs; propriety.

To ADVI'SE, ȧd-vī'ze. v. a. [adviſer, Fr.]

1. To counſel: with the particle to, before the thing adviſed.

If you do ſtir abroad, go arm'd.——
——Arm'd, brother!——
——Brother, I adviſe you to the beſt. Shakeſp. King Lear.

I would adviſe all gentlemen, to learn merchants accounts; and not to think it a ſkill, that belongs not to them. Locke.

When I conſider the ſcruples and cautions, I here lay in your way; methinks it looks, as if I adviſed you to ſomething, which I would have offered at, but in effect not done. Locke.

2. To give information; to inform; to make acquainted with any thing: often with the particle of, before the thing told.

You were adviſ'd, his fleſh was capable
Of wounds and ſcars; and that his forward ſpirit
Would lift him, where moſt trade of danger rang'd. Shakeſpeare.

Such diſcourſe bring on,
As may adviſe him of his happy ſtate;
Happineſs in his pow'r, left free to will. Par. Loſt.

A poſting meſſenger, diſpatch'd from hence,
Of this fair troop advis'd their aged prince.
Dryden's Æneid.

To ADVI'SE, ȁd-vī'ze. v. n.

1. To conſult: with the particle with, before the perſon conſulted; as, he adviſed with his companions.

2. To conſider; to deliberate.

Adviſe, if this be worth
Attempting; or to ſit in darkneſs here,
Hatching vain empires.
Milton's Par. Loſt, b. ii.

ADVI'SED, ȁd-vī'-zėd. participial adj. [from adviſe.]

1. Acting with deliberation and deſign; prudent; wiſe.

Let his travel appear, rather in his diſcourſe, than in his apparel or geſture; and, in his diſcourſe, let him be rather adviſed in his anſwers, than forward to tell ſtories. Bacon's Eſſays.

Th' Almighty Father, where he ſits
Shrin'd in his ſanctuary of heav'n ſecure,
Conſulting on the ſum of things foreſeen,
This tumult (and permitted all) advis'd.
Paradiſe Loſt, b. vi.

2. Performed with deliberation; done on purpoſe; acted with deſign.

By that, which we work naturally (as, when we breathe, ſleep, and move) we ſet forth the glory of God, as natural agents do; albeit we have no expreſs purpoſe, to make that our end; nor any adviſed determination, therein to follow a law. Hooker, b. i. p. 49.

In my ſchool-days, when I had loſt one ſhaft,
I ſhot his fellow of the ſelf-ſame flight,
The ſelf-ſame way, with more adviſed watch,
To find the other forth; by vent'ring both,
I oft found both. Shakeſp. Merch. of Venice.

ADVI'SEDLY, ȁd-vī'-zėd-lẏ. adv. [from adviſed.] Soberly; heedfully; deliberately; purpoſely; by deſign; prudently.

This book, adviſedly read and diligently followed but one year at home, would do more good, than three years travel abroad. Aſcham.

Surpriſe may be made by moving things, when the party is in haſte; and cannot ſtay, to conſider adviſedly of that which is moved. Bacon, Eſſay xxiii.

Thou ſtileſt ſecond thoughts (by all allowed the beſt) a relapſe; and accuſeſt conſtancy of miſchief, in what is natural, and adviſedly undertaken. Sir John Suckling.

ADVI'SEDNESS, ȁd-vī'-zėd-nėſs. n. ſ. [from adviſed.] Deliberation; cool and prudent procedure.

While things are in agitation, private men may modeſtly tender their thoughts to the conſideration of thoſe, that are in authority; to whoſe care it belongeth, in preſcribing concerning indifferent things, to proceed with all juſt adviſedneſs and moderation. Saunderſon's Judgment in one View.

ADVI'SEMENT, ȁd-vī'ze-mėnt. n. ſ. [adviſement, Fr.]

1. Counſel; information.

Mote I wote,
What ſtrange adventure do ye now purſue?
Perhaps my ſuccour, or adviſement meet,
Mote ſtead you much. Fairy Queen.

I will, according to your adviſement, declare the evils, which ſeem moſt hurtful.
Spenſer's State of Ireland.

2. It is taken likewiſe, in old writers, for prudence and circumſpection. It is now, in both ſenſes, antiquated.

ADVI'SER, ȁd-vī'-zůr. n. ſ. [from adviſe.] The perſon, that adviſes, or gives counſel; a counſellor.

Here, free from court compliances, he walks;
And with himſelf, his beſt adviſer, talks.
Waller.

They never fail of their moſt artful and indefatigable addreſs, to ſilence this impertinent adviſer, whoſe ſeverity awes their exceſſes.
Rogers's Sermons.

ADULA'TION, ȁd-dů-lȁ'-ſhůn. n. ſ. [adulation, Fr. adulatio, Lat.] Flattery; high compliment.

O be ſick, great Greatneſs!
And bid thy ceremony give thee cure.
Think'ſt thou, the fiery fever will go out
With titles blown from adulation? Shakeſp. Hen. V.

They, who flattered him moſt before, mentioned him now with the greateſt bitterneſs; without imputing the leaſt crime to him, committed ſince the time of that exalted adulation; or that was not then as much known to them, as it could be now. Clarendon.

ADULA'TOR, ȁd''-dů-lȁ'-tůr. n. ſ. [adulator, Lat.] A flatterer. Dict.

A'DULATORY, ȁd''-dů-lȁ-tůr'-rẏ. adj. [adulatorius, Lat.] Flattering; full of compliments.

ADU'LT, ȁ-důlt'. adj. [adultus, Lat.] Grown up; paſt the age of infancy and weakneſs.

They would appear leſs able to approve themſelves, not only to the confeſſor, but even to the catechiſt, in their adult age; than they were, in their minority; as having ſcarce ever thought of the principles of their religion, ſince they conned them to avoid correction. Decay of Piety

The earth (by theſe applauded ſchools 'tis ſaid)
This ſingle crop of men and women bred;
Who grown adult, ſo chance (it ſeems) enjoin'd,
Did, male and female, propagate their kind.
Blackmore.

ADU'LT, ȁ-důlt'. n. ſ. A perſon above the age of infancy, or grown to ſome degree of ſtrength; ſometimes, full grown: a word uſed chiefly by medicinal writers.

The depreſſion of the cranium, without a fracture, can but ſeldom occur; and then it happens to children, whoſe bones are more pliable and ſoft, than thoſe of adults. Sharp's Surgery.

ADU'LTNESS, ȁ-důlt'-nėſs. n. ſ. [from adult.] The ſtate of being adult. See ADOLESCENCE. Dict.

To ADU'LTER, ȁ-důl'-tůr. v. a. [adulterer, Fr. adultero; Lat.] To commit adultery with another: a word not claſſical.

His chaſte wife
He adulters ſtill: his thoughts lie with a whore.
Ben Jonſon.

ADU'LTERANT, ȁ-důl'-tė-rȁnt. n. ſ. [adulterans, Lat.] The perſon or thing, which adulterates.

To ADU'LTERATE, ȁ-důl'-tė-rȁte. v. a. [adulterer, Fr. adultero, Lat.]

1. To commit adultery.

But fortune (oh!)
Adulterates hourly with thine uncle John. Shakeſp.

2. To corrupt by ſome foreign admixture; to contaminate.

Common pot-aſhes, bought of them, that ſell it in ſhops; who are not ſo fooliſhly knaviſh, as to adulterate them with ſalt-petre, which is much dearer than pot-aſhes. Boyle.

Could a man be compoſed to ſuch an advantage of conſtitution, that it ſhould not at all adulterate the images of his mind; yet this ſecond nature would alter the craſis of his underſtanding.
Glanville's Scepſis Scientifica, c. xvi.

The preſent war has ſo adulterated our tongue, with ſtrange words; that it would be impoſſible for one of our great-grandfathers, to know what his poſterity has been doing. Spectator.

ADU'LTERATE, ȁd-ůl'-tė-rȁte. adj. [from To adulterate]

1. Tainted with the guilt of adultery.

I am poſſeſs'd with an adulterate blot:
My blood is mingled, with the grime of luſt;
Being ſtrumpeted, by thy contagion.
Shakeſp. Comedy of Errours.

——That inceſtuous, that adulterate beaſt.
Shakeſp.

2. Corrupted, with ſome foreign mixture.

It does indeed differ no more, than the maker of adulterate wares does from the vender of them.
Governm. of the Tongue.

They will have all their gold and ſilver; and may keep their adulterate copper at home.
Swift's Miſcellanies.

ADUL'TERATENESS, ȁ-důl''-tė-rȁte-nėſs. n. ſ. [from adulterate.] The quality or ſtate, of being adulterate or counterfeit.

ADULTERA'TION, ȁ-důl-tė-rȁ''-ſhun. n. ſ. [from adulterate.]

1. The act of adulterating or corrupting, by foreign mixture; contamination.

To make the compound paſs for the rich metal ſimple, is an adulteration or counterfeiting: but if it be done avowedly, and without diſguiſing, it may be a great ſaving of the richer metal.
Bacon's Natural Hiſtory, N° 798.

2. The ſtate, of being adulterated or contaminated.

Such tranſlations are like the adulteration of the nobleſt wines; where ſomething of the colour, ſpirit, and flavour, will remain. Felton on the Claſſics.

ADU'LTERER, ȁ-důl'-tė-růr. n. ſ. [adulter, Lat.] The perſon, guilty of adultery.

With what impatience muſt the muſe behold
The wife, by her procuring huſband ſold;
For, tho' the law makes null th' adulterer's deed
Of lands to her, the cuckold may ſucceed.
Dryd. Juvenal.

ADU'LTERESS, ȁ-důl'-tė-rėſs. n. ſ. [from adulterer.] A woman, that commits adultery.

The Spartan lady replied, when ſhe was aſked, What was the puniſhment for adultereſſes? There are no ſuch things here.
Government of the Tongue, § 3.

Helen's rich attire,
From Argos by the fam'd adult'reſs brought,
With golden flow'rs and winding foliage wrought.
Dryden's Virgil.

ADU'LTERINE, ȁ-důl'-tė-rīne. n. ſ. [adulterine, Fr. adulterinus, Lat.] A child, born of an adultereſs: a term of canon law.

ADU'LTEROUS, ȁ-důl'-tė-růs. adj. [adulter, Lat.] Guilty of adultery.

The adulterous Antony, moſt large
In his abominations, turns you off;
And gives his potent regiment to a trull,
That noſes it againſt us.
Shakeſp. Antony and Cleopatra.

An adulterous perſon is tied to reſtitution of the injury, ſo far as it is reparable; and to make proviſion for the children, that they may not injure the legitimate. Taylor.

Think, on whoſe faith th' adult'rous youth rely'd;
Who promis'd, who procur'd the Spartan bride?
Dryden's Æneid.

ADU'LTERY, ȁ-důl'-tė-rẏ. n. ſ. [adulterium, Lat.] The act, of violating the bed of a married perſon.

All thy domeſtic griefs at home be left,
The wife's adult'ry, with the ſervant's theft;
And (the moſt racking thought which can intrude)
Forget falſe friends, and their ingratitude.
Dryden's Juvenal.

ADU'MBRANT, ȁd-ům'-brȁnt. adj. [from adumbrate.] That, which gives a ſlight reſemblance.

To ADU'MBRATE, ȁd-ům'-brȁte. v. a. [from adumbro, Lat.] To ſhadow-out; to give a ſlight likeneſs; to exhibit a faint reſemblance, like that, which ſhadows afford of the bodies which they repreſent.

Heaven is deſigned for our reward, as well as reſcue; and therefore is adumbrated by all thoſe poſitive excellencies, which can endear or recommend. Decay of Piety.

ADUMBRA′TION, ăd-ŭm-brā′-shŭn. n. ſ. [from adumbrate.]

1. The act of adumbrating, or giving a ſlight and imperfect repreſentation. See ADUMBRATE.

To make ſome adumbration of that we mean; it is rather an impulſion or contuſion of the air, than an eliſion or ſection of the ſame. Bacon's Nat. Hiſt. Nº 187.

2. The ſlight and imperfect repreſentation of a thing; a faint ſketch.

The obſervers view but the backſide of the hangings; the right one is on the other ſide the grave: and our knowledge is, but like thoſe broken ends; at beſt, a moſt confuſed adumbration. Glanville's Scepſis Scientifica.

Thoſe of the firſt ſort have ſome adumbration of the rational nature, as vegetables have of the ſenſible. Hale's Origin.

ADUNA′TION, ăd-ū-nā′-shŭn. n. ſ. [from ad and unus, Lat.] The ſtate, of being united; union: a word of little uſe.

When by glaciation, wood, ſtraw, duſt, and water, are ſuppoſed to be united into one lump, the cold does not cauſe any real union or adunation; but, only hardening the aqueous parts of the liquor into ice, the other bodies (being accidentally preſent in that liquor) are frozen-up in it, but not really united. Boyle.

ADU′NCITY, ăd-ŭn′-ſy̆-ty̆. n. ſ. [aduncitas, Lat.] Crookedneſs; flexure inwards; hookedneſs.

There can be no queſtion, but the aduncity of the pounces and beaks of the hawks, is the cauſe of the great and habitual immorality of thoſe animals. Arbuthnot and Pope's Mart. Scrib.

ADU′NQUE, ā-dŭnk′. adj. [aduncus, Lat.] Crooked; bending inwards; hooked.

The birds, that are ſpeakers, are parrots, pies, jays, daws, and ravens; of which, parrots have an adunque bill, but the reſt not. Bacon's Nat. Hiſt. Nº 238.

A′DVOCACY, ăd′-vŏ-kă-ſy̆. n. ſ. [from advocate.] The act of pleading; vindication; defence; apology: a word in little uſe.

If any there are, who are of opinion, that there are no antipodes, or that the ſtars do fall; they ſhall not want herein the applauſe or advocacy of Satan. Brown's Vulgar Errours, b. i.

A′DVOCATE, ăd′-vŏ-kāte. n. ſ. [advocatus, Lat.]

1. He, that pleads the cauſe of another, in a court of judicature.

An advocate (in the general import of the word) is that perſon, who has the pleading and management of a judicial cauſe. In a ſtrict way of ſpeaking, only that perſon is ſtiled advocate, who is the patron of the cauſe; and is often, in Latin termed togatus, and in Engliſh a perſon of the long robe. Ayliffe's Parergon.

Learn, what thou ow'ſt thy country and thy friend;
What's requiſite to ſpare, and what to ſpend:
Learn this; and after, envy not the ſtore
Of the greas'd advocate, that grinds the poor.
Dryd. Perſius.

2. He, that pleads any cauſe, in whatever manner, as a controvertiſt or vindicator.

If ſhe dares truſt me with her little babe,
I'll ſhew 't the king; and undertake, to be
Her advocate to th' loudeſt. Shakeſp.

Of the ſeveral forms of government, that have been or are in the world; that cauſe ſeems commonly the better, that has the better advocate, or is advantaged by freſher experience. Temple's Miſcellanies.

3. It is uſed, with the particle for, before the perſon or thing, in whoſe favour the plea is offered.

Foes to all living worth, except your own;
And advocates, for folly dead and gone.
Pope's Epiſtles.

4. In the ſcriptural and ſacred ſenſe, it ſtands for one of the offices of our Redeemer.

Me, his advocate
And propitiation; all his works on me,
Good or not good, ingraft. Milton's Parad. Loſt.

ADVOCA′TION, ăd-vŏ-kā′-shŭn. n. ſ. [from advocate.] The office or act of pleading; plea; apology.

My advocation is not now in tune;
My lord is not my lord; nor ſhould I know him,
Were he in favour, as in humour, alter'd.
Shakeſp. Othello.

ADVOLA′TION, ăd-vŏ-lā′-shŭn. n. ſ. [advolo, advolatum, Lat.] The act, of flying to ſomething. Dict.

ADVOLU′TION, ăd-vŏ-lū′-ſhŭn. n. ſ. [advolutio, Lat.] The act, of rolling to ſomething.

ADVO′UTRY, ăd-vou′-try̆. n. ſ. [avoutrie, Fr.] Adultery.

He was the moſt perfidious man upon the earth; and he had made a marriage compounded, between an advoutry and a rape. Bacon's Henry VII.

ADVOWE′E, ăd-vow′-ȳ. n. ſ. He, that has the right of advowſon. See ADVOWSON.

ADVO′WSON, or ADVO′WZEN, ăd-vow′-zŭn. n. ſ. [In common law.] A right, to preſent to a benefice; and ſignifies as much, as Jus Patronatûs. In the canon law, it is ſo termed; becauſe they, that originally obtained the right of preſenting to any church, were great benefactors thereto; and are therefore termed ſometimes Patroni, ſometimes Advocati. Cowell.

To ADU′RE, ăd-ū′re. v. n. [aduro, Lat.] To burn-up: not in uſe.

Such a degree of heat, which doth neither melt nor ſcorch, doth mellow, and not adure. Bacon's Nat. Hiſt. Nº 319.

ADU′ST, ăd-ŭst′. adj. [aduſtus, Lat.]

1. Burnt-up; hot, as with fire; ſcorched.

By this means, the virtual heat of the water will enter; and ſuch a heat, as will not make the body aduſt, or fragile. Bacon.

Which with torrid heat,
And vapours (as the Libyan air) aduſt,
Began to parch that temperate clime.
Milton's Parad. Loſt.

2. It is generally now applied, in a medicinal or philoſophical ſenſe, to the complexion and humours of the body.

Such humours are aduſt, as by long heat become of a hot and fiery nature; as choler, and the like, Quincy.

To eaſe the ſoul of one oppreſſive weight,
This quits an empire, that embroils a ſtate.
The ſame aduſt complexion has impell'd
Charles to the convent, Philip to the field. Pope.

ADU′STED, ăd-ŭs′-tĕd. adj. [See ADUST.]

1. Burnt; ſcorched; dried with fire.

Sulphurous and nitrous foam
They found, they mingled; and, with ſubtle art
Concocted and aduſted, they reduc'd
To blackeſt grain, and into ſtore convey'd.
Paradiſe Loſt.

2. Hot, as the complexion.

They are but the fruits of aduſted choler, and the evaporations of a vindicative ſpirit. Howell.

ADU′STIBLE, ăd-ŭs′-tĭbl. adj. [from aduſt.] That, which may be aduſted or burnt-up. Dict.

ADU′STION, ăd-ŭs′-tshŭn. n. ſ. [from aduſt.] The act, of burning-up or drying, as by fire.

This is ordinarily a conſequent of a burning colliquative fever; the ſofter parts being melted away, the heat, continuing its aduſtion upon the drier and fleſhy parts, changes into a marcid fever. Harvey on Conſumptions.

ADZ, ădz′. n. ſ. See ADDICE.

AE, or Æ, ā. A diphthong, of very frequent uſe in the Latin language; which ſeems not, properly to have any place in the Engliſh; ſince the æ of the Saxons has been long out of uſe, being changed to e ſimple; to which, in words frequently occurring, the æ of the Romans is (in the ſame manner) altered; as in equator, equinoctial, and even in Eneas.

Æ′GLOGUE, ĕk′-lŏg. n. ſ. [written inſtead of eclogue, from a miſtaken etymology.] A paſtoral; a dialogue in verſe, between goat-herds.

Which moved him rather, in æglogues otherwiſe to write; doubting perhaps his ability, which he little needed; or minding to furniſh our tongue with this kind, wherein it faulteth. Spenſer's Paſtorals.

Æ′GILOPS, ē-jī′-lŏps. n. ſ. [αἰγίλωψ, Gr. ſignifying goat-eyed, the goat being ſubject to this ailment.] A tumour or ſwelling in the great corner of the eye, by the root of the noſe, either with or without an inflammation: alſo a plant ſo called, for its ſuppoſed virtues againſt ſuch a diſtemper. Quincy.

Ægilops is a tubercle, in the inner canthus of the eye. Wiſeman's Surgery.

ÆGYPTI′ACUM, ē-jĭp-tī′-ă-cŭm. n. ſ. An ointment, conſiſting only of honey, verdigreaſe, and vinegar. Quincy.

ÆL, or EAL, or AL; ēl, āl, āl. [in compound names, as πᾶν in the Greek compounds] ſignifies all, or altogether. So Ælwin is a complete conqueror: Albert, all illuſtrious: Aldred, altogether reverend: Alfred, altogether peaceful. To theſe Pammachius, Pancratius, Pamphilius, &c. do in ſome meaſure anſwer. Gibſon's Camden.

ÆLF, ĕlf′. [which, according to various dialects, is pronounced ulf, welph, hulph, hilp, helfe; and, at this day, helpe] implies aſſiſtance. So Ælfwin is victorious; and Ælfwold, an auxiliary governour; Ælfgiſa, a lender of aſſiſtance: with which Boetius, Symmachus, Epicurus, &c. bear a plain analogy. Gibſon's Camden.

ÆNI′GMA, ē-nĭg′-mā. See ENIGMA.

AE′RIAL, ā-ē′-ryăl. adj. [aërius, Lat.]

1. Belonging to the air, as conſiſting of it.

The thunder, whoſe to roll
With terrour through the dark aerial hall.
Paradiſe Loſt.

From all, that can with fins or feathers fly,
Thro' the aerial or the wat'ry ſky. Prior.

I gathered the thickneſs of the air, or aerial interval, of the glaſſes at that ring. Newton's Opticks.

Vegetables abound more with aerial particles, than animal ſubſtances. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

2. Produced by the air.

The gifts of heav'n my foll'wing ſong purſues;
Aerial honey, and ambroſial dews.
Dryd. Virg. Georg.

3. Inhabiting the air.

Where thoſe immortal ſhapes
Of bright aerial ſpirits live inſpher'd,
In regions mild of calm and ſerene air.
Paradiſe Regained.

Aerial animals may be ſubdivided into birds and flies. Locke.

4. Placed in the air.

Here ſubterranean works and cities ſee;
There towns aerial, on the waving tree.
Pope's Eſſay on Man.

5. High; elevated in ſituation, and therefore in the air.

A ſpacious city ſtood, with firmeſt walls
Sure mounded, and with numerous turrets crown'd,
Aerial ſpires and citadels, the ſeat
Of kings and heroes reſolute in war. Philips.

A′ERIE, āe′-ry̆. n. ſ. [airie, Fr.] The proper word (in hawks, and other birds of prey) prey) for that, which we generally call a neſt in other birds. Cowell.

AERO'LOGY, å'-ĕr-ŏl''-lŏ-jỷ. n. ſ. [ἀὴρ and λόγος, Gr.] The doctrine of the air.

A'EROMANCY, å'-ĕr-ŏ-măn''-ſỷ. n. ſ. [ἀὴρ and μάντις, Gr.] The art, of divining by the air. Dict.

AERO'METRY, å'-ĕr-ŏm''-mĕ-trỷ. n. ſ. [ἀὴρ and μετρέω, Gr.] The art, of meaſuring the air. Dict.

AERO'SCOPY, å'-ĕr-ŏs''-kŏ-pỷ. n. ſ. [ἀὴρ and σκέπτω, Gr.] The obſervation of the air. Dict.

Æ'THIOPS-MI'NERAL, ĕ''-thyŭps-mĭn'-nĕ-răl. n. ſ. A medicine, ſo called from its dark colour; prepared of quickſilver and ſulphur, ground together in a marble mortar to a black powder. Such, as have uſed it moſt, think its virtues not very great. Quincy.

ÆTI'TES, ē-tī'-tēz. n. ſ. [ἀετὸς, an eagle.] Eagle ſtone. It is about the bigneſs of a cheſtnut, and hollow; with ſomewhat in it, that rattles upon ſhaking. Quincy.

AFA'R, å-få'r. adv. [from a for at, and far.] See FAR.

1. At a great diſtance.

> So ſhaken, as we are, ſo wan with care;
> Find we a time for frighted peace, to pant,
> And breathe ſhort-winded accents of new broils,
> To be commenc'd in ſtrouds afar remote?
> Shakeſp. Henry IV.

We hear better, when we hold our breath than contrary; inſomuch as, in liſtening to attain a ſound afar off, men hold their breath. Bacon's Nat. Hiſt, Nº 284.

2. To or from a great diſtance.

> Hector haſtened to relieve his boy;
> Diſmiſs'd his burniſh'd helm that ſhone afar,
> The pride of warriours, and the pomp of war.
> Dryden.

3. From afar; from a diſtant place.

> The rough Vulturnus, furious in its courſe,
> With rapid ſtreams divides the fruitful grounds,
> And from afar in hollow murmur ſounds.
> Addiſon on Italy.

4. Afar off; remotely diſtant.

Much ſuſpecting his ſecret ends, he entertained a treaty of peace with France, but ſecretly and afar off, and to be governed as occaſions ſhould vary. Sir John Hayward.

AFE'ARD, å-fē'rd. participial adj. [from to fear, for to fright, with a redundant.]

1. Frighted; terrified; afraid.

> He loudly bray'd, that like was never heard;
> And from his wide-devouring oven ſent
> A flake of fire, that flaſhing in his beard,
> Him all amaz'd, and almoſt made afeard.
> Fairy Queen.

But tell me, Hal, art thou not horridly afeard? Thou being heir apparent, could the world pick thee out three ſuch enemies again. Shakeſp. Henry IV.

> Till he cheriſh too much beard,
> And make Love or me afeard.
> Ben Jonſon's Underwoods.

2. It has the particle of, before the object of fear.

Fear is deſcribed by Spenſer to ride in armour, at the claſhing whereof he looks afeard of himſelf. Peacham.

It is now obſolete; the laſt author, whom I have found uſing it, is Sedley.

A'FER, å'-fĕr. n. ſ. [Lat.] The ſouth-weſt wind.

> With adverſe blaſt upturns them from the ſouth,
> Notus and Afer, black with thund'rous clouds.
> Milton's Par. Loſt, b. x.

AFFABI'LITY, åf-få-bĭl''-lỷ-tỷ. n. ſ. [affabilité, Fr. affabilitas, Lat. See AFFABLE.] The quality, of being affable; eaſineſs of manners; courteouſneſs; civility; condeſcenſion. It is commonly uſed of ſuperiours.

> Hearing of her beauty and her wit,
> Her affability and baſhful modeſty,
> Her wond'rous qualities, and mild behaviour.
> Shakeſp.

He was of a moſt flowing courteſy and affability to all men; and ſo deſirous to oblige them, that he did not enough conſider the value of the obligation, or the merit of the perſon. Clarend.

All inſtances of charity, ſweetneſs of converſation, affability, admonition, all ſignifications of tenderneſs, care, and watchfulneſs, muſt be expreſſed towards children. Taylor.

It is impoſſible for a publick miniſter, to be ſo open and eaſy to all his old friends, as he was in his private condition: but this may be helped out, by an affability of addreſs. L'Eſtrange.

A'FFABLE, åf'-fåbl. adj. [affable, Fr. affabilis, Lat.]

1. Eaſy of manners; accoſtable; courteous; complaiſant. It is uſed of ſuperiours.

He was affable, and both well and fair ſpoken; and would uſe ſtrange ſweetneſs and blandiſhment of words, where he deſired to affect or perſuade any thing, that he took to heart. Bacon.

> Her father is
> An affable and courteous gentleman.
> Shakeſp. Tam. Shrew.

> Gentle to me and affable hath been
> Thy condeſcenſion, and ſhall be honour'd ever
> With grateful memory. Milton's Par. Loſt, b. viii.

2. It is applied, to the external appearance; benign; mild; favourable.

Auguſtus appeared, looking round him with a ſerene and affable countenance upon all the writers of his age. Tatler.

A'FFABLENESS, åf''-fåbl-nĕſs'. n. ſ. [from affable.] Courteſy; affability.

A'FFABLY, åf'-få-blỷ. adv. [from affable.] In an affable manner; courteouſly; civilly.

AFFABULA'TION, åf'-făb-ŭ-lå''-ſhŭn. n. ſ. [affabulatio, Lat.] The moral of a fable. Dict.

AFFA'IR, åf-få'r. n. ſ. [affaire, Fr.] Buſineſs; ſomething to be managed or tranſacted. It is uſed, for both private and public matters.

> I was not born, for courts or great affairs;
> I pay my debts, believe, and ſay my prayers. Pope.

A good acquaintance with method will greatly aſſiſt every one, in ranging, diſpoſing, and managing all human affairs. Watts's Logick.

> What St. John's ſkill in ſtate affairs,
> What Ormond's valour, Oxford's cares,
> To aid their ſinking country lent;
> Was all deſtroy'd, by one event. Swift.

To AFFE'AR, åf-fē'r. v. n. [from affier, Fr.] To confirm, to give a ſanction to; to eſtabliſh: an old term of law.

> Bleed, bleed, poor country!
> Great tyranny, lay thou thy baſis ſure!
> For goodneſs dares not check thee:
> His title is affear'd. Shakeſp. Macbeth.

AFFE'CT, åf-fĕkt'. n. ſ. [from the verb affect.]

1. Affection; paſſion; ſenſation.

It ſeemeth that, as the feet have a ſympathy with the head, ſo the wriſts have a ſympathy with the heart: we ſee, the affects and paſſions of the heart and ſpirits are notably diſcloſed by the pulſe. Bacon's Nat. Hiſt. Nº 97.

2. Quality; circumſtance.

I find it difficult, to make out one ſingle ulcer, as authors deſcribe it; without other ſymptoms or affects, joined to it. Wiſeman.

This is only the antiquated word, for affection.

To AFFE'CT, åf-fĕkt'. v. a. [affecter, Fr. afficio, affectum, Lat.]

1. To act upon; to produce effects, in any other thing.

> The ſun
> Had firſt his precept, ſo to move, ſo ſhine;
> As might affect the earth with cold and heat,
> Scarce tolerable. Milton's Par. Loſt, b. x.

The generality of men are wholly governed by names, in matters of good and evil; ſo far as theſe qualities relate to, and affect, the actions of men. South's Sermons.

Yet even thoſe two particles, do reciprocally affect each other, with the ſame force and vigour; as they would do, at the ſame diſtance, in any other ſituation imaginable. Bentley's Sermons.

2. To move the paſſions.

As a thinking man cannot but be very much affected, with the idea of his appearing in the preſence of that Being, whom none can ſee and live: he muſt be much more affected, when he conſiders; that this Being, whom he appears before, will examine the actions of his life, and reward or puniſh him accordingly. Addiſon, Spectator, Nº 513.

3. To aim at; to endeavour after: ſpoken of perſons.

> Atrides broke
> His ſilence next, but ponder'd ere he ſpoke:
> Wiſe are thy words, and glad I would obey,
> But this proud man affects imperial ſway.
> Dryden's Iliad.

4. To tend to; to endeavour after: ſpoken of things.

The drops of every fluid affect a round figure, by the mutual attraction of their parts; as the globe of the earth and ſea affects a round figure, by the mutual attraction of its parts by gravity. Newton's Opticks.

5. To be fond of; to be pleaſed with; to love; to regard with fondneſs.

That little, which ſome of the heathen did chance to hear, concerning ſuch matter as the ſacred Scripture plentifully containeth, they did in wonderful ſort affect. Hooker, b. i.

> There is your crown;
> And he that wears the crown immortally,
> Long guard it yours! If I affect it more,
> Than as your honour, and as your renown;
> Let me no more from this obedience riſe.
> Shakeſp. Henry IV.

> Think not, that wars we love, and ſtrife affect;
> Or that we hate ſweet peace. Fairfax, b. ii.

> None but a woman, could a man direct,
> To tell us women, what we moſt affect.
> Dryd. Wife of Bath.

6. To make a ſhew of ſomething, to ſtudy the appearance of any thing; with ſome degree of hypocriſy.

> Another nymph, amongſt the many fair,
> Before the reſt affected ſtill to ſtand;
> And watch'd my eye, preventing my command.
> Prior.

Theſe often carry the humour ſo far, till their affected coldneſs and indifference quite kills all the fondneſs of a lover. Addiſon, Spectator, Nº 171.

> Coquet and coy at once her air,
> Both ſtudied, though both ſeem neglected;
> Careleſs ſhe is with artful care,
> Affecting to ſeem unaffected. Congreve.

> The conſcious huſband, whom like ſymptoms ſeize,
> Charges on her the guilt of their diſeaſe;
> Affecting fury, acts a madman's part;
> He'll rip the fatal ſecret from her heart. Granville.

7. To imitate in an unnatural and conſtrained manner.

Spenſer, in affecting the ancients, writ no language; yet I would have him read for his matter, but as Virgil read Ennius. Ben Jonſon's Diſcoveries.

8. To convict of ſome crime; to attaint with guilt: a phraſe, merely juridical.

By the civil law, if a dowry with a wife be promiſed and not paid, the huſband is not obliged to allow her alimony: but, if her parents ſhall become inſolvent by ſome misfortune, ſhe ſhall have alimony; unleſs you can affect them with fraud, in promiſing, what they knew they were not able to perform. Ayliffe's Parergon.

Affecta'tion, åf-fêk-tå'-shûn. n. ſ. [affectatio, Lat.]

1. Fondneſs; high degree of liking; commonly with ſome degree of culpability.

In things of their own nature indifferent, if either councils or particular men have at any time, with ſound judgment, miſliked conformity between the church of God and infidels; the cauſe thereof hath been ſomewhat elſe, than only affectation of diſſimilitude. Hooker, b. iv. § 7.

2. An artificial ſhow; an elaborate appearance; a falſe pretence.

It has been (from age to age) an affectation, to love the pleaſure of ſolitude, among thoſe, who cannot poſſibly be ſuppoſed qualified for paſſing life in that manner. Spectator, N° 264.

Affe'cted, åf-fêk'-têd. participial adj. [from affect.]

1. Moved; touched with affection; internally diſpoſed or inclined.

No marvel then, if he were ill affected. Shakeſp. King Lear.

The model they ſeemed affected to, in their directory, was not like to any of the foreign reformed churches now in the world. Clarendon.

2. Studied with over-much care, or with hypocritical appearance.

Theſe antick, liſping, affected phantaſies, theſe new tuners of accents. Shakeſp. Romeo and Juliet.

3. In a perſonal ſenſe, full of affectation; as, an affected lady.

Affe'ctedly, åf-fêk'-têd-lŷ. adv. [from affected.

1. In an affected manner; hypocritically; with more appearance, than reality.

Perhaps they are affectedly ignorant: they are ſo willing, it ſhould be true, that they have not attempted to examine it. Government of the Tongue, § 5.

Some indeed have been ſo affectedly vain, as to counterfeit immortality; and have ſtolen their death, in hopes to be eſteemed immortal. Brown's Vulgar Errours, b. vii. c. 10.

By talking ſo familiarly of one hundred and ten thouſand pounds, by a tax upon a few commodities, it is plain; you are either naturally or affectedly ignorant of our condition. Swift.

2. Studiouſly; with laboured intention.

Some miſperſuaſions, concerning the divine attributes, tend to the corrupting men's manners; as if they were deſigned, and affectedly choſen, for that purpoſe. Decay of Piety.

Affe'ctedness, åf-fêk'-têd-nêss. n. ſ. [from affected.] The quality, of being affected, or of making falſe appearances.

AFFE'CTION, åf-fêk'-shûn. n. ſ. [affection, Fr. affectio, Lat.]

1. The ſtate, of being affected by any cauſe or agent. This general ſenſe is little in uſe.

Some men there are, love not a gaping pig;
Some, that are mad, if they behold a cat;
And others, when the bag-pipe ſings i' th' noſe,
Cannot contain their urine, for affection.
Shakeſp. Merch. of Venice.

2. Paſſion of any kind.

Then gan the Palmer thus: moſt wretched man,
That to affections does the bridle lend;
In their beginning they are weak and wan,
But ſoon through ſufferance grow to fearful end.
Fairy Queen.

Impute it to my late ſolitary life, which is prone to affections. Sidney, b. i.

Affections (as, joy, grief, fear and anger, with ſuch like) being (as it were) the ſundry faſhions and forms of appetite, can neither riſe at the conceit of a thing indifferent, nor yet chooſe but riſe at the ſight of ſome things. Hooker, b. i.

To ſpeak truth of Cæſar;
I have not known, when his affections ſway'd,
More than his reaſon. Shakeſp. Julius Cæſar.

Zeal ought to be compoſed of the higheſt degrees of pious affections; of which ſome are milder and gentler, ſome ſharper and more vehement. Sprat's Sermons.

I can preſent nothing beyond this, to your affections; to excite your love and deſire. Tillotſon.

3. Love; kindneſs; good-will to ſome perſons: often with to or towards, before the perſon.

I have acquainted you,
With the dear love I bear to fair Anne Page,
Who mutually hath anſwer'd my affection.
Shakeſp. Merry Wives of Windſor.

My king is tangled in affection, to
A creature of the queen's, lady Anne Bullen.
Shakeſpeare.

What warmth is there in your affections, towards any of theſe princely ſuitors? Shakeſp. Merch. of Venice.

Make his intereſt depend, upon mutual affection and good correſpondence with others. Collier on General Kindneſs.

Nor at firſt ſight, like moſt, admires the fair:
For you he lives; and you alone ſhall ſhare
His laſt affection, as his early care. Pope.

4. Good-will to any object; zeal; paſſionate regard.

I have reaſon, to diſtruſt mine own judgment; as that, which may be overborn by my zeal and affection to this cauſe. Bacon.

Set your affection upon my words; deſire them, and ye ſhall be inſtructed. Wiſdom, vi. 11.

His integrity to the king was without blemiſh; and his affection to the church ſo notorious, that he never deſerted it. Clarendon.

All the precepts of chriſtianity command us, to moderate our paſſions, to temper our affections towards all things below. Temple.

Let not the mind of a ſtudent be under the influence of warm affection to things of ſenſe, when he comes to the ſearch of truth. Watts's Improvement of the Mind.

5. State of the mind, in general.

There grows,
In my moſt ill compos'd affection, ſuch
A ſtanchleſs avarice; that were I king,
I ſhould cut-off the nobles for their lands.
Shakeſp. Macbeth.

The man, that hath no muſick in himſelf,
Nor is not mov'd with concord of ſweet ſounds,
Is fit for treaſons, ſtratagems, and ſpoils;
The motions of his ſpirit are dull as night,
And his affections dark as Erebus:
Let no ſuch man be truſted.
Shakeſp. Merch. of Venice.

6. Quality; property.

The certainty and acurateneſs, which is attributed to what mathematicians deliver, muſt be reſtrained to what they teach, concerning thoſe purely mathematical diſciplines, arithmetick and geometry; where the affections of quantity are abſtractedly conſidered. Boyle.

The mouth, being neceſſary to conduct the voice to the ſhape of its cavity, neceſſarily gives the voice ſome particular affection of ſound in its paſſage, before it come to the lips. Holder's Elements of Speech.

God may have joined immaterial ſouls to other kinds of bodies, and in other laws of union; and, from thoſe different laws of union, there will ariſe quite different affections, and natures, and ſpecies of the compound beings. Bentley's Sermons.

7. State of the body, as acted upon by any cauſe.

It ſeemed to me a venereal gonorrhœa; and others thought, it aroſe from ſome ſcorbutical affection. Wiſeman's Surgery.

8. Lively repreſentation in painting.

Affection is the lively repreſentment of any paſſion whatſoever; as if the figures ſtood, not upon a cloth or board; but as if they were acting, upon a ſtage. Wotton's Architecture.

9. It is uſed by Shakeſpeare ſometimes, for affectation.

There was nothing in it, that could indict the author of affection. Shakeſp.

Affe'ctionate, åf-fêk'-shô-nåte. adj. [affectionné, Fr. from affection.]

1. Full of affection; ſtrongly moved; warm; zealous.

In their love of God, and deſire to pleaſe him, men can never be too affectionate; and it is as true, that, in their hatred of ſin, men may be ſometimes too paſſionate. Sprat's Sermons.

2. Strongly inclined to; diſpoſed to: with the particle to.

As for the parliament, it preſently took fire; being affectionate of old, to the war of France. Bacon's Henry VII.

3. Fond; tender.

He found me ſitting, beholding this picture, I know not with how affectionate countenance; but, I am ſure, with a moſt affectionate mind. Sidney.

Away they fly,
Affectionate; and, undeſiring, bear
The moſt delicious morſel to their young.
Thomſon's Spring.

4. Benevolent; tender.

When we reflect, on all this affectionate care of Providence for our happineſs; with what wonder muſt we obſerve the little effect it has on men! Rogers's Sermons.

Affe'ctionately, åf-fêk''-shô-nåt'-lŷ. adv. [from affectionate.] In an affectionate manner; fondly; tenderly; benevolently.

Affe'ctionateness, åf-fêk''-shô-nåt'-nêss. n. ſ. [from affectionate.] The quality or ſtate, of being affectionate; fondneſs; tenderneſs; good-will; benevolence.

Affe'ctioned, åf-fêk'-shûn-nêd. adj. [from affection.]

1. Affected; conceited. This ſenſe is now obſolete.

An affectioned aſs, that cons ſtate without book, and utters it by great ſwaths. Shakeſp. Twelfth Night.

2. Inclined; mentally diſpoſed.

Be kindly affectioned one to another. Rom. xii. 10.

Affe'ctiously, åf-fêk'-shûs-lŷ. adv. [from affect.] In an affecting manner. Dict.

Affe'ctive åf-fêk'-tiv. adj. [from affect.] That, which affects; that, which ſtrongly touches. It is generally uſed, for painful.

Pain is ſo uneaſy a ſentiment; that very little of it is enough, to corrupt every enjoyment; and the effect, God intends this variety of ungrateful and affective ſentiments ſhould have on us, is, to reclaim our affections from this valley of tears. Rogers.

Affectuo'sity, åf-fêk-tů-ôs'-ſŷ tŷ. n. ſ. [from affectuous.] Paſſionateneſs. Dict.

Affe'ctuous, åf-fêk'-tů-ûs. adj. [from affect.] Full of paſſion; as, an affectuous ſpeech: a word, little uſed.

Affe'ror, åf-fè'-rûr. n. ſ. [from affere.]

Such, as are appointed in court-leets, &c. upon oath, to mulct ſuch as have committed faults, arbitrarily puniſhable, and have no expreſs penalty ſet down by ſtatute. Cowell.

AFFI'ANCE, åf-fı̂'-ånse. n. ſ. [affiance, from affier, Fr.]

1. A marriage-contract.

At laſt ſuch grace I found, and means I wrought,
That I that lady to my ſpouſe had won;
Accord of friends, conſent of parents ſought,
Affiance made, my happineſs begun.
Fairy Queen, b. ii.

2. Truſt, in general; confidence; ſecure reliance.

The duke is virtuous, mild; and too well given,
To dream on evil, or to work my downfall.—
—Ah! what's more dangerous, than this fond affiance?
Seems he a dove? his feathers are but borrowed.
Shakeſp. Henry VI.

3. Truſt in the divine promiſes and protection. To this ſenſe it is now almoſt confined.

Religion receives man, into a covenant of grace; where there is pardon reached-out, to all truly penitent ſinners, and aſſiſtance promiſed, and engaged, and beſtowed, upon very eaſy conditions; viz. humility, prayer, and affiance in him. Hammond's Fundamentals.

There can be no ſurer way to ſucceſs, than by diſclaiming all confidence in ourſelves, and referring the events of things to God with an implicit affiance. Atterbury's Sermons.

To Affi'ance, af-fi'-anſe. v. a. [from the noun affiance.]

1. To betroth; to bind any one by promiſe, to marriage.

To me (ſad maid, or rather widow ſad)
He was affianced, long time before;
And ſacred pledges he both gave and had;
Falſe errant knight, infamous and foreſwore.
Fairy Queen.

Her ſhould Angelo have married, was affianced to her by oath, and the nuptial appointed; between which time of the contract, and limit of the ſolemnity, his brother was wrecked, having in that veſſel the dowry of his ſiſter. Shakeſp. Meaſure for Meaſure.

2. To give confidence.

Stranger! whoe'er thou art, ſecurely reſt
Affianc'd in my faith, a friendly gueſt. Pope's Odyſ.

Affi'ned, af-fi'-ned. adj. [from affinis, Lat.] Joined by affinity to another; related to another.

If partially affin'd, or leagu'd in office,
Thou doſt deliver more or leſs than truth,
Thou art no ſoldier. Shakeſp. Othello.

Affi'nity, af-fin'-ny-ty. n. ſ. [affinité, Fr. from affinis, Lat.]

1. Relation by marriage; relation contracted, by the huſband to the kindred of the wife, and by the wife to thoſe of the huſband. It is oppoſed to conſanguinity, or relation by birth.

In this ſenſe it has, ſometimes the particle with, and ſometimes to, before the perſon to whom the relation is contracted.

They had left none alive; by the blindneſs of rage killing many guiltleſs perſons, either for affinity to the tyrant, or enmity to the tyrant-killers. Sidney, b. ii.

And Solomon made affinity with Pharaoh king of Egypt, and took Pharaoh's daughter. 1 Kings, iii. 1.

A breach was made with France itſelf, notwithſtanding ſo ſtrait an affinity, ſo lately accompliſhed; as if indeed (according to that pleaſant maxim of ſtate) kingdoms were never married. Wotton.

2. Relation to; connexion with; reſemblance to: ſpoken of things.

The Britiſh tongue or Welſh was in uſe, only in this iſland; having great affinity with the old Gallick. Camden.

All things, that have affinity with the heavens, move upon the center of another, which they benefit. Bacon, Eſſay xxiv.

The art of painting hath wonderful affinity with that of poetry. Dryd. Dufreſnoy, Pref.

Man is more diſtinguiſhed, by devotion than by reaſon; as ſeveral brute creatures diſcover ſomething, like reaſon; though they betray not any thing, that bears the leaſt affinity to devotion. Addiſon, Spect. N° 201.

To AFFI'RM, af-ferm'. v. n. [affirmo, Lat.] To declare; to tell confidently: oppoſed to the word deny.

Yet their own authors faithfully affirm,
That the land Salike lies in Germany,
Between the floods of Sala and of Elve.
Shakeſp. Henry V.

To Affi'rm, af-ferm'. v. a.

1. To declare poſitively; as, to affirm a fact.

2. To ratify or approve a former law, or judgment: oppoſed to reverſe or repeal.

The houſe of peers hath a power of judicature in ſome caſes, properly to examine, and then to affirm; or, if there be cauſe, to reverſe the judgments, which have been given in the court of king's bench. Bacon's Advice to Sir G. Villiers.

In this ſenſe we ſay, to affirm the truth.

Affi'rmable, af-fer'-mabl. adj. [from affirm.] That, which may be affirmed.

Thoſe attributes and conceptions, that were applicable and affirmable of him when preſent, are now affirmable and applicable to him though paſt. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

Affi'rmance, af-fer'-manſe. n. ſ. [from affirm.] Confirmation: oppoſed to repeal.

This ſtatute did but reſtore an ancient ſtatute, which was itſelf alſo made but in affirmance of the common law. Bacon.

Affi'rmant, af-fer'-mant. n. ſ. [from affirm.] The perſon, that affirms; a declarer. Dict.

Affirma'tion, af-fer-ma'-ſhun. n. ſ. [affirmatio, Lat.]

1. The act of affirming or declaring: oppoſed to negation or denial.

This gentleman vouches, upon warrant of bloody affirmation, his to be more virtuous, and leſs attemptable, than any of our ladies. Shakeſp. Cymbeline.

2. The poſition affirmed.

That he ſhall receive no benefit from Chriſt, is the affirmation, whereon his deſpair is founded; and one way of removing this diſmal apprehenſion is, to convince him, that Chriſt's death (if he perform the condition required) ſhall certainly belong to him. Hammond's Fundamentals.

3. Confirmation; oppoſed to repeal.

The learned in the laws of our land obſerve, that our ſtatutes ſometimes are only the affirmation or ratification of that, which by common law was held before. Hooker.

Affi'rmative, af-fer'-ma-tiv. adj. [from affirm.]

1. That, which affirms; oppoſed to negative: in which ſenſe, we uſe the affirmative abſolutely; that is, the affirmative poſition.

For the affirmative, we are now to anſwer ſuch proofs of theirs, as have been before alleged. Hooker.

Whether there are ſuch beings or not, 'tis ſufficient for my purpoſe, that many have believed the affirmative. Dryden.

2. That, which can or may be affirmed: a ſenſe, uſed chiefly in ſcience.

As in algebra, where affirmative quantities vaniſh or ceaſe, there negative ones begin; ſo in mechanicks, where attraction ceaſes, there a repulſive virtue ought to ſucceed. Newt. Opt.

3. Applied to perſons; he, who has the habit of affirming with vehemence; poſitive; dogmatical.

Be not confident and affirmative, in an uncertain matter; but report things modeſtly and temperately, according to the degree of that perſuaſion; which is, or ought to be, begotten by the efficacy of the authority, or the reaſon inducing thee. Taylor.

Affi'rmatively, af-fer'-ma-tiv-ly. adv. [from affirmative.] In an affirmative manner; on the poſitive ſide; not negatively.

The reaſon of man hath no ſuch reſtraint: concluding not only affirmatively, but negatively; not only affirming, there is no magnitude beyond the laſt heavens; but alſo denying, there is any vacuity within them. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

Affi'rmer, af-fer'-mur. n. ſ. [from affirm.] The perſon, that affirms.

If, by the word virtue, the affirmer intends our whole duty to God and man; and the denier, by the word virtue, means only courage, or (at moſt) our duty toward our neighbour, without including (in the idea of it) the duty which we owe to God. Watts's Logick.

To Affi'x, af-fiks'. v. a. [affigo, affixum, Lat.]

1. To unite to the end, or à poſteriori; to ſubjoin.

He, that has ſettled in his mind determined ideas, with names affixed to them, will be able to diſcern their differences one from another. Locke.

If men conſtantly affixed applauſe and diſgrace, where they ought; the principle of ſhame would have a very good influence, on publick conduct; though, on ſecret villanies, it lays no reſtraint. Rogers's Sermons.

2. To connect conſequentially.

The doctrine of irreſiſtibility of grace, in working whatſoever it works; if it be acknowledged, there is nothing to be affixt to gratitude. Hammond's Fundamentals.

3. Simply, to faſten or fix. Obſolete.

Her modeſt eyes, abaſhed to behold
So many gazers as on her do ſtare,
Upon the lowly ground affixed are. Spenſer.

The poet, writing againſt his genius, will be like a prophet without his afflatus. Spence on the Odyſſey.

To AFFLI'CT, åf-flìkt'. v. a. [afflicto, afflictum, Lat.]

1. To put to pain; to grieve; to torment.

It teacheth us, how God thought fit to plague and afflict them: it doth not appoint, in what form and manner we ought to puniſh the ſin of idolatry in others. Hooker, b. v. § 17.

O coward conſcience, how doſt thou afflict me!
The lights burn blue.—Is it not dead midnight?
Cold fearful drops ſtand on my trembling fleſh.
Shakeſp. Rich. III.

Give not over thy mind to heavineſs, and afflict not thyſelf in thine own counſel. Eccles. xxx. 21.

A father, afflicted with untimely mourning, when he hath made an image of his child ſoon taken away, now honoured him as a God, which was then a dead man; and delivered, to thoſe that were under him, ceremonies and ſacrifices. Wiſdom.

A melancholy tear afflicts my eye;
And my heart labours with a ſudden ſigh. Prior.

2. The paſſive (to be afflicted) has often at, before the cauſal noun; by is likewiſe proper.

The mother was ſo afflicted, at the loſs of a fine boy, who was her only ſon; that ſhe died for grief of it. Addiſon, Spect.

Affli'ctedness, åf-flìk'-tėd-nėss. n. ſ. [from afflicted.] The ſtate of affliction, or of being afflicted; ſorrowfulneſs; grief.

Affli'ction, åf-flìk'-shůn. n. ſ. [afflictio, Lat.]

1. The cauſe of pain or ſorrow; calamity.

To the fleſh (as the apoſtle himſelf granteth) all affliction is naturally grievous; therefore nature, which cauſeth fear, teacheth to pray againſt all adverſity. Hooker, b. v. § 48.

We'll bring you to one, that you have cozened of money: I think, to repay that money, will be a biting affliction. Shakeſpeare.

2. The ſtate of ſorrowfulneſs; miſery: oppoſed to joy or proſperity.

Beſides you know,
Proſperity's the very bond of love;
Whoſe freſh complexion, and whoſe heart together,
Affliction alters. Shakeſp. Winter's Tale.

Where ſhall we find the man, that bears affliction,
Great and majeſtic in his griefs, like Cato?
Addiſon's Cato.

Some virtues are only ſeen in affliction, and ſome in proſperity. Addiſon, Spectator, N° 257.

Affli'ctive, åf-flìk'-tìv. adj. [from afflict.] That, which cauſes affliction; painful; tormenting.

They found martyrdom a duty; dreſſed-up indeed with all, that was terrible and afflictive to human nature; yet, not at all the leſs a duty. South.

Nor can they find,
Where to retire themſelves, or where appeaſe
Th' afflictive keen deſire of food; expos'd
To winds and ſtorms, and jaws of ſavage death.
Philips.

Reſtleſs Proſerpine,—
—On the ſpacious land and liquid main,
Spreads ſlow diſeaſe, and darts afflictive pain.
Prior.

A'ffluence, åf'-flů-ėnſe. n. ſ. [affluence, Fr. affluentia, Lat.]

1. The act of flowing to any place; concourſe. It is almoſt always uſed figuratively.

I ſhall not relate the affluence of young nobles, from hence into Spain; after the voice, of our prince being there, had been noiſed. Wotton.

2. Exuberance of riches; ſtream of wealth; plenty.

Thoſe degrees of fortune, which give fulneſs and affluence to one ſtation, may be want and penury in another. Rogers.

Let joy or eaſe, let affluence or content,
And the gay conſcience of a life well ſpent,
Calm ev'ry thought, inſpirit ev'ry grace. Pope.

A'ffluency, åf'-flů-ėn-ſẏ. n. ſ. The ſame, with affluence.

A'FFLUENT, åf'-flů-ėnt. adj. [affluent, Fr. affluens, Lat.]

1. Flowing to any part.

Theſe parts are no more, than foundation-piles of the enſuing body; which are afterwards to be increaſed and raiſed to a greater bulk, by the affluent blood, that is tranſmitted out of the mother's body. Harvey on Conſumptions.

2. Abundant; exuberant; wealthy.

I ſee thee, Lord and end of my deſire,
Loaded and bleſt with all the affluent ſtore,
Which human vows at ſmoking ſhrines implore.
Prior.

A'ffluentness, åf'-flů-ėnt-nėſs. n. ſ. [from affluent.] The quality of being affluent. Dict.

A'fflux, åf'-flůks. n. ſ. [affluxus, Lat.]

1. The act of flowing to ſome place; affluence.

2. That, which flows to another place.

The cauſe hereof cannot be a ſupply by procreations; ergo, it muſt be, by new affluxes to London out of the country. Graunt.

The infant grows bigger out of the womb, by agglutinating one afflux of blood to another. Harvey on Conſumptions.

An animal, that muſt lie ſtill, receives the afflux of colder or warmer, clean or foul water, as it happens to come to it. Locke.

Afflu'xion, åf-flůk'-shůn. n. ſ. [affluxio, Lat.]

1. The act of flowing to a particular place.

2. That, which flows from one place to another.

An inflammation; either ſimple, conſiſting of an hot and ſanguineous affluxion; or elſe denominable from other humours, according unto the predominancy of melancholy, phlegm, or choler. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

To Affo'rd, åf-fȯ'rd. v. a. [affourrer, affourrager, Fr.]

1. To yield or produce; as, the ſoil affords grain; the trees afford fruits. This ſeems to be the primitive ſignification.

2. To grant, or confer any thing; generally in a good ſenſe, and ſometimes in a bad, but leſs properly.

So ſoon, as Maurmon there arriv'd, the door
To him did open, and afforded way. Fairy Queen.

This is the conſolation of all good men, unto whom his ubiquity affordeth continual comfort and ſecurity; and this is the affliction of hell, to whom it affordeth deſpair and remedileſs calamity. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

3. To be able to ſell. It is uſed always, with reference to ſome certain price; as, I can afford this for leſs than the other.

They fill their magazines, in times of the greateſt plenty; that ſo they may afford cheaper, and increaſe the public revenue, at a ſmall expence of its members. Addiſon on Italy.

4. To be able to bear expences; as, traders can afford more finery in peace than war.

The ſame errours run through all families; where there is wealth enough to afford, that their ſons may be good for nothing. Swift on Modern Education.

To AFFO'REST, åf-fȯr'-rėſt. v. a. [afforeſtare, Lat.] To turn ground into foreſt.

It appeareth, by Charta de Foreſta, that he afforeſted many woods and waſtes, to the grievance of the ſubject, which by that law were diſafforeſted. Sir John Davies on Ireland.

Afforesta'tion, åf-fȯr'-rės-tå-shůn. n. ſ. [from afforeſt.]

The charter de Foreſta was, to reform the encroachments made in the time of Richard I. and Henry II.; who had made new afforeſtations, and much extended the rigour of the foreſt laws. Hale's Common Law of England.

To Affra'nchise, åf-från'-tſhìz. v. a. [affrancher, Fr.] To make free.

To AFFRA'Y, åf-frå'. v. a. [effrayer, or effriger, Fr. which Menage derives from fragor; perhaps it comes from frigus.] To fright; to terrify; to ſtrike with fear. This word is not now in uſe.

The ſame to wight he never would diſcloſe;
But when as monſters huge he would diſmay,
Or daunt unequal armies of his foes,
Or when the flying heavens he would affray.
Fairy Queen.

Affra'y, or Affra'yment, åf-frå', or åf-frå'-mėnt. n. ſ. [from the verb.]

1. A tumultuous aſſault of one or more perſons upon others; a law term. A battle: in this ſenſe it is written fray.

2. Tumult; confuſion: out of uſe.

Let the night be calm and quietſome,
Without tempeſtuous ſtorms or ſad affray. Spenſer.

Affri'ction, åf-frìk'-shůn. n. ſ. [affrictio, Lat.] The act of rubbing one thing upon another.

I have divers times obſerved, in wearing ſilver-hilted ſwords, that, if they rubbed upon my cloaths, if they were of a light-coloured cloth, the affriction would quickly blacken them; and, congruouſly hereunto, I have found pens blacked almoſt all over, when I had a while carried them about me in a ſilver caſe. Boyle.

To Affri'ght, åf-frì'te. v. a. [See Fright.]

1. To affect with fear; to terrify. It generally implies a ſudden impreſſion of fear.

Thy name affrights me, in whoſe ſound is death.
Shakeſp. Henry VI.

Godlike his courage ſeem'd; whom nor delight
Could ſoften, nor the face of death affright.
Waller.

He, when his country (threaten'd with alarm)
Requires his courage and his conq'ring arm,
Shall more than once the Punic bands affright.
Dryden's Æneid.

2. It is uſed in the paſſive, ſometimes with at, before the thing feared.

Thou ſhalt not be affrighted at them: for the Lord thy God is among you. Deut. vii. 21.

3. Sometimes with the particle with, before the thing feared.

As one affright
With helliſh fiends, or furies mad uproar,
He then uproſe. Fairy Queen, b. ii. cant. 5.

Affri'ght, åf-frì'te. n. ſ. [from the verb.]

1. Terrour; fear. This word is chiefly poetical.

As the moon, cloathed with cloudy night,
Does ſhew to him, that walks in fear and ſad
affright. Fairy Queen.

Wide was his pariſh, not contracted cloſe
In ſtreets, but here and there a ſtraggling houſe;
Yet ſtill he was at hand, without requeſt,
To ſerve the ſick, to ſuccour the diſtreſs'd;
Tempting, on foot, alone, without affright,
The dangers of a dark tempeſtuous night.
Dryden's Fables.

2. The cauſe of fear; a terrible object; dreadful appearance.

I ſee the gods
Upbraid our ſuff'rings, and would humble them,
By ſending theſe affrights, while we are here;
That we might laugh, at their ridiculous fear.
B. Jonſ. Catiline.

The war at hand appears with more affright,
And riſes ev'ry moment to the ſight. Dryd. Æneid.

Affri'ghtful, åf-frì'te-fûl. adj. [from affright.] Full of affright or terrour; terrible; dreadful.

There is an abſence of all, that is deſtructive or affrightful to human nature. Decay of Piety.

Affri'ghtment, åf-frì'te-mènt. n. ſ. [from affright.]

1. The impreſſion of fear; terrour.

She awaked, with the affrightment of a dream. Wotton.

Paſſionate words or blows, from the tutor, fill the child's mind with terrour and affrightment; which immediately takes it wholly up, and leaves no room for other impreſſion. Locke.

2. The ſtate of fearfulneſs.

Whether thoſe, that (under any anguiſh of mind) return to affrightments or doubtings, have not been hypocrites. Hammond.

To AFFRO'NT, åf-frûnt'. v. a. [affronter, Fr. that is, ad frontem ſtare; ad frontem contumeliam allidere, to inſult a man to his face.]

1. To meet face to face; to encounter. This ſeems the genuine and original ſenſe of the word; which was formerly indifferent to good or ill.

We have cloſely ſent for Hamlet hither;
That he, as 'twere by accident, may here
Affront Ophelia. Shakeſp. Hamlet.

The ſeditious, the next day, affronted the king's forces at the entrance of a highway; whom when they found both ready and reſolute to fight, they deſired enterparlance. Sir John Hayward.

2. To meet in an hoſtile manner, front to front.

His holy rites and ſolemn feaſts profan'd,
And with their darkneſs durſt affront his light.
Paradiſe Loſt.

3. To offer an open inſult; to offend avowedly. With reſpect to this ſenſe, it is obſerved by Cervantes; that, 'if a man ſtrike 'another on the back, and then run away; 'the perſon ſo ſtruck is injured, but not 'affronted; an affront always implying a 'juſtification of the act.'

Did not this fatal war affront thy coaſt?
Yet ſatteſt thou an idle looker-on. Fairfax, i. 51.

But harm precedes not ſin; only our foe,
Tempting, affronts us with his foul eſteem
Of our integrity. Milton's Par. Loſt, b. ix.

I would learn the cauſe, why Torriſmond
(Within my palace walls, within my hearing,
Almoſt within my ſight) affronts a prince,
Who ſhortly ſhall command him.
Dryden's Spaniſh Friar.

This brings to mind Fauſtina's fondneſs for the gladiator, and is interpreted as ſatire: but how can one imagine, that the Fathers would have dared to affront the wife of Aurelius? Addiſon.

Affro'nt, åf-frûnt'. n. ſ. [from the verb affront.]

1. Open oppoſition; encounter: a ſenſe not frequent, though regularly deducible from the derivation.

Fearleſs of danger, like a petty god
I walk'd about admir'd of all, and dreaded
On hoſtile ground, none daring my affront.
Samſon Agoniſtes.

2. Inſult, offered to the face; contemptuous or rude treatment; contumely.

He would often maintain Plantianus, in doing affronts to his ſon. Bacon's Eſſays.

You've done enough; for you deſign'd my chains:
The grace is vaniſh'd; but th' affront remains.
Dryden's Aurengzebe.

He, that is found reaſonable in one thing, is concluded to be ſo in all; and, to think or ſay otherwiſe, is thought ſo unjuſt an affront, and ſo ſenſeleſs a cenſure, that nobody ventures to do it. Locke.

There is nothing, which we receive with ſo much reluctance, as advice: we look upon the man, who gives it us, as offering an affront to our underſtanding, and treating us like children or ideots.
Addiſon, Spectator, N° 512.

3. Outrage; act of contempt, in a more general ſenſe.

Oft have they violated
The temple, oft the law, with foul affronts,
Abominations rather. Milton's Paradiſe Regained.

4. Diſgrace; ſhame. This ſenſe is rather peculiar to the Scottiſh dialect.

Antonius attacked the pirates of Crete; and, by his too great preſumption, was defeated; upon the ſenſe of which affront, he died with grief.
Arbuthnot on Coins.

Affro'nter, åf-frûn'-tûr. n. ſ. [from affront.] The perſon, that affronts.

Affro'nting, åf-frûn'-tìng. participial adj. [from affront.] That, which has the quality of affronting; contumelious.

Among words, which ſignify the ſame principal ideas, ſome are clean and decent, others unclean; ſome are kind, others are affronting and reproachful; becauſe of the ſecondary idea, which cuſtom has affixed to them. Watts's Logick.

To AFFU'SE, åf-fû'ze. v. a. [affundo, affuſum, Lat.] To pour one thing upon another.

I poured acid liquors, to try if they contained any volatile ſalt or ſpirit; which would probably have diſcovered itſelf, by making an ebullition with the affuſed liquor. Boyle.

Affu'sion, åf-fû'-zhûn. n. ſ. [affuſio, Lat.] The act of pouring one thing upon another.

Upon the affuſion of a tincture of galls, it immediately became as black as ink. Grew's Muſæum.

To AFFY', åf-fŷ'. v. a. [affier, Fr. affidare mulierem, Bracton.] To betroth, in order to marriage.

Wedded be thou to the hags of hell,
For daring to affy a mighty lord,
Unto the daughter of a worthleſs king.
Shakeſp. Henry VI.

To Affy', åf-fŷ'. v. n. To put confidence in; to put truſt in; to confide. Not in uſe.

Marcus Andronicus, ſo I do affy
In thy uprightneſs and integrity,
That I will here diſmiſs my loving friends.
Shakeſp. Titus Andr.

Afi'eld, å-fèld. adv. [from a and field. See Field.] To the field.

We drove afield; and both together heard,
What time the grey fly winds her ſultry horn;
Batt'ning our flocks, with the freſh dews of night.
Milton.

Afield I went, amid the morning dew,
To milk my kine; for ſo ſhould houſewives do. Gay.

Afla't, å-flåt'. adv. [from a and flat. See Flat.] Level with the ground.

When you would have many new roots of fruit-trees, take a low tree; and bow it, and lay all his branches aflat upon the ground, and caſt earth upon them: and every twig will take root.
Bacon's Nat. Hiſtory.

Aflo'at, å-flô'te. adv. [from a and float. See Float.] Floating; born-up in the water; not ſinking: in a figurative ſenſe, within view; in motion.

There is a tide, in the affairs of men;
Which, taken at the flood, leads on to fortune;
Omitted, all the voyage of their life
Is bound in ſhallows and in miſeries:
On ſuch a full ſea, are we now afloat:
And we muſt take the current when it ſerves,
Or loſe our ventures. Shakeſp. Julius Cæſar.

Take any paſſion of the ſoul of man, while it is predominant and afloat; and, juſt in the critical height of it, nick it with ſome lucky or unlucky word; and you may as certainly over-rule it to your own purpoſe, as a ſpark of fire, falling upon gunpowder, will infallibly blow it up. South.

There are generally ſeveral hundred loads of timber afloat: for they cut, above twenty-five leagues up the river; and other rivers bring-in their contributions. Addiſon's Italy.

Afo'ot, å-fût'. adv. [from a and foot.]

1. On foot; not on horſeback.

He thought it beſt, to return, for that day, to a village not far off; and, diſpatching his horſe in ſome ſort, the next day early, to come afoot thither.
Shakeſpeare.

2. In action; as, a deſign is afoot.

I pr'ythee, when thou ſeeſt that act afoot,
Ev'n with the very comment of thy ſoul
Obſerve mine uncle. Shakeſp.

3. In motion.

Of Albany's and Cornwall's pow'rs you heard not:—
'Tis ſaid, they are afoot. Shakeſp. King Lear.

Afo're, å-fô're. prep. [from a and fore. See Before.]

1. Not behind; as, he held the ſhield afore: not in uſe.

2. Before; nearer in place to any thing; as, he ſtood afore him.

3. Sooner in time.

If your diligence be not ſpeedy, I ſhall be there afore you. Shakeſp. King Lear.

Afo're, å-fô're. adv.

1. In time foregone or paſt.

Whoſoever ſhould make light of any thing afore ſpoken or written, out of his own houſe a tree ſhould be taken, and he thereon be hanged.
Eſdras, vi. 22.

If he never drank wine afore, it will go near to remove his fit. Shakeſp. Tempeſt.

2. Firſt in the way.

Æmilia, run you to the citadel;
And tell my lord and lady, what hath hap'd:
Will you go on afore? Shakeſp. Othello.

3. In front; in the fore-part.

Approaching nigh, he reared high afore
His body monſtrous, horrible, and vaſt. Fairy Q.

Afo'regoing, å-fô're-gô-ìng. participial adj. [from afore and going.] Going before.

Afo'rehand, å-fô're-hånd. adv. [from afore and hand.]

1. By a previous proviſion.

Many of the particular ſubjects of diſcourſe are occaſional, and ſuch as cannot aforehand be reduced to any certain account.
Government of the Tongue.

2. Provided; prepared; previouſly fitted.

For it will be ſaid, that in the former times, whereof we have ſpoken, Spain was not ſo mighty as now it is; and England, on the other ſide, was more aforehand in all matters of power.
Bacon's Conſiderations on War with Spain.

Afo'rementioned, å-fô''re-mèn-shûnd. adj. [from afore and mentioned.] Mentioned before.

Among the nine other parts, five are not in a condition to give alms or relief to thoſe aforementioned; being very near reduced themſelves, to the ſame miſerable condition. Addiſon.

Afo'renamed, å-fô''re-nå'mèd. adj. [from afore and named.] Named before.

Imitate ſomething of circular form; in which, as in all other aforenamed proportions, you ſhall help yourſelf by the diameter.
Peacham on Drawing.

Afo'resaid, å-fô're-sèd. adj. [from afore and ſaid.] Said before.

It need not go for repetition, if we reſume again that, which we ſaid in the aforeſaid experiment. Bacon's Nat. Hiſt. N° 771.

AFO′RETIME, å-fô′re-tîme. adv. [from afore and time.] In time paſt.

O thou, that art waxen old in wickedneſs! Now thy ſins, which thou haſt committed aforetime, are come to light. Suſanna.

AFRA′ID, å-frå′d. participial adj. [from the verb affray: it ſhould therefore properly be written with ff.]

1. Struck with fear; terrified; fearful.

So perſecute them with thy tempeſt, and make them afraid with thy ſtorm. Pſalm lxxxiii. 15.

2. It has the particle of, before the object of fear.

There, loathing life, and yet of death afraid,
In anguiſh of her ſpirit thus ſhe pray'd.
Dryden's Fables.

If, while this wearied fleſh draws fleeting breath,
Not ſatisfy'd with life, afraid of death,
It hap'ly be thy will, that I ſhould know
Glimpſe of delight, or pauſe from anxious woe;
From now, from inſtant now, great Sire, diſpel
The clouds, that preſs my ſoul. Prior.

AFRE′SH, å-frêsh′. adv. [from a and freſh. See FRESH.] Anew; again, after intermiſſion.

The Germans, ſerving upon great horſes, and charged with heavy armour, received great hurt by light ſkirmiſhes; the Turks, with their light horſes, eaſily ſhunning their charge, and again (at their pleaſure) charging them afreſh, when they ſaw the heavy horſes almoſt weary. Knolles's Hiſtory of the Turks.

When once we have attained theſe ideas, they may be excited afreſh by the uſe of words. Watts's Logick.

AFRO′NT, å-frônt′. adv. [from a and front.] In front; in direct oppoſition to the face.

Theſe four came all afront, and mainly thruſt at me. Shakeſp. Henry IV. p. i.

A′FTER, åf′-tėr. prep. [æꝼteɲ, Sax.]

1. Following in place. After is commonly applied to words of motion; as, he came after, and ſtood behind him. It is oppoſed to before.

What ſays Lord Warwick? Shall we after them?—
—After them! nay, before them, if we can.
Shakeſp. Henry VI.

2. In purſuit of.

After whom is the king of Iſrael come out? After whom doſt thou purſue? After a dead dog, after a flea. 1 Sam. xxiv. 14.

3. Behind. This is not a common uſe.

Sometimes I placed a third priſm after a ſecond, and ſometimes alſo a fourth after a third; by all which, the image might be often refracted ſideways. Newton's Opticks.

4. Poſterior in time.

Good after ill, and after pain delight;
Alternate, like the ſcenes of day and night.
Dryden's Fables.

We ſhall examine the ways of conveyance of the ſovereignty of Adam to princes, that were to reign after him. Locke.

5. According to.

He, that thinketh Spain our over-match, is no good mint-man; but takes greatneſs of kingdoms, according to bulk and currency, and not after their intrinſic value. Bacon.

6. In imitation of.

There are, among the old Roman ſtatues, ſeveral of Venus, in different poſtures and habits; as there are many particular figures of her, made after the ſame deſign. Addiſon's Italy.

This alluſion is after the oriental manner: thus, in the Pſalms, how frequently are perſons compared to cedars. Pope's Odyſſey, notes.

A′FTER, åf′-tėr. adv.

1. In ſucceeding time. It is uſed of time, mentioned as ſucceeding ſome other. So we cannot ſay, 'I ſhall be happy after, 'but hereafter;' but we ſay, 'I was firſt 'made miſerable by the loſs, but was after 'happier.'

Far be it from me, to juſtify the cruelties, which were at firſt uſed towards them, which had their reward ſoon after. Bacon.

Thoſe, who (from the pit of hell,
Roaming to ſeek their prey on earth) durſt fix
Their ſeats long after, next the ſeat of God.
Paradiſe Loſt.

2. Following another.

Let go thy hold, when a great wheel runs down a hill; leſt it break thy neck, with following it: but the great one, that goes upward, let him draw thee after. Shakeſp. King Lear.

AFTER, åf″-tėr, is compounded with many words, but almoſt always in its genuine and primitive ſignification; ſome, which occurred, will follow, by which others may be explained.

A′FTER-ACCEPTATION, åf″-tėr-åk-sêp-tå′-ſhŭn. n. ſ. [from after and acceptation.] A ſenſe afterwards, not at firſt admitted.

'Tis true, ſome doctors in a ſcantier ſpace,
I mean in each apart, contract the place:
Some, who to greater length extend the line,
The church's after-acceptation join.
Dryden's Hind and Panther.

A′FTER-AGES, åf″-tėr-å′-jêz. n. ſ. [from after and ages.] Succeſſive times; poſterity. Of this word I have found no ſingular; but ſee not, why it might not be ſaid, This will be done in ſome after-age.

Not the whole land, which the Chuſites ſhould or might, in future time, conquer; ſeeing, in after-ages, they became lords of many nations. Raleigh's Hiſtory of the World.

Nor to philoſophers is praiſe deny'd,
Whoſe wiſe inſtructions after-ages guide.
Sir J. Denham.

What an opinion will after-ages entertain, of their religion; who bid fair for a gibbet, to bring in a ſuperſtition, which their fore-fathers periſhed in flames to keep out. Addiſon.

A′FTER-ALL, åf′-tėr-å′ll. When all has been taken into the view; when there remains nothing more to be added; at laſt; in fine; in concluſion; upon the whole; at the moſt.

They have given no good proof, in aſſerting this extravagant principle; for which (after-all) they have no ground or colour, but a paſſage or two of ſcripture, miſerably perverted, in oppoſition to many expreſs texts. Atterbury's Sermons.

But after-all, if they have any merit, it is to be attributed to ſome good old authors, whoſe works I ſtudy. Pope on Paſtoral Poetry.

A′FTER-BIRTH, åf′-tėr-bėrth. n. ſ. [from after and birth.] The membrane, in which the birth was involved, which is brought away after; the ſecundine.

The exorbitances or degenerations, whether from a hurt in labour, or from part of the after-birth left behind, produce ſuch virulent diſtempers of the blood, as make it caſt out a tumour. Wiſeman's Surgery.

A′FTER-CLAP, åf′-tėr-klåp. n. ſ. [from after and clap.] Unexpected events, happening after an affair is ſuppoſed to be at an end.

For the next morrow's mead they cloſely went,
For fear of after-claps to prevent.
Spenſ. Hub. Tale.

It is commonly taken in an ill ſenſe.

A′FTER-COST, åf′-tėr-kôst. n. ſ. [from after and coſt.] The latter charges; the expenſe, incurred after the original plan is executed.

You muſt take care to carry off the land-floods and ſtreams, before you attempt draining; leſt your after-coſt and labour prove unſucceſsful. Mortimer's Huſbandry.

A′FTER-CROP, åf′-tėr-krôp. n. ſ. [from after and crop.] The ſecond crop or harveſt of the ſame year.

After-crops I think neither good for the land, nor yet the hay good for the cattle. Mortimer's Huſbandry.

A′FTER-DINNER, åf′-tėr-dîn″-nŭr. n. ſ. [from after and dinner.] The hour paſſing juſt after dinner, which is generally allowed to indulgence and amuſement.

Thou haſt nor youth nor age,
But (as it were) an after-dinner's ſleep,
Dreaming on both. Shakeſp. Meaſure for Meaſure.

A′FTER-ENDEAVOUR, åf′-tėr-în-dêv″-ŭr. n. ſ. [from after and endeavour.] Endeavours, made after the firſt effort or endeavour.

There is no reaſon, why the ſound of a pipe ſhould leave traces in their brains; which, not at firſt, but by their after-endeavours, ſhould produce the like ſounds. Locke.

A′FTER-ENQUIRY, åf′-tėr-în-kwŷ″-rŷ. n. ſ. [from after and enquiry.] Enquiry, made after the fact committed, or after life.

You muſt either be directed by ſome, that take upon them to know; or take upon yourſelf that, which (I am ſure) you do not know; or lump the after-enquiry, on your peril. Shakeſp. Cymbeline.

To A′FTER-EYE, åf″-tėr-î′. v. a. [from after and eye.] To keep one in view; to follow in view. This is not in uſe.

Thou ſhouldſt have made him,
As little as a crow, or leſs; ere left
To after-eye him. Shakeſp. Cymbeline.

A′FTER-GAME, åf′-tėr-gå′me. n. ſ. [from after and game.] The ſcheme, which may be laid; or the expedients, which are practiſed, after the original deſign has miſcarried; methods, taken after the firſt turn of affairs.

This earl, like certain vegetables, did bud and open ſlowly; nature ſometimes delighting to play an after-game, as well as fortune; which had (both) their turns and tides, in courſe. Wotton.

The fables of the axe-handle and the wedge ſerve to precaution us, not to put ourſelves needleſsly upon an after-game; but to weigh beforehand, what we ſay and do. L'Eſtrange's Fables.

Our firſt deſign, my friend, has prov'd abortive;
Still there remains an after-game to play.
Addiſon's Cato.

A′FTER-HOURS, åf″-tėr-ou′rs. n. ſ. [from after and hours.] The hours, that ſucceed.

So ſmile the heav'ns upon this holy act,
That after-hours with ſorrow chide us not.
Shakeſp. Romeo and Juliet.

A′FTER-LIVER, åf″-tėr-lîv′-vŭr. n. ſ. [from after and live.] He, that lives in ſucceeding times.

By thee my promiſe ſent
Unto myſelf, let after-livers know. Sidney, b. ii.

A′FTER-LOVE, åf″-tėr-lŭv′. n. ſ. [from after and love.] The ſecond or later love.

Intended, or committed, was this fault?
If but the firſt, how heinous e'er it be;
To win thy after-love, I pardon thee.
Shakeſp. Richard II.

A′FTERMATH, åf″tėr-måth. n. ſ. [from after and math, from mow.] The latter math; the ſecond crop of graſs, mown in autumn. See AFTERCROP.

A′FTERNOON, åf′-tėr-nô″on. n. ſ. [from after and noon.] The time, from the meridian to the evening.

A beauty-waining and diſtreſſed widow,
Ev'n in the afternoon of her beſt days,
Made prize and purchaſe of his wanton eye.
Shakeſp. Richard III.

However, keep the lively taſte you hold
Of God; and love him now, but fear him more:
And in your afternoons think, what you told
And promis'd him at morning-prayer before. Donne.

Such, all the morning, to the pleadings run;
But, when the buſ'neſs of the day is done,
On dice, and drink, and drabs, they ſpend the afternoon. Dryden's Perſius, Sat. i.

AFTERPAINS, ȧf'-tėr-pȧnz. n. ſ. [from after and pain.]

The pains after birth, by which women are delivered of the ſecundine.

AFTERPART, ȧf'-tėr-pȧrt. n. ſ. [from after and part.] The latter part.

The flexibleneſs of the former part of a man's age, not yet grown-up to be headſtrong, makes it more governable and ſafe; and, in the afterpart, reaſon and foreſight begin a little to take place, and mind a man of his ſafety and improvement. Locke.

AFTERPROOF, ȧf'-tėr-prȯ'f. n. ſ. [from after and proof.]

1. Evidence, poſterior to the thing in queſtion.
2. Qualities, known by ſubſequent experience.

All know, that he likewiſe at firſt was much under the expectation of his afterproof; ſuch a ſolar influence there is, in the ſolar aſpect. Wotton.

AFTERTASTE, ȧf'-tėr-tȧſt. n. ſ. [from after and taſte.] A taſte, remaining upon the tongue after the draught, which was not perceived in the act of drinking.

AFTERTHOUGHT, ȧf'-tėr-thȧt. n. ſ. [from after and thought.] Reflections after the act; expedients, formed too late. It is not properly to be uſed for ſecondthought.

Expence, and afterthought, and idle care,
And doubts of motley hue, and dark deſpair;
Suſpicions, and fantaſtical ſurmiſe;
And jealouſy, ſuffus'd with jaundice in her eyes,
Diſcolouring all ſhe view'd, in tawny dreſs'd,
Downlook'd, and with a cuckow on her fiſt. Dryden's Fables.

AFTERTIMES, ȧf'-tėr-tīmz. n. ſ. [from after and time.] Succeeding times. See AFTERAGES.

You promis'd once, a progeny divine
Of Romans, riſing from the Trojan line,
In aftertimes ſhould hold the world in awe,
And to the land and ocean give the law. Dryden's Virgil.

AFTERTOSSING, ȧf'-tėr-tȯs'-ing. n. ſ. [from after and toſs.] The motion of the ſea after a ſtorm.

Confuſions and tumults are only the impotent remains of an unnatural rebellion; and are no more, than the aftertoſſings of a ſea, when the ſtorm is laid. Addiſon's Freeholder.

AFTERWARD, ȧf'-tėr-wȧrd. adv. [from after and ƿeaꞃꝺ, Sax.] In ſucceeding time: ſometimes written afterwards, but leſs properly.

Uſes, not thought-upon before, may afterward ſpring-up; and be reaſonable cauſes of retaining that, which former conſiderations did formerly procure to be inſtituted. Hooker.

An anxious diſtruſt of the divine goodneſs makes a man more and more unworthy of it; and miſerable beforehand, for fear of being ſo afterward. L'Eſtrange.

AFTERWIT, ȧf'-tėr-wīt. n. ſ. [from after and wit.] The contrivance of expedients, after the occaſion of uſing them is paſt. See AFTERTHOUGHT.

There is no recalling, what's gone and paſt; ſo that afterwit comes too late, when the miſchief is done. L'Eſtrange.

A'FTER-WRATH, ȧf''-tėr-rȧ'th. n. ſ. [from after and wrath.] Anger, when the provocation ſeems paſt.

I hear him mock
The luck of Cæſar; which the gods give men,
T' excuſe their after-wrath. Shakeſp. Ant. and Cleop.

A'GA, ȧ'-gȧ. n. ſ. The title of a Turkiſh military officer.

AGA'IN, ȧ-gėn'. adv. [aȝen, Sax.]

1. A ſecond time; once more: marking the repetition of the ſame thing.

The poor remnant of human ſeed, which remained in their mountains, peopled their country again ſlowly, by little and little. Bacon's New Atalantis.

Should Nature's ſelf invade the world again,
And o'er the centre ſpread the liquid main;
Thy pow'r were ſafe. Waller.

Go now, deluded man! And ſeek again
New toils, new dangers, on the duſty plain. Dryd. Æneid.

Some are already retired into foreign countries; and the reſt, who poſſeſs lands, are determined never to hazard them again, for the ſake of eſtabliſhing their ſuperſtition. Swift.

2. On the other hand: marking ſome oppoſition or contrariety.

His wit increaſed upon the occaſion; and ſo much the more, if the occaſion were ſharpened with danger. Again, whether it were the ſhortneſs of his foreſight, or the ſtrength of his will; certain it is, that the perpetual trouble of his fortunes could not have been without defects in his nature. Bacon.

Thoſe things, that we know not, what to do withal, if we had them; and thoſe things again, which another cannot part with, but to his own loſs and ſhame. L'Eſtrange's Fables.

3. On another part: marking a tranſition to ſome new conſideration.

Behold yon mountain's hoary height,
Made higher with new mounts of ſnow;
Again, behold the winter's weight,
Oppreſs the lab'ring woods below. Dryden.

4. In return: noting re-action, or reciprocal action; as, 'his fortune worked upon his 'nature, and his nature again upon his 'fortune.'

5. Back: in reſtitution.

When your head did but ake,
I knit my handkerchief about your brows,
The beſt I had; a princeſs wrought it me;
And I did never aſk it you again. Shakeſp. King John.

6. In return for any thing; in recompence.

That he hath given, will he pay again. Prov. xix. 27.

7. In order of rank or ſucceſſion; marking diſtribution.

Queſtion was aſked of Demoſthenes, What was the chief part of an orator? He anſwered, Action: What next? Action: What next, again? Action. Bacon's Eſſays.

The cauſe of the holding green, is the cloſe and compact ſubſtance of their leaves, and the pedicles of them: and the cauſe of that again is, either the tough and viſcous juice of the plant, or the ſtrength and heat thereof. Bacon's Nat. Hiſt.

8. Beſides; in any other time or place.

They have the Walloons, who are tall ſoldiers; yet, that is but a ſpot of ground: but, on the other ſide, there is not in the world again ſuch a ſpring and ſeminary of brave military people; as in England, Scotland, and Ireland. Bacon.

9. Twice as much: marking the ſame quantity once repeated.

There are, whom heav'n has bleſt with ſtore of wit;
Yet want as much again, to manage it;
For wit and judgment ever are at ſtrife,
Tho' meant each other's aid, like man and wife. Pope.

I ſhould not be ſorry, to ſee a chorus on a theatre, more than as large and as deep again as ours, built and adorned at a king's charges. Dryden's Dufreſnoy.

10. Again and again; with frequent repetition: often.

This is not to be obtained, by one or two haſty readings: it muſt be repeated again and again, with a cloſe attention to the tenour of the diſcourſe. Locke.

11. In oppoſition; by way of reſiſtance.

Who art thou, that anſwereſt again? Rom. ix. 20.

12. Back; as, returning from ſome meſſage.

Bring us word again, which way we ſhall go. Deut. i. 22.

AGA'INST, ȧ-gėnſt'. prep. [ænȝeon, onȝeonꝺ, Sax.]

1. In oppoſition to any perſon.

And he will be a wild man: his hand will be againſt every man, and every man's hand againſt him. Gen. xvi. 12.

2. Contrary; oppoſite, in general.

That authority of men ſhould prevail with men either againſt or above reaſon, is no part of our belief. Hooker.

He is melancholy without cauſe, and merry againſt the hair. Shakeſp. Troilus and Creſſida.

We might work any effect, without and againſt matter: and this not holpen, by the co-operation of angels or ſpirits; but, only by the unity and harmony of nature. Bacon's Nat. Hiſt.

The preventing goodneſs of God does even wreſt him from himſelf, and ſave him (as it were) againſt his will. South.

The god, uneaſy till he ſlept again,
Reſolv'd, at once to rid himſelf of pain;
And, tho' againſt his cuſtom, call'd aloud. Dryden.

Men often ſay, a thing is againſt their conſcience, when really it is not. Swift's Miſcel.

3. In contradiction to any opinion.

After all, that can be ſaid againſt a thing, this will ſtill be true; that many things poſſibly are, which we know not of; and that many more things may be, than are: and if ſo, after all our arguments againſt a thing, it will be uncertain, whether it be or not. Tillotſon.

The church-clergy have written the beſt collection of tracts againſt popery, that ever appeared in England. Swift.

4. With contrary motion or tendency: uſed of material action.

Boils and plagues
Plaiſter you o'er, that one infect another
Againſt the wind a mile. Shakeſp. Coriol.

The kite, being a bird of prey, and therefore hot, delighteth in the freſh air; and many times flieth againſt the wind, as trouts and ſalmons ſwim againſt the ſtream. Bacon.

5. Contrary to rule or law.

If aught againſt my life
Thy country ſought of thee, it ſought unjuſtly,
Againſt the law of nature, law of nations. Milton.

Againſt the public ſanctions of the peace,
Againſt all omens of their ill ſucceſs;
With fates averſe, the rout in arms reſort,
To force their monarch, and inſult the court. Dryden.

6. Oppoſite to, in place.

Againſt the Tiber's mouth, but far away. Dryden.

7. To the hurt of another. See ſenſe 5.

And, when thou think'ſt of her eternity,
Think not that death againſt her nature is;
Think it a birth: and, when thou go'ſt to die,
Sing like a ſwan, as if thou went'ſt to bliſs. Sir J. Davies.

8. In proviſion for; in expectation of.

This mode of ſpeaking probably had its original from the idea of making proviſion againſt, or in oppoſition to, a time of misfortune; but by degrees acquired a neutral ſenſe. It ſometimes has the caſe elliptically ſuppreſſed; as, againſt he comes; that is, againſt the time, when he comes.

Thence ſhe them brought into a ſtately hall,
Wherein were many tables fair diſpred,
And ready dight with drapets feſtival,
Againſt the viands ſhould be miniſtred.
Fairy Queen.

The like charge was given them againſt the time, they ſhould come to ſettle themſelves in the land promiſed unto their fathers. Hooker.

Some ſay, that ever, 'gainſt that ſeaſon comes,
Wherein our Saviour's birth is celebrated,
The bird of dawning ſingeth all night long:
And then they ſay, no ſpirit walks abroad;
The nights are wholeſome; then no planets ſtrike;
No fairy tales, no witch hath power to charm;
So hallow'd and ſo gracious is the time.
Shakeſp. Hamlet.

To that purpoſe, he made haſte to Briſtol; that all things might be ready, againſt the prince came thither. Clarendon.

Againſt the promis'd time provides with care,
And haſtens in the woof the robes he was to wear.
Dryden.

All which, I grant to be reaſonably and truly ſaid; and only deſire, they may be remembered againſt another day. Stillingfleet.

A'GALAXY, ăg'-ă-lăk-ſy̆. n. ſ. [from ἀ and γάλα, Gr.] Want of milk. Dict.

AGA'PE, ă-gă'p. adv. [from a and gape.] Staring with eagerneſs; as, a bird gapes for meat.

In himſelf was all his ſtate;
More ſolemn, than the tedious pomp, that waits
On princes; when their rich retinue long,
Of horſes led, and grooms beſmear'd with gold,
Dazzles the crowd, and ſets them all agape.
Paradiſe Loſt.

Dazzle the crowd, and ſet them all agape.
Philips.

The whole crowd ſtood agape, and ready to take the doctor at his word. Spectator, N° 572.

A'GARICK, ăg'-ă-rĭk. n. ſ. [agaricum, Lat.] A drug, of uſe in phyſic, and the dying trade. It is divided, into male and female; the male is uſed only in dying, the female in medicine; the male grows on oaks, the female on larches.

There are two excreſcences, which grow upon trees; both of them, in the nature of muſhrooms: the one, the Romans call boletus; which groweth upon the roots of oaks, and was one of the dainties of their table: the other is medicinal, that is called agarick, which groweth upon the tops of oaks; though it be affirmed by ſome, that it groweth alſo at the roots. Bacon.

AGA'ST, ă-găſt'. adj. [This word, which is uſually by later authors written aghaſt, is not improbably the true word, derived from agaze; which has been written aghaſt, from a miſtaken etymology. See AGHAST.] Struck with terrour; amazed; frighted to aſtoniſhment.

Thus roving-on,
In confus'd march forlorn, th' advent'rous bands
(With ſhudd'ring horrour pale, and eyes agaſt)
View'd firſt their lamentable lot; and found
No reſt. Milton's Par. Loſt.

A'GATE, ăg'-ăt. n. ſ. [agate, Fr. achates, Lat.] A precious ſtone of the loweſt claſs, often clouded with beautiful variegations.

In ſhape no bigger, than an agate ſtone
On the forefinger of an alderman.
Shakeſp. Rom. and Jul.

Agates are only varieties of the flint kind: they have a grey horny ground, clouded, lineated, or ſpotted with different colours, chiefly duſky, black, brown, red, and ſometimes blue. Woodward.

A'GATY, ăg'-ă-ty̆. adj. [from agate.] Partaking of the nature of agate.

An agaty flint was above two inches in diameter; the whole covered-over, with a friable cretaceous cruſt. Woodward.

To AGA'ZE, ă'-gă'ze. v. a. [from a and gaze, to ſet agazing; as, amaze, amuſe, and others.] To ſtrike with amazement; to ſtupify with ſudden terrour. The verb is now out of uſe.

So as they travell'd, ſo they 'gan eſpy
An armed knight toward them gallop faſt;
That ſeemed from ſome feared foe to fly,
Or other griſly thing that him agaſt. Fairy Queen.

AGA'ZED, ă-gă'-zĭd. participial adj. [from agaze; which ſee.] Struck with amazement; terrified to ſtupidity.

Hundreds he ſent to hell; and none durſt ſtand
him:
Here, there, and every where, enrag'd he flew:
The French exclaim'd, 'The devil was in arms!'
All the whole army ſtood agazed on him.
Shakeſp. Henry VI.

AGE, ă'je. n. ſ. [age, Fr. anciently eage, or aage: it is deduced by Menage, from ætatium, of ætas; by Junius, from aa, which (in the Teutonic dialects) ſignified long duration.]

1. Any period of time, attributed to ſomething, as the whole or part of its duration: in this ſenſe, we ſay, the age of man, the ſeveral ages of the world, the golden or iron age.

One man in his time plays many parts,
His life being ſeven ages. Shakeſp.

And Jacob lived in the land of Egypt, ſeventeen years: ſo the whole age of Jacob was an hundred forty and ſeven years. Geneſis, xlvii. 28.

2. A ſucceſſion or generation of men.

Hence laſtly ſprings care of poſterities;
For things, their kind would everlaſting make:
Hence is it, that old men do plant young trees,
The fruit whereof another age ſhall take.
Sir J. Davies.

Next to the Son,
Deſtin'd Reſtorer of mankind, by whom
New heav'n and earth ſhall to the ages riſe,
Or down from heav'n deſcend. Milton's Par. Loſt.

No declining age
E'er felt the raptures of poetic rage. Roſcommon.

3. The time, in which any particular man, or race of men, lived, or ſhall live; as, the age of heroes.

No longer now the golden age appears,
When patriarch wits ſurviv'd a thouſand years.
Pope.

4. The ſpace of a hundred years; a ſecular period; a century.

5. The latter part of life; old-age; oldneſs.

You ſee, how full of change his age is; the obſervation we have made of it, hath not been little: he always loved our ſiſter moſt; and, with what poor judgment, he hath now caſt her off!
Shakeſp. King Lear.

Boys muſt not have th' ambitious care of men;
Nor men, the weak anxieties of age. Roſcommon.

And on this forehead (where, your verſe has ſaid,
The loves delighted, and the graces play'd)
Inſulting age will trace his cruel way,
And leave ſad marks of his deſtructive ſway.
Prior.

6. Maturity; ripeneſs; years of diſcretion; full ſtrength of life.

A ſolemn admiſſion of proſelytes; all, that either, being of age, deſire that admiſſion for themſelves; or that, in infancy, are by others p ſented to that charity of the church. Ham

We thought our ſires, not with their own c tent,
Had (ere we came to age) our portion ſpent. Dr

7. In law.

In a man, the age of fourteen years is the ag
diſcretion; and twenty-one years is the full age.
a woman, at ſeven years of age, the lord her fa may diſtrain his tenants for aid to marry her the age of nine years, ſhe is dowable; at twe years, ſhe is able finally to ratify and confirm he former conſent given to matrimony; at fourte ſhe is enabled, to receive her land into her o hands; and ſhall be out of ward, at the death her anceſtor: at ſixteen, ſhe ſhall be out of wa though, at the death of her anceſtor, ſhe was with the age of fourteen years: at twenty-one, ſhe able to alienate her lands and tenements. At t age of fourteen, a ſtripling is enabled to chooſe h own guardian; at the age of fourteen, a man m
conſent to marriage. Cow

A'GED, ă'-jĕd. adj. [from age. It makes tw ſyllables in poetry.]

1. Old; ſtricken in years: applied generally to animate beings.

If the comparison do ſtand between man an man, the aged (for the moſt part) are beſt experi enced, leaſt ſubject to raſh and unadviſed paſſions
Hooke

Novelty is only in requeſt: and it is as dangerou to be aged in any kind of courſe; as it is virtuou to be conſtant in any undertaking.
Shakeſp. Meaſure for Meaſ

Kindneſs itſelf too weak a charm will prove,
To raiſe the feeble fires of aged love. Pri

2. Old; applied to inanimate things. Th uſe is rare, and commonly with ſome ten dency to the proſopopœia.

The people did not more worſhip the images gold and ivory, than they did the groves: and th
ſame, Quintilian ſaith, of the aged oaks.
Stillingfleet's Defence of Diſc. on Rom. Id

A'GEDLY, ă'-jĕd-ly̆. adv. [from aged.] Aft
the manner of an aged perſon.

AGE'N, ă-gĕn'. adv. [aȝen, Sax.] Again;

which is acted upon.

This ſucceſs is oft' truly aſcribed, unto th force of imagination upon the body agent;
then, by a ſecondary means, it may upon a diver body: as, for example; if a man carry a ring, ſome part of a beaſt, believing ſtrongly that it w
help him to obtain his love; it may make him mo induſtrious, and again more confident and perſi
ing, than otherwiſe he would be. Bacon's Nat. Hi

A'GENT, ă'-jĕnt. n. ſ.

1. An actor; he, that acts; he, that poſſeſſ
the faculty of action.

Whe

Where there is no doubt, deliberation is not xcluded, as impertinent unto the thing; but as eedleſs in regard of the agent, which ſeeth already hat to reſolve upon. Hooker.

To whom, nor agent, from the inſtrument;
or pow'r of working, from the work is known:
Davies.

Heav'n made us agents, free to good or ill;
nd forc'd it not, tho' he foreſaw the will:
reedom was firſt beſtow'd on human race,
nd preſcience only held the ſecond place.
Dryden.

A miracle is a work, exceeding the power of any eated agent, conſequently being an effect of the ivine omnipotence. South's Sermons.

A ſubſtitute; a deputy; a factor; a peron, employed to tranſact the buſineſs of nother.

—All hearts in love, uſe your own tongues;
et every eye negociate for itſelf,
nd truſt no agent. Shakeſp.

They had not the wit, to ſend to them (in any derly faſhion) agents or choſen men, to tempt em, and to treat with them. Bacon's Henry VII.

Remember, Sir, your fury of a wife;
ho, not content to be reveng'd on you,
he agents of your paſſion will purſue.
Dryden's Aureng.

That, which has the power of operating, r producing effects, upon another thing.

They produced wonderful effects, by the proper plication of agents to patients. Temple.

GELA'TION, åg-jė-lå'-ſhůn. n. ſ. [Lat. lu.] Concretion of ice.

Ayliffe's Parergon.

Theſe furniſh us, with glorious ſprings and mediums; to raiſe and aggrandize our conceptions, to warm our ſouls, to awaken the better paſſions; and to elevate them, even to a divine pitch, and that for devotional purpoſes. Watts's Impr. of the Mind.

A'GGRANDIZEMENT, åg'-grån-dî"ze-mėnt. n. ſ. [aggrandiſſement, Fr.] The ſtate of being aggrandized; the act of aggrandizing.

A'GGRANDIZER, åg'-grån-dî"-zůr. n. ſ. [from aggrandize.] The perſon, that aggrandizes or makes great another.

To AGGRA'TE, åg-grå'te. v. a. [aggratare, Ital.] To pleaſe; to treat with civilities: a word not now in uſe.

And in the midſt thereof, upon the floor,
A lovely bevy of fair ladies ſate,
Courted of many a jolly paramour;
The which them did in modeſt wiſe amate,
And each one ſought his lady to aggrate.
Fairy Queen.

To A'GGRAVATE, åg'-grå-våte. v. a. [aggravo, Lat.]

1. To make heavy: uſed, only in a metaphorical ſenſe; as, to aggravate an accuſation, or a puniſhment.

A grove hard by ſprung-up with this their change,
(His will, who reigns above!) to aggravate
Their penance; laden with fruit, like that
Which grew in paradiſe, the bait of Eve,
Us'd by the tempter. Milton's Par. Loſt.

Ambitious Turnus in the preſs appears,
And aggravating crimes augments their fears.
Dryden's Æneid.

2. To make any thing worſe, by the addition of ſome particular circumſtance, not eſſential.

This offence, in itſelf ſo heinous, was yet in him aggravated by the motive thereof; which was not malice or diſcontent, but an aſpiring mind to the papacy. Bacon's Henry VII.

AGGRAVA'TION, åg'-grå-vå'-ſhůn. n. ſ. [from aggravate.]

1. The act of aggravating, or making heavy.
2. The act of enlarging to enormity.

A painter added a pair of whiſkers to the face; and, by a little aggravation of the features, changed it into the Saracen's head. Addiſon.

3. The extrinſical circumſtances or accidents, which increaſe the guilt of a crime, or the miſery of a calamity.

He, to the ſins which he commits, hath the aggravation ſuperadded, of committing them againſt knowledge, againſt conſcience, againſt ſight of the contrary law. Hammond.

If it be weigh'd
By itſelf, with aggravations not ſurcharg'd,
Or elſe with juſt allowance counterpois'd;
I may, if poſſible, thy pardon find
The eaſier towards me, or thy hatred leſs. Milton.

A'GGREGATE, åg'-grė-gåte. adj. [aggregatus, Lat.] Framed, by the collection of any particular parts, into one maſs, body, or ſyſtem.

The ſolid reaſon of one man with unprejudicate apprehenſions, begets as firm a belief, as the authority or aggregate teſtimony of many hundreds.
Brown's Vulgar Errours.

They had, for a long time together, produced many other inept combinations, or aggregate forms of particular things, and nonſenſical ſyſtems of the whole. Ray on the Creation.

A'GGREGATE, åg'-grė-gåte. n. ſ. [from the verb.] The complex or collective reſult of the conjunction or acervation of many particulars.

The reaſon of the far greateſt part of mankind, is but an aggregate of miſtaken phantaſms; and, in things not ſenſible, a conſtant deluſion.
Glanville's Scepſis Scientifica.

A great number of living and thinking particles could not poſſibly, by their mutual contact, and preſſing, and ſtriking, compoſe one greater individual animal, with one mind and underſtanding, and a vital conſenſion of the whole body; any more, than a ſwarm of bees, or a crowd of men and women, can be conceived to make up one particular living creature, compounded and conſtituted of the aggregate of them all. Bentley.

To A'GGREGATE, åg'-grė-gåte. v. a. [aggrego, Lat.] To collect together; to accumulate; to heap many particulars into one maſs.

The aggregated ſoil
Death, with his mace petrifick, cold and dry,
As with a trident, ſmote. Milton's Par. Loſt.

AGGREGA'TION, åg'-grė-gå"-ſhůn. n. ſ. [from aggregate.]

1. Collection, or ſtate of being collected.

Their individual imperfections being great, they are moreover enlarged by their aggregation; and, being erroneous in their ſingle numbers, once huddled together, they will be errour itſelf.
Brown's Vulg. Errours.

2. The collection, or act of collecting many particulars into one whole.

The water, reſident in the abyſs, is (in all parts of it) ſtored with a conſiderable quantity of heat; and more eſpecially in thoſe, where theſe extraordinary aggregations of this fire happen.
Woodward's Nat. Hiſt.

3. The whole, compoſed by the coacervation of many particulars; an aggregate.

To AGGRE'SS, åg-grėſs'. v. n. [aggredior, aggreſſum, Lat.] To commit the firſt act of violence; to begin the quarrel.

The glorious pair advance,
With mingled anger and collected might;
To turn the war, and tell aggreſſing France,
How Britain's ſons and Britain's friends can fight.
Prior.

AGGRE'SSION, åg-grės'-ſhůn. n. ſ. [aggreſſio, Lat.] The firſt act of injury; commencement of a quarrel, by ſome act of iniquity.

There is no reſiſting of a common enemy, without an union for a mutual defence; and there may be alſo, on the other hand, a conſpiracy of common enmity and aggreſſion. L'Eſtrange.

AGGRE'SSOR, åg-grės'-sůr. n. ſ. [from aggreſs.] The perſon, that firſt commences hoſtility; the aſſaulter or invader, oppoſed to the defendant.

Fly in nature's face!
But how, if nature fly in my face firſt?
Then nature's the aggreſſor. Let her look to't.
Dryden.

It is a very unlucky circumſtance, to be obliged to retaliate the injuries of ſuch authors; whoſe works are ſo ſoon forgotten, that we are in danger already of appearing the firſt aggreſſors.
Pope and Swift.

AGGRI'EVANCE, åg-grė'-våns. n. ſ. [See GRIEVANCE.] Injury; hardſhip inflicted; wrong endured.

To Aggri'eve, åg-grē've. v. a. [from gravis, Lat. See To grieve.]

1. To give ſorrow; to cauſe grief; to vex. It is not improbable, that to grieve was originally neuter, and aggrieve the active.

But while therein I took my chief delight,
I ſaw, alas! the gaping earth devour
The ſpring, the place, and all, clean out of ſight:
Which yet aggrieves my heart, even to this hour.
Spenſer.

2. To impoſe ſome hardſhips upon; to haraſs; to hurt in one's right. This is a kind of juridical ſenſe; and whenever it is uſed now, it ſeems to bear ſome alluſion to forms of law.

Sewall, archbiſhop of York, much aggrieved with ſome practices of the pope's collectors, took all patiently. Camden.

The landed man finds himſelf aggrieved, by the falling of his rents, and the ſtreightening of his fortune; whilſt the monied man keeps-up his gain, and the merchant thrives and grows rich by trade. Locke.

Of injur'd fame, and mighty wrongs receiv'd,
Chloe complains, and wond'rouſly 's aggriev'd.
Granville.

To Aggrou'p, åg-grŏ'p. v. a. [aggropare, Ital.] To bring together into one figure; to crowd together: a term of painting.

Bodies of divers natures, which are aggrouped (or combined) together, are agreeable and pleaſant to the ſight. Dryden.

Agha'st, å-gåſt'. adj. [either the participle of agaze (ſee Agaze), and then to be written agazed, or agaſt; or from a and ȝaſt, a ghoſt; which the preſent orthography favours: perhaps they were originally different words.] Struck with horrour, as at the ſight of a ſpectre; ſtupified with terrour. It is generally applied to the external appearance.

She (ſighing ſore, as if her heart in twaine
Had riven been, and all her heart-ſtrings braſt)
With dreary drooping eyne look'd up, like one agbaſt. Spenſer.

The aged earth, agbaſt
With terrour of that blaſt,
Shall from the ſurface to the centre ſhake. Milton.

Agbaſt he wak'd; and, ſtarting from his bed,
Cold ſweat in clammy drops his limbs o'erſpread.
Dryden's Æneid.

I laugh to think, how your unſhaken Cato
Will look agbaſt, while unforeſeen deſtruction
Pours-in upon him thus from every ſide.
Addiſon's Cato.

A'GILE, åj'-îl. adj. [agile, Fr. agilis, Lat.] Nimble; ready; having the quality of being ſpeedily put in motion; active.

With that he gave his able horſe the head;
And, bending forward, ſtruck his agile heels
Againſt the panting ſides of his poor jade,
Up to the rowel-head. Shakeſp. Hen. IV.

The immediate and agile ſubſervience of the ſpirits to the empire of the mind or ſoul.
Hale's Origin of Mankind.

To guide its actions with informing care,
In peace to judge, to conquer in the war,
Render it agile, witty, valiant, ſage;
As fits the various courſe of human age. Prior.

A'gileness, åj'-îl-nĕſs. n. ſ. [from agile.] The quality of being agile; nimbleneſs; readineſs for motion; quickneſs; activity; agility.

Agi'lity, å-jîl-ŷ-tŷ. n. ſ. [agilitas, Lat. from agilis, agile.] Nimbleneſs; readineſs to move; quickneſs; activity.

A limb, over-ſtrained by lifting a weight above its power, may never recover its former agility and vigour. Watts.

AGI'LLOCHUM, å-jîl'-lô-kŭm. n. ſ. Aloeswood. A tree in the Eaſt-Indies, brought to us in ſmall bits, of a very fragrant ſcent. It is hot, drying, and accounted a ſtrengthener of the nerves in general: the beſt is of a blackiſh purple colour; and ſo light, as to ſwim upon water. Quincy.

A'GIO, å-jîo. n. ſ. [An Italian word, ſignifying eaſe or conveniency.] A mercantile term, uſed chiefly in Holland and Venice, for the difference between the value of bank notes, and the current money.
Chambers.

To AGI'ST, å-jîſt'. v. a. [from giſte, Fr. a bed or reſting-place, or from giſter, i. e. ſtabulari.] To take-in and feed the cattle of ſtrangers in the king's foreſt, and to gather the money. The officers, that do this, are called agiſtors; in Engliſh, gueſt or giſt-takers: their function is termed agiſtment; as, agiſtment upon the ſea-banks. This word agiſt is alſo uſed, for the taking-in of other men's cattle into any man's ground, at a certain rate per week. Blount.

Agi'stment, åj-îſt-mĕnt. n. ſ. [See Agist.] It is taken by the canon lawyers, in another ſenſe, than is mentioned under agiſt. They ſeem to intend by it, a modus or compoſition, or mean rate, at which ſome right or due may be reckoned: perhaps it is corrupted from addouciſſement, or adjuſtment.

Agi'stor, å-jîs'-tŭr. n. ſ. [from agiſt.] An officer of the king's foreſt. See Agist.

A'gitable, åj'-ŷ-tåbl. adj. [from agitate; agitabilis, Lat.] That, which may be agitated, or put in motion; perhaps that, which may be diſputed. See Agitate, and Agitation.

To A'GITATE, åj'-ŷ-tâte. v. a. [agito, Lat.]

1. To put in motion; to ſhake; to move nimbly; as, 'the ſurface of the waters is 'agitated by the wind; the veſſel was bro'ken, by agitating the liquor.'

2. To be the cauſe of motion; to actuate; to move.

Where dwells this ſov'reign arbitrary ſoul,
Which does the human animal controul,
Inform each part, and agitate the whole? Blackmore.

3. To affect with perturbation; as, 'the mind 'of man is agitated by various paſſions.'

4. To ſtir; to bandy from one to another; to diſcuſs; to controvert; as, to agitate a queſtion.

Though this controverſy be revived, and hotly agitated among the moderns; yet I doubt, whether it be not, in a great part, a nominal diſpute.
Boyle on Colours.

5. To contrive; to revolve; to form by laborious thought.

Formalities of extraordinary zeal and piety are never more ſtudied and elaborate, than when politicians moſt agitate deſperate deſigns. King Charles.

Agita'tion, åj'-ŷ-tå''ſhŭn. n. ſ. [from agitate; agitatio, Lat.]

1. The act of moving or ſhaking any thing.

Putrefaction aſketh reſt; for the ſubtle motion, which putrefaction requireth, is diſturbed by any agitation. Bacon.

2. The ſtate of being moved or agitated; as, 'the waters, after a ſtorm, are ſome time in 'a violent agitation.'

3. Diſcuſſion; controverſial examination.

A kind of a ſchool queſtion is ſtarted in this fable, upon reaſon and inſtinct: this deliberative proceeding of the crow was rather a logical agitation of the matter. L'Eſtrange's Fables.

4. Violent motion of the mind; perturbation; diſturbance of the thoughts.

A great perturbation in nature! to receive at once the benefit of ſleep, and do the effects of watching. In this ſlumbry agitation, beſides her walking, and other actual performances, have you heard her ſay? Shakeſp.

His mother could no longer bear the agit of ſo many paſſions, as thronged upon her.
Tatler, Nº

5. Deliberation; contrivance; the ſtate of ing conſulted upon.

The project now in agitation, for repeali the teſt act, and yet leaving the name of an liſhment to the preſent national church, is fiſtent. Swift's Miſ

Agita'tor, åj'-ŷ-tå-tŭr. n. ſ. [from He, that agitates any thing; he, who nages affairs: in which ſenſe ſeems to uſed, the agitators of the army.

A'glet, åg'-lĕt. n. ſ. [Some derive it αἴγλη, ſplendour; but it is apparently deduced from aigulette, Fr. a tag to point; and that, from aigu, ſharp.]

1. A tag of a point, curved into ſome ſentation of an animal, generally of a

He thereupon gave for the garter a chain, 200l. and his gown addreſſed with aglets, worth 25l.

Ago'g, å-gŏg′. adv. [a word of uncertain etymology. The French have the term à gogo, in low language; as, ils vivent à gogo, they live to their wiſh: from this phraſe, our word may be (perhaps) derived.]

1. In a ſtate of deſire; in a ſtate of warm imagination; heated, with the notion of ſome enjoyment; longing; ſtrongly excited.

As for the ſenſe and reaſon of it, that has little or nothing to do here: only let it ſound full and round, and chime right to the humour, which is at preſent agog; juſt as a big, long, rattling name is ſaid, to command even adoration from a Spaniard: and no doubt, with this powerful, ſenſeleſs engine, the rabble-driver ſhall be able to carry all before him. South's Sermons.

2. It is uſed, with the verbs to be, or to ſet; as, he is agog, or you may ſet him agog.

The gawdy goſſip, when ſhe's ſet agog,
In jewels dreſt, and at each ear a bob,
Goes flaunting out; and, in her trim of pride,
Thinks, all ſhe ſays or does is juſtify'd.
Dryd. Juv. Sat. vi.

This maggot has no ſooner ſet him agog, but he gets him a ſhip; freights her, builds caſtles in the air, and conceits both the Indies in his coffers. L'Eſtrange.

It has the particle on, or for, before the object of deſire.

On which, the ſaints are all agog;
And all this, for a bear and dog. Hudibr. cant. ii.

A'gony, ăg′-ŏ-nŷ. n. ſ. [ἀγὼν, Gr. agon, low Lat. agonie, Fr.]

1. The pangs of death; properly, the laſt conteſt between life and death.

Never was there more pity, in ſaving any, than in ending me; becauſe therein my agony ſhall end. Sidney.

Thou, who for me didſt feel ſuch pain,
Whoſe precious blood the croſs did ſtain,
Let not thoſe agonies be vain. Roſcommon.

2. Any violent or exceſſive pain of body or mind.

Betwixt them both, they have me done to dy,
Thro' wounds, and ſtrokes, and ſtubborn handeling;
That death were better, than ſuch agony,
As grief and fury unto me did bring. Fairy Queen.

Thee I have miſs'd, and thought it long, depriv'd
Thy preſence; agony of love! till now
Not felt, nor ſhall be twice. Milton's Par. Loſt.

3. It is particularly uſed, in devotions for our Redeemer's conflict in the garden.

To propoſe our deſires, which cannot take ſuch effect as we ſpecify, ſhall (notwithſtanding) otherwiſe procure us his heavenly grace; even as this very prayer of Chriſt obtained angels to be ſent him, as comforters in his agony. Hooker.

Ago'od, å-gůd′. adv. [a and good.] In earneſt; not fictitiouſly. Not in uſe.

At that time I made her weep agood,
For I did play a lamentable part.
Shakeſp. Two Gent. of Verona.

Agou'ty, å-gou′-tŷ. n. ſ. An animal of the Antilles; of the bigneſs of a rabbet, with bright red hair, and a little tail without hair. He has but two teeth in each jaw; holds his meat in his fore-paws, like a ſquirrel; and has a very remarkable cry: when he is angry, his hair ſtands on end, and he ſtrikes the earth with his hind-feet; and, when chaſed, he flies to a hollow tree, whence he is expelled by ſmoke. Trevoux.

To Agra'ce, å-grå′ſe. v. a. [from a and grace.] To grant favours to; to confer benefits upon: a word not now in uſe.

3. To ſettle amicably.

A form of words were quickly agreed-on between them, for a perfect combination. Clarendon.

4. To ſettle terms, by ſtipulation; to accord: followed by with.

Agree with thine adverſary quickly, whilſt thou art in the way with him; leſt at any time the adverſary deliver thee to the judge, and the judge deliver thee to the officer, and thou be caſt into priſon. Matt. v. 25.

5. To ſettle a price, between buyer and ſeller.

Friend, I do thee no wrong: didſt not thou agree with me for a penny? Matt. xx. 13.

6. To be of the ſame mind or opinion.

He exceedingly provoked or underwent, the envy, and reproach, and malice of men of all qualities and conditions, who agreed in nothing elſe. Clarendon.

Milton is a noble genius; and the world agrees, to confeſs it. Watts's Improvement of the Mind.

7. To concur; to co-operate.

Muſt the whole man (amazing thought!) return,
To the cold marble and contracted urn?
And never ſhall thoſe particles agree,
That were in life this individual he? Prior.

8. To ſettle ſome point, among many; with upon, before a noun.

Strifes and troubles would be endleſs; except they gave their common conſent all, to be ordered by ſome, whom they ſhould agree-upon. Hooker.

If men, ſkilled in chymical affairs, ſhall agree to write clearly, and keep men from being ſtunned by dark or empty words; they will be reduced, either to write nothing; or books, that may teach us ſomething. Boyle.

9. To be conſiſtent; not to contradict: with to, or with.

For many bare falſe witneſs againſt him; but their witneſs agreed not together. Mark, xiv. 56.

They, that ſtood-by, ſaid again to Peter, 'Surely thou art one of them; for thou art a Galilean, and thy ſpeech agreeth thereto.'
Mark, xiv. 70.

Which teſtimony, I the leſs ſcruple to allege; becauſe it agrees very well, with what has been affirmed to me. Boyle.

10. To ſuit with; to be accommodated to: with to, or with.

Thou feedeſt thine own people with angels food; and didſt ſend them from heaven bread, agreeing to every taſte. Wiſdom.

His principles could not be made to agree, with that conſtitution and order, which God had ſettled in the world; and therefore muſt needs claſh, with common ſenſe and experience. Locke.

11. To cauſe no diſturbance in the body.

I have often thought that, our preſcribing aſſes milk in ſuch ſmall quantities is injudicious; for undoubtedly, with ſuch as it agrees-with, it would perform much greater and quicker effects, in greater quantities. Arbuthnot.

To Agre'e, å-grē′. v. a.

1. To put an end to a variance.

He ſaw from far, or ſeemed for to ſee,
Some troublous uproar, or contentious fray;
Whereto he drew in haſte, it to agree.
Fairy Queen, b. ii.

2. To make friends; to reconcile.

The mighty rivals, whoſe deſtructive rage
Did the whole world in civil arms engage,
Are now agreed. Roſcommon.

Agre'eable, å-grē′-åbl. adj. [agréable, Fr.]

1. Suitable to; conſiſtent with; conformable to. It has the particle to, or with.

This paucity of blood is agreeable, to many other animals; as frogs, lizarde, and other fiſhes.
Brown's Vulgar Errours.

The delight, which men have in popularity; fame, ſubmiſſion, and ſubjection of other men's minds; ſeemeth to be a thing (in itſelf, without contemplation of conſequence) agreeable and grateful, to the nature of man. Bacon's Natural Hiſtory.

What you do, is not at all agreeable, either with ſo good a chriſtian, or ſo reaſonable and ſo great a perſon. Temple.

That, which is agreeable to the nature of one thing, is many times contrary to the nature of another. L'Eſtrange.

As the practice of all piety and virtue is agreeable to our reaſon; ſo is it likewiſe the intereſt, both of private perſons, and of publick ſocieties. Tillotſon.

2. In the following paſſage, the adjective is uſed (by a familiar corruption) for the adverb agreeably.

Agreeable hereunto, perhaps it might not be amiſs, to make children (as ſoon, as they are capable of it) often to tell a ſtory. Locke on Education.

3. Pleaſing; that is ſuitable, to the inclination, faculties, or temper: it is uſed in this ſenſe, both of perſons and things.

And, while the face of outward things we find
Pleaſant and fair, agreeable and ſweet;
Theſe things tranſport. Sir J. Davies.

I recollect in my mind the diſcourſes, which have paſſed between us; and call to mind a thouſand agreeable remarks, which he has made on theſe occaſions. Addiſon, Spectator, N° 241.

Agre'eableness, a-gre'-abl-neſs. n. ſ. [from agreeable.]

1. Conſiſtency with; ſuitableneſs to: with the particle to.

Pleaſant taſtes depend, not on the things themſelves, but their agreeableneſs to this or that particular palate; wherein there is great variety. Locke.

2. The quality of pleaſing. It is uſed, in an inferiour ſenſe; to mark the production of ſatisfaction, calm and laſting, but below rapture or admiration.

There will be occaſion, for largeneſs of mind, and agreeableneſs of temper. Collier of Friendſhip.

It is very much an image of that author's writing; who has an agreeableneſs that charms us, without correctneſs; like a miſtreſs, whoſe faults we ſee, but love her with them all. Pope.

3. Reſemblance; likeneſs: ſometimes, with the particle between.

This relation is likewiſe ſeen, in the agreeableneſs between man and the other parts of the univerſe. Grew's Coſmologia Sacra.

Agre'eably, a-gre'-ab-ly. adv. [from agreeable.]

1. Conſiſtently with; in a manner, ſuitable to.

They may look, into the affairs of Judea and Jeruſalem; agreeably to that, which is in the law of the Lord. 1 Eſd. xviii. 12.

2. Pleaſingly.

I did never imagine, that ſo many excellent rules could be produced ſo advantageouſly and agreeably. Swift.

Agre'ed, a-gre'd. participial adj. [from agree.] Settled by conſent.

When they had got known and agreed names, to ſignify thoſe internal operations of their own minds; they were ſufficiently furniſhed, to make known by words all their ideas. Locke.

Agre'eingness, a-gre'-ing-neſs. n. ſ. [from agree.] Conſiſtence; ſuitableneſs.

Agre'ement, a-gre'-ment. n. ſ. [agrement, Fr. in law Latin agreamentum, which Coke would willingly derive from aggregatio mentium.]

1. Concord.

What agreement is there, between the hyena and the dog? and what peace, between the rich and the poor? Eccles. xiii. 18.

2. Reſemblance of one thing to another.

The diviſion and quavering, which pleaſe ſo much in muſick, have an agreement with the glittering of light; as the moon-beams, playing upon a wave. Bacon.

Expanſion and duration have this farther agreement; that, though they are both conſidered by us as having parts, yet their parts are not ſeparable one from another. Locke.

3. Compact; bargain; concluſion of controverſy; ſtipulation.

And your covenant with death ſhall be diſannulled, and your agreement with hell ſhall not ſtand; when the overflowing ſcourge ſhall paſs through, then ye ſhall be trodden down by it. Iſaiah, xxviii. 18.

Make an agreement with me by a preſent, and come-out to me; and then eat ye, every man of his own vine, and every one of his fig-tree. 2 Kings, xviii. 31.

Frog had given his word, that he would meet the company, to talk of this agreement. Arbuthnot's Hiſtory of John Bull.

Agre'stick, or Agre'stical, a-gres'-tik, or a-gres'-ty-kal. adj. [from agreſtis, Lat.] Having relation to the country; rude; ruſtick. Dict.

Agricola'tion, a'-gri-ko-la''-ſhun. n. ſ. [from agricola, Lat.] Culture of the ground. Dict.

A'griculture, ag''-ry-cul'-ture. n. ſ. [agricultura, Lat.] The art of cultivating the ground; tillage; huſbandry, as diſtinct from paſturage.

He ſtrictly adviſeth, not to begin to ſow before the ſetting of the ſtars; which, notwithſtanding, without injury to agriculture, cannot be obſerved in England. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

That there was tillage beſtowed upon the antediluvian ground, Moſes does indeed intimate in general: what ſort of tillage that was, is not expreſſed. I hope to ſhew that, their agriculture was nothing near ſo laborious and troubleſome, nor did it take up ſo much time, as ours doth. Woodward's Natural Hiſtory.

The diſpoſition of Ulyſſes inclined him to war, rather than the more lucrative, but more ſecure, method of life, by agriculture and huſbandry. Broome's Notes on the Odyſſey.

A'grimony, ag''-ry-mun'-ny. n. ſ. [agrimonia, Lat.] The name of a plant. The leaves are rough, hairy, pennated, and grow alternately on the branches; the flower-cup conſiſts of one leaf, which is divided into five ſegments: the flowers have five or ſix leaves, and are formed into a long ſpike; which expands, in form of a roſe; the fruit is oblong, dry, and prickly, like the burdock; in each of which, are contained two kernels. Miller.

To Agri'se, ag-ri'ze. v. n. [aᵹriſan, Sax.] To look terrible. Out of uſe. Spenſer.

To Agri'se, ag-ri'ze. v. a. To terrify. Spenſ.

Agro'und, a-grou'nd. adv. [from a and ground.]

1. Stranded; hindered by the ground, from paſſing farther.

With our great ſhips, we durſt not approach the coaſt; we having been, all of us, aground. Sir W. Raleigh's Eſſays.

Say, what you ſeek, and whither were you bound?
Were you, by ſtreſs of weather, caſt aground?
Dryden's Æneid.

2. It is likewiſe figuratively uſed, for being hindered in the progreſs of affairs; as, the negociators were aground at that objection.

A'GUE, a'-gue. n. ſ. [aigu, Fr. acute.] An intermitting fever, with cold fits ſucceeded by hot: the cold fit is, in popular language, more particularly called the ague; and the hot, the fever.

Our caſtle's ſtrength
Will laugh a ſiege to ſcorn. Here let them lie,
Till famine and the ague eat them up. Shakeſp.

Though
He feels the heats of youth, and colds of age;
Yet neither tempers nor corrects the other;
As if there were an ague in his nature,
That ſtill inclines to one extreme. Denham's Sophy.

A'gued, a'-gu-ed. adj. [from ague.] Struck with an ague; ſhivering; chill; cold: a word in little uſe.

All hurt behind, backs red, and faces pale,
With flight and agued fear! Shakeſp. Coriolanus.

A'gue-fit, a'-gue-fit. n. ſ. [from ague and fit.] The paroxyſm of the ague.

This ague-fit of fear is overblown.
Shakeſp. Rich. II.

A'gue-proof, a''-gue-pro'f. adj. [from ague and proof.] Proof againſt agues; able to reſiſt the cauſes, which produce agues, without being affected.

When the rain came to wet me once, and the wind to make me chatter; when the thunder would not peace at my bidding; there I found 'em, there I ſmelt 'em out. They told me, I was every thing: 'tis a lie; I am not ague-proof. Shakeſp. King Lear.

A'gue-tree, a''-gue-tree'. n. ſ. [from ague and tree.] A name, ſometimes given to ſaſſafras. Dict.

To Agui'se, a-gyi'ze. v. a. [from a and guiſe. See Guise.] To dreſs; to adorn; to deck: a word, not in uſe now.

As her fantaſtic wit did moſt delight,
Sometimes her head ſhe fondly would aguiſe
With gaudy garlands, or freſh flowers dight
About her neck, or rings of ruſhes plight.
Fairy Queen.

A'guish, a'-gu-iſh. adj. [from ague] Having the qualities of an ague.

So calm, and ſo ſerene, but now:
What means this change, on Myra's brow?
Her aguiſh love now glows and burns,
Then chills and ſhakes, and the cold fit returns.
Granville.

A'guishness, a'-gu-iſh-neſs'. n. ſ. [from aguiſh.] The quality, of reſembling an ague.

Ah, a'. Interjection.

1. A word, noting ſometimes diſlike and cenſure.

Ah! ſinful nation! a people, laden with iniquity, a ſeed of evil-doers; children, that are corrupters! they have forſaken the Lord. Iſaiah, i. 4.

2. Sometimes, contempt and exultation.

Let them not ſay in their hearts, Ah! ſo we would have it: let them not ſay, we have ſwallowed him up. Pſalm xxxv. 25.

3. Sometimes, and moſt frequently, compaſſion and complaint.

In youth alone, unhappy mortals live;
But, ah! the mighty bliſs is fugitive:
Diſcolour'd ſickneſs, anxious labour come,
And age and death's inexorable doom.
Dryd. Virg. Georg. iii.

Ah me! the blooming pride of May,
And that of beauty, are but one:
At morn, both flouriſh bright and gay;
Both fade at evening, pale and gone. Prior.

4. When it is followed by that, it expreſſes vehement deſire.

In goodneſs, as in greatneſs, they excel.
Ah! that we lov'd ourſelves, but half ſo well!
Dryden's Juvenal.

Aha'! Aha'! a-ha', a-ha'. interjection. A word, intimating triumph and contempt.

They opened their mouth wide againſt me, and ſaid, aha! aha! our eye hath ſeen it. Pſalm xxxv. 21.

Ahe'ad, ȁ-hĕd'. adv. [from a and head.]

1. Farther onward, than another: a ſea term.

And now the mighty Centaur ſeems to lead;
And now the ſpeedy Dolphin gets ahead.
Dryden's Æneid.

2. Headlong; precipitantly: uſed of animals, and figuratively of men.

It is mightily the fault of parents, guardians, tutors, and governours, that ſo many men miſcarry. They ſuffer them at firſt, to run ahead; and, when perverſe inclinations are advanced into habits, there is no dealing with them. L'Eſtrange's Fables.

Ahe'ight, ȁ-hī'te. adv. [from a and height.] Aloft; on high.

But have I fall'n or no,—
—From the dread ſummit of this chalky bourne?
Look up aheight! the ſhrill-gorg'd lark ſo far
Cannot be ſeen or heard. Shakeſp. King Lear.

AHOUA'I, ȁ-hoŭ'-ȁ. n. ſ. The name of a poiſonous plant.

To* AID, ȁ'de. v. a. [aider, Fr. from adjutare, Lat.] To help; to ſupport; to ſuccour.

Into the lake he leapt, his lord to aid;
And, of him catching hold, him ſtrongly ſtaid
From drowning. Fairy Queen.

Neither ſhall they give any thing unto them, that make war upon them, or aid them with victuals, weapons, money, or ſhips. Maccabees, viii. 26.

By the loud trumpet, which our courage aids,
We learn that, ſound as well as ſenſe perſuades.
Roſcommon.

Aid, ȁ'de. n. ſ. [from To aid.]

1. Help; ſupport.

The memory of uſeful things may receive conſiderable aid, if they are thrown into verſe. Watts's Improvement of the Mind.

Your patrimonial ſtores in peace poſſeſs;
Undoubted all your filial claim confeſs;
Your private right ſhould impious power invade,
The peers of Ithaca would arm in aid. Pope's Od.

2. The perſon, that gives help or ſupport; a helper; auxiliary.

Thou haſt ſaid, it is not good, that man ſhould be alone; let us make unto him an aid, like unto himſelf. Tobit, viii. 6.

Great aids came-in to him, partly upon miſſives, and partly voluntaries from many parts. Bacon's Henry VII.

3. In law.

A ſubſidy. Aid is alſo particularly uſed, in matter of pleading, for a petition made in court, for the calling-in of help from another, that hath an intereſt in the cauſe in queſtion: and is likewiſe, both to give ſtrength to the party, that prays in aid of him; and alſo, to avoid a prejudice accruing towards his own right, except it be prevented: as, when a tenant for term of life, courteſy, &c. being impleaded touching his eſtate, he may pray in aid of him in the reverſion; that is, entreat the court, that he may be called-in by writ, to allege what he thinks good for the maintenance both of his right and his own. Cowell.

Ai'dance, ȁ'-dănſe. n. ſ. [from aid.] Help; ſupport: a word little uſed.

Oft have I ſeen a timely parted ghoſt,
Of aſhy ſemblance, meagre, pale, and bloodleſs,
Being all deſcended to the lab'ring heart;
Who, in the conflict that it holds with death,
Attracts the ſame, for aidance 'gainſt the enemy.
Shakeſp. Henry VI.

Ai'dant, ȁ'-dănt. adj. [aidant, Fr.] Helping; helpful: not in uſe.

All you, unpubliſh'd virtues of the earth,
Spring with my tears; be aidant and remediate,
In the good man's diſtreſs. Shakeſp. King Lear.

Ai'der, ȁ'-dŭr. n. ſ. [from aid.] He, that brings aid or help; a helper; an ally.

All along, as he went, were puniſhed the adherents and aiders of the late rebels. Bacon's Henry VII.

Ai'dless, ȁ'de-lĕſs. adj. [from aid and leſs, an inſeparable particle.] Helpleſs; unſupported; undefended.

Alone he enter'd
The mortal gate o' th' city, which he painted
With ſhunleſs deſtiny: aidleſs came off;
And with a ſudden re-enforcement, ſtruck
Corioli, like a planet. Shakeſp. Coriolanus.
He had met
Already, ere my beſt ſpeed could prevent,
The aidleſs innocent lady, his wiſh'd prey.
Milton's Comus.

A'iguLet, ȁ'-gŭ-lĕt. n. ſ. [aigulet, Fr.] A point, with tags; points of gold, at the end of fringes.

It all above beſprinkled was throughout
With golden aigulets, that gliſter'd bright,
Like twinkling ſtars; and, all the ſkirt about,
Was hemm'd with golden fringes. Fairy Queen.

To* AIL, ȁ'le. v. a. [eʒlan, Sax. to be troubleſome.]

1. To pain; to trouble; to give pain.

And the angel of God called to Hagar out of heaven, and ſaid unto her; 'What aileth thee, 'Hagar? fear not! for God hath heard the voice 'of the lad, where he is.' Gen. xxi. 17.

2. It is uſed (in a ſenſe leſs determinate) for to affect in any manner; as, ſomething ails me, that I cannot ſit ſtill; what ails the man, that he laughs without reaſon?

Love ſmiled, and thus ſaid; 'Want, joined to 'deſire, is unhappy; but, if he nought do deſire, 'what can Heraclitus ail?' Sidney.

What ails me, that I cannot loſe thy thought!
Command, the empreſs hither to be brought:
I, in her death, ſhall ſome diverſion find;
And rid my thoughts at once, of woman-kind.
Dryden's Tyrannick Love.

3. To feel pain; to be incommoded.

4. It is remarkable, that this word is never uſed, but with ſome indefinite term, or the word nothing: as, What ails him? What does he ail? He ails ſomething; he ails nothing. Something ails him; nothing ails him. Thus we never ſay, a fever ails him, or he ails a fever; or uſe definite terms with this verb.

Ail, ȁ'le. n. ſ. [from the verb.] A diſeaſe.

Or heal, O Narſes, thy obſcener ail. Pope.

Ai'lment, ȁ'le-mĕnt. n. ſ. [from ail.] Pain; diſeaſe.

Little ailments oft attend the fair,
Not decent for a huſband's eye or ear. Granville.

I am never ill, but I think of your ailments; and repine, that they mutually hinder our being together. Swift's Letters.

A'iling, ȁ'le-ĭng. participial adj. [from To ail.] Sickly; full of complaints.

To* AIM, ȁ'm. v. n. [It is derived by Skinner from eſmer, to point at; a word which I have not found.]

1. To endeavour, to ſtrike with a miſſive weapon; to direct towards: with the particle at.

Aim'ſt thou at princes, all amaz'd they ſaid,
The laſt of games? Pope's Odyſſey.

2. To point the view, or direct the ſteps, towards any thing; to tend towards; to endeavour to reach or obtain: with to formerly, now only with at.

Lo, here the world is bliſs; ſo here the end,
To which all men do aim, rich to be made;
Such grace now, to be happy, is before thee laid.
Fairy Queen.

Another kind there is; which although we deſire for itſelf, as health, and virtue, and knowledge; nevertheleſs they are not the laſt mark, whereat we aim; but have their further end, whereunto they are referred. Hooker.

Swoln with applauſe, and aiming ſtill at more,
He now provokes the ſea-gods from the ſhore.
Dryden's Æneid.

Religion tends, to the eaſe and pleaſure, the peace and tranquillity, of our minds; which, all the wiſdom of the world did always aim at, as the utmoſt felicity of this life. Tillotſon.

3. To gueſs.

To* Aim, ȁ'm. v. a. To direct a miſſile weapon; more particularly taken, for the act of pointing the weapon by the eye, before its diſmiſſion from the hand.

And proud Ideus, Priam's charioteer,
Who ſhakes his empty reins, and aims his airy ſpear. Dryden.

Aim, ȁ'm. n. ſ. [from the verb.]

1. The direction of a miſſile weapon.

Aſcanius, young and eager of his game,
Soon bent his bow, uncertain of his aim:
But the dire fiend the fatal arrow guides,
Which pierc'd his bowels through his panting
ſides. Dryden, Æn. vii. l. 691.

2. The point, to which the thing thrown is directed.

That arrows fled not ſwifter toward their aim;
Than did our ſoldiers, aiming at their ſafety,
Fly from the field. Shakeſp. Henry IV. p. ii.

3. In a figurative ſenſe, a purpoſe; a ſcheme; an intention; a deſign.

He truſted, to have equall'd the Moſt High,
If he oppos'd: and, with ambitious aim,
Againſt the throne and monarchy of God,
Rais'd impious war. Milt. Par. Loſt, b. i. l. 41.

But ſee, how oft ambitious aims are croſt;
And chiefs contend, till all the prize is loſt. Pope.

4. The object of a deſign; the thing, after which any one endeavours.

The ſafeſt way is to ſuppoſe, that the epiſtle has but one aim; till (by a frequent peruſal of it) you are forced to ſee, there are diſtinct independent parts. Locke's Eſſay on St. Paul's Epiſtles.

5. Conjecture; gueſs.

It is impoſſible, by aim to tell it; and, for experience and knowledge thereof, I do not think that, there was ever any of the particulars thereof. Spenſer on Ireland.

There is a hiſtory in all men's lives,
Figuring the nature of the times deceas'd:
The which obſerv'd, a man may propheſy
With a near aim, of the main chance of things,
As yet not come to life; which, in their ſeeds
And weak beginnings, lie intreaſured.
Shakeſp. Henry IV.

AIR, ȁ'r. n. ſ. [air, Fr. aër, Lat.]

1. The element, encompaſſing the terraqueous globe.

If I were to tell, what I mean by the word air; I may ſay, it is that fine matter, which we breathe-in and breathe-out continually: or it is that thin fluid body, in which the birds fly, a little above the earth; or it is that inviſible matter, which fills all places near the earth, or, which immediately encompaſſes the globe of earth and water. Watts's Logick.

2. The ſtate of the air; or the air, conſidered with regard to health.

There be many good and healthful airs, that do appear by habitation and other proofs; that differ not in ſmell from other airs. Bacon's Natural Hiſtory, N° 904.

3. Air in motion; a ſmall gentle wind.

Freſh gales and gentle airs
Whiſper'd it to the woods; and from their wings
Flung roſe, flung odours from the ſpicy ſhrub,
Diſporting! Milton's Paradiſe Loſt, b. viii. l. 515.

But ſafe repoſe, without an air of breath,
Dwells here; and a dumb quiet, next to death.
Dryden.

Let vernal airs through trembling oſiers play,
And Albion's cliffs reſound the rural lay.
Pope's Paſtorals.

4. Scent; vapour.

Stinks, which the noſtrils ſtraight abhor, are not the moſt pernicious; but ſuch airs, as have ſome ſimilitude with man's body; and ſo inſinuate themſelves, and betray the ſpirits. Bacon.

5. Blaſt; peſtilential vapour.

All the ſtor'd vengeances of heaven fall
On her ingrateful top! ſtrike her young bones,
You taking airs, with lameneſs. Shak. King Lear.

6. Any thing, light or uncertain; that is as light, as air.

O momentary grace of mortal men!
Which we more hunt for, than the grace of God,
Who builds his hope in air of your fair looks,
Lives like a drunken ſailor on a maſt,
Ready with ev'ry nod to tumble down.
Shakeſp. Richard III.

7. The open weather; air unconfined.

The garden was inclos'd within the ſquare,
Where young Emilia took the morning air.
Dryd. Fables.

8. Vent; utterance; emiſſion into the air.

I would have aſk'd you, if I durſt for ſhame,
If ſtill you lov'd: you gave it air before me.
But ah! why were we not both of a ſex?
For then we might have lov'd, without a crime.
Dryden.

9. Publication; expoſure, to the publick view and knowledge.

I am ſorry to find, it has taken air, that I have ſome hand in theſe papers. Pope's Letters.

10. Intelligence; information. This is not now in uſe.

It grew from the airs, which the princes and ſtates abroad received from their ambaſſadors and agents here. Bacon's Henry VII.

11. Muſick, whether light or ſerious; ſound; air modulated.

This muſick crept by me upon the waters,
Allaying both their fury and my paſſion,
With its ſweet air. Shakeſp. Tempeſt.

Call-in ſome muſick. I have heard, ſoft airs
Can charm our ſenſes, and expel our cares.
Denham's Sophy.

The ſame airs, which ſome entertain with moſt delightful tranſports, to others are importune.
Glanville's Scepſis Scientifica.

Since we have ſuch a treaſury of words, ſo proper for the airs of muſick; I wonder that, perſons ſhould give ſo little attention.
Addiſon, Spectator, N° 406.

Borne on the ſwelling notes, our ſouls aſpire;
While ſolemn airs improve the ſacred fire,
And angels lean from heav'n to hear.
Pope's St. Cæcilia.

—When the ſoul is ſunk with cares,
Exalts her in enliv'ning airs. Pope's St. Cæcilia.

12. Poetry; a ſong.

The repeated air
Of ſad Electra's poet had the pow'r,
To ſave th' Athenian walls from ruin bare.
Paradiſe Regained.

13. The mien, or manner, of the perſon; the look.

Her graceful innocence, her ev'ry air,
Of geſture, or leaſt action, over-aw'd
His malice. Milton's Paradiſe Loſt.

For the air of youth
Hopeful and cheerful, in thy blood ſhall reign
A melancholy damp of cold and dry,
To weigh thy ſpirits down, and (laſt) conſume
The balm of life. Milton's Paradiſe Loſt.

But, having the life before us, beſides the experience of all they knew; it is no wonder, to hit ſome airs and features which they have miſſed.
Dryden on Dramatick Poetry.

There is ſomething wonderfully divine, in the airs of this picture. Addiſon on Italy.

Yet ſhould the Graces all thy figures place,
And breathe an air divine on ev'ry face. Pope.

14. An affected or laboured manner or geſture; as, a lofty air, a gay air.

Whom Ancus follows, with a fawning air;
But vain within, and proudly popular.
Dryd. Æneid, vi.

There are of theſe ſort of beauties, which laſt but for a moment; as, the different airs of an aſſembly, upon the ſight of an unexpected and uncommon object; ſome particularity of a violent paſſion, ſome graceful action, a ſmile, a glance of an eye, a diſdainful look, a look of gravity, and a thouſand other ſuch like things.
Dryden's Dufreſnoy.

Their whole lives were employed, in intrigues of ſtate; and they naturally give themſelves airs of kings and princes, of which the miniſters of other nations are only the repreſentatives.
Addiſon's Remarks on Italy.

To curl their waving hairs,
Aſſiſt their bluſhes, and inſpire their airs. Pope.

He aſſumes and affects an entire ſet of very different airs: he conceives himſelf, a being of a ſuperiour nature. Swift.

15. Appearance.

As it was communicated with the air of a ſecret, it ſoon found its way into the world.
Pope's Ded. to Rape of the Lock.

16. [In horſemanſhip.] Airs denote the artificial or practiſed motions of a managed horſe. Chambers.

To Air, å'r. v. a. [from the noun air.]

1. To expoſe to the air; to open to the air.

The others make it, a matter of ſmall commendation in itſelf; if they, who wear it, do nothing elſe, but air the robes, which their place requireth. Hooker, b. v. § 29.

Fleas breed principally of ſtraw or mats, where there hath been a little moiſture; or the chamber and bed-ſtraw kept cloſe, and not aired.
Bacon's Natural Hiſtory, N° 696.

We have had, in our time, experience twice or thrice; when, both the judges that ſat upon the jail, and numbers of thoſe that attended the buſineſs, or were preſent, ſickened upon it, and died. Therefore, it were good wiſdom, that (in ſuch caſes) the jail were aired, before they were brought forth. Bacon's Nat. Hiſtory, N° 914.

As the ants were airing their proviſions one winter, up comes a hungry graſshopper to them, and begs a charity. L'Eſtrange's Fables.

Or wicker-baſkets weave, or air the corn.
Dryden's Virgil.

2. To gratify, by enjoying the open air, with the reciprocal pronoun.

Nay, ſtay a little———
Were you but riding-forth to air yourſelf,
Such parting were too petty. Shakeſp. Cymbeline.

I aſcended the higheſt hills of Bagdat, in order to paſs the reſt of the day in meditation and prayer. As I was here airing myſelf, on the tops of the mountains; I fell into a profound contemplation, on the vanity of human life. Addiſon, Spect.

3. To air liquors; to warm them, by the fire: a term, uſed in converſation.

4. To breed in neſts. In this ſenſe, it is derived from aerie, a neſt: it is now out of uſe.

You may add their buſy, dangerous, diſcourteous, yea and ſometimes deſpiteful ſtealing, one from another, of the eggs and young ones; who if they were allowed to air naturally and quietly, there would be ſtore ſufficient, to kill not only the partridges, but even all the good houſe-wives' chickens, in a country.
Carew's Survey of Cornwall.

A'ir-bladder, år'-blåd-důr. n. ſ. [from air and bladder.]

1. Any cuticle or veſicle, filled with air.

The pulmonary artery and vein paſs along the ſurfaces of theſe air-bladders, in an infinite number of ramifications. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

2. The bladder in fiſhes; by the contraction and dilatation of which, they vary the properties of their weight to that of their bulk, and riſe or fall.

Though the air-bladder in fiſhes ſeems neceſſary for ſwimming, yet ſome are ſo formed, as to ſwim without it. Cudworth.

A'ir-built, år'-bilt. adj. [from air and build.] Built in the air, without any ſolid foundation.

Hence the fool's paradiſe, the ſtateſman's ſcheme,
The air-built caſtle, and the golden dream,
The maid's romantick wiſh, the chymiſt's flame,
And poet's viſion of eternal fame,
Pope's Dunciad, b. iii.

Air-drawn, å'r-drån. adj. [from air and drawn.] Drawn or painted in air: a word not uſed.

This is the very painting of your fear;
This is the air-drawn dagger, which (you ſaid)
Led you to Duncan. Shakeſp. Macbeth.

A'irer, å'-růr. n. ſ. [from To air.] He, that expoſes to the air.

A'ir-gun, å'r-gůn. ſ. A gun, charged with air inſtead of powder.

A'ir-hole, å'r-hȯle. n. ſ. [from air and hole.] A hole to admit the air.

A'iriness, å'-rŷ-nĕſs. n. ſ. [from airy.]

1. Openneſs; expoſure to the air.

2. Lightneſs; gaiety; levity.

The French have indeed taken worthy pains, to make claſſick learning ſpeak their language: if they have not ſucceeded, it muſt be imputed to a certain talkativeneſs and airineſs repreſented in their tongue; which will never agree, with the ſedateneſs of the Romans, or the ſolemnity of the Greeks. Felton.

A'iring, å'-ring. n. ſ. [from air.] A ſhort journey or ramble, to enjoy the free air.

This little fleet ſerves, only to fetch them wine and corn, and to give their ladies an airing in the ſummer ſeaſon. Addiſon.

A'irless, å'r-lĕſs. adj. [from air.] Wanting communication with the free air.

Nor ſtony tower, nor walls of beaten braſs,
Nor airleſs dungeon, nor ſtrong links of iron,
Can be retentive to the ſtrength of ſpirit.
Shakeſp. Julius Cæſar.

A'irling, år'-ling. n. ſ. [from air, for gayety.] A young, light, thoughtleſs, gay perſon.

Some more there be, ſlight airlings, will be won
With dogs, and horſes, and perhaps a whore.
Ben Jonſon.

A'ir-pump, å'r-půmp. n. ſ. [from air and pump.] A machine, by whoſe means the air is exhauſted out of proper veſſels. The principle, on which it is built, is the elaſticity of the air; as that, on which the water-pump is founded, is on the gravity of the air. The invention of this curious inſtrument is aſcribed to Otto de Guerick, conſul of Magdebourg, in 1654: but his machine laboured under ſeveral defects; the force, neceſſary to work it, was very great; and the progreſs, very ſlow; it was to be kept under water, and allowed of no change of ſubjects for experiments. Mr. Boyle, with the aſſiſtance of Dr. Hooke, removed ſeveral inconveniencies; though ſtill the working was laborious, by reaſon of the preſſure of the atmoſphere at every exſuction: this labour has been ſince removed, moved, by Mr. Hawkſbee; who (by adding a ſecond barrel and piſton, to riſe as the other fell, and fall as it roſe) made the preſſure of the atmoſphere on the deſcending one, of as much ſervice, as it was of diſſervice in the aſcending one. Vream made a further improvement, by reducing the alternate motion of the hand and winch to a circular one. Chambers.

The air, that, in exhauſted receivers of air-pumps, is exhaled from minerals, and fleſh, and fruits, and liquors, is as true and genuine, as to elaſticity and denſity, or rarefaction, as that we reſpire in: and yet this factitious air is ſo far, from being fit to be breathed in; that it kills animals in a moment, even ſooner than the abſence of air, or a vacuum itſelf. Bentley.

A'IR-SHAFT, å'r-ſhåft. n. ſ. [from air and ſhaft.] A paſſage, for the air into mines and ſubterraneous places.

By the ſinking of an air-ſhaft, the air hath liberty to circulate, and carry-out the ſteams both of the miners breath and the damps, which would otherwiſe ſtagnate there. Ray.

A'IRY, å'-rŷ. adj. [from air; aëreus, Lat.]

1. Compoſed of air.

The firſt is the tranſmiſſion, or emiſſion, of the thinner and more airy parts of bodies; as, in odours and infections: and this is, of all the reſt, the moſt corporeal. Bacon.

2. Relating to the air; belonging to the air.

There are fiſhes, that have wings, that are no ſtrangers to the airy region. Boyle.

3. High in air.

Whole rivers here forſake the fields below;
And, wond'ring at their height, through airy channels flow. Addiſon.

4. Open to the free air.

Joy'd to range abroad in freſh attire,
Thro' the wide compaſs of the airy coaſt. Spenſer.

5. Light as air; thin; unſubſtantial; without ſolidity.

I hold ambition of ſo airy and light a quality, that it is but a ſhadow's ſhadow. Shakeſp. Hamlet.

Still may the dog the wand'ring troops conſtrain
Of airy ghoſts, and vex the guilty train. Dryden.

6. Wanting reality; having no ſteady foundation in truth or nature; vain; trifling.

Nor think, with wind
Of airy threats to awe, whom yet with deeds
Thou can'ſt not. Milton's Paradiſe Loſt.

Nor (to avoid ſuch meanneſs) ſoaring high,
With empty ſound and airy notions fly.
Roſcommon.

I have found a complaint, concerning the ſcarcity of money; which occaſioned many airy propoſitions, for the remedy of it.
Temple's Miſcellanies.

7. Fluttering; looſe; as if to catch the air; full of levity.

The painters draw their nymphs, in thin and airy habits; but the weight of gold and of embroideries is reſerved, for queens and goddeſſes.
Dryden.

By this name of ladies, he means all young perſons, ſlender, finely ſhaped, airy and delicate: ſuch, as are nymphs and Naïads. Dryden.

8. Gay; ſprightly; full of mirth; vivacious; lively; ſpirited; light of heart.

He, that is merry and airy at ſhore, when he ſees a ſad tempeſt on the ſea; or dances, when God thunders from heaven; regards not, when God ſpeaks to all the world. Taylor.

AISLE, i'le. n. ſ. [Thus the word is written by Addiſon, but perhaps improperly; ſince it ſeems deducible only from, either aile a wing, or allée a path; and is therefore to be written aile.] The walks in a church, or wings of a quire.

The abbey is by no means ſo magnificent, as one would expect from its endowments. The church is one huge nef, with a double aiſle to it; and, at each end, is a large quire. Addiſon.

AIT, or EYGHT, å'te, or è't. n. ſ. [ſuppoſed, by Skinner, to be corrupted from iſlet.] A ſmall iſland in a river.

A'JUTAGE, å-dzhůt'-å'je. n. ſ. [ajutage, Fr.] An additional pipe to water-works. Dict.

To AKE, å'ke. v. n. [from ἄχος, Gr. and therefore more grammatically written ache.]

1. To feel a laſting pain, generally of the internal parts; diſtinguiſhed from ſmart, which is commonly uſed of uneaſineſs in the external parts: but this is no accurate account.

To ſue, and be deny'd ſuch common grace,
My wounds ake at you! Shakeſp.

Let our finger ake; and it endues
Our other healthful members, with a ſenſe
Of pain. Shakeſp.

Were the pleaſure of drinking accompanied, the very moment, with that ſick ſtomach and aking head, which in ſome men are ſure to follow; I think, no body would ever let wine touch his lips. Locke.

His limbs muſt ake, with daily toils oppreſt;
Ere long-wiſh'd night brings neceſſary reſt.
Prior.

2. It is frequently applied, in an improper ſenſe, to the heart; as, the heart akes; to imply grief or fear. Shakeſpeare has uſed it, ſtill more licentiouſly, of the ſoul.

My ſoul akes
To know, when two authorities are up,
Neither ſupreme, how ſoon confuſion
May enter. Shakeſp. Coriolanus.

Here ſhame diſſuades him, there his fear prevails;
And each, by turns, his aking heart aſſails.
Addiſon.

AKI'N, å-kin'. adj. [from a and kin.]

1. Related to; allied by blood: uſed of perſons

I do not envy thee, Pamela; only I wiſh, that being thy ſiſter in nature, I were not ſo far off akin in fortune. Sidney.

2. Allied to by nature; partaking of the ſame properties: uſed of things.

The cankered paſſion of envy is nothing akin to the ſilly envy of the aſs. L'Eſtrange's Fables.

Some limbs again, in bulk or ſtature
Unlike, and not akin by nature,
In concert act, like modern friends;
Becauſe one ſerves the other's ends. Prior.

He ſeparates it from queſtions, with which it may have been complicated; and diſtinguiſhes it from queſtions, which may be akin to it.
Watts's Improvement of the Mind.

AL, ATTLE, ADLE, ål', åt'l, åd'l, do all ſeem to be corruptions of the Saxon Æþel, noble, famous; as alſo Alling and Adling are corruptions of Æþelinᵹ, noble, ſplendid, famous.

Al, Ald, being initials, are derived from the Saxon Ealꝺ, ancient; and ſo, (oftentimes) the initial all, being melted by the Normans from the Saxon ealꝺ.
Gibſon's Camden.

A'LABASTER, ål''-å-bås'-tůr. n. ſ. [ἀλάβαςρον.] A kind of ſoft marble, eaſier to cut, and leſs durable, than the other kinds: ſome is white, which is moſt common; ſome of the colour of horn, and tranſparent; ſome yellow, like honey, marked with veins. The ancients uſed it, to make boxes for perfumes. Savary.

Yet I'll not ſhed her blood;
Nor ſcar that whiter ſkin of hers, than ſnow;
And ſmooth, as monumental alabaſter. Shakeſp.

A'LABASTER, ål''-å-bås'-tůr. adj. Made of alabaſter.

I cannot forbear mentioning part of an alabaſter column, found in the ruins of Livia's portico. It is of the colour of fire; and may be ſeen, over the high altar of St. Maria in Campitello; for they have cut it, into two pieces; and fixed it, in the ſhape of a croſs, in a hole of the wall; ſo that the light paſſing through it, makes it look (to thoſe in the church) like a huge tranſparent croſs of amber. Addiſon on Italy.

ALA'CK, å-låk'. interject. [This word ſeems only the corruption of alas.] Alas; an expreſſion of ſorrow.

Alack! when once our grace we have forgot,
Nothing goes right; we would, and we would not.
Shakeſp. Meaſure for Meaſure.

At thunder now no more I ſtart,
Than at the rumbling of a cart:
Nay (what's incredible) alack!
I hardly hear a woman's clack. Swift.

ALA'CKADAY, å-låk'-å-då''. interject. [This, like the former, is for alas the day.] A word, noting ſorrow and melancholy.

ALA'CRIOUSLY, å-låk'-ryůs-lŷ. adv. [from alacrious, ſuppoſed to be formed from alacris: but, of alacrious, I have found no example.] Cheerfully; without dejection.

Epaminondas alacriouſly expired, in confidence that he left behind him a perpetual memory of the victories he had achieved for his country.
Government of the Tongue.

ALA'CRITY, å-låk'-krŷ-tŷ. n. ſ. [alacritas, Lat.] Cheerfulneſs, expreſſed by ſome outward token; ſprightlineſs; gayety; livelineſs; cheerful willingneſs.

Theſe orders were, on all ſides, yielded unto with no leſs alacrity of mind; than cities, unable to hold out any longer, are wont to ſhew; when they take conditions, ſuch as it liketh him to offer them, which hath them in the narrow ſtraits of advantage. Hooker.

Give me a bowl of wine:
I have not that alacrity of ſpirit,
Nor cheer of mind, that I was wont to have.
Shakeſp.

He, glad that now his ſea ſhould find a ſhore,
With freſh alacrity and force renew'd,
Springs upward. Milton's Par. Loſt.

Never did men more joyfully obey,
Or ſooner underſtood the ſign to fly:
With ſuch alacrity they bore away,
As if, to praiſe them, all the ſtates ſtood by.
Dryden.

ALAMI'RE, å-lå-mi'-rå. n. ſ. The loweſt note but one, in Guido Aretine's ſcale of muſick.

ALAMO'DE, ål-å-mo'de. adv. [à la mode, Fr.] According to the faſhion: a low word. It is uſed likewiſe by ſhopkeepers, for a kind of thin ſilken manufacture.

ALA'ND, å-lånd'. adv. [from a for at, and land.] At land; landed; on the dry ground.

He only, with the prince his couſin, were caſt aland; far off from the place, whither their deſires would have guided them. Sidney.

Three more fierce Eurus, in his angry mood,
Daſh'd on the ſhallows of the moving ſand;
And, in mid ocean, left them moor'd aland.
Dryden.

ALA'RM, å-lå'rm. n. ſ. [from the French, à l'arme, to arms; as, crier à l'arme, to call to arms.]

1. A cry, by which men are ſummoned to their arms, as, at the approach of an enemy.

When the congregation is to be gathered together, you ſhall blow; but you ſhall not ſound an alarm. Numbers.

God himſelf is with us, for our captain; and his prieſts with ſounding trumpets, to cry alarms againſt you. Chron. xiii. 12.

The trumpet's loud clangour
Excites us to arms,
With ſhrill notes of anger,
And mortal alarms. Dryden.

Taught by this ſtroke, renounce the war's alarms;
And learn to tremble, at the name of arms. Pope's Iliad.

2. A cry, or notice, of any danger approaching; as, an alarm of fire.

3. Any tumult or diſturbance.

Crowds of rivals, for thy mother's charms,
Thy palace fill with inſults and alarms. Pope's Odyſſey.

To ALA'RM, å-lå'rm, v. a. [from alarm, the noun.]

1. To call to arms.

2. To diſturb; as, with the approach of an enemy.

The waſp the hive alarms
With louder hums, and with unequal arms. Addiſon.

3. To ſurpriſe with the apprehenſion of any danger.

When rage miſguides me, or when fear alarms,
When pain diſtreſſes, or when pleaſure charms. Tickell.

4. To diſturb in general.

His ſon, Cupavo, bruſh'd the briny flood:
Upon his ſtern, a brawny Centaur ſtood;
Who heav'd a rock; and, threat'ning ſtill to throw,
With lifted hands, alarm'd the ſeas below. Dryden.

ALA'RM-BELL, å-lå'rm-bĕll. n. ſ. [from alarm and bell.] The bell, that is rung at the approach of an enemy.

Th' alarm-bell rings, from our Alhambra walls;
And, from the ſtreets, ſound drums and ataballes. Dryden.

ALA'RMING, å-lå'r-mìng. particip. adj. [from alarm.] Terrifying; awakening; ſurpriſing; as, an alarming meſſage; an alarming pain.

ALA'RM-POST, å-lå'rm-pŏſt. n. ſ. [from alarm and poſt.] The poſt or place, appointed to each body of men to appear at, when an alarm ſhall happen.

ALA'RUM, å-lår'-ŭm. n. ſ. [corrupted, as it ſeems, from alarm. See ALARM.]

Now are our brows bound, with victorious wreaths;
Our bruiſed arms hung-up, for monuments;
Our ſtern alarums chang'd, to merry meetings. Shakeſpeare.

That Almatro might better hear,
She ſets a drum at either ear;
And loud or gentle, harſh or ſweet,
Are but th' alarums, which they beat. Prior.

To ALA'RUM, å-lår'-ŭm. v. a. [corrupted from To alarm.] See ALARM.

Withered murder
(Alarum'd by his ſentinel the wolf,
Whoſe howl's his watch) thus, with his ſtealthy pace,
Moves like a ghoſt. Shakeſpeare.

ALA'S, å-låſs'. interject. [helas, Fr. eylaes, Dutch.]

1. A word expreſſing lamentation, when we uſe it of ourſelves.

But yet, alas! O but yet, alas! our haps be but hard haps. Sidney.

Alas, how little from the grave we claim!
Thou but preſerv'ſt a form, and I a name. Pope.

2. A word of pity, when uſed of other perſons.

Alas, poor Protheus! thou haſt entertain'd
A fox, to be the ſhepherd of thy lambs. Shakeſp.

3. A word of ſorrow and concern, when uſed of things.

Thus ſaith the Lord God; 'Smite with thine 'hand, and ſtamp with thy foot, and ſay Alas! for 'all the evil abominations of the houſe of Iſrael.' Ezekiel.

Alas! both for the deed, and for the cauſe! Milton.

Alas! for pity of this bloody field:
Piteous indeed muſt be; when I, a ſpirit,
Can have ſo ſoft a ſenſe of human woes. Dryden.

ALAS-A-DAY, å-lås'-å-då. } interject. Ah!
ALAS-THE-DAY, å-lås'-thė-då. } unhappy day!

Alas-the-day! I never gave him cauſe. Shakeſp.

Alas-a-day! you have ruined my poor miſtreſs: you have made a gap, in her reputation; and can you blame her, if ſhe make it up with her huſband? Congreve.

ALAS-THE-WHILE, å-lås'-thė-hwi'le. interject. Ah! unhappy time!

All as the ſheep, ſuch was the ſhepherd's look;
For pale and wan he was, alas-the-while!
May ſeem, he lov'd, or elſe ſome care he took. Spenſer.

ALA'TE, å-lå'te. adv. [from a and late.] Lately; no long time ago.

ALB, ålb'. n. ſ. [album, Lat.] A ſurplice; a white linen veſtment, worn by prieſts.

ALBE, ålb'. } adv. [a coalition of the ALBE'IT, ål-bė'-ìt. } words all be it ſo. Skinner.] Although; notwithſtanding; though it ſhould be.

Ne wou'd he ſuffer ſleep once thitherward Approach, albe his drowſy den was next. Spenſer.

This very thing is cauſe ſufficient; why duties, belonging to each kind of virtue (albeit the law of reaſon teach them) ſhould notwithſtanding be preſcribed, even by human law. Hooker.

One, whoſe eyes
(Albeit, unuſed to the melting mood)
Drop tears as faſt, as the Arabian trees
Their medicinal gum. Shakeſp.

He, who has a probable belief, that he ſhall meet with thieves in ſuch a road, thinks himſelf to have reaſon enough to decline it; albeit he is ſure, to ſuſtain ſome leſs (though yet conſiderable) inconvenience, by his ſo going. South's Sermons.

ALBUGI'NEOUS, ål'-bů-jìn''-yůs. adj. [albugo, Lat.] Reſembling the white of an egg.

Eggs will freeze in the albugineous part thereof. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

I opened it by inciſion, giving vent, firſt to an albugineous, then to white concocted matter: upon which the tumour ſunk. Wiſeman's Surgery.

ALBU'GO, ål-bů'-gŏ. n. ſ. [Lat.] A diſeaſe in the eye, by which the cornea contracts a whiteneſs. The ſame, with leucoma.

ALCA'ID, ål-cå'd. n. ſ. [from al, Arab. and קירקד, the head.]

1. In Barbary, the governour of a caſtle.

Th' alcaid
Shuns me; and with a grim civility,
Bows, and declines my walks. Dryden.

2. In Spain, the judge of a city; firſt inſtituted by the Saracens. Du Cange.

ALCA'NNA, ål-kån'-nå. n. ſ. An Egyptian plant, uſed in dying; the leaves making a yellow, infuſed in water; and a red, in acid liquors.

The root of alcanna, though green, will give a red ſtain. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

ALCHY'MICAL, ål-kìm'-mў-kål. adj. [from alchymy.] Relating to alchymy; produced by alchymy.

The roſe-noble, then current for ſix ſhillings and eight pence, the alchymiſts do affirm as an unwritten verity, was made by projection or multiplication alchymical of Raymond Lully in the tower of London. Camden's Remains.

ALCHY'MICALLY, ål-kìm'-mў-kål-lў. adv. [from alchymical.] In the manner of an alchymiſt; by means of alchymy.

Raymond Lully would prove it alchymically. Camden.

A'LCHYMIST, ål'-kў-mìſt. n. ſ. [from alchymy.] One, who purſues or profeſſes the ſcience of alchymy.

To ſolemnize this day, the glorious ſun
Stays in his courſe, and plays the alchymiſt;
Turning, with ſplendour of his precious eye,
The meagre cloddy earth to glittering gold. Shakeſp. King John.

Every alchymiſt knows, that gold will endure a vehement fire for a long time without any change; and, after it has been divided by corroſive liquors into inviſible parts, yet may preſently be precipitated, ſo as to appear in its own form. Grew.

A'LCHYMY, ål'-kў-mў. n. ſ. [of al, Arab. and χυμία.]

1. The more ſublime and occult part of chymiſtry; which propoſes, for its object, the tranſmutation of metals, and other important operations.

There is nothing more dangerous, than this deluding art; which changeth the meaning of words, as alchymy doth (or would do) the ſubſtance of metals; maketh of any thing, what it liſteth; and bringeth, in the end, all truth to nothing. Hooker.

O he ſits high, in all the people's hearts;
And that, which would appear offence in us,
His countenance, like richeſt alchymy,
Will change to virtue and to worthineſs. Shakeſp. Julius Cæſar.

Compared to this,
All honour's mimick; all wealth, alchymy. Donne.

2. A kind of mixed metal, uſed for ſpoons and kitchen utenſils.

White alchymy is made, of pan-braſs one pound, and arſenicum three ounces; or alchymy is made of copper and auripigmentum. Bacon's Phyſical Remains.

They bid cry,
With trumpets regal ſound, the great reſult:
Tow'rds the four winds, four ſpeedy cherubims
Put to their mouths the ſounding alchymy,
By herald's voice explained. Milton's Paradiſe Loſt.

A'LCOHOL, ål'-kŏ-hŏl. n. ſ. An Arabick term uſed by chymiſts, for a high rectified dephlegmated ſpirit of wine, or for any thing reduced into an impalpable powder. Quincy.

If the ſame ſalt ſhall be reduced into alcohol, as the chymiſts ſpeak, or an impalpable powder; the particles and intercepted ſpaces will be extremely leſſened. Boyle.

Sal volatile oleoſum will coagulate the ſerum, on account of the alcohol (or rectified ſpirit) which it contains. Arbuthnot.

ALCOHOLIZA'TION, ål'-kŏ-hŏ-lì-zå''-ſhůn. n. ſ. [from alcoholize.] The act, of alcoholizing or rectifying ſpirits; or of reducing bodies, to an impalpable powder.

To A'LCOHOLIZE, ål-kŏ'-hŏ-lìze. v. a. [from alcohol.]

1. To make an alcohol; that is, to rectify ſpirits, till they are wholly dephlegmated.

2. To comminute powder, till it is wholly without roughneſs.

A'LCORAN, ål'-kŏ-rån. n. ſ. [al and koran, Arab.] The book of the Mahometan precepts and credenda.

If this would ſatisfy the conſcience, we might not only take the preſent covenant, but ſubſcribe to the council of Trent; yea, and to the Turkiſh alcoran; and ſwear, to maintain and defend either of them. Saunderſon againſt the Covenant.

Alco've, ål-kŏ've. n. ſ. [alcoba, Span.] A receſs, or part of a chamber; ſeparated by an eſtrade or partition, and other correſpondent ornaments; in which is placed a bed of ſtate, and ſometimes ſeats to entertain company. Trevoux.

The weary'd champion lull'd in ſoft alcoves,
The nobleſt boaſt of thy romantick groves:
Oft, if the muſe preſage, ſhall he be ſeen
By Roſamonda fleeting o'er the green;
In dreams be hail'd by heroes' mighty ſhades,
And hear old Chaucer warble through the glades.
Tickell.

Deep in a rich alcove the prince was laid,
And ſlept beneath the pompous colonnade.
Pope's Odyſſey.

lder, ål'-dŭr. n. ſ. [alnus, Lat.] A tree, having leaves reſembling thoſe of the hazel: the male flowers, or katkins, are produced at remote diſtances from the fruit, on the ſame tree; the fruit is ſquamoſe, and of a conical figure: the ſpecies are, 1. The common or round-leaved alder; 2. The long-leaved alder; 3. The ſcarlet alder. Theſe trees delight in a very moiſt ſoil: the wood is uſed, by turners; and will endure long, under ground, or in water. Miller.

Without the grot, a various ſylvan ſcene
Appear'd around, and groves of living green;
Poplars and alders ever-quivering play'd,
And nodding cypreſs form'd a fragrant ſhade.
Pope's Odyſſey.

lderli'evest, ål'-dĕr-lī''-vĕſt. adj. ſuperl. [from ald, alder, old, elder, and lieve, dear, beloved.] Moſt beloved; which has held the longeſt poſſeſſion of the heart.

The mutual conference, that my mind hath had
(In courtly company, or at my beads)
With you, mine alderlieveſt ſovereign,
Makes me the bolder. Shakeſp. Henry VI. p. ii.

lderman, ål'-dŭr-mån. n. ſ. [from ald, old, and man.]

The ſame, as ſenator; Cowell. A governour or magiſtrate, originally (as the name imports) choſen on account of the experience, which his age had given him.

Tell him, 'Myſelf, the mayor, and aldermen,
'Are come to have ſome conf'rence with his
'grace.' Shakeſpeare.

Though my own aldermen conferr'd my bays,
To me committing their eternal praiſe;
Their full-fed heroes, their pacifick may'rs,
Their annual trophies, and their monthly wars.
Pope's Dunciad.

In the following paſſage it is, I think, improperly uſed.

But, if the trumpet's clangour you abhor,
And dare not be an alderman of war;
Take to a ſhop, behind a counter lie.
Dryd. Juv. Sat.

ldermanly, ål'-dŭr-mån-lŷ. adv. [from alderman.] Like an alderman; belonging to an alderman.

Theſe, and many more, ſuffered death, in envy to their virtues and ſuperiour genius; which emboldened them, in exigencies wanting an aldermanly diſcretion, to attempt ſervice out of the common forms. Swift's Miſcellanies.

ldern, ål'-dŭrn. adj. [from alder.] Made of alder.

Then aldern boats firſt plow'd the ocean.
May's Virgil.

le, åle. n. ſ. [eale, Sax.]

A liquor, made by infuſing malt in hot water, and then fermenting the liquor.

You muſt be ſeeing chriſtenings. Do you look for ale and cakes here, you rude raſcals? Shakeſpeare's Henry VIII.

The fertility of the ſoil in grain, and its being not proper for vines, put the Egyptians upon drinking ale, of which they were the inventors. Arbuth.

2. A merry-meeting, uſed in country places.

And all the neighbourhood, from old records
Of antick proverbs drawn from Whitſon lords,
And their authorities at wakes and ales,
With country precedents and old wives tales,
We bring you now. Ben Jonſon.

A'le-berry, å'le-bĕr-rŷ. n. ſ. [from ale and berry.] A beverage, made by boiling ale, with ſpice and ſugar, and ſops of bread: a word, now only uſed in converſation.

Their ale-berries, cawdles, poſſets, each one,
Syllibubs made at the milking pale,
But what are compoſed of a pot of good ale.
Beaumont.

A'le-brewer, å'le-brŏ-ŭr. n. ſ. [from ale and brewer.] One, that profeſſes to brew ale.

The ſummer-made malt brews ill, and is diſliked by moſt of our ale-brewers. Mortimer's Huſb.

A'le-conner, å'le-kŏn-nŭr. n. ſ. [from ale, and to con.] An officer, in the city of London; whoſe buſineſs is, to inſpect the meaſures of publick houſes. Four of them are choſen (or rechoſen) annually, by the common-hall of the city; and, whatever might be their uſe formerly, their places are now regarded only as ſinecures for decayed citizens.

A'le-cost, å'le-kŏſt. n. ſ. [perhaps from ale, and coſtus, Lat.] The name of an herb. Dict.

Ale'ctryomancy, or Ale'ctoromancy, å-lĕk''-trŷ-ŏ-mån'-ſŷ, or å-lĕk''-tŭr-ŏ-mån-ſŷ. n. ſ. [ἀλεκτρυὼν, and μάντις.] Divination by a cock. Dict.

A'legar, ål'-lĕ-gŭr. n. ſ. [from ale, and eager ſour.] Sour ale; a kind of acid, made by ale; as vinegar by wine, which has loſt its ſpirit.

A'leger, ål'-lĕ-gŭr. adj. [allegre, Fr. alacris, Lat.] Gay; chearful; ſprightly: a word, not now uſed.

Coffee, the root and leaf betle, and leaf tobacco, of which the Turks are great takers, do all condenſe the ſpirits, and make them ſtrong and aleger. Bacon's Natural Hiſtory.

A'le-hoof, å'le-hŏf. n. ſ. [from ale and hoofd, head.] Groundivy; ſo called by our Saxon anceſtors, as being their chief ingredient in ale. An herb.

Alehoof or groundivy is, in my opinion, of the moſt excellent and moſt general uſe and virtue, of any plants we have among us. Temple.

A'le-house, å'le-house. n. ſ. [from ale and houſe.] A houſe, where ale is publickly ſold; a tipling-houſe. It is diſtinguiſhed from a tavern, where they ſell wine.

Thou, moſt beauteous inn!
Why ſhould hard-favour'd grief be lodg'd in thee,
When triumph is become an ale-houſe gueſt?
Shakeſpeare.

One would think, it ſhould be no eaſy matter, to bring any man of ſenſe in love with an alehouſe; indeed of ſo much ſenſe, as ſeeing and ſmelling amounts to; there being ſuch ſtrong encounters of both, as would quickly ſend him packing, did not the love of good fellowſhip reconcile to theſe nuiſances. South.

Thee ſhall each ale-houſe, thee each gill-houſe mourn;
And anſw'ring ginſhops ſourer ſighs return. Pope.

A'le-house-keeper, å'le-houſe-kē'-pŭr. n. ſ. [from ale-houſe, and keeper.] He, that keeps ale publickly to ſell.

You reſemble perfectly the two alehouſe-keepers in Holland, who were at the ſame time burgomaſters of the town, and taxed one another's bills alternately. Letter to Swift.

A'le-knight, å'le-nīte. n. ſ. [from ale, and knight.] A pot-companion; a tippler: a word, now out of uſe.

The old ale-knights of England were well depainted by Hanville, in the ale-houſe colours of that time. Camden.

Ale'mbick, å-lĕm'-bĭk. n. ſ. A veſſel, uſed in diſtilling; conſiſting of a veſſel placed over a fire, in which is contained the ſubſtance to be diſtilled; and a concave, cloſely fitted on, into which the fumes ariſe by the heat: this cover has a beak or ſpout, into which the vapours riſe; and by which they paſs into a ſerpentine pipe, which is kept cool by making many convolutions in a tub of water: here the vapours are condenſed; and what entered the pipe in fumes, comes out in drops.

Though water may be rarefied, into inviſible vapours; yet it is not changed into air, but only ſcattered into minute parts; which, meeting together in the alembick, or in the receiver, do preſently return into ſuch water, as they conſtituted before. Boyle.

Ale'ngth, å-lĕnk'th. adv. [from a for at, and length.] At full length; along; ſtretched along the ground.

ALE'RT, å-lĕrt'. adj. [alerte, Fr. perhaps from alacris; but probably from à l'art, according to art or rule.]

1. In the military ſenſe, on guard; watchful; vigilant; ready at a call.

2. In the common ſenſe, briſk; pert; petulant; ſmart; implying ſome degree of cenſure and contempt.

I ſaw an alert young fellow, that cocked his hat upon a friend of his; and accoſted him, 'Well, Jack, the old prig is dead at laſt.' Addiſon, Spectator.

Ale'rtness, å-lĕrt'-nĕſs. n. ſ. [from alert.] The quality, of being alert; ſprightlineſs; pertneſs.

That alertneſs and unconcern for matters of common life, a campaign or two would infallibly have given him. Addiſon, Spectator.

A'le-taster, å'le-tå'ſt-ŭr. n. ſ. [from ale, and taſter.] An officer, appointed in every court leet; and ſworn, to look to the aſſize and the goodneſs of bread, and ale or beer, within the precincts of that lordſhip. Cowell.

A'le-vat, å'l-våt. n. ſ. [from ale, and vat.] The tub, in which the ale is fermented.

A'lew, å'-lŭ. n. ſ. Clamour; outcry. Not in uſe. Spenſer.

A'le-washed, å'le-wŏſht. adj. [from ale and waſh.] Steeped or ſoaked in ale: not now in uſe.

What, a beard of the general's cut, and a horrid ſuit of the camp, will do among foaming battles and ale-waſhed wits, is wonderful to be thought on. Shakeſpeare.

A'le-wife, å'le-wīfe. n. ſ. [from ale, and wife.] A woman, that keeps an ale-houſe.

Perhaps he will ſwagger and hector, and threaten to beat and butcher an ale-wife; or take the goods by force, and throw them down the bad halfpence. Swift's Draper's Letters.

A'lexanders, ål''-lĕgz-ån'-dĕrs. n. ſ. [ſmyrnium, Lat.] The name of a plant.

A'lexander's-foot, ål''-lĕgz-ån'-dĕrs-fŭt. n. ſ. The name of an herb.

Alexa'ndrine, ål'-lĕgz-ån''-drĭn. n. ſ. A kind of verſe, borrowed from the French; firſt uſed in a poem, called Alexander. They conſiſt, among the French, of twelve and thirteen ſyllables, in alternate couplets; and, among us, of twelve.

Our numbers ſhould, for the moſt part, be lyrical. For variety, or rather where the majeſty of thought requires it, they may be ſtretched to the Engliſh heroic of five feet, and to the French Alexandrine of ſix. Dryden.

Then, at the laſt and only couplet, fraught
With ſome unmeaning thing they call a thought;
A needleſs Alexandrine ends the ſong;
That, like a wounded ſnake, drags its ſlow length along. Pope's Eſſay on Criticiſm.

Alexipha'rmick, ă-lĕk'-ſy̆-fa''r-mik. adj. [from ἀλεξέω and φάρμακον.] That, which drives away poiſon; antidotal; that, which oppoſes infection.

Some antidotal quality, it may have; ſince, not only the bone in the heart, but the horn of a deer, is alexipharmick. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

Alexite'rical, or Alexite'rick, ă-lĕk'-ſy̆-tĕr''-ry̆-kăl, or ă lĕk'-ſy̆-tĕr''-rik. adj. [from ἀλεξέω.] That which drives away poiſon; that which reſiſts fevers.

A'lgates, a'l-gâtes. adv. [from all and gate. Skinner. Gate is the ſame as via; and ſtill uſed for way in the Scottiſh dialect.] On any terms; every way: now obſolete.

Nor had the boaſter ever riſen more,
But that Renaldo's horſe ev'n then down fell;
And, with the fall, his leg oppreſs'd ſo ſore;
That, for a ſpace, there muſt he algates dwell.
Fairfax.

A'LGEBRA, ăl-jĕ-bră. n. ſ. [an Arabic word, of uncertain etymology: derived, by ſome, from Geber the philoſopher; by ſome, from geſr, parchment; by others, from algebiſta, a boneſetter; by Menage, from algiabarat, the reſtitution of things broken.] A peculiar kind of arithmetick; which takes the quantity ſought, whether it be a number or a line, or any other quantity, as if it were granted; and, by means of one or more quantities given, proceeds by conſequence, till the quantity (at firſt only ſuppoſed to be known, or at leaſt ſome power thereof) is found to be equal to ſome quantity or quantities, which are known; and conſequently itſelf is known. This art was in uſe among the Arabs, long before it came into this part of the world: and they are ſuppoſed to have borrowed it, from the Perſians; and the Perſians, from the Indians. The firſt Greek author of algebra was Diophantus; who, about the year 800, wrote thirteen books: in 1494, Lucas Pacciolus (or Lucas de Burgos) a cordelier, printed a treatiſe of algebra in Italian, at Venice: he ſays, that algebra came originally from the Arabs. After ſeveral improvements, by Vieta, Oughtred, Harriot, Deſcartes; Sir Iſaac Newton brought this art to the height, at which it ſtill continues. Trevoux. Chambers.

It would ſurely require no very profound ſkill in algebra, to reduce the difference of ninepence in thirty ſhillings. Swift.

Algebra'ick, ăl'-jĕ-bră''-ĭk. } adj. [from
Algebra'ical, ăl'-jĕ-bră''-y̆-kăl. } algebra.]

1. Relating to algebra; as, an algebraical treatiſe.
2. Containing operations of algebra; as, an algebraical computation.

Algebra'ist, ăl'-jĕ-bră''-ĭst. n. ſ. [from algebra.] A perſon, that underſtands or practiſes the ſcience of algebra.

When any dead body is found in England, no algebraiſt or uncipherer can uſe more ſubtle ſuppoſitions, to find the demonſtration or cipher; than every unconcerned perſon doth, to find the murderers. Graunt's Bills of Mortality.

Confining themſelves, to the ſynthetick and analytick methods of geometricians and algebraiſts; they have too much narrowed the rules of method, as though every thing were to be treated in mathematical forms. Watts's Logick.

A'LGID, ăl'-jĭd. adj. [algidus, Lat.] Cold; chill. Dict.

Algi'dity, ăl-jĭd'-dy̆-ty̆. } n. ſ. [from al-
A'lgidness, ăl'-jĭd-nĕss. } gid.] Chilneſs; cold. Dict.

Algi'fic, ăl-jĭf'-fĭk. adj. [from algor, Lat.] That, which produces cold. Dict.

A'LGOR, ăl'-gŏr. n. ſ. [Lat.] Extreme cold; chilneſs. Dict.

A'lgorism, ăl'-gŏ-rĭzm. } n. ſ. Arabick
A'lgorithm, ăl'gŏ-rĭthm. } words; which are uſed, to imply the ſix operations of arithmetick, or the ſcience of numbers. Dict.

Algo'se, ăl-gŏs. adj. [from algor, Lat.] Extremely cold; chill. Dict.

A'LIAS, ā'-lyăs. adv. A Latin word, ſignifying otherwiſe; often uſed in the trials of criminals, whoſe danger has obliged them to change their names: as, Simſon, alias Smith, alias Baker; that is, otherwiſe Smith, otherwiſe Baker.

A'lible, ăl'-lĭbl. adj. [alibilis, Lat.] Nutritive; nouriſhing; or that, which may be nouriſhed. Dict.

A'LIEN, ā'-lyĕn. adj. [alienus, Lat.]

1. Foreign, or not of the ſame family or land.

The mother plant admires the leaves unknown
Of alien trees, and apples not her own. Dryden.

From native ſoil
Exil'd by fate, torn from the tender embrace
Of his young guiltleſs progeny, he ſeeks
Inglorious ſhelter in an alien land. Philips.

2. Eſtranged from; not allied to; adverſe to: with the particle from, and ſometimes to, but improperly.

To declare my mind to the diſciples of the fire, by a ſimilitude not alien from their profeſſion. Boyle.

The ſentiment, that ariſes, is a conviction of the deplorable ſtate of nature, to which ſin reduced us; a weak, ignorant creature, alien from God and goodneſs, and a prey to the great deſtroyer. Rogers's Sermons.

They encouraged perſons and principles, alien from our religion and government, in order to ſtrengthen their faction. Swift's Miſcellanies.

A'lien, ā'-lyĕn. n. ſ. [alienus, Lat.]

1. A foreigner; not a deniſon; a man of another country or family; one, not allied; a ſtranger.

In whomſoever theſe things are, the church doth acknowledge them for her children: them only ſhe holdeth for aliens and ſtrangers, in whom theſe things are not found. Hooker.

If it be prov'd againſt an alien,
He ſeeks the life of any citizen;
The party, 'gainſt the which he doth contrive,
Shall ſeize on half his goods.
Shakeſp. Merch. of Venice.

The mere Iriſh were not only accounted aliens, but enemies; ſo as it was no capital offence, to kill them. Sir John Davies on Ireland.

Thy place in council thou haſt rudely loſt,
Which by thy younger brother is ſupply'd;
And art almoſt an alien, to the hearts
Of all the court and princes of my blood.
Shakeſpeare.

The lawgiver condemned the perſons, who ſat idle in diviſions dangerous to the government, as aliens to the community, and therefore to be cut off from it. Addiſon, Freeholder.

2. In law.

An alien is one, born in a ſtrange country, and never enfranchiſed. A man, born out of the land, ſo it be within the limits beyond the ſeas, or of Engliſh parents out of the king's obedience, ſo the parents (at the time of the birth) be of the king's obedience, is not alien: if one, born out of the king's allegiance, come and dwell in England; his children (if he beget any here) are not aliens, but deniſons. Cowel.

To A'lien, ā'-lyĕn. v. a. [aliener, Fr. alieno, Lat.]

1. To make any thing the property of another.

If the ſon alien lands, and then repurchaſe them again in fee; the rules of deſcents are to be obſerved, as if he were the original purchaſer. Hale's Hiſtory of Common Law.

2. To eſtrange; to turn the mind or affection; to make averſe: with from.

The king was diſquieted, when he found that, the prince was totally aliened from all thoughts of, or inclination to, the marriage. Clarendon.

A'lienable, ā'-ly̆ĕ-năbl. adj. [from To alienate.] That, of which the property may be transferred.

Land is alienable, and treaſure is tranſitory; and both muſt paſs from him, by his own voluntary act, or by the violence of others, or at leaſt by fate. Dennis's Letters.

To A'lienate, ā'-lyĕ-nâte. v. a. [aliener, Fr. alieno, Lat.]

1. To transfer the property of any thing to another.

The countries of the Turks were once Chriſtian, and members of the church, and where the golden candleſticks did ſtand; though now they be utterly alienated, and no Chriſtians left. Bacon.

2. To withdraw the heart or affections: with the particle from, where the firſt poſſeſſor is mentioned.

The manner of men's writing muſt not alienate our hearts from the truth. Hooker.

Be it never ſo true, which we teach the world to believe; yet, if once their affections begin to be alienated, a ſmall thing perſuadeth them to change their opinions. Hooker.

His eyes ſurvey'd the dark idolatries
Of alienated Judah. Milton's Parad. Loſt.

Any thing, that is apt to diſturb the world, and to alienate the affections of men from one another, ſuch as croſs and diſtaſteful humours; is, either expreſsly, or by clear conſequence and deduction, forbidden in the New Teſtament. Tillotſon.

Her mind was quite alienated, from the honeſt Caſtilian; whom ſhe was taught to look upon, as a formal old fellow. Addiſon.

A'lienate, ā'-lyĕ-nâte. adj. [alienatus, Lat.] Withdrawn from; ſtranger to: with the particle from.

The Whigs are damnably wicked; impatient for the death of the queen; ready, to gratify their ambition and revenge by all deſperate methods, wholly alienate, from truth, law, religion, mercy, conſcience, or honour. Swift's Miſcellanies.

Aliena'tion, ă-lyĕ-nā'-ſhŭn. n. ſ. [alienatio, Lat.]

1. The act, of transferring property.

This ordinance was, for the maintenance of their lands in their poſterity, and for excluding all innovation or alienation thereof unto ſtrangers. Spenſer's State of Ireland.

God put it into the heart of one of our princes, to give a check to ſacrilege. Her ſucceſſour paſſed a law, which prevented all future alienations of the church revenues. Atterbury.

Great changes and alienations of property have created new and great dependencies. Swift on Athens and Rome.

2. The ſtate, of being alienated; as, the ſtate was waſted during its alienation.
3. Change of affection.

It is left, but in dark memory; what was the ground of his defection, and the alienation of his heart from the king. Bacon.

4. Applied to the mind, it means diſorder of the faculties.

Some things are done by man, though not through outward force and impulſion; though not againſt, yet without, their wills; as, in alienation of mind, or any like inevitable utter abſence of wit and judgment. Hooker.

Ali′ferous, ål-lẏ′-fė-růs. adj. [from ala and fero, Lat.] Having wings. Dict.

Ali′gerous, ål-lẏ′-gė-růs. adj. [aliger, Lat.] Having wings; winged. Dict.

To Ali′gge, ål′-lẏge. v. a. [from a, and lig to lie down.] To lay; to allay; to throw down; to ſubdue: an old word, even in the time of Spenſer; now, wholly forgotten.

Thomalin, why ſitten we ſo,
As weren overwent with woe,
Upon ſo fair a morrow?
The joyous time now nigheth faſt,
That ſhall aligge this bitter blaſt,
And ſlake the winter ſorrow.
Spenſer's Paſtorals.

To Ali′ght, å-lī′t. v. n. [alıhtan, Sax. aflichten, Dutch.]

1. To come down, and ſtop. The word implies the idea of deſcending; as, of a bird, from the wing; a traveller, from his horſe or carriage; and generally, of reſting or ſtopping.

There ancient night arriving, did alight
From her high weary waine. Fairy Queen.

There is alighted, at your gate,
A young Venetian. Shakeſp. Merch. of Venice.

Slackneſs breeds worms; but the ſure traveller,
Though he alights ſometimes, ſtill goeth on. Herbert.

When marching with his foot, he walks till night;
When with his horſe, he never will alight. Denham.

When Dedalus, to fly the Cretan ſhore,
His heavy limbs on jointed pinions bore;
To the Cumean coaſt, at length he came;
And, here alighting, built this coſtly frame.
Dryden's Æneid.

When he was admoniſhed by his ſubject to deſcend, he came down (gently, and circling in the air, and ſinging) to the ground: like a lark, melodious in her mounting, and continuing her ſong till ſhe alights; ſtill preparing for a higher flight, at her next ſally. Dryden.

When finiſh'd was the fight,
The victors from their luſty ſteeds alight:
Like them, diſmounted all the warlike train.
Dryden.

Should a ſpirit of ſuperiour rank, a ſtranger to human nature, alight upon the earth, what would his notions of us be? Addiſon, Spectator.

2. It is uſed alſo, of any thing thrown or falling; to fall upon.

But ſtorms of ſtones, from the proud temple's height,
Pour-down; and, on our batter'd helms, alight.
Dryden.

Ali′ke, å-lī′ke. adv. [from a and like.] With reſemblance; without difference; in the ſame manner; in the ſame form. In ſome expreſſions, it has the appearance of an adjective, but is always an adverb.

The darkneſs hideth not from thee; but the night ſhineth, as the day: the darkneſs and the light are both alike to thee. Pſalm cxxxix. 12.

With thee converſing, I forget all time;
All ſeaſons, and their change, all pleaſe alike.
Paradiſe Loſt.

Riches cannot reſcue from the grave,
Which claims alike the monarch and the ſlave.
Dryden.

Let us unite, at leaſt in an equal zeal, for thoſe capital doctrines; which we all equally embrace, and are alike concerned to maintain. Atterbury.

Two handmaids wait the throne; alike, in place;
But diff'ring far, in figure and in face. Pope.

A′LIMENT, ål′-lẏ-mėnt. n. ſ. [alimentum, Lat.] Nouriſhment; that, which nouriſhes; nutriment; food.

New parts are added, to our ſubſtance; and, as we die, we are born, daily: nor can we give an account, how the aliment is prepared for nutrition; or, by what mechaniſm, it is diſtributed. Glanville's Scepſis Scientifica.

All bodies, which (by the animal faculties) can be changed into the fluids and ſolids of our bodies, are called aliments. In the largeſt ſenſe; by aliment, I underſtand every thing, which a human creature takes in common diet; as, meat, drink; and ſeaſoning, as ſalt, ſpice, vinegar. Arbuthnot.

Alime′ntal, ål-lẏ-mėn′-tål. adj. [from aliment.] That, which has the quality of aliment; that, which nouriſhes; that, which feeds.

The ſun, that light imparts to all, receives
(From all) his alimental recompenſe,
In humid exhalations. Milton's Paradiſe Loſt.

Except they be watered, from higher regions; theſe weeds muſt loſe their alimental ſap, and wither. Brown.

Th' induſtrious, when the ſun in Leo rides,
Forget not, at the foot of every plant,
To ſink a circling trench, and daily pour
A juſt ſupply of alimental ſtreams,
Exhauſted ſap recruiting. Philips.

Alime′ntally, ål-lẏ-mėn′-tål-lẏ. adv. [from alimental.] So, as to ſerve for nouriſhment.

The ſubſtance of gold is invincible, by the powerfulleſt heat; and that, not only alimentally in a ſubſtantial mutation, but alſo medicamentally in any corporeal converſion. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

Alime′ntariness, ål-lẏ-mėn″-tå-rẏ-nėſs′. n. ſ. [from alimentary.] The quality, of being alimentary, or of affording nouriſhment. Dict.

Alime′ntary, ål-lẏ-mėn′-tå-rẏ. adj. [from aliment.

1. That, which belongs or relates to aliment.

The ſolution of the aliment by maſtication is neceſſary: without it, the aliment could not be diſpoſed for the changes, which it receives, as it paſſeth through the alimentary duct. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

2. That, which has the quality of aliment, or the power of nouriſhing.

I do not think that, water ſupplies animals, or even plants, with nouriſhment; but ſerves, for a vehicle to the alimentary particles, to convey and diſtribute them to the ſeveral parts of the body. Ray on the Creation.

Of alimentary roots, ſome are pulpy and very nutritious; as, turnips and carrots. Theſe have a fattening quality. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

Alimenta′tion, ål′-lẏ-mėn-tå′′ſhůn. n. ſ. [from aliment.]

1. The power, of affording aliment; the quality, of nouriſhing.

2. The ſtate, of being nouriſhed by aſſimulation of matter received.

Plants do nouriſh; inanimate bodies do not: they have an accretion, but no alimentation. Bacon's Natural Hiſtory.

Alimo′nious, ål-lẏ-mô′-nyůs. adj. [from alimony.] That, which nouriſhes: a word, very little in uſe.

The plethora renders us lean, by ſuppreſſing our ſpirits; whereby they are incapacitated, of digeſting the alimonious humours into fleſh. Harvey on Conſumptions.

A′LIMONY, ål′-lẏ-můn-nẏ. n. ſ. [alimonia, Lat.] Alimony ſignifies that legal proportion of the huſband's eſtate; which, by the ſentence of the eccleſiaſtical court, is allowed to the wife for her maintenance, upon the account of any ſeparation from him; provided, it be not cauſed by her elopement or adultery. Ayliffe's Parerg.

Before they ſettled hands and hearts,
Till alimony or death them parts. Hudibras.

A′liquant, ål′-lẏ-quånt. adj. [aliquantus, Lat.] Parts of a number; which, however repeated, will never make up the number exactly; as, 3 is an aliquant of 10; thrice 3 being 9; and four times 3 making 12.

A′liquot, ål′-lẏ-quȯt. adj. [aliquot, Lat.] Aliquot parts of any number or quantity; ſuch, as will exactly meaſure it, without any remainder: as, 3 is an aliquot part of 12; becauſe, being taken four times, it will juſt meaſure it.

A′lish, å′-lĭſh. adj. [from ale.] Reſembling ale; having qualities of ale.

Stirring it, and beating down the yeaſt, gives it the ſweet aliſh taſte. Mortimer's Huſbandry.

A′liture, å-lẏ-tů′re. n. ſ. [alitura, Lat.] Nouriſhment. Dict.

Ali′ve, ål-lī′ve. adj. [from a and live.]

1. In the ſtate of life; not dead.

Nor well alive, nor wholly dead, they were;
But ſome faint ſigns of feeble life appear.
Dryden.

Not youthful kings, in battle ſeiz'd alive;
Not ſcornful virgins, who their charms ſurvive.
Pope.

2. In a figurative ſenſe, unextinguiſhed; undeſtroyed; active; in full force.

Thoſe good and learned men had reaſon to wiſh, that their proceedings might be favoured; and the good affection of ſuch, as inclined toward them, kept alive. Hooker.

3. Cheerful; ſprightly; full of alacrity.

She was not ſo much alive, the whole day; if ſhe ſlept more, than ſix hours. Clariſſa.

4. In a popular ſenſe, it is uſed only to add an emphaſis, like the French du monde; as, the beſt man alive; that is, the beſt, with an emphaſis. This ſenſe has been long in uſe, and was once admitted into ſerious writings; but is now merely ludicrous.

And to thoſe brethren ſaid, riſe, riſe by-live;
And unto battle do yourſelves addreſs:
For yonder comes the proweſt knight alive,
Prince Arthur, flower of grace and nobileſs.
Fairy Queen.

The earl of Northumberland, who was the proudeſt man alive, could not look upon the deſtruction of monarchy with any pleaſure. Clarendon.

John was quick, and underſtood buſineſs; but no man alive was more careleſs, in looking into his accounts. Arbuthnot.

A′lkahest, ål′-kå-hėſt. n. ſ. A word, uſed firſt by Paracelſus, and adopted by his followers, to ſignify an univerſal diſſolvent; or liquor, which has the power of reſolving all things, into their firſt principles.

Alkale′scent, ål-kå-lės′-ſėnt. adj. [from alkali.] That, which has a tendency to the properties of an alkali.

All animal diet is alkaleſcent or anti-acid. Arbuthnot.

A′LKALI, ål′-kå-lẏ. n. ſ. [The word alkali comes from an herb; called by the Egyptians, kali; by us, glaſſwort. This herb they burnt to aſhes; boiled them in water; and, after having evaporated the water, there remained at the bottom a white ſalt: this they called ſal kali, or alkali. It is corroſive; producing putrefaction in animal ſubſtances, to which it is applied. Arbuthnot on Aliments.] Any ſubſtance, which, when mingled with acid, produces effervеſcence and fermentation.

A'lkaline, ål'-kå-line. adj. [from alkali.] That, which has the qualities of alkali.

Any watery liquor will keep an animal from ſtarving very long, by diluting the fluids, and conſequently keeping them from an alkaline ſtate. People have lived twenty-four days, upon nothing but water. Arbuthnot.

To Alka'lizate, ål-kål'-lŷ-zåte. v. a. [from alkali.] To make bodies alkaline, by changing their nature, or by mixing alkalies with them.

Alka'lizate, ål-kål'-lŷ-zåte. adj. [from alkali.] That, which has the qualities of alkali; that, which is impregnated with alkali.

The odour of the fixed nitre is very languid; but that, which it diſcovers, being diſſolved in hot water, is different, being of kin to that of other alkalizate ſalts. Boyle.

The colour of violets in their ſyrup, by acid liquors, turns red; and, by urinous and alkalizate, turns green. Newton.

Alkaliza'tion, ål-kå-lŷ-zå'-ſhůn. n. ſ. [from alkali.] The act, of alkalizating, or impregnating bodies with alkali.

A'lkanet, ål'-kå-nět. n. ſ. [anchuſa, Lat.] The name of a plant. This plant is a ſpecies of bugloſs, with a red root; brought from the ſouthern parts of France, and uſed in medicine. Miller.

ALKEKE'NGI, ål-kė-kěn'-jl. n. ſ. A medicinal fruit or berry, produced by a plant of the ſame denomination; popularly alſo called winter-cherry: the plant bears a near reſemblance, to Solanum or Nightſhade; whence it is frequently called in Latin by that name, with the addition or epithet of veſicarium. Chambers.

ALKE'RMES, ål-kěr'-mêz. n. ſ. In medicine, a term borrowed from the Arabs; denoting a celebrated remedy, of the conſiſtence of a confection; whereof the kermes berries are the baſis. The other ingredients are, pippin-cyder, roſe-water, ſugar, ambergreaſe, muſk, cinnamon, aloes wood, pearls, and leaf-gold; but the ſweets are uſually omitted. The confectio alkermes is chiefly made at Montpellier: the grain, which gives it the denomination, is no where found ſo plentifully, as there. Chambers.

ALL, å'l. adj. [Æll, Æal, ealle, alle, Sax. oll, Welſh; al, Dutch; alle, Germ. ὅλος, Gr.]

1. Being the whole number; every one.

Brutus is an honourable man:
So are they all; all, honourable men.
Shakeſp. Julius Cæſar.

To graze the herb all leaving,
Devour'd each other. Milton's Parad. Loſt.

The great encouragement of all, is the aſſurance of a future reward. Tillotſon.

2. Being the whole quantity; every part.

Six days thou ſhalt labour, and do all thy work. Deut. v. 13.

Political power I take to be a right, of making laws with penalties; and of employing the force of the community, in the execution of ſuch laws, and in the defence of the commonwealth; and all this, only for the public good. Locke.

3. The whole quantity, applied to duration of time.

On thoſe paſtures cheerful ſpring,
All the year, doth ſit and ſing;
And rejoicing, ſmiles to ſee,
Their green backs wear his livery. Craſhaw.

4. The whole extent of place.

Gratiano ſpeaks an infinite deal of nothing; more, than any man in all Venice. Shakeſp. Merchant of Venice.

All, å'l. adv. [See ALL, adj.]

1. Quite; completely.

How is my love all ready forth to come.
Spenſer.

Know, Rome, that all alone Marcus did fight
Within Corioli gates. Shakeſp. Coriolanus.

He ſwore ſo loud;
That, all amaz'd, the prieſt let fall the book.
Shakeſp.

The Saxons could call a comet, a fixed ſtar; which is all one, with ſtella crinita or cometa. Camden's Remains.

For a large conſcience is all one,
And ſignifies the ſame with none. Hudibras.

Balm, from a ſilver box diſtill'd around,
Shall all bedew the roots, and ſcent the ſacred ground. Dryden.

I do not remember, he (any where) mentions expreſsly the title of the firſt-born; but (all along) keeps himſelf, under the ſhelter of the indefinite term, heir. Locke.

Juſtice may be furniſhed out of fire, as far as her ſword goes; and courage may be (all-over) a continued blaze. Addiſon.

If e'er the miſer durſt his farthings ſpare,
He thinly ſpreads them through the public ſquare:
Where, all beſide the rail, rang'd beggars lie;
And, from each other, catch the doleful cry. Gay.

2. Altogether; wholly; without any other conſideration.

I am of the temper of moſt kings; who love, to be in debt; are all for preſent money, no matter how they pay it afterward. Dryden.

3. Only; without admiſſion of any thing elſe.

When I ſhall wed;
That lord, whoſe hand muſt take my plight, ſhall carry
Half my love with him, half my care and duty:
Sure, I ſhall never marry, like my ſiſter,
To love my father all. Shakeſp. King Lear.

4. Although. This ſenſe is truly Teutonick, but now obſolete.

Do you not think, th' accompliſhment of it
Sufficient work for one man's ſimple head;
All were it, as the reſt, but ſimply writ. Spenſer.

5. It is ſometimes a word of emphaſis; nearly the ſame with juſt.

A ſhepherd's ſwain, ſay, did thee bring;
All, as his ſtraying flock he fed:
And, when his honour hath thee read,
Crave pardon for thy hardyhead.
Spenſer's Paſtorals.

6. It was anciently in Engliſh, what it is now in the other Teutonick dialects; a particle of mere enforcement.

He thought them, ſixpence (all) too dear.
Song in Shakeſpeare.

Tell us, what occaſion of import
Hath all ſo long detain'd you, from your wife.
Shakeſpeare.

All, å'l. n. ſ.

1. The whole; oppoſed to part, or nothing.

And will ſhe yet debaſe her eyes on me;
On me, whoſe all not equals Edward's moiety?
Shakeſpeare.

Nought's had, all's ſpent;
Where our deſire is got, without content.
Shakeſpeare's Macbeth.

The youth ſhall ſtudy; and no more engage
Their flattering wiſhes, for uncertain age:
No more with fruitleſs care, and cheated ſtrife,
Chace fleeting pleaſure through the maze of life;
Finding, the wretched all they here can have,
But preſent food, and but a future grave. Prior.

Our all is at ſtake, and irretrievably loſt, if we fail of ſucceſs. Addiſon.

2. Every thing.

Then ſhall we be news-cramm'd.—All the better; we ſhall be the more remarkable.
Shakeſpeare.

Up, with my tent; here will I lie to-night:
But where, to-morrow?—Well, all's one for that.
Shakeſpeare.

All the fitter, Lentulus; our coming
Is not for ſalutation; we have bus'neſs.
Ben Jonſon.

3. That is, every thing is the better, the ſame, the fitter.

Sceptre and pow'r, thy giving, I aſſume:
And glad, her ſhall reſign; when, in the end,
Thou ſhalt be all in all, and I in thee,
For ever; and in me, all whom thou lov'ſt.
Milton.

They, that do not keep-up this indifferency for all but truth, put coloured ſpectacles before their eyes, and look through falſe glaſſes. Locke.

4. The phraſe and all is of the ſame kind.

They all fell to-work, at the roots of the tree; and left it ſo little foot-hold, that the firſt blaſt of wind laid it flat upon the ground; neſt, eagles, and all. L'Eſtrange.

A torch, ſnuff and all, goes-out in a moment; when dipped in the vapour.
Addiſon's Remarks on Italy.

5. All is much uſed in compoſition; but, in moſt inſtances, it is merely arbitrary; as, all-commanding. Sometimes the words compounded with it, are fixed and claſſical; as, Almighty. When it is connected with a participle, it ſeems to be a noun; as, all-ſurrounding: in other caſes an adverb; as, all-accompliſhed, or completely accompliſhed. Of theſe compounds, a ſmall part of thoſe, which may be found, is inſerted.

All-bea'ring, å'l-bê'-rlng. adj. [from all and bear.] That, which bears every thing; omniparous.

Thus while he ſpoke, the ſovereign plant he drew;
Where, on th' all-bearing earth, unmark'd it grew.
Pope.

All-chee'ring, å'l-tſhê'-rlng. adj. [from all and cheer.] That, which gives gayety and cheerfulneſs to all.

Soon, as the all-cheering ſun
Should, in the fartheſt eaſt, begin to draw
The ſhady curtains from Aurora's bed.
Shakeſpeare.

All-comma'nding, å'l-kům-må'nd-lng. adj. [from all and command.] Having the ſovereignty over all.

He now ſets before them the high and ſhining idol of glory, the all-commanding image of bright gold. Raleigh.

All-compo'sing, å'l-kŏm-pô'-zlng. adj. [from all and compoſe.] That, which quiets all men, or every thing.

Wrapt in embow'ring ſhades, Ulyſſes lies,
His woes forgot: but Pallas now addreſt,
To break the bands of all-compoſing reſt. Pope.

All-co'nquering, å'l-cŏnk'-kė-rlng. adj. [from all and conquer.] That, which ſubdues every thing.

Second of Satan ſprung, all-conquering death!
What think'ſt thou of our empire now? Milton.

All-consu'ming, å'l-kŏn-ſů'-mlng. adj. [from all and conſume.] That, which conſumes every thing.

By age unbroke :—but all-conſuming care
Deſtroys perhaps the ſtrength, that time would ſpare. Pope.

All-devou'ring, å''l-dê-vou'-rìng. adj. [from all and devour.] That, which eats-up every thing.

Secure from flames, from envy's fiercer rage,
Deſtructive war, and all-devouring age. Pope.

All-fou'rs, å'l-fô''rz. n. ſ. [from all and four.] A low game at cards, played by two ; ſo named, from the four particulars by which it is reckoned ; and which, joined in the hand of either of the parties, are ſaid to make all-fours.

All-ha'il ! å''l-hå'l. n. ſ. [from all and hail, for health.] All health ! This is therefore not a compound, though perhaps uſually reckoned among them ; a term of ſalutation. Salve, or ſalvete.

All hail, ye fields, where conſtant peace attends !
All hail, ye ſacred ſolitary groves !
All hail, ye books, my true, my real friends,
Whoſe converſation pleaſes and improves !
Walſh.

All-ha'llow, å'l-hål'-lô. } n. ſ. [from all
All-ha'llows, å'l-hål'-lôs. } and hallow.]
All ſaints day ; the firſt of November.

All-ha'llown, å'l-hål-lùn. adj. [from all and hallow, to make holy.] The time, about All ſaints day.

Farewell, thou latter ſpring ! farewell,
All-hallown ſummer. Shakeſpeare's Henry IV.

All-ha'llowtide, å'l-hål''-lô-tìde. n. ſ. [See All-hallown.] The term, near All ſaints, or the firſt of November.

Cut-off the bough about All-hallowtide, in the bare place ; and ſet it, in the ground ; and it will grow, to be a fair tree in one year. Bacon's Natural Hiſtory.

All-hea'l, å'l-hê''l. n. ſ. [panax, Lat.] A ſpecies of ironwort ; which ſee.

All-jud'ging, å''l-jùd'-jìng. adj. [from all and judge.] That, which has the ſovereign right of judgment.

I look with horrour back,
That I deteſt my wretched ſelf, and curſe
My paſt polluted life. All-judging Heaven,
Who knows my crimes, has ſeen my ſorrow for them. Rowe's Jane Shore.

All-kno'wing, å''l-nô'-ìng. adj. [from all and know.] Omniſcient ; all-wiſe.

Shall we repine, at a little miſplaced charity ; we, who could no way foreſee the effect ? When an all-knowing, all-wiſe Being, ſhowers-down every day his benefits on the unthankful and undeſerving. Atterbury's Sermons.

All-ma'king, å''l-måk'-ìng. adj. [from all and make.] That, created all ; omnifick. See All-seeing.

All-pow'erful, å''l-pow'-ùr-fùl. adj. [from all and powerful.] Almighty ; omnipotent ; poſſeſſed of infinite power.

O all-powerful Being ! the leaſt motion of whoſe will can create or deſtroy a world ; pity us, the mournful friends of thy diſtreſſed ſervant. Swift.

A'll-saints-da'y, å''l-sånts-då'. n. ſ. The day, on which there is a general celebration of the ſaints. The firſt of November.

All-se'er, å''l-sê'-ùr. n. ſ. [from all and ſee.] He, that ſees or beholds every thing ; he, whoſe view comprehends all things.

That high All-ſeer, which I dallied with,
Hath turn'd my feigned prayer on my head ;
And giv'n in earneſt, what I begg'd in jeſt.
Shakeſp.

All-se'eing, å''l-sê'-ìng. adj. [from all and ſee.] That beholds every thing.

The ſame Firſt Mover certain bounds has plac'd,
How long thoſe periſhable forms ſhall laſt :
Nor can they laſt, beyond the time, aſſign'd
By that all-ſeeing and all-making mind. Dryden.

All-so'uls-day, å''l-sô'lz-då'. n. ſ. The day, on which ſupplications are made for all ſouls by the church of Rome ; the ſecond of November.

This is all-ſouls day, fellows ! Is it not ?—
It is, my lord.—
Why then, all-ſouls day is my body's doomſday.
Shakeſp.

All-suffi'cient, å''l-sùf-fìſh'-ènt. adj. [from all and ſufficient.] Sufficient to every thing.

The teſtimonies of God are perfect : the teſtimonies of God are all-ſufficient unto that end, for which they were given. Hooker.

He can more than employ all our powers in their utmoſt elevation ; for he is every way perfect and all-ſufficient. Norris.

All-wi'se, å''l-wì'ze. adj. [from all and wiſe.] Poſſeſt of infinite wiſdom.

There is an infinite, eternal, all-wiſe mind, governing the affairs of the world. South.

Supreme, all-wiſe, eternal, potentate !
Sole author, ſole diſpoſer, of our fate ! Prior.

ALLANTO'IS, or ALLANTO'IDES, ål-lån-to'ìz, or ål-lån-to'ìdz. n. ſ. [from ἀλλᾶς a gut, and εἶδος ſhape.] The urinary tunick, placed between the amnion and chorion ; which, by the navel and urachus (or paſſage, by which the urine is conveyed from the infant in the womb) receives the urine, that comes out of the bladder. Quincy.

To ALLA'Y, ål-lå'. v. a. [from alloyer, Fr. to mix one metal with another, in order to coinage : it is therefore derived by ſome, from à la loi, according to law ; the quantity of metals being mixed, according to law : by others, from allier, to unite ; perhaps from allocare, to put together.]

1. To mix one metal with another, to make it fitter for coinage. In this ſenſe, moſt authors preſerve the original French orthography, and write alloy. See Alloy.
2. To join any thing to another, ſo as to abate its predominant qualities. It is uſed commonly, in a ſenſe contrary to its original meaning ; and is, to make ſomething bad, leſs bad. To obtund ; to repreſs ; to abate.

Being brought into the open air,
I would allay the burning quality
Of that fell poiſon. Shakeſp.

No friendly offices ſhall alter or allay that rancour, that frets in ſome helliſh breaſts ; which, upon all occaſions, will foam-out at its foul mouth in ſlander and invective. South.

3. To quiet ; to pacify ; to repreſs. The word, in this ſenſe, I think not to be derived from the French alloyer ; but to be the Engliſh word lay, with a before it, according to the old form.

If by your art you have
Put the wild waters in this roar, allay them.
Shakeſp.

Alla'y, ål-lå'. n. ſ. [alloy, Fr.]

1. The metal of a baſer kind, mixed in coins, to harden them, that they may wear leſs. Gold is allayed, with ſilver and copper ; two carats, to a pound Troy : ſilver, with copper only ; of which, eighteen pennyweight is mixed with a pound. Cowell thinks the allay is added, to countervail the charge of coining ; which might have been done, only by making the coin leſs.

For fools are ſtubborn in their way,
As coins are harden'd by th' allay. Hudibras.

2. Any thing, which (being added) abates the predominant qualities of that, with which it is mingled ; in the ſame manner, as the admixture of baſer metals allays the qualities of the firſt maſs.

Dark colours eaſily ſuffer a ſenſible allay, by little ſcattering light. Newton's Opticks.

3. Allay, being taken from baſer metals, commonly implies ſomething worſe than that, with which it is mixed.

The joy has no allay, of jealouſy, hope, and fear. Roſcommon.

Alla'yer, ål-lå'-ùr. n. ſ. [from allay.] The perſon or thing, which has the power or quality of allaying.

Phlegm and pure blood are reputed allayers of acrimony : and Avicen countermands letting blood in cholerick bodies ; becauſe he eſteems the blood a frænum bilis, or a bridle of gall, obtunding its acrimony and fierceneſs. Harvey.

Alla'yment, ål-lå'-mènt. n. ſ. [from allay.] That, which has the power of allaying or abating the force of another.

If I could temporize with my affection,
Or brew it to a weak and colder palate ;
The like allayment would I give my grief.
Shakeſpeare.

Allega'tion, ål-lê-gå'-ſhùn. n. ſ. [from allege.]

1. Affirmation ; declaration.
2. The thing alleged or affirmed.

Hath he not twit our ſovereign lady here
With ignominious words, though darkly coucht ?
As if ſhe had ſuborned ſome to ſwear
Falſe allegations, to o'erthrow his ſtate.
Shakeſpeare's Henry VI.

3. An excuſe ; a plea.

I omitted no means, to be informed of my errours ; and I expect not to be excuſed in any negligence, on account of youth, want of leiſure, or any other idle allegations. Pope.

To ALLE'GE, ål-lèdzh'. v. a. [allego, Lat.]

1. To affirm ; to declare ; to maintain.
2. To plead, as an excuſe ; or produce, as an argument.

Surely the preſent form of church-government is ſuch, as no law of God, or reaſon of man, hath hitherto been alleged of force ſufficient, to prove they do ill ; who, to the utmoſt of their power, withſtand the alteration thereof. Hooker.

If we forſake the ways of grace or goodneſs, we cannot allege any colour of ignorance, or want of inſtruction ; we cannot ſay, we have not learned them, or we could not. Sprat.

He hath a clear and full view ; and there is no more to be alleged, for his better information. Locke.

Alle'geable, ål-lèdzh'-åbl. adj. [from allege.] That, which may be alleged.

Upon this interpretation, all may be ſolved, that is allegeable againſt it. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

Alle'gement, ål-lèdzh'-mènt. n. ſ. [from allege.] The ſame with allegation. Dict.

Alle'ger, ål-lèdzh'-ùr. n. ſ. [from allege.] He, that alleges.

The narrative, if we believe it as confidently, as the famous alleger of it (Pamphilio) appears to do, would argue ; that there is no other principle requiſite, than what may reſult from the lucky mixture of ſeveral bodies. Boyle.

Alle'giance, ål'-lê'-jåns. n. ſ. [allegeance, Fr.] The duty of ſubjects to the government.

I did pluck allegiance from men's hearts,
Loud ſhouts and ſalutations from their mouths,
Even in the preſence of the crowned king.
Shakeſpeare.

We charge you, on allegiance to ourſelves,
To hold your ſlaughtering hands, and keep the peace. Shakeſp.

The houſe of commons, to whom every day petitions are directed by the ſeveral counties of England, profeſſing all allegiance to them, govern abſolutely; the lords concurring, or rather ſubmitting, to whatſoever is propoſed. Clarendon.

ALLE′GIANT, ål-lê′-jånt. adj. [from allege.] Loyal; conformable to the duty of allegiance: a word, not now uſed.

For your great graces
Heap'd upon me, poor undeſerver; I
Can nothing render, but allegiant thanks,
My pray'rs to heaven for you.
Shakeſp. Henry VIII.

ALLEGO′RICK, ål-lê-gôr′-rîk. adj. [from allegory.] After the manner of an allegory; not real; not literal.

A kingdom they portend thee; but, what kingdom,
Real or allegorick, I diſcern not. Milton.

ALLEGO′RICAL, ål-lê-gôr′-rî-kål. adj. [from allegory.] In the form of an allegory; not real; not literal; myſtical.

When our Saviour ſaid, in an allegorical and myſtical ſenſe, 'Except ye eat the fleſh of the Son 'of Man, and drink his blood, ye have no life in 'you;' the hearers underſtood him literally and groſsly. Bentley.

The epithet of Apollo for ſhooting, is capable of two applications; one literal, in reſpect of the darts and bow, the enſigns of that god; the other allegorical, in regard to the rays of the ſun. Pope.

ALLEGO′RICALLY, ål-lê-gôr′-rî-kål-lŷ. adv. [from allegory.] After an allegorical manner.

Virgil often makes Iris the meſſenger of Juno, allegorically taken for the air. Peacham.

The place is to be underſtood allegorically; and, what is thus ſpoken by a Phæacian with wiſdom, is (by the Poet) applied to the goddeſs of it. Pope.

ALLEGO′RICALNESS, ål-lê-gôr′-rî-kål-nês. n.ſ. [from allegorical.] The quality, of being allegorical. Dict.

To A′LLEGORIZE, ål′-lê-gô-rî″ze. v. a. [from allegory.] To turn into allegory; to form an allegory; to take in a ſenſe not literal.

He hath very wittily allegorized this tree; allowing his ſuppoſition of the tree itſelf to be true. Raleigh.

As ſome would allegorize theſe ſigns, ſo others would confine them to the deſtruction of Jeruſalem. Burnet's Theory.

An alchymiſt ſhall reduce divinity, to the maxims of his laboratory; explain morality by ſal, ſulphur, and mercury; and allegorize the ſcripture itſelf, and the ſacred myſteries thereof, into the philoſopher's ſtone. Locke.

A′LLEGORY, ål′-lê-gûr-rŷ. n. ſ. [ἀλληγορία.] A figurative diſcourſe; in which ſomething other is intended, than is contained in the words literally taken; as, wealth is the daughter of diligence, and the parent of authority.

Neither muſt we draw-out our allegory too long; leſt either we make ourſelves obſcure; or fall into affectation, which is childiſh. Ben Jonſon.

This word nympha meant nothing elſe, but (by allegory) the vegetative humour or moiſture, that quickeneth and giveth life to trees and flowers, whereby they grow. Peacham.

ALLE′GRO, ål-lê′-grô. n. ſ. A word, denoting one of the ſix diſtinctions of time. It expreſſes a ſprightly motion, the quickeſt of all, except Preſto. It originally meant gay, as in Milton.

ALLELU′JAH, ål-lê-lô′-yå. n. ſ. [This word is falſely written for Hallelujah, הללך and יה.] A word of ſpiritual exultation, uſed in hymns; it ſignifies, Praiſe God.

He will ſet his tongue, to thoſe pious divine ſtrains; which may be a proper præludium to thoſe allelujahs, he hopes eternally to ſing. Government of the Tongue.

ALLEMA′NDE, ål-lê′-månd. n. ſ. [Ital.] A grave kind of muſick. Dict.

To ALLE′VIATE, ål-lê′-vyåte. v. a. [allevo, Lat.]

1. To make light; to eaſe; to ſoften.

The pains, taken in the ſpeculative, will much alleviate me in deſcribing the practic part. Harvey.

Moſt of the diſtempers are the effects of abuſed plenty and luxury, and muſt not be charged upon our Maker; who (notwithſtanding) hath provided excellent medicines, to alleviate thoſe evils, which we bring upon ourſelves. Bentley.

2. To extenuate or ſoften; as, he alleviates his fault by an excuſe.

ALLEVIA′TION, ål-lê-vyå′-shûn. n. ſ. [from alleviate.]

1. The act, of making light, of allaying, or extenuating.

All apologies for, and alleviations of, faults, though they are the heights of humanity; yet they are not the favours, but the duties, of friendſhip. South.

2. That, by which any pain is eaſed, or fault extenuated.

This loſs of one-fifth of their income will ſit heavy on them, who ſhall feel it, without the alleviation of any profit. Locke.

A′LLEY, ål′-lŷ. n. ſ. [allée, Fr.]

1. A walk in a garden.

And all within were walks and alleys wide,
With footing worn, and leading inward far.
Spenſer.

Where alleys are cloſe gravelled, the earth putteth forth the firſt year knotgraſs, and after ſpiregraſs. Bacon's Natural Hiſtory.

Yonder alleys green,
Our walk at noon, with branches overgrown.
Milton.

Come, my fair love! Our morning's taſk we loſe:
Some labour, ev'n the eaſieſt life would chooſe:
Ours is not great; the dangling bows to crop,
Whoſe too luxuriant growth our alleys ſtop.
Dryden.

The thriving plants, ignoble broomſticks made,
Now ſweep thoſe alleys they were born to ſhade.
Pope.

2. A paſſage in towns, narrower than a ſtreet.

A back friend, a ſhoulder clapper; one, that commands the paſſages of alleys, creeks, and narrow lands. Shakeſp.

ALLI′ANCE, ål-lî′-åns. n. ſ. [alliance, Fr.]

1. The ſtate of connection with another, by confederacy; a league. In this ſenſe, our hiſtories of Queen Anne mention the grand alliance.

2. Relation by marriage.

A bloody Hymen ſhall th' alliance join,
Betwixt the Trojan and th' Auſonian line.
Dryden.

3. Relation, by any form of kindred.

For my father's ſake,
And for alliance' ſake, declare the cauſe
My father loſt his head. Shakeſp. Henry VI.

Adraſtus ſoon, with gods averſe, ſhall join
In dire alliance with the Theban line;
Thence ſtrife ſhall riſe, and mortal war ſucceed.
Pope.

4. The act, of forming or contracting relation to another; the act of making a confederacy.

Dorſet, your ſon, that with a fearful ſoul
Leads diſcontented ſteps in foreign ſoil,
This fair alliance quickly ſhall call home
To high promotions. Shakeſp. Richard III.

5. The perſons, allied to each other.

I would not boaſt the greatneſs of my father,
But point out new alliances to Cato. Addiſon.

ALLI′CIENCY, ål-lê′-syên-ſŷ. n. ſ. [allicio, Lat. to entice or draw.] The power of attracting any thing; magnetiſm; attraction.

The feigned central alliciency is but a word; and the manner of it, ſtill occult. Glanville.

To A′LLIGATE, ål′-lŷ-gåte. v. a. [alligo, Lat.] To tie one thing to another; to unite.

ALLIGA′TION, ål-lŷ-gå′-shûn. n. ſ. [from alligate.]

1. The act, of tying together; the ſtate, of being ſo tied.

2. The arithmetical rule, that teaches to adjuſt the price of compounds, formed of ſeveral ingredients of different value.

ALLIGA′TOR, ål′-lŷ-gå-tûr. n. ſ. The crocodile. This name is chiefly uſed for the crocodile of America; between which, and that of Africa, naturaliſts have laid down this difference: that one moves the upper, and the other the lower jaw; but this is now known to be chimerical, the lower jaw being equally moved by both. See CROCODILE.

In his needy ſhop a tortoiſe hung,
An alligator ſtuff'd, and other ſkins
Of ill-ſhap'd fiſhes. Shakeſp.

Aloft in rows large poppy-heads were ſtrung,
And here a ſcaly alligator hung.
Garth's Diſpenſary.

A′LLIGATURE, ål-lîg′-å-tûre. n. ſ. [from alligate.] The link or ligature, by which two things are joined together. Dict.

ALLI′SION, ål-lîzh′-ûn. n. ſ. [allido, alliſum, Lat.] The act, of ſtriking one thing againſt another.

There have not been any iſlands of note, or conſiderable extent, torn and caſt-off from the continent by earthquakes, or ſevered from it by the boiſterous alliſion of the ſea. Woodward.

ALLITERA′TION, ål-lît-tê-rå″-shûn. n. ſ. [ad and litera, Lat.] Of what the critics call the alliteration, or beginning of ſeveral words in the ſame verſe with the ſame letter; there are inſtances, in the oldeſt and beſt writers, as,

Behemoth biggeſt born.
Milton's Paradiſe Loſt.

ALLOCA′TION, ål-lô-kå′-shûn. n. ſ. [alloco, Lat.]

1. The act, of putting one thing to another.
2. The admiſſion of an article in reckoning, and addition of it to the account.
3. An allowance, made upon an account: a term, uſed in the Exchequer. Chambers.

ALLOCU′TION, ål-lô-kû′-shûn. n. ſ. [allocutio, Lat.] The act, of ſpeaking to another.

ALLO′DIAL, ål-lô′-dyål. adj. [from allodium.] Held without any acknowledgment of ſuperiority; not feudal; independent.

ALLO′DIUM, ål-lô′-dyûm. n. ſ. [A word of very uncertain derivation, but moſt probably of German original.] A poſſeſſion, held in abſolute independence, without any acknowledgment of a lord paramount: it is oppoſed to fee, or feudum, which intimates ſome kind of dependence. There are no allodial lands in England; all being held, either mediately or immediately, of the king.

Allo'nge, ål-lůndzh'. n. ſ. [allonge, Fr.]

1. A paſs or thruſt with a rapier; ſo called from the lengthening of the ſpace, taken-up by the fencer.

2. It is likewiſe taken for a long rein, when the horſe is trotted in the hand.

To Allo'o, ål-lỏ'. v. a. [This word is generally ſpoke halloo; and is uſed to dogs, when they are incited to the chace or battle: it is commonly imagined to come, from the French allons; perhaps from all lo, look all; ſhewing the object.] To ſet on; to incite a dog, by crying alloo.

Alloo thy furious maſtiff; bid him vex
The noxious herd, and print upon their ears
A ſad memorial of their paſt offence. Philips.

A'lloquy, ål'-lỏ-kwỳ. n. ſ. [alloquium, Lat.] The act, of ſpeaking to another; addreſs; converſation. Dict.

To ALLO'T, ål-lỏt'. v. a. [from lot.]

1. To diſtribute by lot.

2. To grant.

Five days we do allot thee for proviſion,
To ſhield thee from diſaſters of the world;
And, on the ſixth, to turn thy hated back
Upon our kingdom. Shakeſp. King Lear.

I ſhall deſerve my fate; if I refuſe
That happy hour, which heaven allots to peace. Dryden.

3. To diſtribute; to parcel-out; to give each his ſhare.

Since fame was the only end of all their ſtudies, a man cannot be too ſcrupulous in allotting them their due portion of it. Tatler.

Allo'tment, ål-lỏt'-měnt. n. ſ. [from allot.]

1. That, which is allotted to any one; the part, the ſhare, the portion, granted.

There can be no thought of ſecurity or quiet in this world, but in a reſignation to the allotments of God and nature. L'Eſtrange.

Though it is our duty, to ſubmit with patience to more ſcanty allotments; yet thus much, we may reaſonably and lawfully aſk of God. Rogers's Serm.

2. Part appropriated.

It is laid-out into a grove, for fruits and ſhade; a vineyard; and an allotment, for olives and herbs. Broome.

Allo'ttery, ål-lỏt'-tě-rỳ. n. ſ. [from allot.] That, which is granted to any particular perſon in a diſtribution. See Allotment.

Allow me ſuch exerciſes, as may become a gentleman; or give me the poor allottery, my father left me by teſtament. Shakeſp.

To ALLO'W, ål-low'. v. a. [allouer, Fr. from allaudare, Lat.]

1. To admit; as, to allow a poſition: not to contradict; not to oppoſe.

The principles, which all mankind allow for true, are innate; thoſe, that men of right reaſon admit, are the principles allowed by all mankind. Locke.

The pow'r of muſick all our hearts allow;
And, what Timotheus was, is Dryden now. Pope.

That ſome of the Preſbyterians declared openly againſt the king's murder, I allow to be true. Swift.

2. To juſtify; to maintain, as right.

The pow'rs above
Allow obedience. Shakeſp.

The Lord alloweth the righteous. Bible.

3. To grant; to yield; to own any one's title to.

We will not, in civility, allow too much ſincerity to the profeſſions of moſt men; but think their actions to be interpreters of their thoughts. Locke.

I ſhall be ready, to allow the pope as little power here, as you pleaſe. Swift.

4. To grant licenſe to; to permit.

Let's follow the old earl; and get the beldam,
To lead him where he would: his roguiſh madneſs
Allows itſelf to any thing. Shakeſp.

But, as we were allowed of God to be put in truſt with the goſpel, even ſo we ſpeak; not as pleaſing men, but God, which trieth our hearts. 1 Theſſ. ii. 4.

They referred all laws, that were to be paſſed in Ireland, to be conſidered, corrected, and allowed firſt by the ſtate of England. Davies on Ireland.

5. To give a ſanction to; to authorize.

There is no ſlander, in an allow'd fool. Shakeſp.

6. To give to; to pay to.

Ungrateful then! if we no tears allow
To him, that gave us peace and empire too. Waller.

7. To appoint for; to ſet-out, to a certain uſe; as, He allowed his ſon the third part of his income.

8. To make abatement, or proviſion; or to ſettle any thing, with ſome conceſſions or cautions, regarding ſomething elſe.

If we conſider the different occaſions, of ancient and modern medals; we ſhall find, they both agree in recording the great actions and ſucceſſes in war; allowing ſtill for the different ways of making it, and the circumſtances that attended it. Addiſon.

Allo'wable, ål-low'-åbl. adj. [from allow.]

1. That, which may be admitted without contradiction.

It is not allowable, what is obſervable in many pieces of Raphael; where Magdalen is repreſented before our Saviour, waſhing his feet on her knees; which will not conſiſt with the text. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

2. That, which is permitted or licenſed; lawful; not forbidden.

In actions of this ſort, the light of nature alone may diſcover that, which is in the ſight of God allowable. Hooker.

I was, by the freedom allowable among friends, tempted to vent my thoughts with negligence. Boyle.

Reputation becomes a ſignal and a very peculiar bleſſing, to magiſtrates; and their purſuit of it is, not only allowable, but laudable. Atterbury's Sermons.

Allo'wableness, ål-low'-åbl-něſs. n. ſ. [from allowable.] The quality, of being allowable; lawfulneſs; exemption from prohibition.

Lots, as to their nature, uſe, and allowableneſs, in matters of recreation, are indeed impugned by ſome, though better defended by others. South's Sermons.

Allo'wance, ål-low'-åns. n. ſ. [from allow.]

1. Admiſſion, without contradiction.

That, which wiſdom did firſt begin, and hath been with good men long continued, challengeth allowance of them that ſucceed, although it plead for itſelf nothing. Hooker.

Without the notion and allowance of ſpirits, our philoſophy will be lame and defective in one main part of it. Locke.

2. Sanction; licenſe; authority.

You ſent a large commiſſion to conclude
(Without the king's will, or the ſtate's allowance)
A league, between his Highneſs and Ferrara. Shakeſpeare.

3. Permiſſion; freedom from reſtraint.

They ſhould therefore be accuſtomed betimes, to conſult and make uſe of their reaſon, before they give allowance to their inclinations. Locke.

4. A ſettled rate, or appointment for any uſe.

The victual in plantations ought to be expended, almoſt as in a beſieged town; that is, with certain allowance. Bacon.

And his allowance was a continual allowance, given him of the king; a daily rate, for every day all his life. 2 Kings.

5. Abatement, from the ſtrict rigour of a law or demand.

The whole poem, though written in heroick verſe, is of the Pindarick nature; as well in the thought, as the expreſſion: and, as ſuch, requires the ſame grains of allowance for it. Dryden.

Parents never give allowances, for an innocent paſſion. Swift.

6. Eſtabliſhed character; reputation.

His bark is ſtoutly timber'd; and his pilot,
Of very expert and approv'd allowance. Shakeſp.

Allo'y, ål-loy'. n. ſ. [See Allay.]

1. Baſer metal, mixed in coinage.

That preciſe weight and fineneſs, by law appropriated to the pieces of each denomination, is called the ſtandard. Fine ſilver is ſilver, without the mixture of any baſer metal: Alloy is baſer metal, mixed with it. Locke.

Let another piece be coined of the ſame weight; wherein half the ſilver is taken out, and copper or other alloy put into the place; it will be worth, but half as much: for the value of the alloy is ſo inconſiderable, as not to be reckoned. Locke.

2. Abatement; diminution.

The pleaſures of ſenſe are probably reliſhed, by beaſts in a more exquiſite degree, than they are by men; for they taſte them ſincere and pure, without mixture or alloy. Atterbury.

Allube'scency, ål-lů-běs'-sěn-sỳ. n. ſ. [allubeſcentia, Lat.] Willingneſs; content. Dict.

To ALLU'DE, ål-lů'de. v. n. [alludo, Lat.] To have ſome reference to a thing, without the direct mention of it; to hint at; to inſinuate. It is uſed of perſons; as, he alludes to an old ſtory; or of things, as, the lampoon alludes to his mother's faults.

Theſe ſpeeches of Jerom and Chryſoſtom do ſeem to allude unto ſuch miniſterial garments, as were then in uſe. Hooker.

True it is, that many things of this nature be alluded unto; yea, many things declared. Hooker.

Then juſt proportions were taken, and every thing placed by weight and meaſure: and this, I doubt not, was that artificial ſtructure here alluded-to. Burnet's Theory.

Allu'minor, ål-lů'-mỳ-nůr. n. ſ. [allumer, Fr. to light.] One, who colours or paints upon paper or parchment; becauſe he gives graces, light, and ornament, to the letters or figures coloured. Cowell.

To ALLU'RE, ål-lů're. v. a. [leurer, Fr. looren, Dutch; belæpen, Sax.] To entice to any thing, whether good or bad; to draw towards any thing by enticement.

Unto laws, that men make for the benefit of men, it hath ſeemed always needful to add rewards; which may more allure unto good, than any hardneſs deterreth from it: and puniſhments; which may more deter from evil, than any ſweetneſs thereto allureth. Hooker.

The golden ſun, in ſplendour likeſt heav'n,
Allur'd his eye. Milton's Paradiſe Loſt.

Each flatt'ring hope, and each alluring joy. Lyttleton.

Allu're, ål-lů're. n. ſ. [from the verb allure.] Something ſet-up, to entice birds (or other things) to it. We now write lure.

The rather to train them to his allure, he told them both often, and with a vehement voice, how they were over-topped and trodden down by gentlemen. Hayward.

Allu'rement, ål-lů're-měnt. n. ſ. [from allure.] That, which allures, or has the force of alluring; enticement; temptation of pleaſure.

Againſt allurement, cuſtom, and a world
Offended; fearleſs of reproach and ſcorn,
Or violence. Milton's Paradiſe Loſt.

—Adam, by his wife's allurement, fell.
Paradiſe Regained.

To ſhun th' allurement, is not hard
To minds reſolv'd, forewarn'd, and well prepar'd:
But, wond'rous difficult, when once beſet;
To ſtruggle through the ſtraits, and break th' involving net. Dryden.

Allu′rer, ål-lů′-rŭr. n. ſ. [from allure.] The perſon, that allures; enticer; inveigler.

Allu′ringly, ål-lů′-rĭng-lŷ. adv. [from allure.] In an alluring manner; enticingly.

Allu′ringness, ål-lů′-rĭng-nĕſs. n. ſ. [from alluring.] The quality, of alluring or enticing; invitation; temptation, by propoſing pleaſure.

Allu′sion, ål-lů′-zhŭn. n. ſ. [alluſio, Lat.] That, which is ſpoken with reference to ſomething, ſuppoſed to be already known, and therefore not expreſſed; a hint; an implication. It has the particle to.

Here are manifeſt alluſions and footſteps of the diſſolution of the earth, as it was in the deluge, and will be in its laſt ruin. Burnet's Theory.

This laſt alluſion gall'd the Panther more;
Becauſe indeed it rubb'd upon the ſore. Dryden.

Expreſſions now out of uſe, alluſions to cuſtoms loſt to us, and various particularities, muſt needs continue ſeveral paſſages in the dark. Locke.

Allu′sive, ål-lů′-sĭv. adj. [alludo, alluſum, Lat.] Hinting at ſomething, not fully expreſſed.

Where the expreſſion in one place is plain, and the ſenſe affixed to it agreeable to the proper force of the words, and no negative objection requires us to depart from it; and the expreſſion, in the other, is figurative or alluſive, and the doctrine, deduced from it, liable to great objections; it is reaſonable, in this latter place, to reſtrain the extent of the figure and alluſion to a conſiſtency with the former. Rogers's Sermons.

Allu′sively, ål-lů′-sĭv-lŷ. adv. [from alluſive.] In an alluſive manner; by implication; by inſinuation.

The Jewiſh nation, that rejected and crucified him, within the compaſs of one generation, were, according to his prediction, deſtroyed by the Romans, and preyed upon by thoſe eagles (Matt. xxiv. 28.), by which, alluſively, are noted the Roman armies, whoſe enſign was the eagle. Hammond.

Allu′siveness, ål-lů′-sĭv-nĕſs. n. ſ. [from alluſive.] The quality of being alluſive.

Allu′vion, ål-lů′-vyŭn. n. ſ. [alluvio, Lat.]

1. The carrying of any thing to ſomething elſe by the motion of the water.
2. The thing carried by water to ſomething elſe.

The civil law gives the owner of land a right to that increaſe which ariſes from alluvion, which is defined, an inſenſible increment, brought by the water. Cowell.

Allu′vious, ål-lů′-vyŭs. adj. [from alluvion.] That, which is carried by water to another place, and lodged upon ſomething elſe.

To ALLY′, ål-lŷ′. v. a. [allier, Fr.]

1. To unite by kindred, friendſhip, or confederacy.

All theſe ſepts are allied, to the inhabitants of the North; ſo, as there is no hope, that they will ever ſerve faithfully againſt them. Spenſer on Ireland.

Wants, frailties, paſſions, cloſer ſtill ally
The common int'reſt, or endear the tye. Pope.

To the ſun ally'd,
From him they draw the animating fire. Thomſon.

2. To make a relation, between two things, by ſimilitude, or reſemblance, or any other means.

Two lines are indeed remotely allied to Virgil's ſenſe; but they are too like the tenderneſs of Ovid. Dryden.

Ally′, ål-lŷ′. n. ſ. [allie, Fr.] One, united by ſome means of connexion; as marriage, friendſhip, confederacy.

He in court ſtood, on his own feet; for the moſt of his allies, rather leaned upon him, than ſhored him. Wotton.

We could hinder the acceſſion of Holland to France; either as ſubjects, with great immunities for the encouragement of trade; or as an inferiour and dependent ally, under their protection. Temple.

ALMACA′NTAR, ål-må-căn′-tŭr. n. ſ. [An Arabick word, written variouſly by various authors; by D'Herbelot, almocantar; by others, almucantar.] A circle, drawn parallel to the horizon. It is generally uſed in the plural; and means a ſeries of parallel circles, drawn through the ſeveral degrees of the meridian.

A′lmaca′ntar's Staff, ål-må-căn″-tŭrz-ſtåf′. n. ſ. An inſtrument, commonly made of pear-tree or box, with an arch of fifteen degrees; uſed to take obſervations of the ſun, about the time of its riſing and ſetting, in order to find the amplitude, and conſequently the variation of the compaſs. Chambers.

A′lmanack, å′l-må-năk. n. ſ. [Derived, by ſome, from the Arabick al, and manah, Heb. to count or compute; by others, from al, Arabick, and μὴν a month, or μαναχὸς the courſe of the months: by others, from a Teutonick original; al, and maan the moon, an account of every moon, or month. All of them are probable.] A calendar; a book, in which the revolutions of the ſeaſons, with the return of feaſts and faſts, is noted for the enſuing year.

It will be ſaid, this is an almanack for the old year: all hath been well; Spain hath not aſſailed this kingdom. Bacon.

This aſtrologer made his almanack give a tolerable account of the weather, by a direct inverſion of the common prognoſticators.
Government of the Tongue.

Beware the woman too, and ſhun her ſight,
Who in theſe ſtudies does herſelf delight;
By whom a greaſy almanack is borne,
With often handling, like chaft amber worn.
Dryden.

I'll have a faſting almanack printed, on purpoſe for her uſe. Dryden's Spaniſh Friar.

A′LMANDINE, å′l-măn-dīne. n. ſ. [Fr. almandina, Ital.] A ruby, coarſer and lighter than the oriental, and nearer the colour of the granate. Dict.

Almi′ghtiness, ål-mī′-tŷ-nĕs. n. ſ. [from almighty.] Unlimited power; omnipotence; one of the attributes of God.

It ſerveth to the world, for a witneſs of his almightineſs, whom we outwardly honour with the chiefeſt of outward things. Hooker.

In creating and making exiſtent the world univerſal, by the abſolute act of his own word, God ſhewed his power and almightineſs.
Sir Walter Raleigh.

In the wilderneſs, the bittern and the ſtork, the unicorn and the elk, live upon his proviſions, and revere his power, and feel the force of his almightineſs. Taylor.

Almi′ghty, ål-mī′-tŷ. adj. [from all and mighty.] Of unlimited power; omnipotent.

The Lord appeared unto Abraham; and ſaid unto him, I am the almighty God: walk before me, and be thou perfect. Geneſis, xvii. 1.

He wills you, in the name of God almighty;
That you diveſt yourſelf, and lay apart
The borrowed glories; that, by gift of heav'n,
By law of nature and of nations, 'long
To him and to his heirs. Shakeſp.

A′lmond, å′-mŭnd. n. ſ. [amand, Fr. derived by Menage from amandala, a word in low Latin: by others, from Allemand, a German; ſuppoſing, that almonds come to France from Germany.] The nut of the almond tree, either ſweet or bitter.

Pound an almond, and the clear white colour will be altered into a dirty one; and the ſweet taſte, into an oily one. Locke.

A′lmond-tree, å′-mŭnd-trē. n. ſ. [amygdalus, Lat.] It has leaves and flowers, very like thoſe of the peach tree; but the fruit is longer, and more compreſſed; the outer green coat is thinner and drier when ripe, and the ſhell is not ſo rugged. Miller.

Like to an almond-tree, mounted high
On top of Green Selenis, all alone,
With bloſſoms brave bedecked daintily;
Whoſe tender locks do tremble every one,
At every little breath that under heav'n is blown.
Fairy Queen.

Mark well the flow'ring almonds in the wood:
If od'rous blooms the bearing branches load,
The glebe will anſwer to the ſylvan reign;
Great heats will follow, and large crops of grain.
Dryden.

A′lmonds of the throat, or Tonsils, å′-mŭndz (called improperly, Almonds of the ears) are two round glands, placed on the ſides of the baſis of the tongue, under the common membrane of the fauces: each of them has a large oval ſinus, which opens into the fauces; and in it are a great number of leſſer ones, which diſcharge themſelves through the great ſinus of a mucous and ſlippery matter into the fauces, larynx, and œſophagus, for the moiſtening and lubricating thoſe parts. When the œſophagus muſcle acts, it compreſſes the almonds, and they frequently are the occaſion of a ſore throat. Quincy.

The tonſils, or almonds of the ears, are alſo frequently ſwelled in the king's evil; which tumour may be very well reckoned a ſpecies of it.
Wiſeman's Surgery.

A′lmond-furnace, or A′lman-furnace, å″-mŭnd-fŭr′-nĭs, or ål″-măn′-fŭr′-nĭs, called alſo the Sweep; is a peculiar kind of furnace, uſed in refining, to ſeparate metals from cinders and other foreign ſubſtances.
Chambers.

A′lmoner, or A′lmner, ål′-mô-nĕr, or ålm′-nĕr. n. ſ. [eleemoſynarius, Lat.] The officer of a prince, or other perſon, employed in the diſtribution of charity.

I enquired for an almoner; and the general fame has pointed-out your reverence, as the worthieſt man. Dryden.

Al'monry, ål-mŭn-rẏ. n. ſ. [from almoner.] The place, where the almoner reſides, or where the alms are diſtributed.

Almo'st, ål-mŏ'st. adv. [from all and moſt; that is, moſt part of all. Skinner.] Nearly; well nigh; in the next degree, to the whole, or to univerſality.

Who is there almoſt; whoſe mind, at ſome time or other, love or anger, fear or grief, has not ſo faſtened to ſome clog, that it could not turn itſelf to any other object. Locke.

There can be no ſuch thing or notion, as an almoſt infinite; there can be nothing next or ſecond, to an omnipotent God. Bentley's Sermons.

Atlas becomes unequal to his freight;
And almoſt faints, beneath the glowing weight.
Addiſon.

ALMS, å'mz. n. ſ. [in Saxon, elmeꞃ, from eleemoſyna, Lat.] What is given gratuitouſly, in relief of the poor. It has no ſingular.

My arm'd knees,
Which bow'd but in my ſtirrup, bend like his,
That hath received an alms. Shakeſp.

The poor beggar hath a juſt demand of an alms, from the rich man; who is guilty of fraud, injuſtice, and oppreſſion, if he does not afford relief according to his abilities. Swift.

Alms-basket, å'mz-bås-kĭt. n. ſ. [from alms and baſket.] The baſket, in which proviſions are put to be given away.

There ſweepings do as well,
As the beſt order'd meal;
For, who the reliſh of theſe gueſts will fit,
Needs ſet them but the alms-baſket of wit.
Ben Jonſon.

We'll ſtand-up for our properties, was the beggar's ſong, that lived upon the alms-baſket. L'Eſtrange's Fables.

A'lmsdeed, å'mz-dēd. n. ſ. [from alms and deed.] An act of charity; a charitable gift.

This woman was full of good works, and almsdeeds, which ſhe did. Acts, ix. 36.

Hard-favour'd Richard, where art thou?
Thou art not here: murder is thy almsdeed;
Petitioner for blood thou ne'er put'ſt back.
Shakeſpeare.

A'lms-giver, å'mz-gĭv-ŭr. n. ſ. [from alms and giver.] He, that gives alms; he, that ſupports others by his charity.

He endowed many religious foundations, and yet was he a great alms-giver in ſecret; which ſhewed, that his works in publick were dedicated, rather to God's glory, than his own. Bacon.

A'lms-house, å'mz-hous. n. ſ. [from alms and houſe.] A houſe, devoted to the reception and ſupport of the poor; an hoſpital for the poor.

The way of providing for the clergy by tithes, the device of alms-houſes for the poor, and the ſorting-out of the people into pariſhes, are manifeſt. Hooker.

And, to relief of lazars, and weak age
Of indigent faint ſouls paſt corporal toil,
A hundred alms-houſes right well ſupplied.
Shakeſpeare.

Many penitents, after the robbing of temples and other rapine, build an hoſpital or alms-houſe, out of the ruins of the church, and the ſpoils of widows and orphans. L'Eſtrange.

Behold yon alms-houſe, neat, but void of ſtate;
Where age and want ſit ſmiling at the gate.
Pope.

A'lms-man, å'mz-mån. n. ſ. [from alms and man.] A man, who lives upon alms; who is ſupported by charity.

I'll give my jewels, for a ſet of beads;
My gorgeous palace, for a hermitage;
My gay apparel, for an alms-man's gown.
Shakeſpeare.

A'lmug-tree, ål'-mŭg-trē. n. ſ. A tree, mentioned in ſcripture. Of its wood were made muſical inſtruments; and it was uſed alſo, in rails, or in a ſtaircaſe. The Rabbins generally render it coral, others ebony, brazil, or pine: in the Septuagint, it is tranſlated wrought wood; and in the Vulgate, Ligna Thyina: but coral could never anſwer the purpoſes of the almugim; the pine-tree is too common in Judea, to be imported from Ophir; and the Thyinum or citron-tree, much eſteemed by the ancients for its fragrance and beauty, came from Mauritania. By the wood almugim, or algumim, or ſimply gummim, taking al for a kind of article, may be underſtood oily and gummy ſorts of wood; and particularly the trees, which produce gum ammoniac, or gum arabick; and is (perhaps) the ſame, with the Shittim wood mentioned by Moſes. Calmet.

And the navy alſo of Hiram, that brought gold from Ophir, brought-in from Ophir great plenty of almug-trees and precious trees.
1 Kings, x. 11.

A'lnagar, A'lnager, or A'lneger, ål'-nå-går, ål'-nå-gĕr, or ål'-nĕ-gĕr. n. ſ. [from alnage.] A meaſurer by the ell: a ſworn officer; whoſe buſineſs formerly was, to inſpect the aſſize of woollen cloth, and to fix the ſeals appointed upon it for that purpoſe: but there are now three officers, belonging to the regulation of cloth-manufactures; the ſearcher, meaſurer, and alneger. Dict.

A'lnage, ål'-nåje. n. ſ. [from aulnage, or aunage, Fr.] Ell-meaſure, or rather the meaſuring by the ell or yard. Dict.

A'lnight, ål-nīt. n. ſ. [from all and night.]

A ſervice, which they call alnight, is a great cake of wax, with the wick in the midſt; whereby it cometh to paſs, that the wick fetcheth the nouriſhment farther off. Bacon.

A'LOES, ål'-ŏ-ēz. n. ſ. [אחלם, as it is ſuppoſed.] A term, applied to three different things.

1. A precious wood, uſed in the Eaſt for perfumes; of which the beſt ſort is of higher price, than gold; and was the moſt valuable preſent, given by the king of Siam, in 1686, to the king of France: it is called Tambac; and is the heart, or innermoſt part, of the aloe tree; the next part to which is called Calembac; which is ſometimes imported into Europe, and (though of inferiour value to the Tambac) is much eſteemed: the part, next the bark, is termed by the Portugueſe Pao d'aquila or eagle-wood; but ſome account the eagle-wood not the outer part of the Tambac, but another ſpecies. Our knowledge of this wood is yet very imperfect. Savary.

2. Aloes is a tree, which grows in hot countries, and even in the mountains of Spain.

3. Aloes is a medicinal juice, extracted, not from the odoriferous, but the common aloes tree; by cutting the leaves, and expoſing the juice (that drops from them) to the ſun. It is diſtinguiſhed, into Socotorine, and Caballine or horſe aloes: the firſt is ſo called, from Socotora; the ſecond, becauſe (being coarſer) it ought to be confined to the uſe of farriers. It is a warm and ſtrong cathartick.

Aloe'tical, ål-ŏ-ēt'-ẏ-kål. adj. [from aloes.] Conſiſting chiefly of aloes.

It may be excited, by aloetical, ſcammoniate, or acrimonious medicines. Wiſeman's Surgery.

Aloe'tick, ål-ŏ-ēt'-ĭk. n. ſ. [from aloes.] Any medicine is ſo called, which chiefly conſiſts of aloes. Quincy.

Alo'ft, å-lå'ft. adv. [loffter, to lift up, Dan. Loft air, Icelandiſh; ſo that aloft is, into the air.] On high; above; in the air: a word, uſed chiefly in poetry.

For I have read in ſtories oft,
That love has wings, and ſoars aloft. Suckling.
Upright he ſtood; and bore aloft his ſhield,
Conſpicuous from afar; and overlook'd the field.
Dryden.

Alo'ft, å-lå'ft. prep. Above.

The great luminary
(Aloft the vulgar conſtellations thick,
That from his lordly eye keep diſtance due)
Diſpenſes light from far. Milton's Paradiſe Loſt.

A'logy, ål'-ŏ-jẏ. n. ſ. [ἄλογ@.] Unreaſonableneſs; abſurdity. Dict.

Alo'ne, å-lŏ'ne. adj. [alleen, Dutch; from al and een or one, that is, ſingle.]

1. Without another.

The quarrel toucheth none, but us alone;
Betwixt ourſelves let us decide it then. Shakeſp.
If by a mortal hand my father's throne
Could be defended, 'twas by mine alone. Dryden.

God, by whoſe alone power and converſation we all live, and move, and have our being. Bentley.

2. Without company; ſolitary.

Eagles we ſee fly alone; and they are but ſheep, which always herd together. Sidney.

Alone, for other creature in this place,
Living or lifeleſs, to be found was none. Milton.
I never durſt in darkneſs be alone. Dryden.

Alo'ne, å-lŏ'ne. adv.

1. This word is ſeldom uſed, but with the word let; if, even then, it be an adverb. It implies ſometimes an ironical prohibition, forbidding to help a man, who is able to manage the affair himſelf.

Let us alone, to guard Corioli:
If they ſet down before 's; 'fore they remove,
Bring up your army. Shakeſp.
Let you alone, cunning artificer;
See, how his gorget peers above his gown,
To tell the people in what danger he was.
Ben Jonſon.

2. To forbear; to leave undone.

His client ſtole it; but he had better, have let it alone; for he loſt his cauſe by his jeſt. Addiſon.

Alo'ng, å-lŏng'. adv. [au longue, Fr.]

1. At length.

Some rowl a mighty ſtone; ſome, laid along,
And bound with burning wires, on ſpokes of wheels are hung. Dryden.

2. Through any ſpace meaſured lengthwiſe.

A firebrand carried along, leaveth a train of light behind it. Bacon's Natural Hiſtory.

Where Ufens glides along the lowly lands,
Or the black water of Pomptina ſtands. Dryden.

3. Throughout; in the whole: with all prefixed.

Solomon, all along in his Proverbs, gives the title of fool to a wicked man. Tillotſon.

They were all along, a croſs untoward ſort of people. South.

4. Joined with the particle with; in company; joined with.

I your commiſſion will forthwith diſpatch;
And he to England ſhall along with you. Shakeſp. Hamlet.

Hence then! and Evil go with thee along!
Thy offspring, to the place of evil, Hell. Milton.

Religious zeal is ſubject to an exceſs, and to a defect; when ſomething is mingled with it, which it ſhould not have; or, when it wants ſomething, that ought to go along with it. Sprat.

5. Sometimes with is underſtood.

Command thy ſlaves: my free-born ſoul diſdains
A tyrant's curb, and reſtive breaks the reins.
Take this along; and no diſpute ſhall riſe
(Though mine the woman) for my raviſh'd prize. Dryden.

6. Forward; onward. In this ſenſe it is derived from allons, French.

Come then, my friend; my genius, come along,
Thou maſter of the poet and the ſong! Pope.

Alo'ngst, å-lông'ſt. adv. [a corruption, as it ſeems, from along.] Along; through the length.

The Turks did keep ſtrait watch and ward, in all their ports alongſt the ſea coaſt. Knolles's Hiſtory of the Turks.

Alo'of, å-lőf. adv. [all off, that is, quite off.]

1. At a diſtance; with the particle from. It generally implies a ſmall diſtance; ſuch, as is within view or obſervation.

Then bade the knight this lady yede aloof,
And to an hill herſelf withdraw aſide;
From whence ſhe might behold the battle's proof,
And elſe be ſafe from danger far deſcried. Fairy Queen.

As next in worth,
Came ſingly where he ſtood, on the bare ſtrand;
While the promiſcuous crowd ſtood yet aloof. Milton's Paradiſe Loſt.

The noiſe approaches; though our palace ſtood
Aloof from effects, encompaſs'd with a wood. Dryden.

2. Applied to perſons, it often inſinuates caution and circumſpection.

Turn on the bloody hounds, with heads of ſteel;
And make the cowards, ſtand aloof at bay. Shakeſpeare.

Going northwards aloof, as long as they had any doubt of being purſued: at laſt, when they were out of reach, they turned and croſs'd the ocean to Spain. Bacon.

The king would not, by any means, enter the city; until he had aloof ſeen the croſs ſet-up upon the greater tower of Granada, whereby it became Chriſtian ground. Bacon.

Two pots ſtood by a river, one of braſs, the other of clay: the water carried them away; the earthen veſſel kept aloof from t'other. L'Eſtrange's Fables.

The ſtrong may fight aloof; Ancæus try'd
His force too near, and by preſuming dy'd. Dryden's Fables.

3. In a figurative ſenſe, it is uſed to import art or cunning in converſation, by which a man holds the principal queſtion at a diſtance.

Nor do we find him forward to be ſounded;
But with a crafty madneſs keeps aloof,
When we would bring him on to ſome confeſſion
Of his true ſtate. Shakeſp. Hamlet.

4. It is uſed metaphorically of perſons, that will not be ſeen in a deſign.

It is neceſſary, the queen join: for, if ſhe ſtand aloof, there will be ſtill ſuſpicions; it being a received opinion, that ſhe hath a great intereſt in the king's favour and power. Suckling.

5. It is applied to things, not properly belonging to each other.

Love's not love,
When it is mingled with regards, that ſtand
Aloof from th' entire point. Shakeſp. K. Lear.

Alo'ud, å-loud'. adv. [from a and loud.] Loudly; with a ſtrong voice; with a great noiſe.

Strangled he lies! yet ſeems to cry aloud,
To warn the mighty, and inſtruct the proud;
That of the great, neglecting to be juſt,
Heav'n in a moment makes an heap of duſt. Waller.

Then heav'n's high monarch thund'red thrice aloud,
And thrice he ſhook aloft a golden cloud. Dryden.

Alo'w, å-lő'. adv. [from a and low.] In a low place; not aloft.

And now alow, and now aloft they fly,
As borne through air; and ſeem to touch the ſky. Dryden.

A'LPHA, ål'-få. n. ſ. The firſt letter in the Greek alphabet, anſwering to our A; therefore uſed to ſignify the firſt.

I am alpha and omega, the beginning and the ending, ſaith the Lord; which is, and which was, and which is to come, the Almighty. Revelations.

A'LPHABET, ål'-få-bĕt. n. ſ. [from ἄλφα alpha, and βῆτα beta, the two firſt letters of the Greeks.] The order of the letters, or elements of ſpeech.

Thou ſhalt not ſigh,
Nor wink, nor nod, nor kneel, nor make a ſign;
But I of theſe will reſt an alphabet,
And by ſtill practice learn to know thy meaning. Shakeſpeare.

The letters of the alphabet, formed by the ſeveral motions of the mouth; and the great variety of ſyllables, compoſed of letters, and formed with almoſt equal velocity; and the endleſs number of words, capable of being framed out of the alphabet, either of more ſyllables or of one, are wonderful. Holder.

Taught by their nurſes, little children get
This ſaying, ſooner than their alphabet. Dryd. jun. Juv.

To A'lphabet, ål'-få-bĕt. v. a. [from alphabet, noun.] To range in the order of the alphabet.

Alphabe'tical, } ål-få-bĕt'-tȳ-kål, ål-få-
Alphabe'tick, } bĕt'-ik. adj. [from alphabet; alphabetique, Fr.] In the order of the alphabet; according to the ſeries of letters.

I have digeſted, in an alphabetical order, all the counties, corporations, and boroughs in Great-Britain, with their reſpective tempers. Swift.

Alphabe'tically, ål-få-bĕt'-tȳ-kål-lȳ. adv. [from alphabetical.] In an alphabetical manner; according to the order of the letters.

I had once in my thoughts, to contrive a grammar, more than I can now compriſe in ſhort hints; and a dictionary, alphabetically containing the words of the language, which the deaf perſon is to learn. Holder's Elements of Speech.

Alre'ady, ål-rĕd'-dȳ. adv. [from all and ready.] At this preſent time, or at ſome time paſt; oppoſed to futurity; as, Will he come ſoon? He is here already. Will it be done? It has been done already.

Touching our uniformity; that, which hath been already anſwered, may ſerve for anſwer. Hooker.

You warn'd me ſtill, of loving two;
Can I love him, already loving you? Dryden's Indian Emperor.

See, the guards from yon far eaſtern hill
Already move, no longer ſtay afford;
High in the air they wave the flaming ſword,
Your ſignal to depart. Dryden's State of Innocence.

Methods for the advancement of piety are in the power of a prince, limited like ours, by a ſtrict execution of the laws already in force. Swift.

Methinks, already I your tears ſurvey;
Already hear, the horrid things they ſay;
Already ſee you, a degraded toaſt;
And all your honour, in a whiſper loſt! Pope.

Als, åls'. adv. [als, Dutch.] Alſo; likewiſe; a word, now out of uſe.

Sad remembrance now the prince amoves,
With freſh deſire his voyage to purſue;
Als Una earn'd her travel to renew. Fairy Queen.

A'lso, ål-ső. adv. [from all and ſo.]

1. In the ſame manner; likewiſe.

In theſe two, no doubt, are contained the cauſes of the great deluge; as according to Moſes, ſo alſo according to neceſſity: for our world affords no other treaſures of water. Burnet's Theory.

2. Alſo is ſometimes nearly the ſame with and, and only conjoins the members of the ſentence.

God do ſo to me, and more alſo. 1 Samuel, xiv. 44.

A'ltar, ål-tůr. n. ſ. [altare, Lat. It is obſerved by Junius, that the word altar is received, with chriſtianity, in all the European languages; and that altare is uſed by one of the Fathers, as appropriated to the Chriſtian worſhip, in oppoſition to the aræ of gentiliſm.]

1. The place, where offerings to heaven are laid.

The goddeſs of the nuptial bed,
Tir'd with her vain devotions for the dead,
Reſolv'd the tainted hand ſhould be repell'd;
Which incenſe offer'd, and her altar held. Dryd.

2. The table in Chriſtian churches, where the communion is adminiſtered.

Her grace roſe; and, with modeſt paces,
Came to the altar; where ſhe kneel'd, and faint-like
Caſt her fair eyes to heav'n, and pray'd devoutly. Shakeſpeare.

A'ltarage, ål-tår-åje. n. ſ. [altaragium, Lat.] An emolument, ariſing to the prieſt from oblations, through the means of the altar. Ayliffe's Parergon.

A'ltar-cloth, ål-tůr-clőth. n. ſ. [from altar and cloth.] The cloth, thrown over the altar in churches.

I ſhould ſet-down the wealth, books, hangings, and altar-cloths, which our kings gave this abbey. Peacham on Drawing.

To A'LTER, ål-tůr. v. a. [alterer, Fr. from alter, Lat.]

1. To change; to make otherwiſe than it is. To alter ſeems more properly to imply a change, made only in ſome part of a thing; as, to alter a writing, may be, to blot or interpolate it: to change it, may be, to ſubſtitute another in its place. With from and to; as, her face is altered from pale to red.

Do you note,
How much her grace is alter'd on the ſudden?
How long her face is drawn? how pale ſhe looks,
And of an earthly cold? Shakeſp. Henry VIII.

Acts, appropriated to the worſhip of God by his own appointment, muſt continue ſo, till himſelf hath otherwiſe declared: for, who dares alter, what God hath appointed? Stillingfleet.

2. To take-off, from a perſuaſion, practice, or ſect.

For the way of writing plays in verſe, I find it troubleſome and ſlow: but I am no way altered, from my opinion of it; at leaſt with any reaſons, which have oppoſed it. Dryden.

To A'LTER, ål-tůr. v. n. To become otherwiſe, than it was; as, the weather alters from bright to cloudy.

A'lterable, ål-tē-råbl. adj. [from alter; alterable, Fr.] That, which may be altered or changed by ſomething elſe; diſtinct from changeable, or that, which changes, or may change itſelf.

That alterable reſpects are realities in nature, will never be admitted by a conſiderate diſcerner. Glanville.

Our condition in this world is mutable and uncertain, alterable by a thouſand accidents, which we can neither foreſee nor prevent. Rogers.

I wiſh they had been more clear in their directions upon that mighty point, Whether the ſettlement of the ſucceſſion in the Houſe of Hanover be alterable, or no? Swift.

A'lterableness, å'l-tė-råbl-nės. n. ſ. [from alterable.] The quality of being alterable, or admitting change from external cauſes.

A'lterably, ål'-tė-råb-lý. adv. [from alterable.] In ſuch a manner as may be altered.

A'lterage, ål'-tėr-å'je. n. ſ. [from alo.] The breeding, nouriſhing, or foſtering of a child.

In Ireland they put their children to foſterers: the rich ſell, the meaner ſort buying the alterage of their children; and the reaſon is, becauſe, in the opinion of the people, foſtering has always been a ſtronger alliance than blood. Sir John Davies on Ireland.

A'lterant, å'l-tė-rånt. adj. [alterant, Fr.] That which has the power of producing changes in any thing.

And whether the body be alterant or altered, evermore a perception precedeth operation; for elſe all bodies would be alike one to another. Bacon.

Altera'tion, ål-tė-rå'-ſhůn. n. ſ. [from alter; alteration, Fr.]

1. The act of altering or changing.

Alteration, though it be from worſe to better, hath in it inconveniencies, and thoſe weighty. Hooker.

2. The change made.

Why may we not preſume, that God doth even call for ſuch change or alteration, as the very condition of things themſelves doth make neceſſary? Hooker.

So he, with difficulty and labour hard,
Mov'd on:
But he once paſt, ſoon after, when man fell,
Strange alteration! Sin, and Death, amain
Following his track (ſuch was the will of heav'n!)
Pav'd after him a broad and beaten way. Milton.

No other alteration will ſatisfy; nor this neither, very long, without an utter abolition of all order. South.

Appius Claudius admitted to the ſenate the ſons of thoſe who had been ſlaves; by which, and ſucceeding alterations, that council degenerated into a moſt corrupt body. Swift.

A'lterative, ål'-tė-rå-tiv. adj. [from alter.]

Medicines called alterative, are ſuch as have no immediate ſenſible operation, but gradually gain upon the conſtitution, by changing the humours from a ſtate of diſtemperature to health. They are oppoſed to evacuants. Quincy.

When there is an eruption of humour in any part, it is not cured merely by outward applications, but by ſuch alterative medicines as purify the blood. Government of the Tongue.

Alterca'tion, ål-tėr-kå'-ſhůn. n. ſ. [altercation, Fr. from altercor, Lat.] Debate; controverſy; wrangle.

By this hot purſuit of lower controverſies amongſt men profeſſing religion, and agreeing in the principal foundations thereof, they conceive hope, that, about the higher principles themſelves, time will cauſe altercation to grow. Hooker.

Their whole life was little elſe than a perpetual wrangling and altertation; and that, many times, rather for victory and oſtentation of wit, than a ſober and ſerious ſearch of truth. Hakewill on Providence.

Alte'rn, ål-tėr'n. adj. [alternus, Lat.] Acting by turns, in ſucceſſion each to the other.

And God made two great lights, great for their uſe
To man; the greater to have rule by day,
The leſs by night, altern. Milton.

Alte'rnacy, ål-tėr'-nå-ſý. n. ſ. [from alternate.] Action performed by turns.

ALTE'RNATE, ål-tėr'-nåt. adj. [alternus, Lat.] Being by turns; one after another; reciprocal.

Friendſhip conſiſts properly in mutual offices, and a generous ſtrife in alternate acts of kindneſs. South.

Hear how Timotheus' various lays ſurpriſe,
And bid alternate paſſions fall and riſe!
While, at each change, the ſon of Lybian Jove
Now burns with glory, and then melts with love. Pope.

Alte'rnate angles, ål-tėr'-nåt-ång'ls [in geometry] are the internal angles made by a line cutting two parallels, and lying on the oppoſite ſides of the cutting line; the one below the firſt parallel, and the other above the ſecond.

Alte'rnate, ål-tėr'-nåt. n. ſ. [from alternate, adj.] That which happens alternately; viciſſitude.

And rais'd in pleaſure, or repos'd in eaſe,
Grateful alternates of ſubſtantial peace,
They bleſs the long nocturnal influence ſhed
On the crown'd goblet, and the genial bed. Prior.

To Alte'rnate, ål-tėr'-nåte. v. a. [alterno, Lat.]

1. To perform alternately.

Thoſe who, in their courſe,
Melodious hymns about the ſov'reign throne
Alternate all night long. Milton.

2. To change one thing for another reciprocally.

The moſt high God, in all things appertaining unto this life, for ſundry wiſe ends, alternates the diſpoſition of good and evil. Grew.

Alte'rnately, ål-tėr'-nåt-lý. adv. [from alternate.] In reciprocal ſucceſſion, ſo that each ſhall be ſucceeded by that which it ſucceeds, as light follows darkneſs, and darkneſs follows light.

The princeſs Meleſinda, bath'd in tears,
And toſs'd alternately with hopes and fears,
Would learn from you the fortunes of her lord. Dryden.

Unhappy man! whom ſorrow thus and rage
To different ills alternately engage. Prior.

The rays of light are, by ſome cauſe or other, alternately diſpoſed to be reflected or refracted for many viciſſitudes. Newton.

Alte'rnateness, ål-tėr'-nåt-nės. n. ſ. [from alternate.] The quality of being alternate, or of happening in reciprocal ſucceſſion. Dict.

Alterna'tion, ål-tėr-nå'-ſhůn. n. ſ. [from alternate.] The reciprocal ſucceſſion of things.

The one would be oppreſſed with conſtant heat, the other with inſufferable cold; and ſo the defect of alternation would utterly impugn the generation of all things. Brown.

Alte'rnative, ål-tėr'-nå-tiv. n. ſ. [alternatif, Fr.] The choice given of two things; ſo that if one be rejected, the other muſt be taken.

Which thou haſt perpendicularly fall'n. Shakeſp.

Some define the perpendicular altitude of the higheſt mountains to be four miles; others but fifteen furlongs. Brown.

She ſhines above, we know, but in what place,
How near the throne, and heav'n's imperial face,
By our weak opticks is but vainly gueſs'd;
Diſtance and altitude conceal the reſt. Dryden.

2. The elevation of any of the heavenly bodies above the horizon.

Even unto the latitude of fifty-two, the efficacy thereof is not much conſiderable, whether we conſider its aſcent, meridian, altitude, or abode above the horizon. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

Has not a poet more virtues and vices within his circle, cannot he obſerve them and their influences in their oppoſitions and conjunctions, in their altitudes and depreſſions? Rymer.

3. Situation with regard to lower things.

Thoſe members which are pairs, ſtand by one another in equal altitude, and anſwer on each ſide one to another. Ray.

4. Height of excellence; ſuperiority.

Your altitude offends the eyes
Of thoſe who want the power to riſe. Swift.

5. Height of degree; higheſt point.

He did it to pleaſe his mother, and to be partly proud; which he is, even to the altitude of his virtue. Shakeſpeare.

Alti'volant, ål-tiv'-vŏ-lånt. adj. [altivolans, Lat. from altus and volo.] High flying. Dict.

A'ltogether, ål-tŏ-gėth'-ėr. adv. [from all and together.]

1. Completely; without reſtriction; without exception.

It is in vain to ſpeak of planting laws, and plotting policy, till the people be altogether ſubdued. Spenſer's State of Ireland.

We find not in the world any people that hath lived altogether without religion. Hooker.

If death and danger are things that really cannot be endured, no man could ever be obliged to ſuffer for his conſcience, or to die for his religion; it being altogether as abſurd to imagine a man obliged to ſuffer, as to do impoſſibilities. South.

I do not altogether diſapprove of the manner of interweaving texts of ſcripture through the ſtyle of your ſermon. Swift.

2. Conjunctly; in company. This is rather all together.

Couſin of Somerſet, join you with me,
And altogether with the duke of Suffolk,
We'll quickly hoiſt duke Humphry from his ſeat.
Shakeſpeare.

A'LUDEL, ål'-ů-dėl. n. ſ. [from a and lutum; that is, without lute.]

Aludels are ſubliming pots uſed in chemiſtry, without bottoms, and fitted into one another, as many as there is occaſion for, without luting. At the bottom of the furnace is a pot that holds the matter to be ſublimed; and at the top is a head, to retain the flowers that riſe up. Quincy.

A'LUM, ål'-lům. n. ſ. [alumen, Lat.]

A kind of mineral ſalt, of an acid taſte, leaving in the mouth a ſenſe of ſweetneſs, accompanied with a conſiderable degree of aſtringency. The ancient naturaliſts allow of two ſorts of alum, natural and factitious. The natural is found in the iſland of Milo, being a kind of whitiſh ſtone, very light, friable, and porous, and ſtreaked with filaments reſembling ſilver. England, Italy, and Flanders, are the countries where alum is principally produced; and the Engliſh roche-alum is made from a bluiſh mineral ſtone, in the hills of Yorkſhire and Lancaſhire.

Saccharine alum is a compoſition of common alum, with roſe-water and whites of eggs boiled together, to the conſiſtence of a paſte, and thus moulded at pleaſure. As it cools, it grows hard as a ſtone.

Burnt alum is alum calcined over the fire.

Plumoſe or plume alum is a ſort of ſaline mineral ſtone, of various colours, moſt commonly white, bordering on green; it riſes in threads or fibres, reſembling thoſe of a feather; whence its name from pluma, a feather. Chambers.

By long beating the white of an egg with a lump of alum, you may bring it, for the moſt part, into white curds. Boyle.

ALUM STONE, ål'-lům-ſtône. n. ſ. A ſtone or calx uſed in ſurgery; perhaps alum calcined, which then becomes corroſive.

She gargled with oxycrate, and was in a few days cured, by touching it with the vitriol and alum ſtones. Wiſeman

ALU'MINOUS, ål-lům'-mŷ-nůs. adj. [from alum.] Relating to alum, or conſiſting of alum.

Nor do we reaſonably conclude, becauſe, by a cold and aluminous moiſture, it is able awhile to reſiſt the fire, that from a peculiarity of nature, it ſubſiſteth and liveth in it. Brown.

The tumour may have other mixture with it, to make it of a vitriolick or aluminous nature. Wiſeman's Surgery.

A'LWAYS, å'l-wåz. adv. [It is ſometimes written alway, compounded of all and way; ealleƿæȝa, Sax. tuttavia, Ital.]

1. Perpetually; throughout all time: oppoſed to ſometime, or to never.

That, which ſometime is expedient, doth not always ſo continue. Hooker.

Man never is, but always to be bleſt. Pope.

2. Conſtantly; without variation: oppoſed to ſometimes, or to now and then.

He is always great, when ſome great occaſion is preſented to him. Dryden.

A. M. ſtands for artium magiſter, or maſter of arts; the ſecond degree of our univerſities, which, in ſome foreign countries, is called doctor of philoſophy.

AM, åm'. The firſt perſon of the verb to be. [See To BE.]

And God ſaid unto Moſes, I am that I am: and he ſaid, thus ſhalt thou ſay unto the children of Iſrael, I am hath ſent me unto you. Exodus, iii. 14.

Come then, my ſoul: I call thee by that name,
Thou buſy thing, from whence I know I am:
For knowing that I am, I know thou art;
Since that muſt needs exiſt, which can impart.
Prior.

AMABI'LITY, å-må-bîl'-lŷ-tŷ. n. ſ. [from amabilis, Lat.] Loveliness; the power of pleaſing.

No rules can make amability, our minds and apprehenſions make that; and ſo is our felicity. Taylor.

AMADE'TTO, å-må-dėt'tô. n. ſ. A ſort of pear [See PEAR] ſo called, ſays Skinner, from the name of him who cultivated it.

A'MADOT, åm'-å-dôt. n. ſ. A ſort of pear. [See PEAR.]

AMA'IN, å-må'n. adv. [from maine, or maigne, old Fr. derived from magnus, Lat.] With vehemence; with vigour; fiercely; violently. It is uſed of any action performed with precipitation, whether of fear or courage, or of any violent effort.

Great lords, from Ireland am I come amain,
To ſignify that rebels there are up. Shakeſpeare.

What! when we fled amain, purſued, and ſtruck
With heav'n's afflicting thunder, and beſought
The deep to ſhelter us? Milton.

The hills, to their ſupply,
Vapour and exhalation, duſk and moiſt,
Sent up amain. Milton.

From hence the boar was rous'd, and ſprung amain,
Like light'ning ſudden, on the warriour train,
Beats down the trees before him, ſhakes the ground;
The foreſt echoes to the crackling ſound,
Shout the fierce youth, and clamours ring around.
Dryden.

AMA'LGAM, å-mål'-gåm. } n. ſ. [ἅμα
AMA'LGAMA, å-mål'-gå-må. } and γαμεῖν.]
The mixture of metals procured by amalgamation. See AMALGAMATION.

The induration of the amalgam appears to proceed from the new texture reſulting from the coalition of the mingled ingredients, that make up the amalgam. Boyle.

To AMA'LGAMATE, å-mål'-gå-måt. v. a. [from amalgam.] To unite metals with quickſilver, which may be practiſed upon all metals, except iron and copper. The uſe of this operation is, to make the metal ſoft and ductile. Gold is, by this method, drawn over other materials by the gilders.

AMALGAMA'TION, å-mål-gå-må'-ſhůn. n. ſ. [from amalgamate.] The act or practice of amalgamating metals.

Amalgamation is the mixing of mercury with any of the metals. The manner is thus in gold, the reſt are anſwerable: Take ſix parts of mercury, mix them hot in a crucible, and pour them to one part of gold made red hot in another crucible; ſtir theſe well, that they may incorporate; then caſt the maſs into cold water, and waſh it. Bacon.

AMANDA'TION, å-mån-då'-ſhůn. n. ſ. [from amando, Lat.] The act of ſending on a meſſage, or employment.

AMANUE'NSIS, å-mån-ů-ėn'-sîs. n. ſ. [Lat.] A perſon who writes what another dictates.

A'MARANTH, åm'-å-rånth. n. ſ. [amaranthus, Lat. from α and μαραίνω.] The name of a plant. Among the many ſpecies, the moſt beautiful are, 1. The tree amaranth. 2. The long pendulous amaranth, with reddiſh coloured ſeeds, commonly called Love lies a bleeding.

2. In poetry, it is ſometimes an imaginary flower, ſuppoſed, according to its name, never to fade.

Immortal amaranth! a flower which once
In paradiſe, faſt by the tree of life,
Began to bloom; but ſoon, for man's offence,
To heav'n remov'd, where firſt it grew, there grows,
And flow'rs aloft, ſhading the fount of life;
And where the river of bliſs, thro' midſt of heav'n,
Rowls o'er Elyſian flow'rs her amber ſtream:
With theſe, that never fade, the ſpirits elect
Bind their reſplendent locks, inwreath'd with beams. Milton's Paradiſe Loſt.

AMARA'NTHINE, åm-å-rån'-thîn. adj. [amaranthinus, Lat.] Relating to amaranths; conſiſting of amaranths.

By the ſtreams that ever flow,
By the fragrant winds that blow
O'er the Elyſian flow'rs;
By thoſe happy ſouls that dwell
In yellow meads of aſphodel,
Or amaranthine bow'rs.
Pope.

AMA'RITUDE, å-mår'-rŷ-tůd. n. ſ. [amaritudo, Lat.] Bitterneſs.

What amaritude or acrimony is deprehended in choler, it acquires from a commixture of melancholy, or external malign bodies. Harvey on Conſumptions.

AMA'RULENCE, å-mår'-rů-lėns. n. ſ. [amaritudo, Lat.] Bitterneſs. Dict.

AMA'SMENT, å-mås'-mėnt. n. ſ. [from amaſs.] A heap; an accumulation; a collection.

What is now, is but an amaſment of imaginary conceptions, prejudices, ungrounded opinions, and infinite impoſtures. Glanville's Scepſis Scientifica.

To AMA'SS, å-mås'. v. a. [amaſſer, Fr.]

1. To collect together in one heap or maſs.

The rich man is not blamed, as having made uſe of any unlawful means to amaſs riches, as having thriven by fraud and injuſtice. Atterbury's Sermons.

When we would think of infinite ſpace, or duration, we, at firſt ſtep, uſually make ſome very large idea, as perhaps of millions of ages, or miles, which poſſibly we double and multiply ſeveral times. All that we thus amaſs together in our thoughts, is poſitive, and the aſſemblage of a great number of poſitive ideas of ſpace or duration. Locke.

2. In a figurative ſenſe, to add one thing to another, generally with ſome ſhare of reproach, either of eagerneſs or indiſcrimination.

Such as amaſs all relations, muſt err in ſome, and be unbelieved in many. Brown's Vul. Errours.

Do not content yourſelves with mere words, leſt your improvements only amaſs a heap of unintelligible phraſes. Watts's Impr. of the Mind.

The life of Homer has been written, by amaſſing of all the traditions and hints the writers could meet with, in order to tell a ſtory of him to the world. Pope

AMA'SS, å-mås'. n. ſ. [amas, Fr.] An aſſemblage; an accumulation.

This pillar is but a medley or amaſs of all the precedent ornaments, making a new kind by ſtealth. Wotton.

To AMA'TE, å-må'te. v. a. [from a and mate.] See MATE.

1. To accompany; to entertain as a companion. It is now obſolete.

A lovely bevy of fair ladies ſate,
Courted of many a jolly paramour,
The which did them in modeſt wiſe amate,
And each one ſought his lady to aggrate.
Fairy Queen.

2. To terrify; to ſtrike with horrour. In this ſenſe, it is derived from the old French matter, to cruſh or ſubdue.

Amato'rculist, åm'-å-tůr-ků-lîst. n. ſ. [amatorculus, Lat.] A little inſignificant lover; a pretender to affection. Dict.

A'matory, åm'-å-tůr-rŷ. adj. [amatorius, Lat.] Relating to love; cauſing love.

It is the ſame thing whether one raviſh Lucretia by force, as Tarquin, or by amatory potions not only allure her, but neceſſitate her to ſatisfy his luſt, and incline her effectually, and draw her inevitably, to follow him ſpontaneouſly. Bramham againſt Hobbes.

AMAURO'SIS, å-må-rô'-sîs. n. ſ. [ἀμαυρόω.] A dimneſs of ſight, not from any viſible defect in the eye, but from ſome diſtemperature of the inner parts, occaſioning the repreſentations of flies and duſt floating before the eyes: which appearances are the parts of the retina hid and compreſſed by the blood-veſſels being too much diſtended; ſo that, in many of its parts, all ſenſe is loſt, and therefore no images can be painted upon them; whereby the eyes, continually rolling round, many parts of objects falling ſucceſſively upon them, are obſcure. The cure of this depends upon a removal of the ſtagnations in the extremities of thoſe arteries which run over the bottom of the eye. Quincy.

To AMA'ZE, å-må'ze. v. a. [from a and maze, perplexity.]

1. To confuſe with terrour.

Yea, I will make many people amazed at thee, and their kings ſhall be horribly afraid for thee, when I ſhall brandiſh my ſword before them, and they ſhall tremble at every moment; every man for his own life in the day of the fall. Ezekiel.

2. To put into confuſion with wonder.

Go, heav'nly pair, and with your dazzling virtues,
Your courage, truth, your innocence and love,
Amaze and charm mankind. Smith.

3. To put into perplexity.

That cannot chooſe but amaze him. If he be not amazed, he will be mocked; if he be amazed, he will every way be mocked. Shakeſp.

Ama'ze, å-må'ze. n. ſ. [from the verb amaze.] Aſtoniſhment; confuſion, either of fear or wonder.

Fairfax, whoſe name in arms thro' Europe rings,
And fills all mouths with envy or with praiſe,
And all her jealous monarchs with amaze. Milton.

Meantime the Trojan cuts his wat'ry way,
Fix'd on his voyage, through the curling ſea;
Then caſting back his eyes, with dire amaze,
Sees on the Punick ſhore the mounting blaze. Dryden.

Ama'zedly, å-må'z-ld-lŷ. adv. [from amazed.] Confuſedly; with amazement; with confuſion.

I ſpeak amazedly, and it becomes
My marvel, and my meſſage. Shakeſp.
But why
Stands Macbeth thus amazedly?
Come, ſiſters, cheer we up his ſprights. Shakeſp.

Ama'zedness, å-må'z-ld-nês. n. ſ. [from amazed.] The ſtate of being amazed; aſtoniſhment; wonder; confuſion.

I was by at the opening of the farthel, heard the old ſhepherd deliver the manner how he found it; whereupon, after a little amazedneſs, we were all commanded out of the chamber. Shakeſp.

Ama'zement, å-må'z-mênt. n. ſ. [from amaze.]

1. Such a confuſed apprehenſion as does not leave reaſon its full force; extreme fear; horrour.

He anſwer'd nought at all; but adding new
Fear to his firſt amazement, ſtaring wide,
With ſtony eyes, and heartleſs hollow hue,
Aſtoniſh'd ſtood, as one that had eſpy'd
Infernal furies, with their chains unty'd. Fairy Queen.

But look! amazement on thy mother ſits;
O ſtep between her and her fighting ſoul:
Conceit in weakeſt bodies ſtrongeſt works. Shakeſp.

2. Extreme dejection.

He ended, and his words impreſſion left
Of much amazement to th' infernal crew,
Diſtracted and ſurpris'd with deep diſmay
At theſe ſad tidings. Milton.

3. Height of admiration.

Had you, ſome ages paſt, this race of glory
Run, with amazement we ſhould read your ſtory;
But living virtue, all atchievements paſt,
Meets envy ſtill to grapple with at laſt. Waller.

4. Aſtoniſhment; wonder at an unexpected event.

They knew that it was he which ſat for alms at the Beautiful Gate of the temple, and they were filled with wonder and amazement at that which had happened unto him. Acts.

Ama'zing, å-må'z-lng. participial adj. [from amaze.] Wonderful; aſtoniſhing.

It is an amazing thing to ſee the preſent deſolation of Italy, when one conſiders what incredible multitudes it abounded with during the reigns of the Roman emperours. Addiſon.

Ama'zingly, å-må'z-lng-lŷ. adv. [from amazing.] To a degree that may excite aſtoniſhment; wonderfully.

If we ariſe to the world of ſpirits, our knowledge of them muſt be amazingly imperfect, when there is not the leaſt grain of ſand but has too many difficulties belonging to it for the wiſeſt philoſopher to anſwer. Watts's Logick.

A'MAZON, åm'-å-zůn. n. ſ. [α and μάζος.] The Amazons were a race of women famous for valour, who inhabited Caucaſus; they are ſo called from their cutting off their breaſts, to uſe their weapons better. A warlike woman; a virago.

Stay, ſtay thy hands, thou art an amazon,
And fighteſt with the ſword. Shakeſpeare.

AMBA'GES, åm-bå'-gêz. n. ſ. [Lat.] A circuit of words; a circumlocutory form of ſpeech; a multiplicity of words; an indirect manner of expreſſion.

They gave thoſe complex ideas names, that they might the more eaſily record and diſcourſe of things they were daily converſant in, without long ambages and circumlocutions; and that the things they were continually to give and receive information about, might be the eaſier and quicker underſtood. Locke.

Amba'gious, åm-bå'-jŷůs. adj. [from ambages.] Circumlocutory; perplexed; tedious. Dict.

Ambassa'de, åm-bås-så'de. n. ſ. [ambaſſade, Fr.] Embaſſy; character or buſineſs of an ambaſſador: a word not now in uſe.

When you diſgraced me in my ambaſſade,
Then I degraded you from being king. Shakeſp.

AMBA'SSADOUR, åm-bås'-så-důr. n. ſ. [ambaſſadeur, Fr. embaxador, Span. It is written differently, as it is ſuppoſed to come from the French or Spaniſh language; and the original derivation being uncertain, it is not eaſy to ſettle its orthography. Some derive it from the Hebrew בשר to tell, and מבשר a meſſenger; others from ambactus, which, in the old Gauliſh, ſignified a ſervant; whence ambaſcia, in low Latin, is found to ſignify ſervice, and ambaſciator, a ſervant; others deduce it from ambacht, in old Teutonick, ſignifying a government; and Junius mentions a poſſibility of its deſcent from ἀναβαίνω; and others from am for ad, and baſſus, low, as ſuppoſing the act of ſending an ambaſſadour, to be in ſome ſort an act of ſubmiſſion. All theſe derivations lead to write ambaſſadour, not embaſſadour.] A perſon ſent in a public manner from one ſovereign power to another, and ſuppoſed to repreſent the power from which he is ſent. The perſon of an ambaſſadour is inviolable.

Ambaſſadour is, in popular language, the general name of a meſſenger from a ſovereign power, and ſometimes, ludicrouſly, from common perſons. In the juridical and formal language, it ſignifies particularly a miniſter of the higheſt rank reſiding in another country, and is diſtinguiſhed from an envoy, who is of leſs dignity.

Give firſt admittance to th' ambaſſadours. Shakeſ.

Rais'd by theſe hopes, I ſent no news before,
Nor aſk'd your leave, nor did your faith implore;
But come without a pledge, my own ambaſſadour. Dryden.

Oft have their black ambaſſadours appear'd
Loaden with gifts, and fill'd the courts of Zama. Addiſon.

Amba'ssadress, åm-bås'-så-drês. n. ſ. [ambaſſadrice, Fr.]

1. The lady of an ambaſſadour.
2. In ludicrous language, a woman ſent on a meſſage.

Well, my ambaſſadreſs——
Come you to menace war, and loud defiance?
Or does the peaceful olive grace your brow? Rowe.

A'mbassage, åm'-bås-såje. n. ſ. [from ambaſſadour.] An embaſſy; the buſineſs of an ambaſſadour.

Maximilian entertained them with dilatory anſwers; ſo as the formal part of their ambaſſage might well warrant their further ſtay. Bacon.

A'MBER, åm'-bůr. n. ſ. [from ambar, Arab. whence the lower writers formed ambarum.]

A yellow tranſparent ſubſtance of a gummous or bituminous conſiſtence, but a reſinous taſte, and a ſmell like oil of turpentine; chiefly found in the Baltick ſea, along the coaſts of Pruſſia. Some naturaliſts refer it to the vegetable, others to the mineral, and ſome even to the animal kingdom. Pliny deſcribes it as a reſinous juice, oozing from aged pines and firs, and diſcharged thence into the ſea. He adds, that it was hence the ancients gave it the denomination of ſuccinum, from ſuccus, juice. Some have imagined it a concretion of the tears of birds; others, the urine of a beaſt; others, the ſcum of the lake Cephiſis, near the Atlantick; others, a congelation formed in the Baltick, and in ſome fountains, where it is found ſwimming like pitch. Others ſuppoſe it a bitumen trickling into the ſea from ſubterraneous ſources; but this opinion is alſo diſcarded, as good amber having been found in digging at a conſiderable diſtance from the ſea, as that gathered on the coaſt. Boerhaave ranks it with camphire, which is a concrete oil of aromatic plants, elaborated by heat into a cryſtalline form. Within ſome pieces of amber have been found leaves and inſects included; which ſeems to indicate, either that the amber was originally in a fluid ſtate, or that, having been expoſed to the ſun, it was ſoftened, and rendered ſuſceptible of the leaves and inſects. Amber, when rubbed, draws or attracts bodies to it; and, by friction, is brought to yield light pretty copiouſly in the dark. Some diſtinguiſh amber into yellow, white, brown, and black: but the two latter are ſuppoſed to be of a different nature and denomination; the one called jet, the other ambergris. Trevoux. Chambers.

Liquid amber is a kind of native balſam or reſin, like turpentine; clear, reddiſh, or yellowiſh; of a pleaſant ſmell, almoſt like ambergris. It flows from an inciſion made in the bark of a fine large tree in New Spain, called by the natives oſoſol. Chambers.

If light penetrateth any clear body, that is coloured, as painted glaſs, amber, water and the like, it gives the light the colour of its medium. Peacham.

No interwoven reeds a garland made,
To hide his brows within the vulgar ſhade;
But poplar wreathes around his temples ſpread,
And tears of amber trickled down his head. Addiſon.

The ſpoils of elephants the roofs inlay,
And ſtudded amber darts a golden ray. Pope.

A'MBER, åm'-bůr. adj. Conſiſting of amber.

With ſcarfs, and fans, and double charge of brav'ry,
With amber bracelets, beads, and all this knav'ry. Shakeſpeare.

A'MBER-DRINK, åm'-bůr-drink'. n. ſ. Drink of the colour of amber, or reſembling amber in colour and tranſparency.

All your clear amber-drink is flat. Bacon.

A'MBERGRIS, åm'-bůr-grìs. n. ſ. [from amber and gris, or grey; that is, grey amber.]

A fragrant drug, that melts almoſt like wax, commonly of a greyiſh or aſh colour, uſed both as a perfume and a cordial. Some imagine it to be the excrement of a bird, which, being melted by the heat of the ſun, and waſhed off the ſhore by the waves, is ſwallowed by whales, who return it back in the condition we find it. Others conclude it to be the excrement of a cetaceous fiſh, becauſe ſometimes found in the inteſtines of ſuch animals. But we have no inſtance of any excrement capable of melting like wax; and if it were the excrement of a whale, it ſhould rather be found where theſe animals abound, as about Greenland. Others take it for a kind of wax or gum, which diſtils from trees, and drops into the ſea, where it congeals. Many of the orientals imagine it ſprings out of the ſea, as naphtha does out of ſome fountains. Others aſſert it to be a vegetable production, iſſuing out of the root of a tree, whoſe roots always ſhoot towards the ſea, and diſcharge themſelves into it. Others maintain, that ambergris is made from the honeycombs, which fall into the ſea from the rocks, where the bees had formed their neſts; ſeveral perſons having ſeen pieces that were half ambergris, and half plain honey-comb; and others have found large pieces of ambergris, in which, when broke, honey-comb, and honey too, were found in the middle. Neumann abſolutely denies it to be an animal ſubſtance, as not yielding, in the analyſis, any one animal principle. He concludes it to be a bitumen iſſuing out of the earth into the ſea; at firſt of a viſcous conſiſtence, but hardening, by its mixture with ſome liquid naphtha, into the form in which we find it. Trevoux. Chambers.

Bermudas wall'd with rocks, who does not know
That happy iſland, where huge lemons grow,
Where ſhining pearl, coral, and many a pound,
On the rich ſhore, of ambergris is found? Waller.

A'MBER-SEED, åm'-bůr-sêd, or muſk-ſeed, reſembles millet, is of a bitteriſh taſte, and brought dry from Martinico and Egypt. Chambers.

A'MBER-TREE, åm'-bůr-trê. n. ſ. [frutex Africanus ambram ſpirans.] A ſhrub, whoſe beauty is in its ſmall evergreen leaves, which grow as cloſe as heath, and, being bruiſed between the fingers, emit a very fragrant odour. Miller.

AMBIDE'XTER, åm-bỳ-dêx'-tèr. n. ſ. [Lat.]

1. A man who has equally the uſe of both his hands.

Rodiginus, undertaking to give a reaſon of ambidexters, and left-handed men, delivereth a third opinion. Brown.

2. A man who is equally ready to act on either ſide, in party diſputes. This ſenſe is ludicrous.

AMBIDEXTE'RITY, åm-bỳ-dêx-tèr'-rỳ-tỳ. n. ſ. [from ambidexter.]

1. The quality of being able equally to uſe both hands.
2. Double dealing.

AMBIDE'XTROUS, åm-bỳ-dêx'-trůs. adj. [from ambidexter, Lat.]

1. Having, with equal facility, the uſe of either hand.

Others, not conſidering ambidextrous and left-handed men, do totally ſubmit unto the efficacy of the liver. Brown.

2. Double-dealing; practiſing on both ſides.

Æſop condemns the double practices of trimmers, and all falſe, ſhuffling, and ambidextrous dealings. L'Eſtrange.

AMBIDE'XTROUSNESS, åm-bỳ-dêx'-trůs-nês. n. ſ. [from ambidextrous.] The quality of being ambidextrous. Dict.

A'MBIENT, åm'-byênt. adj. [ambiens, Lat.] Surrounding; encompaſſing; inveſting.

This which yields or fills
All ſpace, the ambient air wide interfus'd. Milton.

The thickneſs of a plate requiſite to produce any colour, depends only on the denſity of the plate, and not on that of the ambient medium. Newton's Opticks.

Around him dance the roſy hours,
And damaſking the ground with flow'rs,
With ambient ſweets perfume the morn. Fenton to Lord Gower.

Illuſtrious virtues, who by turns have roſe
With happy laws her empire to ſuſtain,
And with full pow'r aſſert her ambient main. Prior.

The ambient æther is too liquid and empty, to impel horizontally with that prodigious celerity. Bentley.

A'MBIGU, åm'-bỳ-gů. n. ſ. [French.] An entertainment, conſiſting not of regular courſes, but of a medley of diſhes ſet on together.

When ſtraiten'd in your time, and ſervants few,
You'd richly then compoſe an ambigu;
Where firſt and ſecond courſe, and your deſert,
All in one ſingle table have their part. King's Art of Cookery.

AMBIGU'ITY, åm'-bỳ-gů'-ì-tỳ. n. ſ. [from ambiguous.] Doubtfulneſs of meaning; uncertainty of ſignification; double meaning.

With ambiguities they often entangle themſelves, not marking what doth agree to the word of God in itſelf, and what in regard of outward accidents. Hooker.

We can clear theſe ambiguities,
And know their ſpring, their head, their true deſcent. Shakeſp.

The words are of ſingle ſignification, without any ambiguity; and therefore I ſhall not trouble you, by ſtraining for an interpretation, where there is no difficulty; or diſtinction, where there is no difference. South.

AMBI'GUOUS, åm-bìg'-ů-ůs. adj. [ambiguus, Lat.]

1. Doubtful; having two meanings; of uncertain ſignification.

But what have been thy anſwers, what but dark,
Ambiguous, and with doubtful ſenſe deluding? Milton.

Some expreſſions in the covenant were ambiguous, and were left ſo; becauſe the perſons who framed them were not all of one mind. Clarendon.

2. Applied to perſons uſing doubtful expreſſions. It is applied to expreſſions, or thoſe that uſe them, not to a dubious or ſuſpended ſtate of mind.

Th' ambiguous god, who rul'd her lab'ring breaſt,
In theſe myſterious words his mind expreſt;
Some truths reveal'd, in terms involv'd the reſt. Dryden.

Silence at length the gay Antinous broke,
Conſtrain'd a ſmile, and thus ambiguous ſpoke. Pope.

AMBI'GUOUSLY, åm-bìg'-ů-ůs-lỳ. adv. [from ambiguous.] In an ambiguous manner; doubtfully; uncertainly; with double meaning.

AMBI'GUOUSNESS, åm-bìg'-ů-ůs-nês. n. ſ. [from ambiguous.] The quality of being ambiguous; uncertainty of meaning; duplicity of ſignification.

AMBI'LOGY, åm-bìl'-lô-jỳ. n. ſ. [from ambo, Lat. and λογος.] Talk of ambiguous or doubtful ſignification. Dict.

AMBI'LOQUOUS, åm-bìl'-lô-kwůs. adj. [from ambo and loquor, Lat.] Uſing ambiguous and doubtful expreſſions. Dict.

AMBI'LOQUY, åm-bìl'-lô-kwỳ. n. ſ. [ambiloquium, Lat.] The uſe of doubtful and indeterminate expreſſions; diſcourſe of doubtful meaning. Dict.

A'MBIT, åm'-bìt. n. ſ. [ambitus, Lat.] The compaſs or circuit of any thing; the line that encompaſſes any thing.

The tuſk of a wild boar winds about almoſt into a perfect ring or hoop; only it is a little writhen. In meaſuring by the ambit, it is long or round about a foot and two inches; its baſis an inch over. Grew's Muſæum.

AMBI'TION, åm-bìſh'-ůn. n. ſ. [ambitio, Lat.] The deſire of ſomething higher than is poſſeſſed at preſent.

1. The deſire of preferment or honour.

Who would think, without having ſuch a mind as Antiphilus, that ſo great goodneſs could not have bound gratefulneſs? and ſo high advancement not have ſatisfied his ambition? Sidney.

2. The deſire of any thing great or excellent.

The quick'ning power would be, and ſo would reſt;
The ſenſe would not be only, but be well:
But wit's ambition longeth to the beſt,
For it deſires in endleſs bliſs to dwell. Davies.

Urge them, while their ſouls
Are capable of this ambition;
Leſt zeal, now melted by the windy breath
Of ſoft petitions, pity, and remorſe,
Cool and congeal again to what it was. Shakeſp.

3. It is uſed with to before a verb, and of before a noun.

I had a very early ambition to recommend myſelf to your Lordſhip's patronage. Addiſon.

There was an ambition of wit, and an affectation of gayety. Pope's Preface to his Letters.

AMBI'TIOUS, åm-bìſh'-ůs. adj. [ambitioſus, Lat.]

1. Seized or touched with ambition; deſirous of advancement; eager of honours; aſpiring. It has the particle of before the object of ambition, if a noun; to, if expreſſed by a verb.

We ſeem ambitious God's whole work t' undo. Donne.

The neighb'ring monarchs, by thy beauty led,
Contend in crowds, ambitious of thy bed:
The world is at thy choice, except but one,
Except but him thou canſt not chooſe alone. Dryden.

You have been pleaſed not to ſuffer an old man to go diſcontented out of the world, for want of that protection, of which he had been ſo long ambitious. Dryden.

Trajan, a prince ambitious of glory, deſcended to the mouths of the Tigris and Euphrates, and went upon the ocean, where, ſeeing a veſſel trading to the Indies, he had thoughts of outdoing Alexander. Arbuthnot on Coins.

2. Eager to grow bigger; aſpiring.

I have ſeen
Th' ambitious ocean ſwell, and rage, and foam,
To be exalted with the threat'ning clouds.
Shakeſpeare.

AMBI'TIOUSLY, ảm-bỉsh'-ủs-lỷ. adv. [from ambitious.] In an ambitious manner; with eagerneſs of advancement or preference.

With ſuch glad hearts did our deſpairing men
Salute th' appearance of the prince's fleet;
And each ambitiouſly would claim the ken,
That with firſt eyes did diſtant ſafety meet.
Dryden.

Here Flecknoe, as a place to fame well known,
Ambitiouſly deſign'd his Sh—'s throne. Dryden.

AMBI'TIOUSNESS, ảm-bỉsh'-ủs-nẻs. n. ſ. [from ambitious.] The quality of being ambitious.

A'MBITUDE, ảm'-bỷ-tủde. n. ſ. [ambio, Lat.] Compaſs; circuit; circumference. Dict.

To A'MBLE, ảm'bl. v. n. [ambler, Fr. ambulo, Lat.]

1. To move upon an amble. See AMBLE.

It is good, on ſome occaſions, to enjoy as much of the preſent, as will not endanger our futurity; and to provide ourſelves of the virtuoſo's ſaddle, which will be ſure to amble, when the world is upon the hardeſt trot. Dryden.

2. To move eaſily, without hard ſhocks, or ſhaking.

Who ambles time withal?—A rich man that hath not the gout; for he lives merrily, becauſe he feels no pain; knowing no burthen of heavy tedious penury: him time ambles withal.
Shakeſpeare's As you like it.

3. In a ludicrous ſenſe, to move with ſubmiſſion, and by direction; as a horſe that ambles uſes a gait not natural.

A laughing, toying, wheedling, whimpering ſhe,
Shall make him amble on a goſſip's meſſage,
And take the diſtaff with a hand as patient,
As e'er did Hercules. Rowe's Jane Shore.

4. To walk daintily and affectedly.

I am rudely ſtampt, and want love's majeſty,
To ſtrut before a wanton ambling nymph.
Shakeſpeare.

A'MBLE, ảm'bl. n. ſ. [from To amble.] A pace or movement in which the horſe removes both his legs on one ſide; as, on the far ſide, he removes his fore and hinder leg of the ſame ſide at one time, whilſt the legs on the near ſide ſtand ſtill; and, when the far legs are upon the ground, the near ſide removes the fore leg and hinder leg, and the legs on the far ſide ſtand ſtill. An amble is the firſt pace of young colts, but when they have ſtrength to trot, they quit it. There is no amble in the manage; riding-maſters allow only of walk, trot, and gallop. A horſe may be put from a trot to a gallop without ſtopping; but he cannot be put from an amble to a gallop without a ſtop, which interrupts the juſtneſs of the manage. Farrier's Dict.

A'MBLER, ảm'-blủr. n. ſ. [from To amble.] A horſe that has been taught to amble; a pacer.

A'MBLINGLY, ảm'-blỉng-lỷ. adv. [from ambling.] With an ambling movement.

AMBRO'SIA, ảm-brỏ'-shả. n. ſ. [αμϐϱοσία.]

1. The imaginary food of the gods, from which every thing eminently pleaſing to the ſmell or taſte is called ambroſia.

2. The name of a plant.

It has male floſculous flowers, produced on ſeparate parts of the ſame plant from the fruit, having no viſible petals; the fruit which ſucceeds the female flowers, is ſhaped like a club, and is prickly, containing one oblong ſeed in each.

The ſpecies are, 1. The marine or ſea ambroſia. 2. Taller unſavoury ſea ambroſia. 3. The talleſt Canada ambroſia. Miller.

AMBRO'SIAL, ảm-brỏ'-shảl. adj. [from ambroſia.] Partaking of the nature or qualities of ambroſia; fragrant; delicious; delectable.

Thus while God ſpake, ambroſial fragrance fill'd
All heaven, and in the bleſſed ſpirits elect
Senſe of new joy ineffable diffus'd. Milton.

The gifts of heaven my following ſong purſues,
Aerial honey and ambroſial dews. Dryden.

To fartheſt ſhores th' ambroſial ſpirit flies,
Sweet to the world, and grateful to the ſkies.
Pope.

A'MBRY, ảm'-brỷ. n. ſ. [a word corrupted from almonry.]

1. The place where the almoner lives, or where alms are diſtributed.

2. The place where plate, and utenſils for houſekeeping, are kept; alſo a cupboard for keeping cold victuals: a word ſtill uſed in the northern counties, and in Scotland.

AMBS ACE, ảm'z-ả'se. n. ſ. [from ambo, Lat. and ace.] A double ace; ſo called when two dice turn up the ace.

I had rather be in this choice, than throw ambs ace for my life.
Shakeſpeare's All's well that ends well.

This will be yet clearer, by conſidering his own inſtance of caſting ambs ace, though it partake more of contingency than of freedom. Suppoſing the poſiture of the party's hand who did throw the dice, ſuppoſing the figure of the table, and of the dice themſelves, ſuppoſing the meaſure of force applied, and ſuppoſing all other things which did concur to the production of that caſt, to be the very ſame they were, there is no doubt but in this caſe the caſt is neceſſary.
Brambam againſt Hobbes.

AMBULA'TION, ảm-bủ-lả'-shủn. n. ſ. [ambulatio, Lat.] The act of walking.

From the occult and inviſible motion of the muſcles, in ſtation, proceed more offenſive laſſitudes than from ambulation.
Brown's Vulgar Errours.

A'MBULATORY, ảm-bủ-lả-tủr'-rỷ. adj. [ambulo, Lat.]

1. That which has the power or faculty of walking.

The gradient, or ambulatory, are ſuch as require ſome baſis, or bottom, to uphold them in their motions: ſuch were thoſe ſelf-moving ſtatues, which, unleſs violently detained, would of themſelves run away. Wilkins's Math. Magick.

2. That which happens during a paſſage or walk.

He was ſent to conduce hither the princeſs, of whom his majeſty had an ambulatory view in his travels. Wotton.

3. Moveable; as, an ambulatory court; a court which removes from place to place for the exerciſe of its juriſdiction.

A'MBURY, ảm'-bủ-rỷ. n. ſ. A bloody wart on any part of a horſe's body.

AMBUSCA'DE, ảm-bủs-kả'de. n. ſ. [embuſcade, Fr. See AMBUSH.] A private ſtation in which men lie to ſurpriſe others; ambuſh.

Then waving high her torch, the ſignal made,
Which rous'd the Grecians from their ambuſcade.
Dryden.

When I behold a faſhionable table ſet out, I fancy that gouts, fevers, and lethargies, with innumerable diſtempers, lie in ambuſcade among the diſhes. Addiſon.

AMBUSCA'DO, ảm-bủs-kả'dỏ. n. ſ. [emboſcada, Span.] A private poſt, in order to ſurpriſe an enemy.

Sometimes ſhe driveth o'er a ſoldier's neck,
And then he dreams of cutting foreign throats,
Of breaches, ambuſcadoes, Spaniſh blades,
Of healths five fathom deep.
Shakeſp. Romeo and Juliet.

A'MBUSH, ảm'-bủsh. n. ſ. [ambuſche, Fr. from bois a wood; whence embuſcher to hide in woods, ambuſhes being commonly laid under the concealment of thick foreſts.]

1. The poſt where ſoldiers or aſſaſſins are placed, in order to fall unexpectedly upon an enemy.

The reſidue retired deceitfully towards the place of their ambuſh, whence iſſued more. Then the earl maintained the fight. But the enemy, intending to draw the Engliſh further into their ambuſh, turned away at an eaſy pace. Hayward.

Charge, charge, their ground the faint Taxallans yield,
Bold in cloſe ambuſh, baſe in open field.
Dryden's Indian Emperor.

2. The act of ſurpriſing another, by lying in wait, or lodging in a ſecret poſt.

Nor ſhall we need,
With dangerous expedition, to invade
Heav'n, whoſe high walls fear no aſſault or ſiege,
Or ambuſh from the deep. Milton's Paradiſe Loſt.

3. The ſtate of being poſted privately, in order to ſurpriſe; the ſtate of lying in wait.

4. Perhaps the perſons placed in private ſtations.

For you, my noble lord of Lancaſter,
Once did I lay an ambuſh for your life.
Shakeſp. Richard II.

A'MBUSHED, ảm'-bủsh-ẻd. adj. [from ambuſh.] Placed in ambuſh; lying in wait.

Thick as the ſhades, there iſſue ſwarming bands
Of ambuſh'd men, whom, by their arms and dreſs,
To be Taxallan enemies I gueſs.
Dryden's Indian Emperor.

A'MBUSHMENT, ảm'-bủsh-mẻnt. n. ſ. [from ambuſh; which ſee.] Ambuſh; ſurpriſe: a word now not uſed.

Like as a wily fox, that having ſpied
Where on a ſunny bank the lambs do play,
Full cloſely creeping by the hinder ſide,
Lies in ambuſhment of his hoped prey. Spenſer.

AMBU'ST, ảm-bủst. adj. [ambuſtus, Lat.] Burnt; ſcalded. Dict.

AMBU'STION, ảm-bủs-tshủn. n. ſ. [ambuſtio, Lat.] A burn; a ſcald.

A'MEL, ảm'-mẻl. n. ſ. [email, Fr.] The matter with which the variegated works are overlaid, which we call enamelled.

The materials of glaſs melted with calcined tin, compoſe an undiaphanous body. This white amel is the baſis of all thoſe fine concretes that goldſmiths and artificers employ in the curious art of enamelling. Boyle on Colours.

AME'N, ả-mẻn'. adv. [a word, of which the original has given riſe to many conjectures. Scaliger writes, that it is Arabick; and the Rabbies make it the compound of the initials of three words, ſignifying the Lord is a faithful king; but the word ſeems merely Hebrew, אמן, which, with a long train of derivatives, ſignifies firmneſs, certainty, fidelity.] A term uſed in devotions, by which, at the end of a prayer, we mean, ſo be it; at the end of a creed, ſo it is.

One cried, God bleſs us! and, Amen! the other,
As they had ſeen me with theſe hangman's hands.
Liſtening their fear, I could not ſay Amen,
When they did ſay God bleſs us. Shakeſp. Macb.

Bleſſed be the Lord God of Iſrael, from everlaſting and to everlaſting, Amen and amen. Pſalm xli. 13.

Ame'nable, å-mē′-nåbl. adj. [ameſnable, Fr. amener quelqu'un, in the French courts, ſignifies, to oblige one to appear to anſwer a charge exhibited againſt him.] Reſponſible; ſubject ſo as to be liable to enquiries or accounts.

Again, becauſe the inferiour ſort were looſe and poor, and not amenable to the law, he provided, by another act, that five of the beſt and eldeſt perſons of every ſept, ſhould bring in all the idle perſons of their ſurname, to be juſtified by the law. Sir John Davies on Ireland.

A'menage, å-mē′-nåje. }
A'menance, å-mē′-nåns. } n. ſ. [They ſeem to come from amener, Fr.] Conduct; behaviour; mien: words diſuſed.

For he is fit to uſe in all aſſays,
Whether for arms and warlike amenance,
Or elſe for wiſe and civil governance. Spenſer.

Well kend him ſo far ſpace,
Th' enchanter, by his arms and amenance,
When under him he ſaw his Lybian ſteed to prance. Fairy Queen.

To AME'ND, å-mĕnd′. v. a. [amender, Fr. emendo, Lat.]

1. To correct; to change any thing that is wrong to ſomething better.

2. To reform the life, or leave wickedneſs. In theſe two caſes we uſually write mend. See Mend.

Amend your ways and your doings, and I will cauſe you to dwell in this place. Jerem. vii. 3.

3. To reſtore paſſages in writers, which the copiers are ſuppoſed to have depraved; to recover the true reading.

To Ame'nd, å-mĕnd′. v. n. To grow better. To amend differs from to improve; to improve ſuppoſes or not denies that the thing is well already, but to amend implies ſomething wrong.

As my fortune either amends or impairs, I may declare it unto you. Sidney.

At his touch
Such ſanctity hath heaven given his hand,
They preſently amend. Shakeſp. Macbeth.

AME'NDE, å-mĕnd′. n. ſ. [French.] This word, in French, ſignifies a fine, by which recompenſe is ſuppoſed to be made for the fault committed. We uſe, in a cognate ſignification, the word amends.

Ame'ndment, å-mĕnd′-mĕnt. n. ſ. [amendement, Fr.]

1. A change from bad for the better.

Before it was preſented on the ſtage, ſome things in it have paſſed your approbation and amendment. Dryden.

Man is always mending and altering his works; but nature obſerves the ſame tenour, becauſe her works are ſo perfect, that there is no place for amendments; nothing that can be reprehended. Ray on the Creation.

There are many natural defects in the underſtanding, capable of amendment, which are overlooked and wholly neglected. Locke.

2. Reformation of life.

Our Lord and Saviour was of opinion, that they which would not be drawn to amendment of life, by the teſtimony which Moſes and the prophets have given, concerning the miſeries that follow ſinners after death, were not likely to be perſuaded by other means, although God from the dead ſhould have raiſed them up preachers. Hooker.

Behold! famine and plague, tribulation and anguiſh, are ſent as ſcourges for amendment. 2 Eſdras, xvi. 19.

Though a ſerious purpoſe of amendment, and true acts of contrition, before the habit, may be accepted by God; yet there is no ſure judgment whether this purpoſe be ſerious, or theſe acts true acts of contrition. Hammond's Practical Catechiſm.

3. Recovery of health.

Your honour's players, hearing your amendment,
Are come to play a pleaſant comedy. Shakeſp.

Ame'ndment, å-mĕnd′-mĕnt. n. ſ. [emendatio, Lat.] It ſignifies, in law, the correction of an errour committed in a proceſs, and eſpied before or after judgment; and ſometimes after the party's ſeeking advantage by the errour. Blount.

Ame'nder, å-mĕn′-dŭr. n. ſ. [from amend.] The perſon that amends any thing.

Ame'nds, å-mĕnd′z. n. ſ. [amende, Fr. from which it ſeems to be accidentally corrupted.] Recompenſe; compenſation; atonement.

If I have too auſterely puniſh'd you,
Your compenſation makes amends. Shakeſpeare.

Of the amends recovered, little or nothing returns to thoſe that had ſuffered the wrong, but commonly all runs into the prince's coffers. Raleigh's Eſſays.

There I, a priſ'ner chain'd, ſcarce freely draw
The air impriſon'd alſo, cloſe and damp,
Unwholeſome draught; but here I feel amends,
The breath of heav'n freſh blowing, pure and ſweet,
With day-ſpring born; here leave me to reſpire. Milton.

Some little hopes I have yet remaining, that I may make the world ſome part of amends for many ill plays, by an heroick poem. Dryden.

If our ſouls be immortal, this makes abundant amends and compenſation for the frailties of life, and ſufferings of this ſtate. Tillotſon.

It is a ſtrong argument for retribution hereafter, that virtuous perſons are very often unfortunate, and vicious perſons proſperous; which is repugnant to the nature of a Being, who appears infinitely wiſe and good in all his works; unleſs we may ſuppoſe that ſuch a promiſcuous diſtribution, which was neceſſary for carrying on the deſigns of providence in this life, will be rectified and made amends for in another. Spectator.

Ame'nity, å-mĕn′-nī-tў. n. ſ. [amenité, Fr. amœnitas, Lat.] Pleaſantneſs; agreeableneſs of ſituation.

If the ſituation of Babylon was ſuch at firſt as in the days of Herodotus, it was a ſeat of amenity and pleaſure. Brown.

Amenta'ceous, å-mĕn-tå′-ſhŭs. adj. [amentatus, Lat.] Hanging as by a thread.

The pine tree hath amentaceous flowers or katkins. Miller.

To AME'RCE, å-mĕr′ſe. v. a. [amercier, Fr. ὀφθαλμῶν μὲν ἄμερσε, ſeems to give the original.]

1. To puniſh with a pecuniary penalty; to exact a fine; to inflict a forfeiture. It is a word originally juridical, but adopted by other writers, and is uſed by Spenſer of puniſhments in general.

Where every one that miſſeth then her make,
Shall be by him amerc'd with penance due. Spenſer.

But I'll amerce you with ſo ſtrong a fine,
That you ſhall all repent the loſs of mine. Shakeſpeare.

All the ſuitors were conſiderably amerced; yet this proved but an ineffectual remedy for thoſe miſchiefs. Hale.

2. Sometimes with the particle in before the fine.

They ſhall amerce him in an hundred ſhekels of ſilver, and give them unto the father of the damſel, becauſe he hath brought up an evil name upon a virgin of Iſrael. Deut. xxii. 19.

3. Sometimes it is uſed, in imitation of the Greek conſtruction, with the particle of.

Millions of ſpirits, for his fault amerc'd
Of heav'n, and from eternal ſplendours flung
For his revolt. Milton.

Ame'rcer, å-mĕr′-ſĕr. n. ſ. [from amerce.] He that ſets a fine upon any miſdemeanour; he that decrees or inflicts any pecuniary puniſhment or forfeiture.

Ame'rcement, å-mĕr′s-ment. }
Ame'rciament, å-mĕr′s-ī-mĕnt. } n. ſ. [from amerce.] The pecuniary puniſhment of an offender, who ſtands at the mercy of the king, or other lord in his court. Cowell.

All amercements and fines that ſhall be impoſed upon them, ſhall come unto themſelves. Spenſer's State of Ireland.

Ames ace, å′mz-å′ce. n. ſ. [a corruption of the word ambs ace, which appears, from very old authorities, to have been early ſoftened by omitting the b.] Two aces on two dice.

But then my ſtudy was to cog the dice,
And dext'rouſly to throw the lucky ſice:
To ſhun ames ace, that ſwept my ſtakes away;
And watch the box, for fear they ſhould convey Falſe bones, and put upon me in the play. Dryden.

A'mess, å′-mīs. n. ſ. [corrupted from amice.] A prieſt's veſtment. Dict.

Ametho'dical, å-mē-thŏd′-ў-kål. adj. [from a and method.] Out of method; without method; irregular.

A'METHYST, åm′-ē-thīſt. n. ſ. [ἀμέθυςος, contrary to wine, or contrary to drunkenneſs; ſo called, either becauſe it is not quite of the colour of wine, or becauſe it was imagined to prevent inebriation.]

A precious ſtone of a violet colour, bordering on purple. The oriental amethyſt is the hardeſt, ſcarceſt, and moſt valuable; it is generally of a dove colour, though ſome are purple, and others white like the diamond. The German is of a violet colour, and the Spaniſh are of three ſorts; the beſt are the blackeſt or deepeſt violet: others are almoſt quite white, and ſome few tinctured with yellow. The amethyſt is not extremely hard, but eaſy to be engraved upon, and is next in value to the emerald. Savary. Chambers.

Some ſtones approached the granate complexion; and ſeveral nearly reſembled the amethyſt. Woodward.

A'methyst, åm′-ē-thīſt [in heraldry] ſignifies the ſame colour in a nobleman's coat, that purpure does in a gentleman's.

Amethy'stine, åm-ē-thīs′-tīn. adj. [from amethyſt.] Reſembling an amethyſt in colour.

A kind of amethyſtine flint, not compoſed of cryſtals or grains, but one entire maſſy ſtone. Grew.

A'MIABLE, å′-myåbl. adj. [aimable, Fr.]

1. Lovely; pleaſing.

That which is good in the actions of men, doth not only delight as profitable, but as amiable alſo. Hooker.

She told her, while ſhe kept it,
'Twould make her amiable, ſubdue my father
Entirely to her love; but if ſhe loſt it,
Or made a gift of it, my father's eye
Should hold her loathed. Shakeſp. Othello.

2. Pretending love; ſhewing love.

Lay amiable ſiege to the honeſty of this Ford's wife; uſe your art of wooing. Shakeſpeare.

A'MIABLENESS, à-myàbl-nès. n. ſ. [from amiable.] The quality of being amiable; lovelineſs; power of raiſing love.

As ſoon as the natural gaiety and amiableneſs of the young man wears off, they have nothing left to commend them, but lie by among the lumber and refuſe of the ſpecies. Addiſon.

A'MIABLY, à'-myàb-lỳ. adv. [from amiable.] In an amiable manner; in ſuch a manner as to excite love.

A'MICABLE, àm'-mỳ-kàbl. adj. [amicabilis, Lat.] Friendly; kind. It is commonly uſed of more than one; as, they live in an amicable manner; but we ſeldom ſay, an amicable action, or an amicable man, though it be ſo uſed in this paſſage.

O grace ſerene! oh virtue heav'nly fair,
Divine oblivion of low-thoughted care!
Freſh blooming hope, gay daughter of the ſky!
And faith, our early immortality!
Enter each mild, each amicable gueſt;
Receive and wrap me in eternal reſt. Pope.

A'MICABLENESS, àm'-mỳ-kàbl-nès. n. ſ. [from amicable.] The quality of being amicable; friendlineſs; goodwill.

A'MICABLY, àm'-mỳ-kàb-lỳ. adv. [from amicable.] In an amicable manner; in a friendly way; with goodwill and concord.

They ſee
Through the dun miſt, in blooming beauty freſh,
Two lovely youths, that amicably walkt
O'er verdant meads, and pleas'd, perhaps, revolv'd
Anna's late conqueſts. Philips.

I found my ſubjects amicably join
To leſſen their defects, by citing mine. Prior.

In Holland itſelf, where it is pretended that the variety of ſects live ſo amicably together, it is notorious how a turbulent party, joining with the Arminians, did attempt to deſtroy the republick. Swift's Church of England Man.

A'MICE, àm'-mìs. n. ſ. [amictus, Lat. amict, Fr. Primum ex ſex indumentis epiſcopo & preſbyteriis communibus ſunt, amictus, alba, cingulum, ſtola, manipulus, & planeta. Du Cange. Amictus quo collum ſtringitur, & pectus tegitur, caſtitatem interioris hominis deſignat: tegit enim cor, ne vanitates cogitet; ſtringit autem collum, ne inde ad linguam tranſeat mendacium. Bruno.] The firſt or undermoſt part of a prieſt's habit, over which he wears the alb.

Thus paſs'd the night ſo foul, till morning fair
Came forth with pilgrim ſteps in amice grey. Milton.

On ſome a prieſt, ſuccinct in amice white,
Attends. Pope.

AMI'D, à-mìd'. } prep. [from a and mid,
AMI'DST, à-mìd'st. } or midſt.]

1. In the midſt; equally diſtant from either extremity.

Of the fruit
Of each tree in the garden we may eat;
But of the fruit of this fair tree amidſt
The garden, God hath ſaid, ye ſhall not eat. Milton.

The two ports, the bagnio, and Donatelli's ſtatue of the great duke, amidſt the four ſlaves, chained to his pedeſtal, are very noble ſights. Addiſon.

2. Mingled with; ſurrounded by; in the ambit of another thing.

Amid my flock with woe my voice I tear,
And, but bewitch'd, who to his flock would moan? Sidney.

So hills amid the air encounter'd hills,
Hurl'd to and fro with jaculation dire. Milton.

What have I done, to name that wealthy ſwain,
The boar amidſt my cryſtal ſtreams I bring,
And ſouthern winds to blaſt my flow'ry ſpring. Dryden.

Amata's breaſt the fury thus invades,
And fires with rage amid the ſylvan ſhades. Dryden.

3. Amongſt; conjoined with.

What tho' no real voice nor ſound
Amid their radiant orbs be found?
In reaſon's ear they all rejoice,
And utter forth a glorious voice,
For ever ſinging, as they ſhine,
"The hand that made us is divine." Addiſon.

AMI'SS, à-mìs'. adv. [from a, which, in this form of compoſition, often ſignifies according to, and miſs, the Engliſh particle, which ſhews any thing, like the Greek ϖαρά, to be wrong, as, to miſcount, to count erroneouſly; to miſdo, to commit a crime: amiſs therefore ſignifies not right, or out of order.]

1. Faulty; criminal.

For that which thou haſt ſworn to do amiſs,
Is yet amiſs, when it is truly done. Shakeſp. King John.

2. Faultily; criminally.

We hope therefore to reform ourſelves, if at any time we have done amiſs, is not to ſever ourſelves from the church we were of before. Hooker.

O ye powers that ſearch
The heart of man, and weigh his inmoſt thoughts,
If I have done amiſs, impute it not! Addiſon.

3. In an ill ſenſe.

She ſigh'd withal, they conſtru'd all amiſs,
And thought ſhe wiſh'd to kill who long'd to kiſs. Fairfax.

4. Wrong; improper; unfit.

Examples have not generally the force of laws, which all men ought to keep, but of counſels only and perſuaſions, not amiſs to be followed by them, whoſe caſe is the like. Hooker.

Methinks, though a man had all ſcience, and all principles, yet it might not be amiſs to have ſome conſcience. Tillotſon.

5. Wrong; not according to the perfection of the thing, whatever it be.

Your kindred is not much amiſs, 'tis true;
Yet I am ſomewhat better born than you. Dryd.

I built a wall, and when the maſons plaid the knaves, nothing delighted me ſo much as to ſtand by, while my ſervants threw down what was amiſs. Swift.

6. Reproachful; irreverent.

Every people, nation, and language, which ſpeak any thing amiſs againſt the God of Shadrach, Meſhach, and Abednego, ſhall be cut in pieces, and their houſes ſhall be made a dunghill; becauſe there is no other God that can deliver after this ſort. Daniel, iii. 29.

7. Impaired in health; as, I was ſomewhat amiſs yeſterday, but am well to-day.

8. Amiſs is marked as an adverb, though it cannot always be adverbially rendered; becauſe it always follows the ſubſtantive to which it relates, contrary to the nature of adjectives in Engliſh; and though we ſay the action was amiſs, we never ſay an amiſs action.

9. Amiſs is uſed by Shakeſpeare as a noun ſubſtantive.

To my ſick ſoul, as ſin's true nature is,
Each toy ſeems prologue to ſome great amiſs. Hamlet.

AMI'SSION, à-mìs'-shùn. n. ſ. [amiſſio, Lat.] Loſs.

To AMI'T, à-mìt'. v. a. [amitto, Lat.] To loſe: a word little in uſe.

Ice is water congealed by the frigidity of the air, whereby it acquireth no new form, but rather a conſiſtence or determination of its diffluency, and amitteth not its eſſence, but condition of fluidity. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

A'MITY, àm'-mì-tỳ. n. ſ. [amitié, Fr. amicitia, Lat.] Friendſhip, whether publick between nations, oppoſed to war; or among the people, oppoſed to diſcord; or between private perſons.

The prophet David did think, that the very meeting of men together, and their accompanying one another to the houſe of God, ſhould make the bond of their love inſoluble, and tie them in a league of inviolable amity. Hooker.

The monarchy of Great Britain was in league and amity with all the world. Sir John Davies on Ireland.

You have a noble and a true conceit
Of godlike amity; which appears moſt ſtrongly
In bearing thus the abſence of your lord. Shakeſpeare.

And ye, oh Tyrians, with immortal hate
Purſue this race, this ſervice dedicate
To my deplored aſhes; let there be
'Twixt us and them no league nor amity. Denham.

AMMO'NIAC, àm-mò'-nyàk. n. ſ. The name of a drug.

GUM AMMONIAC is brought from the Eaſt Indies, and is ſuppoſed to ooze from an umbelliferous plant. Dioſcorides ſays, it is the juice of a kind of ferula growing in Barbary, and the plant is called agaſyllis. Pliny calls the tree metopion, which, he ſays, grows near the Temple of Jupiter Ammon, whence the gum takes its name. It ought to be in dry drops, white within, yellowiſh without, eaſily fuſible, reſinous, ſomewhat bitter, and of a very ſharp taſte and ſmell, ſomewhat like garlick. This gum is ſaid to have ſerved the ancients for incenſe, in their ſacrifices. Savary. Trevoux.

SAL AMMONIAC is a volatile ſalt of two kinds, ancient and modern. The ancient ſort, deſcribed by Pliny and Dioſcorides, was a native ſalt, generated in thoſe large inns where the crowds of pilgrims, coming from the temple of Jupiter Ammon, uſed to lodge; who travelling upon camels, and thoſe creatures in Cyrene, where that celebrated temple ſtood, urining in the ſtables, or in the parched ſands, out of this urine, which is remarkably ſtrong, aroſe a kind of ſalt, denominated ſometimes from the temple, Ammoniac, and ſometimes from the country, Cyreniac. No more of this ſalt is produced there; and, from this deficiency, ſome ſuſpect there never was any ſuch thing: but this ſuſpicion is removed, by the large quantities of a ſalt, nearly of the ſame nature, thrown out by mount Ætna.

The modern ſal ammoniac is made in Egypt; where long-necked glaſs bottles, filled with ſoot, a little ſea ſalt, and the urine of cattle, and having their mouths luted with a piece of wet cotton, are placed over an oven or furnace, in a thick bed of aſhes, nothing but the necks appearing, and kept there two days and a night, with a continual ſtrong fire. The ſteam ſwells up the cotton, and forms a paſte at the vent-hole, hindering the ſalts from evaporating; which ſtick to the top of the bottle, and are taken out in thoſe large cakes, which they ſend to England. Only ſoot exhaled from dung, is the proper ingredient in this preparation; and the dung of camels affords the ſtrongeſt.

Our chymiſts imitate the Egyptian ſal ammoniac, by adding one part of common ſalt to five of urine; with which ſome mix that quantity of ſoot, and putting the whole in a veſſel, they raiſe from it, by ſublimation, a white, friable, farinaceous ſubſtance, which they call ſal ammoniac. Chambers.

AMMONI'ACAL, àm-mò-nỳ'-à-kàl. adj. [from ammoniac.] Having the properties of ammoniac ſalt.

Human blood calcined, yields no fixed ſalt; nor is it a ſal ammoniack; for that remains immutable after repeated diſtillations; and diſtillation deſtroys the ammoniacal quality of animal ſalts, and turns them alkaline: ſo that it is a ſalt neither quite fixed, nor quite volatile, nor quite acid, nor quite alkaſine, nor quite ammoniacal; but ſoft and benign, approaching neareſt to the nature of ſal ammoniac. Arbuthnot.

Ammuni'tion, ȧm-mů-nĭsh′-ůn. n. ſ. [ſuppoſed by ſome to come from amonitio, which, in the barbarous ages, ſeems to have ſignified ſupply of proviſion; but it ſurely may be more reaſonably derived from munitio, fortification; choſes à munitions, things for the fortreſſes.] Military ſtores.

They muſt make themſelves defenſible againſt ſtrangers; and muſt have the aſſiſtance of ſome able military man, and convenient arms and ammunition for their defence. Bacon.

The colonel ſtaid to put in the ammunition he brought with him; which was only twelve barrels of powder, and twelve hundred weight of match. Clarendon.

All the rich mines of learning ranſackt are,
To furniſh ammunition for this war. Denham.

But now his ſtores of ammunition ſpent,
His naked valour is his only guard:
Rare thunders are from his dumb cannon ſent,
And ſolitary guns are ſcarcely heard. Dryden.

Ammuni'tion bread, ȧm-mů-nĭsh′-ůn-brĕd′. n. ſ. Bread for the ſupply of the armies or garriſons.

A'mnesty, ȧm′-nĕs-tŷ. n. ſ. [ἀμνηςία.] An act of oblivion; an act by which crimes againſt the government, to a certain time, are ſo obliterated, that they can never be brought into charge.

I never read of a law enacted to take away the force of all laws, by which a man may ſafely commit upon the laſt of June, what he would infallibly be hanged for, if he committed it on the firſt of July; by which the greateſt criminals may eſcape, provided they continue long enough in power to antiquate their crimes, and, by ſtifling them a while, deceive the legiſlature into an amneſty. Swift.

Amni'colist, ȧm-nŷ′-kŏ-lĭst′. n. ſ. [amnicola, Lat.] Inhabiting near a river. Dict.

Amni'genous, ȧm-nŷ′-gĕ-nůs. n. ſ. [amnigenus, Lat.] Born of a river. Dict.

A'MNION, ȧm′-nyŏn. } n. ſ. [Lat. perhaps
A'MNIOS, ȧm′-nyŏs. } from ἀμνὸς.]

The innermoſt membrane with which the fœtus in the womb is moſt immediately covered, and with which the reſt of the ſecundines, the chorion, and alantois, are ejected after birth. It is whiter and thinner than the chorion. It alſo contains a nutritious humour, ſeparated by glands for that purpoſe, with which the fœtus is preſerved. It is outwardly cloathed with the urinary membrane and the chorion, which ſometimes ſtick ſo cloſe to one another, that they can ſcarce be ſeparated. It has alſo its veſſels from the ſame origin as the chorion. Quincy.

AMO'MUM, ȧ-mŏ′-mům. n. ſ. [Lat.] A ſort of fruit.

The commentators on Pliny and Dioſcorides ſuppoſe it to be a fruit different from ours. The modern amomum appears to be the ſiſon of the ancients, or baſtard ſtone-parſley. It reſembles the muſcat grape. This fruit is brought from the Eaſt Indies, and makes part of treacle. It is of a hot ſpicy taſte and ſmell. Trevoux. Chambers.

Amo'ng, ȧ-můng′. } prep. [amanᵹ, ᵹe-
Amo'ngst, ȧ-můngſt′. } manᵹ, Saxon.]

1. Mingled with; placed with other perſons or things on every ſide.

Amongſt ſtrawberries ſow here and there ſome borage-ſeed; and you ſhall find the ſtrawberries under thoſe leaves far more large than their fellows. Bacon.

The voice of God they heard,
Now walking in the garden, by ſoft winds
Brought to their ears, while day declin'd: they heard,
And from his preſence hid themſelves, among
The thickeſt trees, both man and wife. Milton.

2. Conjoined with others, ſo as to make part of the number.

I have then, as you ſee, obſerved the failings of many great wits amongſt the moderns, who have attempted to write an epic poem. Dryden.

There were, among the old Roman ſtatues, ſeveral of Venus in different poſtures and habits; as there are many particular figures of her made after the ſame deſign. Addiſon.

A'morist, ȧm′-ŏ-rĭst. n. ſ. [from amour.] An inamorato; a gallant; a man profeſſing love.

Female beauties are as fickle in their faces as their minds; though caſualties ſhould ſpare them, age brings in a neceſſity of decay; leaving doters upon red and white perplexed by incertainty both of the continuance of their miſtreſs's kindneſs, and her beauty, both which are neceſſary to the amoriſt's joys and quiet. Boyle.

AMORO'SO, ȧm-ŏ-rŏ′-sŏ. n. ſ. [Ital.] A man enamoured. Dict.

A'morous, ȧm′-ůr-ůs. adj. [amoroſo, Ital.]

1. In love; enamoured; with the particle of before the thing loved; in Shakeſpeare, on.

Sure my brother is amorous on Hero; and hath withdrawn her father to break with him about it. Shakeſpeare.

The am'rous maſter own'd her potent eyes,
Sigh'd when he look'd, and trembled as he drew;
Each flowing line confirm'd his firſt ſurprize,
And as the piece advanc'd, the paſſion grew. Prior.

2. Naturally inclined to love; diſpoſed to fondneſs; fond.

Apes, as ſoon as they have brought forth their young, keep their eyes faſtened on them, and are never weary of admiring their beauty; ſo amorous is nature of whatſoever ſhe produces. Dryden's Dufreſnoy.

3. Relating, or belonging to love.

I that am not ſhap'd for ſportive tricks,
Nor made to court an am'rous looking-glaſs,
I, that am rudely ſtampt. Shakeſp. Rich. III.

And into all things from her air inſpir'd
The ſpirit of love, and amorous delight. Milton.

In the amorous net
Firſt caught they lik'd; and each his liking choſe. Milton.

O! how I long my careleſs limbs to lay
Under the plantane's ſhade, and all the day
With am'rous airs my fancy entertain,
Invoke the muſes, and improve my vein! Waller.

A'morously, ȧm′-ůr-ůs-lŷ. adv. [from amorous.] Fondly; lovingly.

When thou wilt ſwim in that live-bath,
Each fiſh, which every channel hath,
Will amorouſly to thee ſwim,
Gladder to catch thee, than thou him. Donne.

A'morousness, ȧm′-ůr-ůs-nĕs. n. ſ. [from amorous.] The quality of being amorous; fondneſs; lovingneſs; love.

All Gynecia's actions were interpreted by Baſilius, as proceeding from jealouſy of his amorouſneſs. Sidney.

Lindamor has wit, and amorouſneſs enough to make him find it more eaſy to defend fair ladies, than to defend himſelf againſt them. Boyle on Colours.

AMO'RT, ȧ-mŏ′rt. adv. [à la mort, Fr.] In the ſtate of the dead; dejected; depreſſed; ſpiritleſs.

How fares my Kate? what, ſweeting, all amort? Shakeſp. Taming of the Shrew.

Amortiza'tion, ȧ-mŏr-tŷ-zȧ′-ſhůn. } n. ſ.
Amo'rtizement, ȧ-mŏr′-tĭz-mĕnt. }

[amortiſſement, amortiſſable, Fr.] The right or act of transferring lands to mortmain; that is, to ſome community, that never is to ceaſe.

Every one of the religious orders was confirmed by one pope or other; and they made an eſpecial proviſion for them, after the laws of amortization were deviſed and put in uſe by princes. Ayliffe's Parergon Juris Canonici.

To AMO'RTIZE, ȧ-mȧr′-tĭze. v. a. [amortir, Fr.] To alien lands or tenements to any corporation, guild, or fraternity, and their ſucceſſors; which cannot be done without licence of the king, and the lord of the manour. Blount.

This did concern the kingdom, to have farms ſufficient to maintain an able body out of penury, and to amortize part of the lands unto the yeomanry, or middle part of the people. Bacon.

To Amo've, ȧ-mŏ′ve. v. a. [amoveo, Lat.]

1. To remove from a poſt or ſtation: a juridical ſenſe.

2. To remove; to move; to alter: a ſenſe now out of uſe.

Therewith, amoved from his ſober mood,
And lives he yet, ſaid he, that wrought this act?
And do the heavens afford him vital food? Fairy Queen.

At her ſo piteous cry was much amov'd
Her champion ſtout. Fairy Queen.

To Amo'unt, ȧ-mou′nt. v. n. [monter, Fr.]

1. To riſe to in the accumulative quantity; to compoſe in the whole; with the particle to. It is uſed of ſeveral ſums in quantities added together.

Let us compute a little more particularly how much this will amount to, or how many oceans of water would be neceſſary to compoſe this great ocean rowling in the air, without bounds or banks. Burnet's Theory.

2. It is uſed, figuratively, of the conſequence riſing from any thing taken altogether.

The errours of young men are the ruin of buſineſs; but the errours of aged men amount but to this, that more might have been done, or ſooner. Bacon.

Judgments that are made on the wrong ſide of the danger, amount to no more than an affectation of ſkill, without either credit or effect. L'Eſtrange.

Amo'unt, ȧ-mou′nt. n. ſ. [from To amount.] The ſum total; the reſult of ſeveral ſums or quantities accumulated.

And now, ye lying vanities of life,
Where are you now, and what is your amount?
Vexation, diſappointment, and remorſe. Thomſon.

Amo'ur, ȧ-mŏ′r. n. ſ. [amour, Fr. amor, Lat.] An affair of gallantry; an intrigue: generally uſed of vitious love. The ou ſounds like oo in poor.

No man is of ſo general and diffuſive a luſt, as to proſecute his amours all the world over; and let it burn never ſo outrageouſly, yet the impure flame will either die of itſelf, or conſume the body that harbours it. South.

The reſtleſs youth ſearch'd all the world around;
But how can Jove in his amours be found? Addiſon.

A'mper, ȧm′-pĕr. n. ſ. [ampne, Sax.] A tumour, with inflammation; bile: a word ſaid, by Skinner, to be much in uſe in Eſſex; but, perhaps, not found in books.

AMPHI'BIOUS, ȧm-fĭb′-yůs. adj. [ἀμφὶ and βίος.]

1. That which partakes of two natures, ſo as to live in two elements; as, in air and water.

A creature of amphibious nature,
On land a beaſt, a fiſh in water. Hudibras.

Thoſe are called amphibious, which live freely in the air, upon the earth, and yet are obſerved to live long upon water, as if they were natural inhabitants of that element; though it be worth the examination to know, whether any of thoſe creatures that live at eaſe, and by choice, a good while, or at any time, upon the earth, can live, a long time together, perfectly under water. Locke.

Fiſhes contain much oil, and amphibious animals participate ſomewhat of the nature of fiſhes, and are oily. Arbuthnot.

2. Of a mixt nature, in alluſion to animals that live in air and water.

Traulus of amphibious breed,
Motley fruit of mungrel ſeed;
By the dam from lordlings ſprung,
By the ſire exhal'd from dung. Swift.

Amphi'biousness, ȧm-fîb′-yůs-nĕs. n. ſ. [from amphibious.] The quality of being able to live in different elements.

Amphibolo'gical, ȧm-fẏ-bȯ-lȯdzh′-ẏ-kȧl. adj. [from amphibology.] Doubtful.

Amphibolo'gically, ȧm-fẏ-bȯ-lȯdzh′-ẏ-kȧl-lẏ. adv. [from amphibological.] Doubtfully; with a doubtful meaning.

AMPHIBO'LOGY, ȧm-fẏ-bȯl′-ȯ-jẏ. n. ſ. [ἀμφιβολογία.] Diſcourſe of uncertain meaning. It is diſtinguiſhed from equivocation, which means the double ſignification of a ſingle word; as, noli regem occidere timere bonum eſt, is amphibology; captare lepores, meaning, by lepores, either hares or jeſts, is equivocation.

Now the fallacies, whereby men deceive others, and are deceived themſelves, the ancients have divided into verbal and real; of the verbal, and ſuch as conclude from miſtakes of the word, there are but two worthy our notation; the fallacy of equivocation, and amphibology. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

He that affirm'd, 'gainſt ſenſe, ſnow black to be,
Might prove it by this amphibology;
Things are not what they ſeem. Verſes on Cleaveland.

In defining obvious appearances, we are to uſe what is moſt plain and eaſy; that the mind be not miſled by amphibologies into fallacious deductions. Glanville.

Amphi'bolous, ȧm-fîb-bȯ-lůs. adj. [ἀμφι and βάλλω.] Toſſed from one to another; ſtriking each way.

Never was there ſuch an amphibolous quarrel, both parties declaring themſelves for the king, and making uſe of his name in all their remonſtrances, to juſtify their actions. Howell.

Amphi'logy, ȧm-fîl-lȯ-jẏ. n. ſ. [ἀμφι and λόγος.] Equivocation; ambiguity. Dict.

AMPHISBÆ'NA, ȧm-fis-bē′-nȧ. n. ſ. [Lat. ἀμφισβαίνη.] A ſerpent ſuppoſed to have two heads, and by conſequence to move with either end foremoſt.

That the amphiſbæna, that is, a ſmaller kind of ſerpent, which moveth forward and backward, hath two heads, or one at either extreme, was affirmed by Nicander, and others. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

Scorpion, and aſp, and amphiſbæna dire. Milton.

AMPHI'SCII, ȧm-fîs′-ſî-î. n. ſ. [Lat. ἀμφίσκιοι, of ἀμφι and σκία a ſhadow.] Thoſe people dwelling in climates, wherein the ſhadows, at different times of the year, fall both ways; to the north pole, when the ſun is in the ſouthern ſigns; and to the ſouth pole, when he is in the northern ſigns. Theſe are the people who inhabit the torrid zone.

Amphithe'atre, ȧm-fẏ-thē-ȧtre. n. ſ. [of ἀμφιθέατρον, of ἀμφι and θεάομαι.] A building in a circular or oval form, having its area encompaſſed with rows of ſeats one above another; where ſpectators might behold ſpectacles, as ſtage-plays, or gladiators. The theatres of the ancients were built in the form of a ſemicircle, only exceeding a juſt ſemicircle by one-fourth part of the diameter; and the amphitheatre is two theatres joined together; ſo that the longeſt diameter of the amphitheatre was to the ſhorteſt, as one and a half to one.

Within, an amphitheatre appear'd
Rais'd in degrees; to ſixty paces rear'd,
That when a man was plac'd in one degree,
Height was allow'd for him above to ſee. Dryden.

Conceive a man placed in the burning iron chair at Lyons, amid the inſults and mockeries of a crowded amphitheatre, and ſtill keeping his ſeat; or ſtretched upon a grate of iron, over coals of fire, and breathing out his ſoul among the exquiſite ſufferings of ſuch a tedious execution, rather than renounce his religion, or blaſpheme his Saviour. Addiſon.

A'MPLE, ȧm′pl. adj. [amplus, Lat.]

1. Large; wide; extended.

Heav'n deſcends
In univerſal bounty, ſhedding herbs,
And fruits, and flowers, on Nature's ample lap. Thomſon.

2. Great in bulk.

Did your letters pierce the queen to any demonſtration of grief?——
She took 'em, and read 'em in my preſence,
And now and then an ample tear trill'd down
Her delicate cheeks. Shakeſpeare's King Lear.

3. Unlimited; without reſtriction.

Have what you aſk, your preſents I receive;
Land where and when you pleaſe, with ample leave. Dryden.

4. Liberal; large; without parſimony.

If we ſpeak of ſtrict juſtice, God could no way have been bound to requite man's labours in ſo large and ample manner as human felicity doth import; in as much as the dignity of this exceedeth ſo far the other's value. Hooker.

5. Magnificent; ſplendid.

To diſpoſe the prince the more willingly to undertake his relief, the earl made ample promiſes, that, within ſo many days after the ſiege ſhould be raiſed, he would advance his highneſs's levies with two thouſand men. Clarendon.

6. Diffuſive; not contracted; as, an ample narrative, that is, not an epitome.

A'mpleness, ȧm′pl-nĕss. n. ſ. [from ample.] The quality of being ample; largeneſs; ſplendour.

Impoſſible it is for a perſon of my condition to produce any thing in proportion either to the ampleneſs of the body you repreſent, or of the places you bear. South.

To A'mpliate, ȧm′-plẏ-ȧte. v. a. [amplio, Lat.] To enlarge; to make greater; to extend.

He ſhall look upon it, not to traduce or extenuate, but to explain and dilucidate, to add and ampliate. Brown.

Amplia'tion, ȧm-plẏ-ȧ′-ſhůn. n. ſ. [from ampliate.]

1. Enlargement; exaggeration; extenſion.

Odious matters admit not of an ampliation, but ought to be reſtrained and interpreted in the mildeſt ſenſe. Ayliffe's Parergon.

2. Diffuſeneſs; enlargement.

The obſcurity of the ſubject, and the prejudice and prepoſſeſſion of moſt readers, may plead excuſe for any ampliations or repetitions that may be found, whilſt I labour to expreſs myſelf plain and full. Holder.

To Ampli'ficate, ȧm-plîf-ẏ-kȧte. v. a. [amplifico, Lat.] To enlarge; to ſpread out; to amplify. Dict.

Amplifica'tion, ȧm-plẏ-fẏ-kȧ′-ſhůn. n. ſ. [amplification, Fr. amplificatio, Lat.]

1. Enlargement; extenſion.

2. It is uſually taken in a rhetorical ſenſe, and implies exaggerated repreſentation, or diffuſe narrative; an image heightened beyond reality; a narrative enlarged with many circumſtances.

I ſhall ſummarily, without any amplification at all, ſhew in what manner defects have been ſupplied. Davies.

Things unknown ſeem greater than they are, and are uſually received with amplifications above their nature. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

Is the poet juſtifiable for relating ſuch incredible amplifications? It may be anſwered, if he had put theſe extravagances into the mouth of Ulyſſes, he had been unpardonable; but they ſuit well the character of Alcinous. Pope.

A'mplifier, ȧm′-plẏ-fî-ĕr. n. ſ. [from To amplify.] One that enlarges any thing; one that exaggerates; one that repreſents any thing with a large diſplay of the beſt circumſtances; it being uſually taken in a good ſenſe.

Dorillaus could need no amplifier's mouth for the higheſt point of praiſe. Sidney.

To A'mplify, ȧm′-plẏ-fẏ. v. a. [amplifier, Fr.]

1. To enlarge; to increaſe any material ſubſtance, or object of ſenſe.

So when a great moneyed man hath divided his cheſts, and coins, and bags, he ſeemeth to himſelf richer than he was: and therefore a way to amplify any thing, is to break it, and to make anatomy of it in ſeveral parts, and to examine it according to the ſeveral circumſtances. Bacon.

All concaves that proceed from more narrow to more broad, do amplify the ſound at the coming out. Bacon.

2. To enlarge, or extend any thing incorporeal.

As the reputation of the Roman prelates grew up in theſe blind ages, ſo grew up in them withal a deſire of amplifying their power, that they might be as great in temporal forces, as men's opinions have formed them in ſpiritual matters. Raleigh.

3. To exaggerate any thing; to enlarge it by the manner of repreſentation.

Thy general is my lover; I have been
The book of his good acts; whence men have read
His fame unparallel'd, haply amplified. Shakeſp.

Since I have plainly laid open the negligence and errours of every age that is paſt, I would not willingly ſeem to flatter the preſent, by amplifying the diligence and true judgment of thoſe ſervitours that have laboured in this vineyard. Davies.

4. To enlarge; to improve by new additions.

In paraphraſe the author's words are not ſtrictly followed, his ſenſe too is amplified but not altered, as Waller's tranſlation of Virgil. Dryden.

I feel age advancing, and my health is inſufficient to increaſe and amplify theſe remarks, to confirm and improve theſe rules, and to illuminate the ſeveral pages. Watts.

To A'mplify, ȧm′-plẏ-fẏ. v. n. Frequently with the particle on.

1. To ſpeak largely in many words; to lay one's ſelf out in diffuſion.

When you affect to amplify on the former branches of a diſcourſe, you will often lay a neceſſity upon yourſelf of contracting the latter, and prevent yourſelf in the moſt important part of your deſign. Watts's Logick.

2. To form large or pompous repreſentations.

An excellent medicine for the ſtone might be conceived, by amplifying apprehenſions able to break a diamond. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

I have ſometimes been forced to amplify on others; but here, where the ſubject is ſo fruitful, that the harveſt overcomes the reaper, I am ſhortened by my chain. Dryden.

Homer amplifies, not invents; and as there was really a people called Cyclopeans, ſo they might be men of great ſtature, or giants. Pope's Odyſſey.

A'MPLITUDE, ȧm'-plẏ-tůde. n. ſ. [amplitude, Fr. amplitudo, Lat.]

1. Extent.

Whatever I look upon, within the amplitude of heaven and earth, is evidence of human ignorance. Glanville.

2. Largeneſs; greatneſs.

Men ſhould learn how ſevere a thing the true inquiſition of nature is, and accuſtom themſelves, by the light of particulars, to enlarge their minds to the amplitude of the world, and not reduce the world to the narrowneſs of their minds. Bacon.

3. Capacity; extent of intellectual faculties.

With more than human gifts from heav'n
adorn'd,
Perfections abſolute, graces divine,
And amplitude of mind to greateſt deeds. Milton.

4. Splendour; grandeur; dignity.

In the great frame of kingdoms and commonwealths, it is in the power of princes, or eſtates, to add amplitude and greatneſs to their kingdoms. Bacon's Eſſays.

5. Copiouſneſs; abundance.

You ſhould ſay every thing which has a proper and direct tendency to this end; always proportioning the amplitude of your matter, and the fulneſs of your diſcourſe, to your great deſign; the length of your time, to the convenience of your hearers. Watts's Logick.

6. Amplitude of the range of a projectile, denotes the horizontal line ſubtending the path in which it moved.

7. Amplitude, in aſtronomy, an arch of the horizon, intercepted between the true eaſt and weſt point thereof, and the centre of the ſun or ſtar at its riſing or ſetting. It is eaſtern or ortive, when the ſtar riſes; and weſtern or occiduous, when the ſtar ſets. The eaſtern or weſtern amplitude are alſo called northern or ſouthern, as they fall in the northern or ſouthern quarters of the horizon.

8. Magnetical amplitude is an arch of the horizon, contained between the ſun at his riſing, and the eaſt or weſt point of the compaſs; or, it is the difference of the riſing or ſetting of the ſun, from the eaſt or weſt parts of the compaſs. Chambers.

A'MPLY, ȧm'-plẏ. adv. [amplè, Lat.]

1. Largely; liberally.

For whoſe well-being,
So amply, and with hands ſo liberal,
Thou haſt provided all things. Milton.

The evidence they had before was enough, amply enough, to convince them; but they were reſolved not to be convinced: and to thoſe, who are reſolved not to be convinced, all motives, all arguments, are equal. Atterbury.

2. At large; without reſerve.

At return
Of him ſo lately promis'd to thy aid,
The woman's ſeed, obſcurely then foretold,
Now amplier known, thy Saviour, and thy Lord.
Milton.

3. At large; copiouſly; with a diffuſive detail.

Some parts of a poem require to be amply written, and with all the force and elegance of words; others muſt be caſt into ſhadows; that is, paſſed over in ſilence, or but faintly touched. Dryden's Dufreſnoy.

To A'MPUTATE, ȧm'-pů-tåte. v. a. [amputo, Lat.] To cut off a limb: a word uſed only in chirurgery.

Amongſt the cruizers, it was complained, that their ſurgeons were too active in amputating fractured members. Wiſeman's Surgery.

AMPUTA'TION, ȧm-pů-tå'-ſhůn. n. ſ. [amputatio, Lat.]

The operation of cutting off a limb, or other part of the body. The uſual method of performing it, in the inſtance of a leg, is as follows: The proper part for the operation being four or five inches below the knee, the ſkin and fleſh are firſt to be drawn very tight upwards, and ſecured from returning by a ligature two or three fingers broad: above this ligature another looſe one is paſſed, for the gripe; which being twiſted by means of a ſtick, may be ſtraitened to any degree at pleaſure. Then the patient being conveniently ſituated, and the operator placed to the inſide of the limb, which is to be held by one aſſiſtant above, and another below the part deſigned for the operation, and the gripe ſufficiently twiſted to prevent too large an hæmorrhage, the fleſh is, with a ſtroke or two, to be ſeparated from the bone with the diſmembering knife. Then the perioſtium being alſo divided from the bone with the back of the knife, ſaw the bone aſunder, with as few ſtrokes as poſſible. When two parallel bones are concerned, the fleſh that grows between them muſt likewiſe be ſeparated before the uſe of the ſaw. This being done, the gripe may be ſlackened, to give an opportunity of ſearching for the large blood veſſels, and ſecuring the hæmorrhage at their mouths. After making proper applications to the ſtump, looſen the firſt ligature, and pull both the ſkin and the fleſh, as far as conveniently may be, over the ſtump, to cover it; and ſecure them with the croſs ſtitch made at the depth of half or three quarters of an inch in the ſkin. Then apply pledgets, aſtringents, plaiſters, and other neceſſaries. Chambers.

The Amazons, by the amputation of their right breaſt, had the freer uſe of their bow. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

A'MULET, ȧ'm-ů-lėt. n. ſ. [amulette, Fr. amuletum, or amoletum, quod malum amolitur, Lat.] An appended remedy, or preſervative; a thing hung about the neck, or any other part of the body, for preventing or curing of ſome particular diſeaſes.

That ſpirits are corporeal, ſeems at firſt view a conceit derogative unto himſelf; yet herein he eſtabliſheth the doctrine of luſtrations, amulets, and charms. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

They do not certainly know the falſity of what they report; and their ignorance muſt ſerve you as an amulet againſt the guilt both of deceit and malice. Government of the Tongue.

AMURCO'SITY, ȧ-můr'-kȯ-sît-ẏ. n. ſ. [amurca, Lat.] The quality of lees or mother of any thing. Dict.

To AMU'SE, ȧ-mů'ze. v. a. [amuſer, Fr.]

1. To entertain with tranquillity; to fill with thoughts that engage the mind, without diſtracting it. To divert implies ſomething more lively, and to pleaſe, ſomething more important. It is therefore frequently taken in a ſenſe bordering on contempt.

They think they ſee viſions, and are arrived to ſome extraordinary revelations; when, indeed, they do but dream dreams, and amuſe themſelves with the fantaſtick ideas of a buſy imagination. Decay of Piety.

I cannot think it natural for a man, who is much in love, to amuſe himſelf with trifles. Walſh.

2. To draw on from time to time; to keep in expectation; as, he amuſed his followers with idle promiſes.

AMU'SEMENT, ȧ-mů'ze-mėnt. n. ſ. [amuſement, Fr.] That which amuſes; entertainment.

Every intereſt or pleaſure of life, even the moſt trifling amuſement, is ſuffered to poſtpone the one thing neceſſary. Rogers.

During his confinement, his amuſement was to give poiſon to dogs and cats, and ſee them expire by ſlower or quicker torments. Pope.

I was left to ſtand the battle, while others, who had better talents than a draper, thought it no unpleaſant amuſement to look on with ſafety, whilſt another was giving them diverſion at the hazard of his liberty. Swift.

AMU'SER, ȧ-mů'-zůr. n. ſ. [amuſeur, Fr.] He that amuſes, as with falſe promiſes. The French word is always taken in an ill ſenſe.

AMU'SIVE, ȧ-mů'-sîv. adj. [from amuſe.] That which has the power of amuſing. I know not that this is a current word.

But amaz'd,
Beholds th' amuſive arch before him fly,
Then vaniſh quite away. Thomſon.

AMY'GDALATE, ȧ-mîg'-då-låte. adj. [amygdala, Lat.] Made of almonds.

AMY'GDALINE, ȧ-mîg'-då-lîne. adj. [amygdala, Lat.] Relating to almonds; reſembling almonds.

AN, ȧn'. article. [ane, Saxon; een, Dutch; eine, German.] The article indefinite, uſed before a vowel, or h mute. See A.

1. One, but with leſs emphaſis; as, there ſtands a houſe.

Since he cannot be always employed in ſtudy, reading, and converſation, there will be many an hour, beſides what his exerciſes will take up. Locke.

2. Any, or ſome; as, an elephant might ſwim in this water.

He was no way at an uncertainty, nor ever in the leaſt at a loſs concerning any branch of it. Locke.

A wit 's a feather, and a chief a rod,
An honeſt man 's the nobleſt work of God. Pope.

3. Sometimes it ſignifies, like a, ſome particular ſtate; but this is now diſuſed.

It is certain that odours do, in a ſmall degree, nouriſh; eſpecially the odour of wine; and we ſee men an hungred do love to ſmell hot bread. Bacon.

4. An is ſometimes, in old authors, a contraction of and if.

He can't flatter, he!
An honeſt mind and plain; he muſt ſpeak truth,
An they will take it ſo; if not, he's plain. Shakeſp.

5. Sometimes a contraction of and before if.

Well I know
The clerk will ne'er wear hair on's face that had it.
——He will an' if he live to be a man. Shakeſp.

6. Sometimes it is a contraction of as if.

My next pretty correſpondent, like Shakeſpeare's lion in Pyramus and Thiſbe, roars an' it were any nightingale. Addiſon.

A'NA, å'-nå. adv. [ἀνα.] A word uſed in the preſcriptions of phyſick, importing the like quantity; as, wine and honey, ā or ana ℥ ii; that is, of wine and honey each two ounces.

In the ſame weight innocence and prudence take,
Ana of each does the juſt mixture make. Cowley.

He'll bring an apothecary with a chargeable long bill of anas. Dryden.

A'NA, å'-nå. n. ſ. Books ſo called from the laſt ſyllables of their titles; as, Scaligerana, Thuaniana; they are looſe thoughts, or caſual hints, dropped by eminent men, and collected by their friends.

ANACA'MPTICK, ȧn-ȧ-kȧmp'-tîk. adj. [ἀνακάμπτω.] Reflecting, or reflected: an anacamptick camptick ſound, an echo; an anacamptick hill, a hill that produces an echo.

Anaca'mpticks, ån-å-kåmp'-tiks. n. ſ. The doctrine of reflected light, or catoptricks. It has no ſingular.

Anacatha'rtick, ån-å-kå-thå'r-tik. n. ſ. [See Cathartick.] Any medicine that works upwards. Quincy.

ANACEPHALÆO'SIS, ån-å-ſê-fål'-lô-ſis. n. ſ. [ἀνακεφαλαίωσις.] Recapitulation, or ſummary of the principal heads of a diſcourſe. Dict.

Ana'chorete, ån-åk'-ô-rête. } n. ſ. [ſometimes vitiouſly written anchorite; ἀναχωρητής.] A monk who, with the leave of his ſuperiour, leaves the convent for a more auſtere and ſolitary life.
Ana'chorite, ån-åk'-ô-rîte. }

Yet lies not love dead here, but here doth ſit,
Vow'd to this trench, like an anachorite. Donne.

Ana'chronism, ån-åk'-krô-nism. n. ſ. [from ἀνὰ and χρόνος.] An errour in computing time, by which events are miſplaced with regard to each other. It ſeems properly to ſignify an errour by which an event is placed too early; but is generally uſed for any errour in chronology.

This leads me to the defence of the famous anachroniſm, in making Æneas and Dido cotemporaries: for it is certain, that the hero lived almoſt two hundred years before the building of Carthage. Dryden.

Anacla'ticks, ån-å-klåt-iks. n. ſ. [ἀνὰ and κλάω.] The doctrine of refracted light; dioptricks. It has no ſingular.

ANADIPLO'SIS, ån-å-di-plô'-ſis. n. ſ. [ἀναδίπλωσις.] Reduplication; a figure in rhetorick, in which the laſt word of a foregoing member of a period becomes the firſt of the following; as, he retained his virtues amidſt all his misfortunes, misfortunes which only his virtues brought upon him.

Anagoge'tical, ån-å-gô-gêt'-tŷ-kêl. adj. [αναγώγη.] That which contributes or relates to ſpiritual elevation, or religious raptures; myſterious; elevated above humanity. Dict.

Anago'gical, ån-å-gô'-gi-kal. adj. [anagogique, Fr.] Myſterious; elevated; religiouſly exalted. Dict.

Anago'gically, ån-å-gô'-gi-kål-lŷ. adv. [from anagogical.] Myſteriouſly; with religious elevation.

A'NAGRAM, ån'-å-gråm. n. ſ. [ἀνὰ and γράμμα.] A conceit ariſing from the letters of a name tranſpoſed; as this, of W,i,l,l,i,a,m, N,o,y, attorney-general to Charles I. a very laborious man, I moyl in law.

Though all her parts be not in th' uſual place,
She hath yet the anagrams of a good face:
If we might put the letters but one way,
In that lean dearth of words what could we ſay? Donne.

Thy genius calls thee not to purchaſe fame
In keen iambicks, but mild anagram. Dryden.

Anagra'mmatism, ån-å-gråm'-må-tizm. n. ſ. [from anagram.] The act or practice of making anagrams.

The only quinteſſence that hitherto the alchymy of wit could draw out of names, is anagrammatiſm, or metagrammatiſm, which is a diſſolution of a name truly written into his letters, as his elements, and a new connexion of it by artificial tranſpoſition, without addition, ſubſtraction, or change of any letter, into different words, making ſome perfect ſenſe appliable to the perſon named. Camden.

Anagra'mmatist, ån-å-gråm'-må-tiſt. n. ſ. [from anagram.] A maker of anagrams.

To Anagra'mmatize, ån-å-gråm'-må-tîze. v. n. [anagrammatiſer, Fr.] To make anagrams.

Anale'ptick, ån-å-lêp'-tik. adj. [ἀναληπτικός.] Comforting; corroborating: a term of phyſick.

Analeptick medicines cheriſh the nerves, and renew the ſpirits and ſtrength. Quincy.

Ana'logal, ån-ål'-ô-gål. adj. [from analogous.] Analogous; having relation.

When I ſee many analogal motions in animals, though I cannot call them voluntary, yet I ſee them ſpontaneous, I have reaſon to conclude that theſe in their principle are not ſimply mechanical. Hale.

Analo'gical, ån-å-lôdzh'-ŷ-kål. adj. [from analogy.]

1. Uſed by way of analogy. It ſeems properly diſtinguiſhed from analogous, as words from things; analogous ſignifies having relation, and analogical having the quality of repreſenting relation.

It is looked on only as the image of the true God, and that not as a proper likeneſs, but by analogical repreſentation. Stillingfleet.

When a word, which originally ſignifies any particular idea or object, is attributed to ſeveral other objects, not by way of reſemblance, but on the account of ſome evident reference to the original idea, this is peculiarly called an analogical word; ſo a ſound or healthy pulſe, a ſound digeſtion, ſound ſleep, are ſo called, with reference to a ſound and healthy conſtitution; but if you ſpeak of ſound doctrine, or ſound ſpeech, this is by way of reſemblance to health, and the words are metaphorical. Watts's Logick.

2. Analogous; having reſemblance or relation.

There is placed the minerals between the inanimate and vegetable province, participating ſomething analogical to either. Hale's Orig. of Mankind.

Analo'gically, ån-å-lôdzh'-ŷ-kål-ŷ. adv. [from analogical.] In an analogical manner; in an analogous manner.

I am convinced, from the ſimplicity and uniformity of the Divine Nature, and of all his works, that there is ſome one univerſal principle, running through the whole ſyſtem of creatures analogically, and congruous to their relative natures. Cheyne.

Analo'gicalness, ån-å-lôdzh'-ŷ-kål-nês. n. ſ. [from analogical.] The quality of being analogical; fitneſs to be applied for the illuſtration of ſome analogy.

Ana'logism, å-nål'-ô-jîzm. n. ſ. [ἀναλογισμὸς.] An argument from the cauſe to the effect.

To Ana'logize, ån-nål'-lô-jîze. v. a. [from analogy.] To explain by way of analogy; to form ſome reſemblance between different things; to conſider ſomething with regard to its analogy with ſomewhat elſe.

We have ſyſtems of material bodies, diverſly figured and ſituated, if ſeparately conſidered; they repreſent the object of the deſire, which is analogized by attraction or gravitation. Cheyne.

Ana'logous, ån-nål'-lô-gûs. adj. [ἀνα and λόγος.]

1. Having analogy; bearing ſome reſemblance or proportion; having ſomething parallel.

Exerciſe makes things eaſy, that would be otherwiſe very hard; as, in labour, watchings, heats, and colds; and then there is ſomething analogous in the exerciſe of the mind to that of the body. It is folly and infirmity that makes us delicate and froward. L'Eſtrange.

Many important conſequences may be drawn from the obſervation of the moſt common things, and analogous reaſonings from the cauſes of them. Arbuthnot.

2. It has the word to before the thing to which the reſemblance is noted.

This incorporeal ſubſtance may have ſome ſort of exiſtence, analogous to corporeal extenſion: though we have no adequate conception hereof. Locke.

ANA'LOGY, ån-nål'-ô-jŷ. n. ſ. [ἀναλογία.]

1. Reſemblance between things with regard to ſome circumſtances or effects; as, learning is ſaid to enlighten the mind; that is, it is to the mind what light is to the eye, by enabling it to diſcover that which was hidden before.

From God it hath proceeded, that the church hath evermore held a preſcript form of common prayer, although not in all things every where the ſame, yet, for the moſt part, retaining the ſame analogy. Hooker.

What I here obſerve of extraordinary revelation and prophecy, will, by analogy and due proportion, extend even to thoſe communications of God's will, that are requiſite to ſalvation. South.

2. When the thing to which the analogy is ſuppoſed, happens to be mentioned, analogy has after it the particles to or with; when both the things are mentioned after analogy, the particle between or betwixt is uſed.

If the body politick have any analogy to the natural, an act of oblivion were neceſſary in a hot diſtempered ſtate. Dryden.

By analogy with all other liquors and concretions, the form of the chaos, whether liquid or concrete, could not be the ſame with that of the preſent earth. Burnet's Theory.

If we make Juvenal expreſs the cuſtoms of our country, rather than of Rome, it is when there was ſome analogy betwixt the cuſtoms. Dryden.

3. By grammarians, it is uſed to ſignify the agreement of ſeveral words in one common mode; as, from love is formed loved; from hate, hated; from grieve, grieved.

Ana'lysis, ån-nål'-lŷ-ſis. n. ſ. [ἀνάλυσις.]

1. A ſeparation of a compound body into the ſeveral parts of which it conſiſts.

There is an account of dew falling, in ſome places, in the form of butter, or greaſe, which grows extremely fetid; ſo that the analyſis of the dew of any place, may, perhaps, be the beſt method of finding ſuch contents of the ſoil as are within the reach of the ſun. Arbuthnot.

2. A conſideration of any thing in parts, ſo as that one particular is firſt conſidered, then another.

Analyſis conſiſts in making experiments and obſervations, and in drawing general concluſions from them by induction, and admitting of no objections but ſuch as are taken from experiments, or other certain truths. Newton's Opticks.

3. A ſolution of any thing, whether corporeal or mental, to its firſt elements; as, of a ſentence to the ſingle words; of a compound word, to the particles and words which form it; of a tune, to ſingle notes; of an argument, to ſimple propoſitions.

We cannot know any thing of nature, but by an analyſis of its true initial cauſes; till we know the firſt ſprings of natural motions, we are ſtill but ignorants. Glanville.

Analy'tical, ån-å-lît'-tŷ-kål. adj. [from analyſis.]

1. That which reſolves any thing into firſt principles; that which ſeparates any compound. See Analysis.

Either may be probably maintained againſt the inaccurateneſs of the analytical experiments vulgarly relied on. Boyle.

2. That which proceeds by analyſis, or by taking the parts of a compound into diſtinct and particular conſideration.

Deſcartes hath here infinitely outdone all the philoſophers that went before him, in giving a particular and analytical account of the univerſal fabrick: yet he intends his principles but for hypotheſes. Glanville.

Analy'tically, ån-å-lît'-tý-kål-lý. adv. [from analytical.] In ſuch a manner as ſeparates compounds into ſimples. See Analysis.

Analy'tick, ån-å-lît'-îk. adj. [ἀναλυτικὸς.] The manner of reſolving compounds into the ſimple conſtituent or component parts, applied chiefly to mental operations.

He was in logick a great critick,
Profoundly ſkill'd in analytick. Hudibras.

Analytick method takes the whole compound as it finds it, whether it be a ſpecies or an individual, and leads us into the knowledge of it, by reſolving into its firſt principles, or parts, its generick nature, and its ſpecial properties; and therefore it is called the method of reſolution. Watts's Logick.

To A'NALYZE, ån'-å-lýze. v. a. [ἀναλυω.] To reſolve a compound into its firſt principles. See Analysis.

Chemiſtry enabling us to depurate bodies, and, in ſome meaſure, to analyze them, and take aſunder their heterogeneous parts, in many chymical experiments, we may, better than in others, know what manner of bodies we employ; art having made them more ſimple or uncompounded, than nature alone is wont to preſent them us. Boyle.

To analyze the immorality of any action into its laſt principles; if it be enquired, Why ſuch an action is to be avoided? the immediate anſwer is, Becauſe it is ſin. Norris's Miſcell.

When the ſentence is diſtinguiſhed into ſubject and predicate, propoſition, argument, act, object, cauſe, effect, adjunct, oppoſite, &c. then it is analyzed analogically and metaphyſically. This laſt is what is chiefly meant in the theological ſchools, when they ſpeak of analyzing a text of ſcripture. Watts's Logick.

A'nalyzer, ån'-å-lý-zůr. n. ſ. [from To analyze.] That which has the power of analyzing.

Particular reaſons incline me to doubt, whether the fire be the true and univerſal analyzer of mixt bodies. Boyle.

ANAMORPHO'SIS, ån-å-môr-fô'-ſîs. n. ſ. [ἀνὰ and μορφόω.] Deformation; a perſpective projection of any thing, ſo that to the eye, at one point of view, it ſhall appear deformed, in another, an exact and regular repreſentation. Sometimes it is made to appear confuſed to the naked eye, and regular, when viewed in a mirrour of a certain form.

ANA'NAS, ån-nå'-nås. n. ſ. The pine-apple.

The ſpecies are, 1. Oval-ſhaped pine-apple, with a whitiſh fleſh. 2. Pyramidal pine-apple, with a yellow fleſh. 3. Pine-apple, with ſmooth leaves. 4. Pine-apple, with ſhining green leaves, and ſcarce any ſpines on their edges. 5. The olive-coloured pine. Miller.

Witneſs thou beſt anana, thou the pride
Of vegetable life, beyond whate'er
The poets imag'd in the golden age. Thomſon.

ANA'NAS, ån-nå'-nås, wild. The ſame with penguin. See PENGUIN.

Anapæst, ån'-å-pêst. ſ. A foot in poetry, conſiſting of two ſhort and one long ſyllable, the reverſe of a dactyl.

ANA'PHORA, ån-åf'-ô-rå. n. ſ. [ἀναφορὰ.] A figure, when ſeveral clauſes of a ſentence are begun with the ſame word, or ſound; as, Where is the wiſe? Where is the ſcribe? Where is the diſputer of this world?

Anaplero'tick, ån-å-plê-rôt'-îk. adj. [ἀναπληρόω.] That which fills up any vacuity; uſed of applications which promote fleſh.

A'NARCH, ån'-årk. n. ſ. [See Anarchy.] An author of confuſion.

Him thus the anarch old,
With fault'ring ſpeech, and viſage incompos'd,
Anſwer'd. Milton.

Ana'rchical, ån-år'-ký-kål. adj. [from anarchy.] Confuſed; without rule or government.

In this anarchical and rebellious ſtate of human nature, the faculties belonging to the material world preſume to determine the nature of ſubjects belonging to the ſupreme Spirit. Cheyne.

A'narchy, ån'-år-ký. n. ſ. [ἀναρχία.] Want of government; a ſtate in which every man is unaccountable; a ſtate without magiſtracy.

Where eldeſt Night
And Chaos, anceſtors of Nature, hold
Eternal anarchy, amidſt the noiſe
Of endleſs wars, and by confuſion ſtand. Milton.

Arbitrary power is but the firſt natural ſtep from anarchy, or the ſavage life; the adjuſting power and freedom being an effect and conſequence of maturer thinking. Swift.

ANASA'RCA, ån-å-så'r-kå. n. ſ. [from ἀνὰ and σαρξ.] A ſort of dropſy, where the whole ſubſtance is ſtuffed with pituitous humours. Quincy.

When the lympha ſtagnates, or is extravaſated under the ſkin, it is called an anaſarca. Arbuthnot on Diet.

Anasa'rcous, ån-å-så'r-kůs. adj. [from anaſarca.] Relating to an anaſarca; partaking of the nature of an anaſarca.

A gentlewoman laboured of an aſcites, with an anaſarcous ſwelling of her belly, thighs, and legs. Wiſeman.

Anastoma'tick, ån-ås-tô-måt'-îk. adj. [from ἀνα and ςόμα.] That which has the quality of opening the veſſels, or of removing obſtructions.

ANASTOMO'SIS, ån-ås-tô-mô'-ſîs. n. ſ. [from ἀνὰ and ςόμα.] The inoſculation of veſſels, or the opening of one veſſel into another; as, of the arteries into the veins.

ANA'STROPHE, ån-ås'-trô-fê. n. ſ. [ἀναςροφὴ, a prepoſterous placing, from ἀναςρέφω.] A figure whereby words which ſhould have been precedent, are poſtponed.

ANA'THEMA, ån-åth'-ê-må. n. ſ. [ἀνάθεμα.]

1. A curſe pronounced by eccleſiaſtical authority; excommunication.

Her bare anathemas fall but like ſo many bruta fulmina upon the ſchiſmatical; who think themſelves ſhrewdly hurt, forſooth, by being cut off from the body, which they chooſe not to be of. South's Sermons.

2. The object of the curſe, or perſon curſed. This ſeems the original meaning, though now little uſed.

Anathema'tical, ån-å-thê-måt'-ý-kål. adj. [from anathema.] That which has the properties of an anathema; that which relates to an anathema.

Anathema'tically, ån-å-thê-måt'-ý-kål-lý. adv. [from anathematical.] In an anathematical manner.

To Anathe'matize, ån-åth''-ê-må-tî'ze. v. a. [from anathema.] To pronounce accurſed by eccleſiaſtical authority; to excommunicate.

They were therefore to be anathematized, and, with deteſtation, branded and baniſhed out of the church. Hammond.

Anati'ferous, ån-å-tîf'-fê-růs. adj. [from anas and fero, Lat.] Producing ducks. Not in uſe.

If there be anatiferous trees, whoſe corruption breaks forth into barnacles; yet, if they corrupt, they degenerate into maggots, which produce not them again. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

Ana'tocism, ån-åt'-tô-ſîzm. n. ſ. [anatociſmus, Lat. ἀνατοκισμος.] The accumulation of intereſt upon intereſt; the addition of the intereſt due for money lent, to the original ſum. A ſpecies of uſury generally forbidden.

Anato'mical, ån-å-tôm'-î-kål. adj. [from anatomy.]

1. Relating or belonging to anatomy.

When we are taught by logick to view a thing completely in all its parts, by the help of diviſion, it has the uſe of an anatomical knife, which diſſects an animal body, and ſeparates the veins, arteries, nerves, muſcles, membranes, &c. and ſhews us the ſeveral parts which go to the compoſition of a complete animal. Watts's Logick.

2. Proceeding upon principles taught in anatomy; conſidered as the object of anatomy.

There is a natural, involuntary diſtortion of the muſcles, which is the anatomical cauſe of laughter; but there is another cauſe of laughter, which decency requires. Swift.

3. Anatomized; diſſected; ſeparated.

The continuation of ſolidity is apt to be confounded with, and, if we will look into the minute anatomical parts of matter, is little different from, hardneſs. Locke.

Anato'mically, ån-å-tôm'-î-kål-lý. adv. [from anatomical.] In an anatomical manner; in the ſenſe of an anatomiſt; according to the doctrine of anatomy.

While ſome affirmed it had no gall, intending only thereby no evidence of anger or fury, others have conſtrued anatomically, and denied that part at all. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

Ana'tomist, ån-åt'-tô-mîſt. n. ſ. [ἀνατομικὸς.] He that ſtudies the ſtructure of animal bodies, by means of diſſection; he that divides the bodies of animals, to diſcover the various parts.

Anatomiſts adjudged, that if nature had been ſuffered to run her own courſe, without this fatal interruption, he might have doubled his age. Howel.

Hence when anatomiſts diſcourſe,
How like brutes organs are to ours;
They grant, if higher powers think fit,
A bear might ſoon be made a wit;
And that, for any thing in nature,
Pigs might ſqueak love odes, dogs bark ſatire. Prior.

To Ana'tomize, ån-åt'-tô-mîze. v. a. [ἀνατέμνω.]

1. To diſſect an animal; to divide the body into its component or conſtituent parts.

Our induſtry muſt even anatomize every particle of that body, which we are to uphold. Hooker.

2. To lay any thing open diſtinctly, and by minute parts.

I ſpeak but brotherly of him, but ſhould I anatomize him to thee as he is, I muſt bluſh and weep, and then muſt look pale and wonder. Shakeſp.

Then dark diſtinctions reaſon's light diſguis'd,
And into atoms truth anatomiz'd. Denham.

ANA'TOMY, ån-åt'-tô-mý. n. ſ. [ἀνατομία.]

1. The art of diſſecting the body.

It is proverbially ſaid, Formicæ ſua bilis ineſt, habet et muſca ſplenem; whereas theſe parts anatomy hath not diſcovered in inſects. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

It is therefore in the anatomy of the mind, as in that of the body; more good will accrue to mankind, by attending to the large, open, and perceptible parts, than by ſtudying too much ſuch finer nerves and veſſels, as will for ever eſcape our obſervation. Pope.

2. The doctrine of the ſtructure of the body, learned by diſſection.

Let the muſcles be well inſerted and bound together, according to the knowledge of them which is given us by anatomy. Dryden.

The act of dividing any thing, whether corporeal or intellectual.

When a moneyed man hath divided his cheſts, he ſeemeth to himſelf richer than he was; therefore, a way to amplify any thing, is to break it, and to make anatomy of it in ſeveral parts. Bacon.

4. The body ſtripped of its integuments; a ſkeleton.

O that my tongue were in the thunder's mouth,
Then with a paſſion I would ſhake the world,
And rouze from ſleep that fell anatomy,
Which cannot hear a feeble lady's voice. Shakeſp.

5. By way of irony or ridicule, a thin meagre perſon.

They brought one Pinch, a hungry lean-fac'd villain,
A mere anatomy, a mountebank,
A thread-bare juggler, and a fortune-teller,
A needy, hollow-ey'd, ſharp looking wretch,
A living dead man. Shakeſp. Comedy of Errours.

A'NATRON, ån'-nå-trůn. n. ſ. The ſcum which ſwims upon the molten glaſs in the furnace, which, when taken off, melts in the air, and then coagulates into common ſalt. It is likewiſe that ſalt which gathers upon the walls of vaults.

A'NBURY, ån'-bů-rŷ. n. ſ. See AMBURY.

A'NCESTOR, ån'-ſės-tůr. n. ſ. [anceſtor, Lat. anceſtre, Fr.] One from whom a perſon deſcends, either by the father or the mother. It is diſtinguiſhed from predeceſſor; which is not, like anceſtor, a natural, but civil denomination. An hereditary monarch ſucceeds to his anceſtors; an elective, to his predeceſſors.

And ſhe lies buried with her anceſtors,
O, in a tomb where never ſcandal ſlept,
Save this of her's. Shakeſp. Much ado about Noth.

Cham was the paternal anceſtor of Ninus, the father of Chus, the grandfather of Nimrod; whoſe ſon was Belus, the father of Ninus. Raleigh.

Obſcure! why pr'ythee what am I? I know
My father, grandſire, and great grandſire too:
If farther I derive my pedigree,
I can but gueſs beyond the fourth degree.
The reſt of my forgotten anceſtors
Were ſons of earth, like him, or ſons of whores. Dryden.

A'NCESTREL, ån'-ſės-trėl. adj. [from anceſtor.] Claimed from anceſtors; relating to anceſtors: a term of law.

Limitation in actions anceſtrel, was anciently ſo here in England. Hale.

A'NCESTRY, ån'-ſės-trŷ. n. ſ. [from anceſtor.]

1. Lineage; a ſeries of anceſtors, or progenitors; the perſons who compoſe the lineage.

Phedon I hight, quoth he; and do advance
Mine anceſtry from famous Coradin,
Who firſt to raiſe our houſe to honour did begin. Spenſer.

A tenacious adherence to the rights and liberties tranſmitted from a wiſe and virtuous anceſtry, publick ſpirit, and a love of one's country, are the ſupport and ornaments of government. Addiſon.

Say from what ſcepter'd anceſtry ye claim,
Recorded eminent in deathleſs fame? Pope.

The honour of deſcent; birth.

Title and anceſtry render a good man more illuſtrious, but an ill one more contemptible. Addiſon.

A'NCHENTRY, å'n-ſhėnt-trŷ. n. ſ. [from ancient, and therefore properly to be written ancientry.] Antiquity of a family; ancient dignity; appearance or proof of antiquity.

Wooing, wedding, and repenting, is a Scotch jig, a meaſure, and a cinque pace; the firſt ſuit is hot and haſty, like a Scotch jig, and full as fantaſtical; the wedding mannerly modeſt, as a meaſure full of ſtate and anchentry; and then comes repentance, and with his bad legs falls into the cinque pace faſter and faſter, till he ſinks into his grave. Shakeſpeare.

A'NCHOR, ånk'-ůr. n. ſ. [anchora, Lat.]

1. A heavy iron, compoſed of a long ſhank, having a ring at one end to which the cable is faſtened, and at the other branching out into two arms or flooks, tending upwards, with barbs or edges on each ſide. Its uſe is to hold the ſhip, by being fixed to the ground.

He ſaid, and wept: then ſpread his ſails before
The winds, and reach'd at length the Cuman ſhore:
Their anchors dropt, his crew the veſſels moor. Dryden.

2. It is uſed, by a metaphor, for any thing which confers ſtability or ſecurity.

Which hope we have as an anchor of the ſoul, both ſure and ſtedfaſt, and which entereth into that within the veil. Hebrews.

3. The forms of ſpeech in which it is moſt commonly uſed, are, to caſt anchor, to lie or ride at anchor.

The Turkiſh general, perceiving that the Rhodians would not be drawn forth to battle at ſea, withdrew his fleet, when caſting anchor, and landing his men, he burnt the corn. Knolles's Hiſtory of the Turks.

Ent'ring with the tide,
He dropp'd his anchors, and his oars he ply'd;
Furl'd every ſail, and drawing down the maſt,
His veſſel moor'd, and made with haulſers faſt. Dryden.

Far from your capital my ſhip reſides
At Reithrus, and ſecure at anchor rides. Pope.

To A'NCHOR, ånk'-ůr. v. n. [from anchor.]

1. To caſt anchor; to lie at anchor.

The fiſhermen that walk upon the beach
Appear like mice; and yon tall anchoring bark Diminiſh'd to her cock. Shakeſp. King Lear.

Near Calais the Spaniards anchored, expecting their land-forces, which came not. Bacon.

Or the ſtrait courſe to rocky Chios plow,
And anchor under Mimos' ſhaggy brow. Pope.

2. To ſtop at; to reſt on.

My intention, hearing not my tongue,
Anchors on Iſabel. Shakeſpeare.

To A'NCHOR, ånk'-ůr. v. a.

1. To place at anchor; as, he anchored his ſhip.

2. To fix on.

My tongue ſhould to my ears not name my boys,
Till that my nails were anchor'd in thine eyes. Shakeſpeare.

A'NCHOR, ånk'-ůr. n. ſ. Shakeſpeare ſeems to have uſed this word for anchoret, or an abſtemious recluſe perſon.

To deſperation turn my truſt and hope!
An anchor's cheer in priſon be my ſcope! Shakeſpeare.

A'NCHOR-HOLD, ånk'-ůr-hǒld. n. ſ. [from anchor and hold.] The hold or faſtneſs of the anchor; and, figuratively, ſecurity.

The old Engliſh could expreſs moſt aptly all the conceits of the mind in their own tongue, without borrowing from any; as for example: the holy ſervice of God, which the Latins called religion, becauſe it knitted the minds of men together, and moſt people of Europe have borrowed the ſame from them, they called moſt ſignificantly ean-faſtneſs, as the one and only aſſurance and faſt anchor-hold of our ſouls health. Camden.

A'NCHOR-SMITH, ånk'-ůr-ſmith. n. ſ. [from anchor and ſmith.] The maker or forger of anchors.

Smithing comprehends all trades which uſe either forge or file, from the anchor-ſmith to the watchmaker; they all working by the ſame rules, though not with equal exactneſs; and all uſing the ſame tools, though of ſeveral ſizes. Moxon.

A'NCHORAGE, ånk'-ůr-åje. n. ſ. [from anchor.]

1. The hold of the anchor.

Let me reſolve whether there be indeed ſuch efficacy in nurture and firſt production; for if that ſuppoſal ſhould fail us, all our anchorage were looſe, and we ſhould but wander in a wild ſea. Wotton.

2. The ſet of anchors belonging to a ſhip.

The bark that hath diſcharg'd her freight,
Returns with precious lading to the bay,
From whence at firſt ſhe weigh'd her anchorage. Shakeſpeare.

3. The duty paid for the liberty of anchoring in a port.

A'NCHORED, ånk'-ůr-rėd. particip. adj. [from To anchor.] Held by the anchor.

Like a well-twiſted cable, holding faſt
The anchor'd veſſel in the loudeſt blaſt. Waller.

A'NCHORET, ånk'-ǒ-rėt. } n. ſ. [contracted
A'NCHORITE, ånk'-ǒ-rīte. } from anachoret, ἀναχωρήτης.] A recluſe; a hermit; one that retires to the more ſevere duties of religion.

His poetry indeed he took along with him; but he made that an anchorite as well as himſelf. Sprat.

You deſcribe ſo well your hermitical ſtate of life, that none of the ancient anchorites could go beyond you, for a cave in a rock, with a fine ſpring, or any of the accommodations that befit a ſolitary life. Pope.

ANCHO'VY, ån-tſhǒ'-vŷ. n. ſ. [from anchova, Span. or anchioe, Ital. of the ſame ſignification.] A little ſea-fiſh, much uſed by way of ſauce, or ſeaſoning. Savary.

We invent new ſauces and pickles, which reſemble the animal ferment in taſte and virtue, as the ſalſo-acid gravies of meat; the ſalt pickles of fiſh, anchovies, oyſters. Floyer.

A'NCIENT, å'n-ſhėnt. adj. [ancien, Fr. antiquus, Lat.]

1. Old; that happened long ſince; of old time; not modern. Ancient and old are diſtinguiſhed; old relates to the duration of the thing itſelf, as, an old coat, a coat much worn; and ancient, to time in general, as, an ancient dreſs, a habit uſed in former times. But this is not always obſerved, for we mention old cuſtoms; but though old be ſometimes oppoſed to modern, ancient is ſeldom oppoſed to new, but when new means modern.

Ancient tenure is that whereby all the manours belonging to the crown, in St. Edward's or William the Conquerour's days, did hold. The number and names of which manours, as all others belonging to common perſons, he cauſed to be written in a book, after a ſurvey made of them, now remaining in the Exchequer, and called Doomſday Book; and ſuch as by that book appeared to have belonged to the crown at that time, are called ancient demeſnes. Cowell.

2. Old; that has been of long duration.

With the ancient is wiſdom, and in length of days underſtanding. Job, xii. 12.

Thales affirms, that God comprehended all things, and that God was of all things the moſt ancient, becauſe he never had any beginning. Raleigh.

Induſtry
Gave the tall ancient foreſt to his axe. Thomſon.

3. Paſt; former.

I ſee thy fury: if I longer ſtay,
We ſhall begin our ancient bickerings. Shakeſp.

A'NCIENT, a'n-shent. n. ſ. [from ancient, adj.]

1. Thoſe that lived in old time were called ancients, oppoſed to the moderns.

And though the ancients thus their rules invade,
As kings diſpenſe with laws themſelves have made;
Moderns, beware! or if you muſt offend
Againſt the precept, ne'er tranſgreſs its end. Pope.

2. Senior: not in uſe.

He toucheth it as a ſpecial pre-eminence of Junias and Andronicus, that in Chriſtianity they were his ancients. Hooker.

A'NCIENT, a'n-shent. n. ſ.

1. The flag or ſtreamer of a ſhip, and, formerly, of a regiment.

2. The bearer of a flag, as was Ancient Piſtol; whence, in preſent uſe, enſign.

This is Othello's ancient, as I take it.—
The ſame indeed, a very valiant fellow. Shakeſp.

A'NCIENTLY, a'n-shent-ly. adv. [from ancient.] In old times.

Trebiſond anciently pertained unto this crown; now unjuſtly poſſeſſed, and as unjuſtly abuſed, by thoſe who have neither title to hold it, nor virtue to rule it. Sidney.

The colewort is not an enemy, though that were anciently received, to the vine only, but to any other plant, becauſe it draweth ſtrongly the fatteſt juice of the earth. Bacon.

A'NCIENTNESS, a'n-shent-ness. n. ſ. [from ancient.] Antiquity; exiſtence from old times.

The Feſcenine and Saturnian were the ſame; they were called Saturnian from their ancientneſs, when Saturn reigned in Italy. Dryden.

A'NCIENTRY, a'n-shent-try. n. ſ. [from ancient.] The honour of ancient lineage; the dignity of birth.

Of all nations under heaven, the Spaniard is the moſt mingled, and moſt uncertain. Wherefore, moſt fooliſhly do the Iriſh think to ennoble themſelves, by wreſting their ancientry from the Spaniard, who is unable to derive himſelf from any in certain. Spenſer on Ireland.

There is nothing in the between, but getting wenches with child, wronging the ancientry, ſtealing, fighting. Shakeſpeare.

ANCLE, ankl. See ANKLE.

A'NCONY, an-ko'-ny. n. ſ. [in the iron mills.] A bloom wrought into the figure of a flat iron bar, about three foot long, with two ſquare rough knobs, one at each end. Chambers.

AND, and'. conjunction.

1. The particle by which ſentences or terms are joined, which it is not eaſy to explain by any ſynonimous word.

Sure his honeſty
Got him ſmall gains, but ſhameleſs flattery
And filthy beverage, and unſeemly thift,
And borrow baſe, and ſome good lady's gift. Spenſer.

What ſhall I do to be for ever known,
And make the age to come my own? Cowley.

The Danes unconquer'd offspring march behind;
And Morini, the laſt of human kind. Dryden.

It ſhall ever be my ſtudy to make diſcoveries of this nature in human life, and to ſettle the proper diſtinctions between the virtues and perfections of mankind, and thoſe falſe colours and reſemblances of them that ſhine alike in the eyes of the vulgar. Addiſon.

2. And ſometimes ſignifies though, and ſeems a contraction of and if.

It is the nature of extreme ſelf-lovers, as they will ſet an houſe on fire, and it were but to roaſt their eggs. Bacon.

3. In and if, the and is redundant, and is omitted by all later writers.

I pray thee, Launce, an' If thou ſeeſt my boy,
Bid him make haſte. Shakeſp. Two Gent. of Verona.

A'NDIRON, and'-i-run. n. ſ. [ſuppoſed by Skinner to be corrupted from hand-iron; an iron that may be moved by the hand, or may ſupply the place of a hand.] Irons at the end of a fire-grate, in which the ſpit turns; or irons in which wood is laid to burn.

If you ſtrike an entire body, as an andiron of braſs, at the top, it maketh a more treble ſound, and at the bottom a baſer. Bacon.

ANDRO'GYNAL, an-drog'-y-nal. adj. [from ἀνὴρ and γυνὴ.] Having two ſexes; hermaphroditical.

ANDRO'GYNALLY, an-drog'-y-nal-ly. adv. [from androgynal.] In the form of hermaphrodites; with two ſexes.

The examples hereof have undergone no real or new tranſexion, but were androgynally born, and under ſome kind of hermaphrodites. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

ANDRO'GYNOUS, an-drog-y-nus. adj. The ſame with androgynal.

ANDRO'GYNUS, an-drog-y-nus. n. ſ. [See ANDROGYNAL.] An hermaphrodite; one that is of both ſexes.

ANDRO'TOMY, an-drot-to-my. n. ſ. [from ἀνὴρ and τέμνω.] The practice of cutting human bodies. Dict.

A'NECDOTE, an'-ek-dote. n. ſ. [ἀνέκδοτον.]

1. Something yet unpubliſhed; ſecret hiſtory.

Some modern anecdotes aver,
He nodded in his elbow chair. Prior.

2. It is now uſed, after the French, for a biographical incident; a minute paſſage of private life.

ANEMO'GRAPHY, an-e-mog'-gra-fy. n. ſ. [ἄνεμος and γράφω.] The deſcription of the winds.

ANEMO'METER, an-e-mom'-me-ter. n. ſ. [ἄνεμος and μέτρον.] An inſtrument contrived to meaſure the ſtrength or velocity of the wind.

ANE'MONE, an-em'-o-ne. n. ſ. [ἀνεμώνη.] The wind flower.

Upon the top of its ſingle ſtalk, ſurrounded by a leaf, is produced one naked flower, of many petals, with many ſtamina in the centre; the ſeeds are collected into an oblong head, and ſurrounded with a copious down. The principal colours in anemonies, are white, red, blue, and purple, ſometimes curiouſly intermixed. Miller.

Wind-flowers are diſtinguiſhed into thoſe with broad and hard leaves, and thoſe with narrow and ſoft ones. The broad-leaved anemony roots ſhould be planted about the end of September. Theſe with ſmall leaves muſt not be put into the ground till the end of October. Mortimer.

From the ſoft wing of vernal breezes ſhed,
Anemonies, auriculas, enrich'd
With ſhining meal o'er all their velvet leaves. Thomſon.

A'NEMOSCOPE, an"-e-mos-ko'pe. n. ſ. [ἄνεμος and σκοπός.] A machine invented to foretel the changes of the wind. It has been obſerved, that hygroſcopes made of cat's gut proved very good anemoſcopes, ſeldom failing, by the turning the index about, to foretel the ſhifting of the wind. Chambers.

ANE'NT, a-nent'. prep. A word uſed in the Scotch dialect.

1. Concerning; about; as, he ſaid nothing anent this particular.

2. Over againſt; oppoſite to; as, he lives anent the market-houſe.

ANES, ans. } n. ſ. The ſpires or beards of AWNS, ans. } corn. Dict.

A'NEURISM, an'-u-rizm. n. ſ. [ἀνεύρυσμα.] A diſeaſe of the arteries, in which, either by a preternatural weakneſs of any part of them, they become exceſſively dilated; or, by a wound through their coats, the blood is extravaſated amongſt the adjacent cavities. Sharp.

In the orifice, there was a throbbing of the arterial blood, as in an aneuriſm. Wiſeman.

ANE'W, a-nu'. adv. [from a and new.]

1. Over again; another time; repeatedly. This is the moſt common uſe.

Nor, if at miſchief taken, on the ground
Be ſlain, but pris'ners to the pillars bound,
At either barrier plac'd; nor, captives made,
Be freed, or, arm'd anew, the fight invade. Dryden.

That, as in birth, in beauty you excel,
The muſe might dictate, and the poet tell:
Your art no other art can ſpeak; and you,
To ſhow how well you play, muſt play anew. Prior.

The miſeries of the civil war did, for many years, deter the inhabitants of our iſland from the thoughts of engaging anew in ſuch deſperate undertakings. Addiſon.

2. Newly; in a new manner.

He who begins late, is obliged to form anew the whole diſpoſition of his ſoul, to acquire new habits of life, to practiſe duties to which he is utterly a ſtranger. Rogers.

ANFRA'CTUOSE, an-frak'-tu-ose. } adj. [from ANFRA'CTUOUS, an-frak'-tu-us. } anfractus, Lat.] Winding; mazy; full of turnings and winding paſſages.

Behind the drum are ſeveral vaults and anfractuoſe cavities in the ear-bone, ſo to intend the leaſt ſound imaginable, that the ſenſe might be affected with it; as we ſee in ſubterraneous caves and vaults, how the ſound is redoubled. Ray.

ANFRA'CTUOUSNESS, an-frak'-tsho-us-ness. n. ſ. [from anfractuous.] Fulneſs of windings and turnings.

ANFRA'CTURE, an-frak'-tshur. n. ſ. [from anfractus, Lat.] A turning; a mazy winding and turning. Dict.

A'NGEL, a'n-jel. n. ſ. [ἄγγελος; angelus, Lat.]

1. Originally a meſſenger. A ſpirit employed by God in the adminiſtration of human affairs.

Some holy angel
Fly to the court of England, and unfold
His meſſage ere he come. Shakeſpeare.

Had we ſuch a knowledge of the conſtitution of man, as it is poſſible angels have, and it is certain his Maker has; we ſhould have a quite other idea of his eſſence. Locke.

2. Angel is ſometimes uſed in a bad ſenſe; as, angels of darkneſs.

And they had a king over them, which was the angel of the bottomleſs pit. Revelation.

3. Angel, in ſcripture, ſometimes means man of God, prophet.

4. Angel is uſed, in the ſtyle of love, for a beautiful perſon.

Thou haſt the ſweeteſt face I ever look'd on.
Sir, as I have a ſoul, ſhe is an angel. Shakeſp.

5. A piece of money anciently coined and impreſſed with an angel, in memory of an obſervation of Pope Gregory, that the pagan Angli, or Engliſh, were ſo beautiful, that, if they were Chriſtians, they would be Angeli, or angels. The coin was rated at ten ſhillings.

Take an empty-baſon, put an angel of gold, or what you will, into it; then go ſo far from the baſon, till you cannot ſee the angel, becauſe it is not in a right line; then fill the baſon with water, and you will ſee it out of its place, becauſe of the reflection. Bacon.

Shake the bags
Of hoarding abbots; their impriſon'd angels
Set thou at liberty. Shakeſpeare.

A'NGEL, å'n-jěl. adj. Reſembling angels; angelical.

I have mark'd
A thouſand bluſhing apparitions
Start into her face; a thouſand innocent ſhames
In angel whiteneſs bear away thoſe bluſhes. Shakeſpeare.

Or virgins viſited by angel powers,
With golden crowns, and wreathes of heav'nly flow'rs. Pope's Rape of the Lock.

A'NGEL-LIKE, å'n-jěl-lī'ke. adj. [from angel and like.] Reſembling an angel.

In heav'n itſelf thou ſure wert dreſt
With that angel-like diſguiſe. Waller.

A'NGEL-SHOT, å'n-jěl-ſhŏt. n. ſ. [perhaps properly angle-ſhot, being folden together with a hinge.] Chain-ſhot, being a cannon bullet cut in two, and the halves being joined together by a chain. Dict.

ANGE'LICA, å'n-jěl-ȳ-kå. n. ſ. [Lat. ab angelica virtute.] The name of a plant.

It has winged leaves divided into large ſegments; its ſtalks are hollow and jointed; the flowers grow in an umbel upon the tops of the ſtalks, and conſiſt of five leaves, ſucceeded by two large channelled ſeeds.

The ſpecies are, 1. Common or manured angelica. 2. Greater wild angelica. 3. Shining Canada angelica. 4. Mountain perennial angelica, with columbine leaves. Miller.

ANGE'LICA, å'n-jěl-ȳ-kå. n. ſ. (Berry bearing) [Aralia, Lat.]

The flower conſiſts of many leaves, expanding in form of a roſe, which are naked, growing on the top of the ovary: theſe flowers are ſucceeded by globular fruits, which are ſoft and ſucculent, and full of oblong ſeeds. Miller.

ANGE'LICAL, å'n-jěl-ȳ-kål. adj. [angelicus, Lat.]

1. Reſembling angels.

It diſcovereth unto us the glorious works of God, and carrieth up, with an angelical ſwiftneſs, our eyes, that our mind, being informed of his viſible marvels, may continually travel upward. Raleigh.

2. Partaking of the nature of angels.

Others more mild,
Retreated in a ſilent valley, ſing
With notes angelical to many a harp
Their own heroick deeds, and hapleſs fall
By doom of battle. Milton.

3. Belonging to angels; ſuiting the nature or dignity of angels.

It may be encouragement to conſider the pleaſure of ſpeculations, which do raviſh and ſublime the thoughts with more clear angelical contentments. Wilkins's Dædalus.

ANGE'LICALNESS, å'n-jěl-ȳ-kål-něs. n. ſ. [from angelical.] The quality of being angelical; reſemblance of angels; excellence more than human.

ANGE'LICK, ån-jěl'-lĭk. adj. [angelicus, Lat.] Partaking of the nature of angels; angelical; above human.

Here happy creature, fair angelick Eve,
Partake thou alſo. Milton.

My fancy form'd thee of angelick kind,
Some emanation of th' all-beauteous mind. Pope.

A'NGELOT, ån'-jē-lŏt. n. ſ. A muſical inſtrument ſomewhat reſembling a lute. Dict.

A'NGER, ång'-gůr. n. ſ. [A word of no certain etymology, but, with moſt probability, derived by Skinner, from ange, Sax. vexed; which, however, ſeems to come originally from the Latin ango.]

1. Anger is uneaſineſs or diſcompoſure of the mind, upon the receipt of any injury, with a preſent purpoſe of revenge. Locke.

Anger is like
A full hot horſe, who being allow'd his way,
Self-mettle tires him. Shakeſpeare.

Was the Lord diſpleaſed againſt the rivers? was thine anger againſt the rivers, was thy wrath againſt the ſea, that thou didſt ride upon thine horſes and thy chariots of ſalvation? Habb. iii. 8.

Anger is, according to ſome, a tranſient hatred, or at leaſt very like it. South.

2. Pain, or ſmart, of a ſore or ſwelling. In this ſenſe it ſeems plainly deducible from angor.

I made the experiment, ſetting the moxa where the firſt violence of my pain began, and where the greateſt anger and ſoreneſs ſtill continued, notwithſtanding the ſwelling of my foot. Temple.

To A'NGER, ång'-gůr. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To make angry; to provoke; to enrage.

Who would anger the meaneſt artiſan, which carrieth a good mind? Hooker.

Sometimes he angers me,
With telling me of the moldwarp and the ant. Shakeſpeare.

There were ſome late taxes and impoſitions introduced, which rather angered than grieved the people. Clarendon.

It anger'd Turenne, once upon a day,
To ſee a footman kick'd that took his pay. Pope.

2. To make painful.

He turneth the humours back, and maketh the wound bleed inwards, and angereth malign ulcers and pernicious impoſthumations. Bacon.

A'NGERLY, ång'-gůr-lȳ. adv. [from anger.] In an angry manner; like one offended: it is now written angrily.

Why, how now, Hecat? you look angerly. Shakeſpeare.

Such jeſters diſhoneſt indiſcretion, is rather charitably to be pitied, than their exception either angerly to be grieved at, or ſeriouſly to be confuted. Carew.

ANGIO'GRAPHY, ång-gȳ-ŏg'-grå-fȳ. n. ſ. [from ἀγγεῖον and γράφω.] A deſcription of veſſels in the human body; nerves, veins, arteries, and lymphaticks.

ANGIO'LOGY, ång-gȳ-ŏl'-ŏ-jȳ. n. ſ. [from ἀγγεῖον and λόγος.] A treatiſe or diſcourſe of the veſſels of a human body.

ANGIOMONOSPE'RMOUS, ång-gȳ-ŏ-mŏ-nŏ-spěr'-můs. adj. [from αγγεῖον, μόνος, and σπέρμα.] Such plants as have but one ſingle ſeed in the ſeed-pod.

ANGIO'TOMY, ång-gȳ-ŏt'-tŏ-mȳ. n. ſ. [from αγγεῖον, and τέμνω to cut.] A cutting open of the veſſels, as in the opening of a vein or artery.

A'NGLE, ång'l. n. ſ. [angle, Fr. angulus, Lat.] The ſpace intercepted between two lines interſecting or meeting, ſo as, if continued, they would interſect each other.

Angle of the centre of a circle, is an angle whoſe vertex, or angular point, is at the centre of a circle, and whoſe legs are two ſemidiameters of that circle. Stone's Dict.

A'NGLE, ång'l. n. ſ. [angel, Germ. and Dutch.] An inſtrument to take fiſh, conſiſting of a rod, a line, and a hook.

She alſo had an angle in her hand; but the taker was ſo taken, that ſhe had forgotten taking. Sidney.

Give me thine angle, we'll to the river there,
My muſick playing far off, I will betray
Tawny-finn'd fiſh; my bending hook ſhall pierce
Their ſlimy jaws. Shakeſpeare.

The patient fiſher takes his ſilent ſtand,
Intent, his angle trembling in his hand;
With looks unmov'd, he hopes the ſcaly breed,
And eyes the dancing cork and bending reed. Pope.

To A'NGLE, ång'l. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To fiſh with a rod and hook.

The ladies angling in the cryſtal lake,
Feaſt on the waters with the prey they take. Waller.

2. To try to gain by ſome inſinuating artifices, as fiſhes are caught by a bait.

If he ſpake courteouſly, he angled the people's hearts: if he were ſilent, he muſed upon ſome dangerous plot. Sidney.

By this face,
This ſeeming brow of juſtice, did he win
The hearts of all that he did angle for. Shakeſp.

The pleaſant'ſt angling is to ſee the fiſh
Cut with her golden oars the ſilver ſtream,
And greedily devour the treacherous bait;
So angle we for Beatrice. Shakeſpeare.

A'NGLE ROD, ång'l-rŏd. n. ſ. [angel roede, Dutch.] The ſtick to which the line and hook are hung.

It differeth much in greatneſs; the ſmalleſt being fit for thatching of houſes; the ſecond bigneſs is uſed for angle-rods; and, in China, for beating of offenders upon the thighs. Bacon.

He makes a May-fly to a miracle, and furniſhes the whole country with angle-rods. Addiſon.

A'NGLER, ång'-glůr. n. ſ. [from angle.] He that fiſhes with an angle.

He, like a patient angler, ere he ſtrook,
Would let them play a while upon the hook. Dryden.

Neither do birds alone, but many ſorts of fiſhes, feed upon inſects; as is well known to anglers, who bait their hooks with them. Ray.

A'NGLICISM, ång'-glȳ-sĭzm. n. ſ. [from Anglus, Lat.] A form of ſpeech peculiar to the Engliſh language; an Engliſh idiom.

They corrupt their ſtile with untutored angliciſms. Milton.

A'NGOBER, ång'-gŏ-běr. n. ſ. A kind of pear.

A'NGOUR, ång'-gůr. n. ſ. [angor, Lat.] Pain.

If the patient be ſurpriſed with a lipothymous angour, and great oppreſs about the ſtomach, expect no relief from cordials. Harvey.

A'NGRILY, ång'-grĭ-lȳ. adv. [from angry.] In an angry manner; furiouſly; peeviſhly.

I will ſit as quiet as a lamb;
I will not ſtir, nor wince, nor ſpeak a word,
Nor look upon the iron angrily. Shakeſpeare.

A'NGRY, ång'-grȳ. adj. [from anger.]

1. Touched with anger; provoked.

Oh let not the Lord be angry, and I will ſpeak: peradventure there ſhall be thirty found there. Gen. xviii. 30.

2. It ſeems properly to require, when the object of anger is mentioned, the particle at before a thing, and with before a perſon; but this is not always obſerved.

Your Coriolanus is not much miſſed, but with his friends: the commonwealth doth ſtand, and ſo would do, were he angry at it. Shakeſpeare.

Now therefore be not grieved, nor angry with yourſelves, that ye ſold me hither: for God did ſend me before you to preſerve life. Gen. xlv. 5.

I think it a vaſt pleaſure, that whenever two people of merit regard one another, ſo many ſcoundrels envy and are angry at them. Swift.

3. Having the appearance of anger; having the effect of anger.

The north wind driveth away rain: ſo doth an angry countenance a backbiting tongue. Prov. xxv. 23.

4. In chirurgery, painful; inflamed; ſmarting.

This ſerum, being accompanied by the thinner parts of the blood, grows red and angry; and, wanting its due regreſs into the maſs, firſt gathers into a hard ſwelling, and, in a few days, ripens into matter, and ſo diſchargeth. Wiſeman.

A'NGUISH, ång′-gwîſh. n. ſ. [angoiſſe, Fr. angor, Lat.] Exceſſive pain either of mind or body; applied to the mind, it means the pain of ſorrow, and is ſeldom uſed to ſignify other paſſions.

Not all ſo cheerful ſeemed ſhe of ſight,
As was her ſiſter; whether dread did dwell,
Or anguiſh, in her heart, is hard to tell.
Fairy Queen.

Virtue 's but anguiſh, when 'tis ſeveral,
By occaſion wak'd, and circumſtantial;
True virtue's ſoul 's always in all deeds all. Donne.

They had perſecutors, whoſe invention was as great as their cruelty. Wit and malice conſpired to find out ſuch deaths, and thoſe of ſuch incredible anguiſh, that only the manner of dying was the puniſhment, death itſelf the deliverance. South.

Perpetual anguiſh fills his anxious breaſt,
Not ſtopt by buſineſs, nor compos'd by reſt;
No muſick cheers him, nor no feaſt can pleaſe.
Dryden.

A'NGUISHED, ång′-gwîſh-êd. adj. [from anguiſh.] Seized with anguiſh; tortured; exceſſively pained: not in uſe.

Feel no touch
Of conſcience, but of fame, and be
Anguiſh'd, not that 'twas ſin, but that 'twas ſhe.
Donne.

A'NGULAR, ång′-gû-lår. adj. [from angle.]

1. Having angles or corners; cornered.

As for the figure of cryſtal, it is for the moſt part hexagonal, or ſix cornered, being built upon a confuſed matter, from whence, as it were from a root, angular figures ariſe, even as in the amethyſt and baſaltes. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

2. Conſiſting of an angle.

The diſtance of the edges of the knives from one another, at the diſtance of four inches from the angular point, where the edges of the knives meet, was the eighth part of an inch. Newton's Opticks.

ANGULA'RITY, ång-gû-lår-î-tŷ. n. ſ. [from angular.] The quality of being angular, or having corners.

A'NGULARLY, ång′-gû-lår-lŷ. adj. [from angular.] With angles or corners.

Another part of the ſame ſolution afforded us an ice angularly figured. Boyle.

A'NGULARNESS, ång′-gû-lår-nêſ. n. ſ. [from angular.] The quality of being angular.

A'NGULATED, ång′-gû-lå-têd. adj. [from angle.] Formed with angles or corners.

Topazes, amethyſts, or emeralds, which grow in the fiſſures, are ordinarily cryſtallized, or ſhot into angulated figures; whereas, in the ſtrata, they are found in rude lumps, like yellow, purple, and green pebbles. Woodward.

ANGULO'SITY, ång′-gû-lôs′-î-tŷ. n. ſ. [from angulous.] Angularity; cornered form. Dict.

A'NGULOUS, ång′-gû-lûs. adj. [from angle.] Hooked; angular.

Nor can it be a difference, that the parts of ſolid bodies are held together by hooks, and angulous involutions; ſince the coherence of the parts of theſe will be of as difficult a conception. Glanville.

ANGU'ST, ån-gûſt′. adj. [anguſtus, Lat.] Narrow; ſtrait.

ANGUSTA'TION, ån-gûs-tå′-ſhûn. n. ſ. [from anguſtus.] The act of making narrow; ſtraitening; the ſtate of being narrowed.

The cauſe may be referred either to the grumouſneſs of the blood, or to obſtruction of the vein ſomewhere in its paſſage, by ſome anguſtation upon it by part of the tumour. Wiſeman.

ANHELA'TION, ån-hê-lå′-ſhûn. n. ſ. [anhelo, Lat.] The act of panting; the ſtate of being out of breath.

ANHELO'SE, ån-hê-lô′ſe. adj. [anhelus, Lat.] Out of breath; panting; labouring of being out of breath. Dict.

ANIE'NTED, ån′-ŷ-ên-têd. adj. [aneantir, Fr.] Fruſtrated; brought to nothing.

ANI'GHTS, å-nî′tes. adv. [from a for at, and night.] In the night time.

Sir Toby, you muſt come in earlier anights; my lady takes great exceptions at your ill hours. Shakeſpeare.

A'NIL, ån′-îl. n. ſ. The ſhrub from whoſe leaves and ſtalks indigo is prepared.

ANI'LENESS, å-nîle-nêſs. } n. ſ. [anilitas,
ANI'LITY, å-nîl′-lî-tŷ. } Lat.] The ſtate of being an old woman; the old age of women.

A'NIMABLE, ån′-ŷ-måbl. adj. [from animate.] That which may be put into life, or receive animation. Dict.

ANIMADVE'RSION, ån-ŷ-måd-vêr′-ſhûn. n. ſ. [animadverſio, Lat.]

1. Reproof; ſevere cenſure; blame.

He diſmiſſed their commiſſioners with ſevere and ſharp animadverſions. Clarendon.

2. Puniſhment. When the object of animadverſion is mentioned, it has the particle on or upon before it.

When a bill is debating in parliament, it is uſual to have the controverſy handled by pamphlets on both ſides; without the leaſt animadverſion upon the authors. Swift.

3. In law.

An eccleſiaſtical cenſure, and an eccleſiaſtical animadverſion, are different things; for a cenſure has a relation to a ſpiritual puniſhment, but an animadverſion has only a reſpect to a temporal one; as, degradation, and the delivering the perſon over to the ſecular court. Ayliffe's Parergon.

4. Perception; power of notice: not in uſe.

The ſoul is the ſole percipient which hath animadverſion and ſenſe, properly ſo called. Glanville.

ANIMADVE'RSIVE, ån-ŷ-måd-vêr′-ſîv. adj. [from animadvert.] That has the power of perceiving; percipient: not in uſe.

The repreſentation of objects to the ſoul, the only animadverſive principle, is conveyed by motions made on the immediate organs of ſenſe. Glanville.

ANIMADVE'RSIVENESS, ån-ŷ-måd-vêr′-ſîv-nês. n. ſ. [from animadverſive.] The power of animadverting, or making judgment. Dict.

To ANIMADVE'RT, ån-ŷ-måd-vêrt′. v. n. [animadverto, Lat.]

1. To paſs cenſures upon.

I ſhould not animadvert on him, who was a painful obſerver of the decorum of the ſtage, if he had not uſed extreme ſeverity in his judgment of the incomparable Shakeſpeare. Dryden.

2. To inflict puniſhments. In both ſenſes with the particle upon.

If the Author of the univerſe animadverts upon men here below, how much more will it become him to do it upon their entrance into a higher ſtate of being? Grew.

ANIMADVE'RTER, ån-ŷ-måd-vêr′-tûr. n. ſ. [from animadvert.] He that paſſes cenſures, or inflicts puniſhments.

God is a ſtrict obſerver of, and a ſevere animadverter upon, ſuch as preſume to partake of thoſe myſteries, without ſuch a preparation. South.

A'NIMAL, ån′-ŷ-mål. n. ſ. [animal, Lat.]

1. A living creature corporeal, diſtinct, on the one ſide, from pure ſpirit; on the other, from mere matter.

Animals are ſuch beings, which, beſides the power of growing, and producing their like, as plants and vegetables have, are endowed alſo with ſenſation and ſpontaneous motion. Mr. Ray gives two ſchemes of tables of them.

Animals are either

- Sanguineous, that is, ſuch as have blood, which breathe either by
  - Lungs, having either
    - Two ventricles in their heart, and thoſe either
      - Viviparous,
        - Aquatick, as the whale kind,
        - Terreſtrial, as quadrupeds;
      - Oviparous, as birds.
    - But one ventricle in the heart, as frogs, tortoiſes, and ſerpents.
  - Gills, as all ſanguineous fiſhes, except the whale kind.
- Exſanguineous, or without blood, which may be divided into
  - Greater, and thoſe either
    - Naked,
      - Terreſtrial, as naked ſnails.
      - Aquatick, as the poulp, cuttle-fiſh, &c.
    - Covered with a tegument, either
      - Cruſtaceous, as lobſters and crab-fiſh.
      - Teſtaceous, either
        - Univalve, as limpets;
        - Bivalve, as oyſters, muſcles, cockles;
        - Turbinate, as periwinkles, ſnails, &c.
  - Leſſer, as inſects of all ſorts.

Viviparous hairy animals, or quadrupeds, are either

- Hoofed, which are either
  - Whole-footed or hoofed, as the horſe and aſs;
  - Cloven-footed, having the hoof divided into
    - Two principal parts, called biſulca, either
      - Such as chew not the cud, as ſwine;
      - Ruminant, or ſuch as chew the cud; divided into
        - Such as have perpetual and hollow horns.
          - Beef-kind,
          - Sheep-kind,
          - Goat-kind.
        - Such as have ſolid, branched, and deciduous horns, as the deer-kind.
    - Four parts, or quadriſulca, as the rhinoceros and hippopotamus.
- Clawed or digitate, having the foot divided into
  - Two parts or toes, having two nails, as the camel-kind;
  - Many toes or claws; either
    - Undivided, as the elephant;
    - Divided, which have either
      - Broad nails, and an human ſhape, as apes;
      - Narrower, and more pointed nails, which, in reſpect of their teeth, are divided into ſuch as have

- Many foreteeth, or cutters, in each jaw;
  - The greater, which have
    - A ſhorter ſnout and rounder head, as the cat-kind;
    - A longer ſnout and head, as the dog-kind.
  - The leſſer, the vermin or weazel-kind.
- Only two large and remarkable foreteeth, all which are phytivorous, and are called the hare-kind.

Ray.

Vegetables are proper enough to repair animals, as being near of the ſame ſpecifick gravity with the animal juices, and as conſiſting of the ſame parts with animal ſubſtances, ſpirit, water, ſalt, oil, earth, all which are contained in the ſap they derive from the earth. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

Some of the animated ſubſtances have various organical or inſtrumental parts, fitted for a variety of motions from place to place, and a ſpring of life within themſelves, as beaſts, birds, fiſhes, and inſects; theſe are called animals. Other animated ſubſtances are called vegetables, which have within themſelves the principles of another ſort of life and growth, and of various productions of leaves and fruit, ſuch as we ſee in plants, herbs, and trees. Watts's Logick.

2. By way of contempt, we ſay of a ſtupid man, that he is a ſtupid animal.

A'nimal, ån'-ŷ-mål. adj. [animalis, Lat.]

1. That which belongs or relates to animals.

There are things in the world of ſpirits, wherein our ideas are very dark and confuſed; ſuch as their union with animal nature, the way of their acting on material beings, and their converſe with each other. Watts's Logick.

2. Animal functions, diſtinguiſhed from natural and vital, are the lower powers of the mind; as the will, memory, and imagination.

3. Animal life is oppoſed, on one ſide, to intellectual; and, on the other, to vegetable.

4. Animal is uſed in oppoſition to ſpiritual or rational; as, the animal nature.

Anima'lcule, ån-ŷ-mål'-kůle. n. ſ. [animalculum, Lat.] A ſmall animal; particularly thoſe, which are in their firſt and ſmalleſt ſtate.

We are to know, that they all come of the ſeed of animalcules of their own kind, that were before laid there. Ray.

Anima'lity, ån-ŷ-mål'-ĭ-tŷ. n. ſ. [from animal.] The ſtate of animal exiſtence.

The word animal, in the firſt propoſition, only ſignifies human animality. In the minor propoſition, the word animal, for the ſame reaſon, ſignifies the animality of a gooſe: thereby it becomes an ambiguous term, and unfit to build the concluſion upon. Watts.

To A'NIMATE, ån'-ŷ-måte. v. a. [animo. Lat.]

1. To quicken; to make alive; to give life to: as, the ſoul animates the body; man muſt have been animated by a higher power.

2. To give powers to; to heighten the powers or effect of any thing.

But none, ah! none can animate the lyre,
And the mute ſtrings with vocal ſouls inſpire:
Whether the learn'd Minerva be her theme,
Or chaſte Diana bathing in the ſtream;
None can record their heav'nly praiſe ſo well
As Helen, in whoſe eyes ten thouſand Cupids dwell. Dryden.

3. To encourage; to incite.

The more to animate the people, he ſtood on high, from whence he might be beſt heard, and cried unto them with a loud voice. Knolles.

He was animated to expect the papacy, by the prediction of a ſoothſayer, that one ſhould ſucceed Pope Leo, whoſe name ſhould be Adrian. Bacon.

A'nimate, ån'-ŷ-måte. adj. [from To animate.] Alive; poſſeſſing animal life.

All bodies have ſpirits and pneumatical parts within them; but the main differences, between animate and inanimate, are two: the firſt is, that the ſpirits of things animate are all contained within themſelves, and are branched in veins and ſecret canals, as blood is; and, in living creatures, the ſpirits have not only branches, but certain cells or ſeats, where the principal ſpirits do reſide, and whereunto the reſt do reſort: but the ſpirits in things inanimate are ſhut in, and cut off by the tangible parts, and are not pervious one to another, as air is in ſnow. Bacon.

Nobler birth
Of creatures animate with gradual life,
Of growth, ſenſe, reaſon, all ſumm'd up in man. Milton.

There are ſeveral topicks uſed againſt atheiſm and idolatry; ſuch as the viſible marks of divine wiſdom and goodneſs in the works of the creation, the vital union of ſouls with matter, and the admirable ſtructure of animate bodies. Bentley.

A'nimated, ån'-ŷ-må-tėd. participial adj. [from animate.] Lively; vigorous.

Warriours ſhe fires with animated ſounds;
Pours balm into the bleeding lover's wounds. Pope.

A'nimateness, ån'-ŷ-måte-nės. n. ſ. [from animate.] The ſtate of being animated. Dict.

Anima'tion, ån-ŷ-må'-ſhůn. n. ſ. [from animate.]

1. The act of animating or enlivening.

Plants or vegetables are the principal part of the third day's work. They are the firſt effects of the command producat, which is the word of animation. Bacon.

2. The ſtate of being enlivened.

Two general motions in all animation are its beginning and encreaſe; and two more, to run through its ſtate and declination. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

A'nimative, ån'-ŷ-må-tĭv. adj. [from animate.] That which has the power of giving life, or animating.

Anima'tor, ån'-ŷ-må-tůr. n. ſ. [from animate.] That which gives life; or any thing analogous to life, as motion.

Thoſe bodies, being of a congenerous nature, do readily receive the impreſſions of their motor; and, if not fettered by their gravity, conform themſelves to ſituations, wherein they beſt unite to their animator. Brown.

Animo'se, ån-ŷ-mô'ſe. adj. [animoſus, Lat.] Full of ſpirit; hot; vehement. Dict.

Animo'seness, ån-ŷ-mô'ſe-nės. n. ſ. [from animoſe.] Spirit; heat; vehemence of temper. Dict.

Animo'sity, ån-ŷ-mŏs'-sĭ-tŷ. n. ſ. [animoſitas, Lat.] Vehemence of hatred; paſſionate malignity. It implies rather a diſpoſition to break out into outrages, than the outrage itſelf.

They were ſure to bring paſſion, animoſity, and malice enough of their own, what evidence ſoever they had from others. Clarendon.

If there is not ſome method found out for allaying theſe heats and animoſities among the fair ſex, one does not know to what outrages they may proceed. Addiſon.

No religious ſect ever carried their averſions for each other to greater heights, than our ſtate parties have done; who, the more to inflame their paſſions, have mixed religious and civil animoſities together; borrowing one of their appellations from the church. Swift.

A'nise, ån'-nĭs. n. ſ. [aniſum, Lat.] A ſpecies of apium or parſley, with large ſweet-ſcented ſeeds. This plant is not worth propagating in England for uſe, becauſe the ſeeds can be had much better and cheaper from Italy. Miller.

Ye pay the tythe of mint, and aniſe, and cummin, and have omitted the weightier matters of the law, judgment, mercy, and faith: theſe ought ye to have done, and not to leave the other undone. Matt. xxiii. 23.

A'nker, ånk'-ůr. n. ſ. [ancker, Dutch.] A liquid meaſure chiefly uſed at Amſterdam. It is the fourth part of the awm, and contains two ſtekans: each ſtekan conſiſts of ſixteen mengles; the mengle being equal to two of our wine quarts. Chambers.

A'nkle, ånk'l. n. ſ. [ancleop, Sax; anckel, Dutch.] The joint which joins the foot to the leg.

One of his ankles was much ſwelled and ulcerated on the inſide, in ſeveral places. Wiſeman.

My ſimple ſyſtem ſhall ſuppoſe,
That Alma enters at the toes;
That then ſhe mounts by juſt degrees
Up to the ankles, legs, and knees. Prior.

A'nkle-bone, ånk'l-bône. n. ſ. [from ankle and bone.] The bone of the ankle.

The ſhin-bone, from the knee to the inſtep, is made by ſhadowing one half of the leg with a ſingle ſhadow; the ankle-bone will ſhew itſelf by a ſhadow given underneath, as the knee. Peacham.

A'nnalist, ån'-nå-lĭſt. n. ſ. [from annals.] A writer of annals.

Their own annaliſt has given the ſame title to that of Syrmium. Atterbury.

A'NNALS, ån'-nålz. n. ſ. without ſingular number. [annales, Lat.] Hiſtories digeſted in the exact order of time; narratives in which every event is recorded under its proper year.

Could you with patience hear, or I relate,
O nymph! the tedious annals of our fate;
Through ſuch a train of woes if I ſhould run,
The day would ſooner than the tale be done! Dryden.

We are aſſured, by many glorious examples in the annals of our religion, that every one, in the like circumſtances of diſtreſs, will not act and argue thus; but thus will every one be tempted to act. Rogers.

A'nnats, ån'-nåts. n. ſ. without ſingular. [annates, Lat.]

1. Firſt fruits; becauſe the rate of firſt fruits paid of ſpiritual livings, is after one year's profit. Cowell.

2. Maſſes ſaid in the Romiſh church for the ſpace of a year, or for any other time, either for the ſoul of a perſon deceaſed, or for the benefit of a perſon living. Ayliffe's Parergon.

To Anne'al, ån-nė'l. v. a. [ælan, to heat, Saxon.]

1. To heat glaſs, that the colours laid on it may be fixed.

But when thou doſt anneal in glaſs thy ſtory,
——————— then the light and glory
More rev'rend grows, and more doth win,
Which elſe ſhews wat'riſh, bleak, and thin. Herbert.

When you purpoſe to anneal, take a plate of iron made fit for the oven; or take a blue ſtone, which being made fit for the oven, lay it upon the croſs bars of iron. Peacham.

Which her own inward ſymmetry reveal'd,
And like a picture ſhone, in glaſs anneal'd. Dryd.

2. To heat glaſs after it is blown, that it may not break.

3. To heat any thing in ſuch a manner as to give it the true temper.

To ANNE'X, ån-nėks'. v. a. [annecto, annexum, Lat. annexer, Fr.]

1. To unite to at the end; as, he annexed a codicil to his will.

2. To unite, as a ſmaller thing to a greater; as, he annexed a province to his kingdom.

3. To unite à poſteriori; annexion always preſuppoſing ſomething: thus we may ſay, puniſhment is annexed to guilt, but not guilt to puniſhment.

Concerning fate or deſtiny, the opinions of thoſe learned men, that have written thereof, may be ſafely received, had they not thereunto annexed and faſtened an inevitable neceſſity, and made it more general and univerſally powerful than it is. Raleigh.

Nations will decline ſo low
From virtue, which is reaſon; that no wrong,
But juſtice, and ſome fatal curſe annex'd,
Deprives them of their outward liberty. Milton.

I mean not the authority, which is annexed to your office; I ſpeak of that only, which is inborn and inherent to your perſon. Dryden.

He cannot but love virtue wherever it is, and annex happineſs always to the exerciſe of it. Atterbury.

The temporal reward is annexed to the bare performance of the action, but the eternal to the obedience. Rogers.

Anne'x, ån-nėks'. n. ſ. [from To annex.] The thing annexed; additament.

Failing in his firſt attempt to be but like the higheſt in heaven, he hath obtained of men to be the ſame on earth, and hath accordingly aſſumed the annexes of divinity. Brown.

Annexa'tion, ån-nek-så′-ſhůn. n. ſ. [from annex.]

1. Conjunction; addition.

If we can return to that charity and peaceable mindedneſs, which Chriſt ſo vehemently recommends to us; we have his own promiſe, that the whole body will be full of light, Matth. vi. that all other chriſtian virtues will, by way of concomitance or annexation, attend them. Hammond.

2. Union; act or practice of adding or uniting.

How annexations of benefices firſt came into the church, whether by the prince's authority, or the pope's licence, is a very great diſpute. Ayliffe's Parergon.

Anne'xion, ån-nek′-ſhůn. n. ſ. [from annex.] The act of annexing; addition.

It is neceſſary to engage the fears of men, by the annexion of ſuch penalties, as will overbalance temporal pleaſure. Rogers.

Annex'ment, ån-neks′-ment. n. ſ. [from annex.]

1. The act of annexing.
2. The thing annexed.

When it falls,
Each ſmall annexment, petty conſequence,
Attends the boiſt'rous ruin. Shakeſpeare.

Anni'hilable, ån-nì′-hŷ-låbl. adj. [from annihilate.] That which may be reduced to nothing; that which may be put out of exiſtence.

To ANNI'HILATE, ån-nì′-hì-låte. v. a. [ad and nihilum, Lat.]

1. To reduce to nothing; to put out of exiſtence.

It is impoſſible for any body to be utterly annihilated; but that, as it was the work of the omnipotency of God to make ſomewhat of nothing, ſo it requireth the like omnipotency to turn ſomewhat into nothing. Bacon.

Thou taught'ſt me, by making me
Love her, who doth neglect both me and thee,
T' invent and practiſe this one way t' annihilate
all three. Donne.

He deſpaired of God's mercy; he, by a decollation of all hope, annihilated his mercy. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

Whoſe friendſhip can ſtand againſt aſſaults, ſtrong enough to annihilate the friendſhip of puny minds; ſuch an one has reached true conſtancy. South.

Some imagined, water ſufficient to a deluge was created; and, when the buſineſs was done, diſbanded and annihilated. Woodward.

2. To deſtroy, ſo as to make the thing otherwiſe than it was.

The flood hath altered, deformed, or rather annihilated, this place, ſo as no man can find any mark or memory thereof. Raleigh.

3. To annul; to deſtroy the agency of any thing.

There is no reaſon, that any one commonwealth ſhould annihilate that, whereupon the whole world has agreed. Hooker.

Annihila'tion, ån-nì-hŷ-lå′-ſhůn. n. ſ. [from annihilate.] The act of reducing to nothing. The ſtate of being reduced to nothing.

God hath his influence into the very eſſence of things, without which their utter annihilation could not chooſe but follow. Hooker.

That knowledge, which as ſpirits we obtain,
Is to be valued in the midſt of pain:
Annihilation were to loſe heav'n more:
We are not quite exil'd, where thought can ſoar. Dryden.

Annive'rsary, ån-nŷ-ver′-ſå-rŷ. n. ſ. [anniverſarius, Lat.]

1. A day celebrated as it returns in the courſe of the year.

For encouragement to follow the example of martyrs, the primitive chriſtians met at the places of their martyrdom, to praiſe God for them, and to obſerve the anniverſary of their ſufferings. Stillingfleet.

2. The act of celebration, or performance, in honour of the anniverſary day.

Donne had never ſeen Mrs. Drury, whom he has made immortal in his admirable anniverſaries. Dryden.

3. Anniverſary is an office in the Romiſh church, celebrated now only once a year, but which ought to be ſaid daily through the year, for the ſoul of the deceaſed. Ayliffe's Parergon.

Annive'rsary, ån-nŷ-ver′-ſå-rŷ. adj. [anniverſarius, Lat.] Returning with the revolution of the year; annual; yearly.

The heaven whirled about with admirable celerity, moſt conſtantly finiſhing its anniverſary viciſſitudes. Ray.

They deny giving any worſhip to a creature, as inconſiſtent with chriſtianity; but confeſs the honour and eſteem for the martyrs, which they expreſſed by keeping their anniverſary days, and recommending their example. Stillingfleet.

A'NNO DO'MINI, ån′-nô-dôm′-ŷ-nì. [Lat.] In the year of our Lord; as, anno domini, or A. D. 1751; that is, in the ſeventeen hundred and fifty-firſt year from the birth of our Saviour.

Annoi'sance, ån-nôy′-såns. n. ſ. [from annoy, but not now in uſe.]

It hath a double ſignification. Any hurt done either to a publick place, as highway, bridge, or common river; or to a private, by laying any thing that may breed infection, by encroaching, or ſuch like means. The writ that is brought upon this tranſgreſſion. See Nuisance, the word now uſed. Blount.

ANNOLIS, ån′-nô-lìs. n. ſ. An American animal, like a lizard.

Annota'tion, ån-nô-tå′-ſhůn. n. ſ. [annotatio, Lat.] Explications or remarks written upon books; notes.

It might appear very improper to publiſh annotations, without the text itſelf whereunto they relate. Boyle.

Annota'tor, ån′-nô-tå-tůr. n. ſ. [Lat.] A writer of notes, or annotations; a ſcholiaſt; a commentator.

I have not that reſpect for the annotators, which they generally meet with in the world. Felton on the Claſſicks.

To Anno'unce, ån-nou′nſe. v. a. [annoncer, Fr. annuncio, Lat.]

1. To publiſh; to proclaim.

Of the Meſſiah I have heard foretold
By all the prophets; of thy birth at length
Announc'd by Gabriel with the firſt I knew. Milt.

2. To pronounce; to declare by a judicial ſentence.

Thoſe, mighty Jove, mean time, thy glorious care,
Who model nations, publiſh laws, announce
Or life or death. Prior.

To ANNO'Y, ån-noy′. v. a. [annoyer, Fr.] To incommode; to vex; to teaze; to moleſt.

Woe to poor man; each outward thing annoys
him;
He heaps in inward grief, that moſt deſtroys him. Sidney.

Her joyous preſence and ſweet company
In full content he there did long enjoy;
Ne wicked envy, nor vile jealouſy,
His dear delights were able to annoy. Fairy Queen.

As one, who long in populous city pent,
Where houſes thick, and ſewers, annoy the air,
Forth iſſuing on a ſummer's morn to breathe
Among the pleaſant villages and farms
Adjoin'd, from each thing met conceives delight. Milton.

Inſects ſeldom uſe their offenſive weapons, unleſs provoked: let them but alone, and annoy them not. Ray.

Anno'y, ån-noy′. n. ſ. [from the verb.] Injury; moleſtation; trouble.

Sleep, Richmond, ſleep in peace, and wake in joy;
Good angels guard thee from the boar's annoy. Shakeſpeare.

All pain and joy is in their way;
The things we fear bring leſs annoy
Than fear, and hope brings greater joy;
But in themſelves they cannot ſtay. Donne.

What then remains, but, after paſt annoy,
To take the good viciſſitude of joy? Dryden.

Anno'yance, ån-noy′-ånſe. n. ſ. [from annoy.]

1. That which annoys; that which hurts.

A grain, a duſt, a gnat, a wand'ring hair,
Any annoyance in that precious ſenſe. Shakeſp.

Crows, ravens, rooks, and magpies, are great annoyances to corn. Mortimer.

2. The ſtate of being annoyed; or act of annoying.

The ſpit venom of their poiſoned hearts breaketh out to the annoyance of others. Hooker.

The greateſt annoyance and diſturbance of mankind has been from one of thoſe two things, force or fraud. South.

For the further annoyance and terrour of any beſieged place, they would throw into it dead bodies. Wilkins.

Anno'yer, ån-noy′-ůr. n. ſ. [from To annoy.] The perſon that annoys.

A'nnual, ån′-nů-ål. adj. [annuel, Fr. from annus, Lat.]

1. That which comes yearly.

Annual for me the grape, the roſe, renew
The juice nectareous, and the balmy dew. Pope.

2. That which is reckoned by the year.

The king's majeſty
Does purpoſe honour to you; to which
A thouſand pounds a-year, annual ſupport,
Out of his grace he adds. Shakeſp. Henry VIII.

3. That which laſts only a year.

The dying in the winter of the roots of plants that are annual, ſeemeth to be cauſed by the overexpence of the ſap; which being prevented, they will ſuperannuate, if they ſtand warm. Bacon.

Every tree may, in ſome ſenſe, be ſaid to be an annual plant; both leaf, flower, and fruit proceeding from the coat, that was ſuperinduced over the wood the laſt year. Ray.

A'nnually, ån′-nů-ål-lŷ. adv. [from annual.] Yearly; every year.

By two drachms, they thought it ſufficient to ſignify a heart; becauſe the heart at one year weigheth two drachms, that is, a quarter of an ounce; and, unto fifty years, annually encreaſeth the weight of one drachm. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

The whole ſtrength of a nation is the utmoſt, that a prince can raiſe annually from his ſubjects. Swift.

Annu'itant, ån-nů′-ŷ-tånt. n. ſ. [from annuity.] He that poſſeſſes or receives an annuity.

ANNU'ITY, ån-nů′-ŷ-tŷ. n. ſ. [annuité, Fr.]

1. A yearly rent to be paid for term of life or years. The differences between a rent and an annuity are, that every rent is going out of land; but an annuity charges only the granter, or his heirs, that have aſſets by deſcent. The ſecond difference is, that, for the recovery of an annuity, no action lies, but only the writ of annuity againſt the granter, his heirs, or ſucceſſors; but of a rent, the ſame actions lie as do of land. The third difference is, that an annuity is never taken for aſſets, becauſe it is no freehold in law; nor ſhall be put in execution upon a ſtatute merchant, ſtatute ſtaple, or elegit, as a rent may. Cowell.

2. A yearly allowance.

He was generally known to be the ſon of one earl, and brother to another; who ſupplied his expence, beyond what his annuity from his father would bear. Clarendon.

To Annu'l, ån-nůl'. v. a. [from nullus.]

1. To make void; to nullify; to abrogate; to aboliſh.

That, which gives force to the law, is the authority that enacts it; and, whoever deſtroys this authority, does in effect annul the law. Rogers.

2. To reduce to nothing; to obliterate.

Light, the pure work of God, to me's extinct,
And all her various objects of delight
Annull'd, which might in part my grief have eas'd. Milton.

A'nnular, ån'-nů-lår. adj. [from annulus, Lat.] In the form of a ring.

That they might not, in bending the arm or leg, riſe up, he has tied them to the bones by annular ligaments. Cheyne.

A'nnulary, ån'-nů-lå-rŷ. adj. [from annulus, Lat.] In the form of rings.

Becauſe continual reſpiration is neceſſary, the wind-pipe is made with annulary cartilages, that the ſides of it may not flag and fall together. Ray.

A'nnulet, ån'-nů-lět. n. ſ. [from annulus, Lat.]

1. A little ring.

2. [In heraldry.] A difference or mark of diſtinction, which the fifth brother of any family ought to bear in his coat of arms.

3. Annulets are alſo a part of the coat-armour of ſeveral families; they were anciently reputed a mark of nobility and juriſdiction, it being the cuſtom of prelates to receive their inveſtiture per baculum & annulum.

4. [In architecture.] The ſmall ſquare members, in the Dorick capital, under the quarter round, are called annulets.

5. Annulet is alſo uſed for a narrow flat moulding, common to other parts of the column; ſo called, becauſe it encompaſſes the column round. Chambers.

To ANNU'MERATE, ån-nů'-mė-råte. v. a. [annumero, Lat.] To add to a former number; to unite to ſomething before mentioned.

Annumera'tion, ån-nů-mė-rå'-ſhůn. n. ſ. [annumeratio, Lat.] Addition to a former number.

To ANNU'NCIATE, ån-nůn'-ſyåte. v. a. [annuncio, Lat.] To bring tidings; to relate ſomething that has fallen out: a word not in popular uſe.

Annuncia'tion-day, ån-nůn-ſyå'-ſhůn-då. n. ſ. [from annunciate.] The day celebrated by the church, in memory of the angel's ſalutation of the bleſſed Virgin; ſolemnized with us on the twenty-fifth of March.

Upon the day of the annunciation, or Lady-day, meditate on the incarnation of our bleſſed Saviour; and ſo, upon all the feſtivals of the year. Taylor.

A'nodyne, ån'-ô-dŷne. adj. [from α and ὀδύνη.] That which has the power of mitigating pain.

Yet durſt ſhe not too deeply probe the wound,
As hoping ſtill the nobler parts were found:
But ſtrove with anodynes t' aſſuage the ſmart,
And mildly thus her med'cine did impart.
Dryd.

Anodynes, or abaters of pain of the alimentary kind, are ſuch things as relax the tenſion of the affected nervous fibres, as decoctions of emollient ſubſtances; thoſe things, which deſtroy the particular acrimony which occaſions the pain; or what deadens the ſenſation of the brain, by procuring ſleep. Arbuthnot.

To ANO'INT, å-noi'nt. v. a. [oindre, enoindre, part. oint, enoint, Fr.]

1. To rub over with unctuous matter, as oil, or unguents.

Anointed let me be with deadly venom. Shakeſp.

Thou ſhalt have olive trees throughout all thy coaſts, but thou ſhalt not anoint thyſelf with the oil: for thine olive ſhall caſt his fruit.
Deut. xxviii. 40.

2. To ſmear; to be rubbed upon.

Warm waters then, in brazen caldrons borne,
Are pour'd to waſh his body, joint by joint,
And fragrant oils the ſtiffen'd limbs anoint.
Dryden.

3. To conſecrate by unction.

I would not ſee thy ſiſter
In his anointed fleſh ſtick boariſh fangs. Shakeſp.

Ano'inter, å-nôi'n-tůr. n. ſ. [from anoint.] The perſon that anoints.

Ano'malism, å-nôm'-å-lizm. n. ſ. [from anomaly.] Anomaly; irregularity; deviation from the common rule. Dict.

Anomali'stical, å-nôm'-å-lis'-tŷ-kål. adj. [from anomaly.] Irregular; applied in aſtronomy to the year, taken for the time in which the earth paſſeth through its orbit, diſtinct from the tropical year.

Ano'malous, å-nôm'-å lůs. adj. [α priv. and ὁμαλός.] Irregular; out of rule; deviating from the general method or analogy of things. It is applied, in grammar, to words deviating from the common rules of inflection; and, in aſtronomy, to the ſeemingly irregular motions of the planets.

There will ariſe anomalous diſturbances, not only in civil and artificial, but alſo in military officers.
Brown's Vulgar Errours.

He being acquainted with ſome characters of every ſpeech, you may at pleaſure make him underſtand anomalous pronunciation. Holder.

Metals are gold, ſilver, copper, tin, lead, and iron; to which we may join that anomalous body, quickſilver or mercury. Locke.

Ano'malously, å-nôm-å-lůs-lŷ. adv. [from anomalous.] Irregularly; in a manner contrary to rule.

Eve was not ſolemnly begotten, but ſuddenly framed, and anomalouſly proceeded from Adam.
Brown's Vulgar Errours.

ANO'MALY, å-nôm'-å-lŷ. n. ſ. [anomalie, Fr. anomalia, Lat. ἀνώμαλος.] Irregularity; deviation from the common rule.

If we ſhould chance to find a mother debauching her daughter, as ſuch monſters have been ſeen, we muſt charge this upon a peculiar anomaly and baſeneſs of nature. South.

I do not purſue the many pſeudographies in uſe; but intend to ſhew, how moſt of theſe anomalies in writing might be avoided, and better ſupplied. Holder.

A'nomy, ån'-ô-mŷ. n. ſ. [α priv. and νόμος.] Breach of law.

If ſin be good, and juſt, and lawful; it is no more evil, it is no ſin, no anomy.
Bramhall againſt Hobbes.

Ano'n, å-nôn'. adv. [Junius imagines it to be an elliptical form of ſpeaking for in one, that is, in one minute; Skinner from a and nean, or near; Minſhew from on on.]

1. Quickly; ſoon; in a ſhort time.

A little ſnow, tumbled about,
Anon becomes a mountain. Shakeſpeare.

Will they come abroad anon?
Shall we ſee young Oberon? Ben Jonſon.

However, witneſs, Heav'n!
Heav'n, witneſs thou anon! while we diſcharge
Freely our part. Milton.

He was not without deſign at that preſent, as ſhall be made out anon; meaning, by that device to withdraw himſelf. Clarendon.

Still as I did the leaves inſpire,
With ſuch a purple light they ſhone,
As if they had been made of fire,
And ſpreading ſo would flame anon. Waller.

2. Sometimes; now and then; at other times. In this ſenſe is uſed ever and anon, for now and then.

Full forty days he paſs'd, whether on hill
Sometimes, anon in ſhady vale, each night,
Or harbour'd in one cave, is not reveal'd. Milton.

Ano'nymous, å-nôn'-ŷ-můs. adj. [α priv. and ὄνυμα.] Wanting a name.

Theſe animalcules ſerve alſo for food to another anonymous inſect of the waters. Ray.

Notes on the Dunciad.

Ano'nymously, å-nôn'-ŷ-můs-lŷ. adv. [from anonymous.] Without a name.

I would know, whether the edition is to come out anonymouſly, among complaints of ſpurious editions. Swift.

A'norexy, å-nô-rek'-ſŷ. n. ſ. [ἀνορεξία.] Inappetency, or loathing of food. Quincy.

Ano'ther, ån-uth'-ůr. adj. [from an and other.]

1. Not the ſame.

He that will not lay a foundation for perpetual diſorder, muſt of neceſſity find another riſe of government than that. Locke.

2. One more; a new addition to the former number.

——— A fourth? ———
What! will the line ſtretch out to th' crack of doom?
Another yet?—a ſeventh! I'll ſee no more.
Shakeſpeare.

3. Any other; any one elſe.

If one man ſin againſt another, the judge ſhall judge him. 1 Samuel, ii. 25.

Why not of her? preferr'd above the reſt
By him with knightly deeds, and open love profeſs'd;
So had another been, where he his vows addreſs'd.
Dryden.

4. Not one's ſelf.

A man ſhall have diffuſed his life, his ſelf, and his whole concernments ſo far, that he can weep his ſorrows with another's eyes; when he has another heart beſides his own, both to ſhare and to ſupport his grief. South.

5. Widely different; much altered.

When the ſoul is beaten from its ſtation, and the mounds of virtue are broken down; it becomes quite another thing, from what it was before. South.

Ano'thergaines, ån-ůth'-ůr-gå'ns. adj. [See Anotherguess.] Of another kind. This word I have found only in Sidney.

If my father had not plaid the haſty fool, I might have had anothergaines huſband than Dametas. Sidney.

Ano'therguess, ån-ůth'-ůr-geſs. adj.] This word, which though rarely uſed in writing, is ſomewhat frequent in colloquial language, I conceive to be corrupted from another guiſe; that is, of a different guiſe, or manner, or form.] Of a different kind.

Oh Hocus! where art thou? It uſed to go in anotherguesſ manner in thy time. Arbuthnot.

A'nsated, ån'-så-těd. adj. [anſatus, Lat.] Having handles; or ſomething in the form of handles.

To ANSWER, ån'-sėr. v. n. [The etymology is uncertain; the Saxons had anꝺꞅƿaꞃian, but in another ſenſe; the Dutch have antwoorden.]

1. To ſpeak in return to a queſtion.

A'NSWERABLE, ȧn'-ſėr-ȧbl. adj. [from anſwer.]

1. That to which a reply may be made; that which may be anſwered; as, the argument, though ſubtle, is yet anſwerable.

2. Obliged to give an account; obliged to anſwer any demand of juſtice; or ſtand the trial of an accuſation.

Every chief of every kindred or family ſhould be anſwerable, and bound to bring forth every one of that kindred, at all times, to be juſtified, when he ſhould be required, or charged with any treaſon or felony. Spenſer's State of Ireland.

Will any man argue, that if a phyſician ſhould manifeſtly preſcribe poiſon to all his patients, he cannot be juſtly puniſhed, but is anſwerable only to God? Swift.

He cannot think ambition more juſtly laid to their charge, than to other men; becauſe that would be, to make church government anſwerable for the errours of human nature. Swift.

3. Correſpondent.

It was but ſuch a likeneſs, as an imperfect glaſs doth give; anſwerable enough in ſome features and colours, but erring in others. Sidney.

The daughters of Atlas were ladies who, accompanying ſuch as came to be regiſtered among the worthies, brought forth children anſwerable in quality to thoſe that begot them. Raleigh.

4. Proportionate; ſuitable.

Only add
Deeds to thy knowledge anſwerable; add faith,
Add virtue, patience, temperance; add love
By name to come call'd charity, the ſoul
Of all the reſt. Milton.

5. Suitable; ſuited.

The following, by certain eſtates of men, anſwerable to that, which a great perſon himſelf profeſſeth (as of ſoldiers to him, that hath been employed in the wars) hath been a thing well taken even in monarchies. Bacon.

If anſwerable ſtyle I can obtain
Of my celeſtial patroneſs. Milton.

6. Equal; equivalent.

There be no kings, whoſe means are anſwerable unto other men's deſires. Raleigh.

7. Relative; correlative.

That, to every petition for things needful, there ſhould be ſome anſwerable ſentence of thanks provided particularly to follow, is not requiſite. Hooker.

A'NSWERABLY, ȧn'-ſėr-ȧb-lẏ. adv. [from anſwerable.] In due proportion; with proper correſpondence; ſuitably.

The broader ſeas are, if they be entire, and free from iſlands, they are anſwerably deeper. Brerewood on Languages.

It bears light ſorts, into the atmoſphere, to a greater or leſſer height, anſwerably to the greater or leſſer intenſeneſs of the heat. Woodward.

A'NSWERER, ȧn'-ſėr-ŭr. n. ſ. [from anſwer.]

1. He that anſwers; he that ſpeaks in return to what another has ſpoken.

I know your mind, and I will ſatisfy it; neither will I do it like a niggardly anſwerer, going no further than the bounds of the queſtion. Sidney.

2. He that manages the controverſy againſt one that has written firſt.

It is very unfair in any writer to employ ignorance and malice together; becauſe it gives his anſwerer double work. Swift.

A'NT, ȧnt'. [n. ſ.] æmett, Sax. which Junius imagines, not without probability, to have been firſt contracted to æmt, and then ſoftened to ant.] An emmet; a piſmire. A ſmall inſect that lives in great numbers together in hillocks.

We'll ſet thee to ſchool to an ant, to teach thee there is no lab'ring in the winter. Shakeſpeare.

Methinks, all cities now but ant-hills are,
Where when the ſeveral labourers I ſee,
For children, houſe, proviſion, taking pain;
They're all but ants, carrying eggs, ſtraw, and grain. Donne.

Learn each ſmall people's genius, policies;
The ants republick, and the realm of bees. Pope.

A'NT-BEAR, ȧnt'-bėr. n. ſ. [from ant and bear.] An animal that feeds on ants.

Divers quadrupeds feed upon inſects; and ſome live wholly upon them; as two ſorts of tamanduas upon ants, which therefore are called in Engliſh ant-bears. Ray.

A'NT-HILL, or HILLOCK, ȧnt'-hȉll. n. ſ. [from ant and hill.] The ſmall protuberances of earth, in which ants make their neſts.

Put blue flowers into an ant-hill, they will be ſtained with red; becauſe the ants drop upon them their ſtinging liquor, which hath the effect of oil of vitriol. Ray.

Thoſe, who have ſeen ant hillocks, have eaſily perceived thoſe ſmall heaps of corn about their neſts. Addiſon.

A'N'T, ȧn't. A contraction for and it, or rather and if it; as, an't pleaſe you; that is, and if it pleaſe you.

ANTA'GONIST, ȧn-tȧg'-ŏ-nȉſt. n. ſ. [ἀντὶ and ἀγωνίζω.]

1. One who contends with another; an opponent. It implies generally a perſonal and particular oppoſition.

Our antagoniſts in theſe controverſies may have met with ſome not unlike to Ithacius. Hooker.

What was ſet before him,
To heave, pull, draw, and break, he ſtill perform'd,
None daring to appear antagoniſt. Milton.

It is not fit, that the hiſtory of a perſon ſhould appear, till the prejudice both of his antagoniſt and adherents be ſoftened and ſubdued. Addiſon.

2. Contrary.

The ſhort club conſiſts of thoſe, who are under five feet; ours is to be compoſed of ſuch, as are above ſix. Theſe we look upon, as the two extremes and antagoniſts of the ſpecies; conſidering all theſe as neuters, who fill up the middle ſpace. Addiſon.

3. In anatomy, the antagoniſt is that muſcle which counteracts ſome other.

A relaxation of a muſcle muſt produce a ſpaſm in its antagoniſt, becauſe the equilibrium is deſtroyed. Arbuthnot.

To Anta'gonize, an-tag'-o-nize. v. n. [from ἀντὶ and ἀγωνίζω.] To contend againſt another. Dict.

ANTANACLA'SIS, ant-a-na-kla'-sis. n. ſ. [Lat. from ἀντανάκλασις, from ἀντανακλάω to break back.]

1. A figure in rhetorick, when the ſame word is repeated in a different, if not in a contrary ſignification; as, In thy youth learn ſome craft, that in old age thou mayſt get thy living without craft. Craft, in the firſt place, ſignifies ſcience or occupation; in the ſecond, deceit or ſubtilty.

2. It is alſo a returning to the matter at the end of a long parentheſis; as, Shall that heart (which does not only feel them, but hath all motion of his life placed in them), ſhall that heart, I ſay, &c. Smith's Rhetorick.

Antaphrodi'tick, ant-a-fro-dit-ik. adj. [from ἀντὶ againſt, and Ἀφροδίτη Venus.] That which is efficacious againſt the venereal diſeaſe.

Antaple'ctick, ant-ap-o-plek'-tik. adj. [ἀντὶ againſt, and ἀποπληξία an apoplexy.] Good againſt an apoplexy.

Anta'rctick, an-ta'rk-tik. adj. [ἀντὶ againſt, and ἄρκτος the bear or northern conſtellation.] The ſouthern pole, ſo called, as oppoſite to the northern.

Downward as far antarctick. Milton.

They that had ſail'd from near th' antarctick pole,
Their treaſure ſafe, and all their veſſels whole,
In ſight of their dear country ruin'd be,
Without the guilt of either rock or ſea. Waller.

Antarthri'tick, ant-ar-thrit'-ik. adj. [ἀντὶ againſt, and ἀρθρῖτις the gout.] Good againſt the gout.

Antasthma'tick, ant-aſ-mat'-ik. adj. [from ἀντὶ and ἆσθμα.] Good againſt the aſthma.

To ANTECE'DE, an-te-ſe'de. v. n. [from ante before, and cedo to go.] To precede; to go before.

It ſeems conſonant to reaſon, that the fabrick of the world did not long antecede its motion. Hale.

Antece'dence, an-te ſe'-denſe. n. ſ. [from antecede.] The act or ſtate of going before; precedence.

It is impoſſible, that mixed bodies can be eternal; becauſe there is neceſſarily a pre-exiſtence of the ſimple bodies, and an antecedence of their conſtitution, preceding the exiſtence of mixed bodies. Hale.

Antece'dent, an-te-ſe'-dent. adj. [antecedens, Lat.]

1. Going before; preceding. Antecedent is uſed, I think, only with regard to time; precedent, with regard both to time and place.

To aſſert, that God looked upon Adam's fall as a ſin, and puniſhed it, when (without any antecedent ſin of his) it was impoſſible for him not to fall; ſeems a thing, that highly reproaches eſſential equity and goodneſs. South.

2. It has to before the thing which is ſuppoſed to follow.

No one is ſo hardy as to ſay, God is in his debt; that he owed him a nobler being: for exiſtence muſt be antecedent to merit. Collier.

Did the blood firſt exiſt, antecedent to the formation of the heart? But that is, to ſet the effect before the cauſe. Bentley.

Antece'dent, an-te-ſe'-dent. n. ſ. [antecedens, Lat.]

1. That which goes before.

A duty of ſo mighty an influence, that it is indeed the neceſſary antecedent, if not alſo the direct cauſe, of a ſinner's return to God. South.

2. In grammar, the noun to which the relative is ſubjoined; as, the man who comes hither.

Let him learn the right joining of ſubſtantives with adjectives, the noun with the verb, and the relative with the antecedent. Aſcham.

3. In logick, the firſt propoſition of an enthymeme, or argument conſiſting only of two propoſitions.

Conditional or hypothetical propoſitions are thoſe, whoſe parts are united by the conditional particle if; as, if the ſun be fixed, the earth muſt move; if there be no fire, there will be no ſmoke. The firſt part of theſe propoſitions, or that wherein the condition is contained, is called the antecedent; the other is called the conſequent. Watts's Logick.

Antece'dently, an-te-ſe'-dent-ly. adv. [from antecedent.] In the ſtate of antecedence, or going before; previouſly.

We conſider him antecedently to his creation, while he yet lay in the barren womb of nothing, and only in the number of poſſibilities. South.

ANTECE'SSOR, an-te-ſes'-ſur. n. ſ. [Lat.] One who goes before, or leads another; the principal. Dict.

Antechamber, an'-te-tſham-bur. n. ſ. [from ante before, and chamber; it is generally written, improperly, antichamber.] The chamber that leads to the chief apartment.

The empreſs has the antichambers paſt,
And this way moves with a diſorder'd haſte. Dryd.

His antichamber, and room of audience, are little ſquare chambers wainſcoted. Addiſon.

ANTECU'RSOR, an-te-kur'-ſur. n. ſ. [Lat.] One who runs before. Dict.

To A'ntedate, an'-te-date. v. a. [from ante, and do, datum, Lat.]

1. To date earlier than the real time, ſo as to confer a fictitious antiquity.

Now thou haſt lov'd me one whole day;
To-morrow, when thou leav'ſt, what wilt thou ſay?
Wilt thou then antidate ſome new-made vow,
Or ſay, that now
We are not juſt thoſe perſons, which we were?
Donne.

By reading, a man does (as it were) antedate his life, and makes himſelf contemporary with the ages paſt. Collier.

2. To take ſomething before the proper time.

Our joys below it can improve,
And antedate the bliſs above. Pope.

Antedilu'vian, an-te-dy-lu'-vyan. adj. [from ante before, and diluvium a deluge.]

1. Exiſting before the deluge.

During the time of the deluge, all the ſtone and marble of the antediluvian earth were totally diſſolved. Woodward.

2. Relating to things exiſting before the deluge.

The text intends only the line of Seth, conducible unto the genealogy of our Saviour, and the antediluvian chronology. Brown's Vulg. Err.

Antedilu'vian, an-te-dy-lu'-vyan. n. ſ. One that lived before the flood.

We are ſo far from repining at God, that he hath not extended the period of our lives to the longevity of the antediluvians; that we give him thanks, for contracting the days of our trial. Bentley.

An'telope, an'-te-lope. n. ſ. [The etymology is uncertain.] A goat with curled or wreathed horns.

The antelope, and wolf both fierce and fell.

1. To take ſomething ſooner than another, ſo as to prevent him that comes after; to take firſt poſſeſſion.

God hath taken care to anticipate and prevent every man, to draw him early into his church; to give piety the prepoſſeſſion, and ſo to engage him in holineſs. Hammond.

If our Apoſtle had maintained ſuch an anticipating principle, engraven upon our ſouls before all exerciſe of reaſon; why did he talk of ſeeking the Lord, ſeeing that the knowledge of him was innate and perpetual? Bentley.

2. To take up before the time at which any thing might be regularly had.

I find, I have anticipated already, and taken up from Boccace, before I come to him; but I am of the temper of kings, who are for preſent money, no matter how they pay it. Dryden.

3. To foretaſte, or take an impreſſion of ſomething, which is not yet, as if it really was.

The life of the deſperate equals the anxiety of death, who but act the life of the damned, and anticipate the deſolations of hell. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

Why ſhould we
Anticipate our ſorrows? 'tis like thoſe,
That die for fear of death. Denham.

4. To prevent any thing by crowding in before it; to preclude.

Time, thou anticipat'ſt my dread exploits:
The flighty purpoſe never is o'ertook,
Unleſs the deed go with it. Shakeſpeare.

I am far from pretending to inſtruct the profeſſion, or anticipating their directions to ſuch as are under their government. Arbuthnot.

Anticipa'tion, ån-tıs-ſŷ-på'-ſhůn. n. ſ. [from anticipate.]

1. The act of taking up ſomething before its time.

The golden number gives the new moon four days too late, by reaſon of the aforeſaid anticipation, and our neglect of it. Holder.

It is not enough, to be miſerable when the time comes; unleſs we make ourſelves ſo beforehand, and by anticipation. L'Eſtrange.

2. Foretaſte.

If we really live under the hope of future happineſs, we ſhall taſte it by way of anticipation and forethought; an image of it will meet our minds often, and ſtay there, as all pleaſing expectations do. Atterbury.

3. Opinion implanted before the reaſons of that opinion can be known.

The eaſt and weſt, the north and ſouth, have the ſame anticipation concerning one ſupreme diſpoſer of things. Stillingfleet.

What nation is there, that, without any teaching, have not a kind of anticipation, or preconceived notion of a Deity? Derham.

A'ntick, ån'-tık. adj. [probably from antiquus ancient, as things out of uſe appear odd.] Odd; ridiculouſly wild; buffoon in geſticulation.

What! dares the ſlave
Come hither cover'd with an antick face,
And fleer and ſcorn at our ſolemnity?
Shakeſpeare's Romeo and Juliet.

Of all our antick ſights, and pageantry,
Which Engliſh idiots run in crowds to ſee. Dryd.

The prize was to be conferred upon the whiſtler, that could go through his tune without laughing, though provoked by the antick poſtures of a merry Andrew, who was to play tricks. Addiſon.

A'ntick, ån'-tık. n. ſ.

1. He that plays anticks; he that uſes odd geſticulation; a buffoon.

Anti'dotal, ån''-tỷ-dỏ'-tål. adj. [from antidote.] That, which has the quality of an antidote, or the power of counteracting poiſon.

That bezoar is antidotal, we ſhall not deny. Brown.

Animals, that can innoxiouſly digeſt theſe poiſons, become antidotal to the poiſon digeſted. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

A'ntidote, ån'-tỷ-dỏte. n. ſ. [ἀντίδοτον, antidotus, Lat.] A thing, given in oppoſition to ſomething elſe.

A medicine, given to expel the miſchiefs of another, as of poiſon. Quincy.

Truſt not the phyſician;
His antidotes are poiſon, and he ſlays
More than you rob. Shakeſpeare.

What fool would believe that antidote, delivered by Pierius, againſt the ſting of a ſcorpion? to ſit upon an aſs, with one's face towards his tail. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

Poiſon will work againſt the ſtars: beware;
For ev'ry meal an antidote prepare. Dryden jun.

Antidysente'rick, ån-tỷ-dỉs-ſėn-tẻr'-ỉk. adj. [from ἀντὶ againſt, and dyſenteria a bloody flux.] Good againſt the bloody flux.

Antife'brile, ån-tỉ-fẻ'-brỷle. adj. [from ἀντὶ againſt, and febris a fever.] Good againſt fevers.

Antifebrile medicines check the ebullition. Floyer.

Antilo'garithm, ån-tỷ-lỏg' å-rỉthm. n. ſ. [from ἀντὶ againſt, and logarithm.]

The complement of the logarithm of a ſine, tangent, or ſecant; or the difference of that logarithm, from the logarithm of ninety degrees. Chambers.

Anti'logy, ån-tỷ-lỏ'-dzhỷ. n. ſ. [ἀντιλογία.] A contradiction between any words and paſſages in an author. Dict.

Anti'loquist, ån-tỷ-lỏ'-kwỉſt. n. ſ. [from ἀντὶ againſt, and loquor to ſpeak.] A contradictor. Dict.

Antimona'rchical, ån-tỷ-mỏ-nå'r-kỷ-kål. adj. [from ἀντὶ againſt, and μοναρχία government by a ſingle perſon.] Againſt government by a ſingle perſon.

When he ſpied the ſtatue of King Charles in the middle of the crowd, and moſt of the kings ranged over their heads; he concluded, that an antimonarchical aſſembly could never chooſe ſuch a place. Addiſon.

Antimona'rchicalness, ån-tỷ-mỏ-nå'r-kỷ-kål-nės. n. ſ. [from antimonarchical.] The quality of being an enemy to regal power.

Antimo'nial, ån-tỷ-mỏ'-nyål. adj. [from antimony.] Made of antimony; having the qualities of antimony; relating to antimony.

They were got out of the reach of antimonial fumes. Grew.

Though antimonial cups, prepar'd with art,
Their force to wine through ages ſhould impart;
This diſſipation, this profuſe expence,
Nor ſhrinks their ſize, nor waſtes their ſtores immenſe. Blackmore.

A'NTIMONY, ån'-tỷ-mún-nỷ. n. ſ. [The ſtibium of the ancients, by the Greeks called ςίμμι. The reaſon of its modern denomination is referred to Baſil Valentine, a German monk; who, as the tradition relates, having thrown ſome of it to the hogs, obſerved that, after it had purged them heartily, they immediately fattened; and therefore he imagined his fellow monks would be the better for a like doſe. The experiment, however, ſucceeded ſo ill, that they all died of it; and the medicine was thenceforward called antimoine, antimonk.]

Antimony is a mineral ſubſtance, of a metalline nature, having all the ſeeming characters of a real metal, except malleability; and may be called a ſemimetal, being a foſſile glebe of ſome undetermined metal, combined with a ſulphurous and ſtony ſubſtance. Mines of all metals afford it; that in gold mines is reckoned beſt. It has alſo its own mines in Hungary, Germany, and France. Its texture is full of little ſhining veins or threads, like needles; brittle as glaſs. Sometimes veins of a red or golden colour are intermixed, which is called male antimony; that without them being denominated female antimony. It fuſes in the fire, though with ſome difficulty; and diſſolves more eaſily in water. It deſtroys and diſſipates all metals fuſed with it, except gold; and is therefore uſeful in refining. It is a common ingredient in ſpeculums, or burning concaves; ſerving to give them a finer poliſh. It makes a part in bell metal; and renders the ſound more clear. It is mingled with tin, to make it more hard, white, and ſound; and with lead, in the caſting of printers letters, to render them more ſmooth and firm. It is a general help in the melting of metals, and eſpecially in caſting of cannon balls. In pharmacy it is uſed under various forms, and with various intentions, chiefly as an emetick. Chambers

Antinephri'tick, ån-tỷ-nẻ-frỉt'-ỉk. adj. [from ἀντὶ and νεφριτικός.] Medicines good againſt diſeaſes of the reins and kidneys.

An'tinomy, ån'-tỷ-nỏ-mỷ. n. ſ. [from ἀντὶ and νόμος.] A contradiction between two laws, or two articles of the ſame law.

Antinomies are almoſt unavoidable in ſuch variety of opinions and anſwers. Baker.

Antiparaly'tick, ån-tỷ-pår-å-lỉt'-ỉk. adj. [from ἀντὶ and παράλυσις.] Efficacious againſt the palſy.

Antipathe'tical, ån-tỷ-på-thėt'-ỷ-kål. adj. [from antipathy.] Having a natural contrariety to any thing.

The ſoil is fat and luxurious, and antipathetical to all venomous creatures. Howel's Vocal Foreſt.

Antipathe'ticalness, ån-tỷ-på-thėt'-ỷ-kål-nỉs. n. ſ. [from antipathetical.] The quality or ſtate of having a natural contrariety to any thing. Dict.

ANTI'PATHY, ån-tỉp'-å-thỷ. n. ſ. [from ἀντὶ againſt, and πάθος feeling; antipathie, Fr.]

1. A natural contrariety to any thing, ſo as to ſhun it involuntary; averſion; diſlike. It is oppoſed to ſympathy.

No contraries hold more antipathy,
Than I and ſuch a knave. Shakeſpeare.

To this perhaps might be juſtly attributed moſt of the ſympathies and antipathies obſervable in men. Locke.

2. It has ſometimes the particle againſt before the object of antipathy.

I had a mortal antipathy, againſt ſtanding armies in times of peace; becauſe I took armies to be hired by the maſter of the family, to keep his children in ſlavery. Swift.

3. Sometimes to.

Aſk you, what provocation I have had?
The ſtrong antipathy of good to bad.
When truth, or virtue, an affront endures,
Th' affront is mine, my friend, and ſhould be your's. Pope.

4. Formerly with; but improperly.

Tangible bodies have an antipathy with air; and any liquid body, that is more denſe, they will draw, condenſe, and (in effect) incorporate. Bacon.

ANTIPERI'STASIS, ån-tỷ-pẻ-rỉs'-tå-ſỉs, n. ſ. [from ἀντιπερίστασις, formed of ἀντὶ, and περίσταμαι to ſtand round.] The oppoſition of a contrary quality, by which the quality it oppoſes becomes heightened or intended; or the action by which a body, attacked by another, collects itſelf, and becomes ſtronger by ſuch oppoſition; or an intention of the activity of one quality cauſed by the oppoſition of another. Thus quicklime is ſet on fire by the affuſion of cold water; ſo water becomes warmer in winter than in ſummer; and thunder and lightning are excited in the middle region of the air, which is continually cold, and all by antiperiſtaſis. This is an exploded principle in the Peripatetick philoſophy.

Th' antiperiſtaſis of age
More inflam'd his am'rous rage. Cowley.

The riotous prodigal deteſts covetouſneſs; yet let him find the ſprings grow dry which feed his luxury, covetouſneſs ſhall be called in; and ſo, by a ſtrange antiperiſtaſis, prodigality ſhall beget rapine. Decay of Piety.

Antipestile'ntial, ån-tỷ-pės-tỷ-lėn'-ſhål. adj. [from ἀντὶ againſt, and peſtilential.] Efficacious againſt the infection of the plague.

Perfumes correct the air before it is attracted by the lungs; or, rather, antipeſtilential unguents, to anoint the noſtrils with. Harvey on the Plague.

ANTI'PHRASIS, ån-tỉf'-frå-ſỉs. n. ſ. [from ἀντὶ againſt, and φράσις a form of ſpeech.] The uſe of words in a ſenſe oppoſite to their proper meaning.

You now find no cauſe to repent, that you never dipt your hands in the bloody high-courts of juſtice, ſo called only by antiphraſis. South.

Anti'podal, ån-tỉp'-ỏ-dål. adj. [from antipodes.] Relating to the countries inhabited by the antipodes.

The Americans are antipodal unto the Indians. Brown.

ANTI'PODES, ån-tỉp'-ỏ-dėz. n. ſ. It has no ſingular. [from ἀντὶ againſt, and πόδες feet.] Thoſe people who, living on the other ſide of the globe, have their feet directly oppoſite to ours.

We ſhould hold day with the antipodes,
If you would walk in abſence of the ſun. Shakeſpeare.

So ſhines the ſun, tho' hence remov'd, as clear
When his beams warm th' antipodes, as here. Waller.

An'tipope, ån'-tỷ-pỏpe. n. ſ. [from ἀντὶ againſt, and pope.] He that uſurps the popedom, in oppoſition to the right pope.

This houſe is famous in hiſtory, for the retreat of an antipope, who called himſelf Felix V. Addiſon.

ANTIPTO'SIS, ån-tỉp-tỏ'-ſỉs. n. ſ. [ἀντίπτωσις.] A figure in grammar, by which one caſe is put for another.

A'ntiquary, ån'-tỷ-kwå-rỷ. n. ſ. [antiquarius, Lat.] A man ſtudious of antiquity; a collector of ancient things.

All arts, rarities, and inventions, are but the relicks of an intellect defaced with ſin. We admire it now, only as antiquaries do a piece of old coin, for the ſtamp it once bore. South.

With ſharpen'd ſight pale antiquaries pore,
Th' inſcription value, but the ruſt adore. Pope.

The rude Latin of the monks is ſtill very intelligible: had their records been delivered in the vulgar tongue, they could not now be underſtood, unleſs by antiquaries. Swift.

A'NTIQUARY, ăn'-tў-kwă-rў. adj. [This word is improper.] Old; antique.

Here's Neſtor,
Inſtructed by the antiquary times;
He muſt, he is, he cannot but be wiſe. Shakeſp.

To A'NTIQUATE, ăn'-tў-kwāte. v. a. [antiquo, Lat.] To put out of uſe; to make obſolete.

The growth of Chriſtianity in this kingdom might reaſonably introduce new laws, and antiquate or abrogate ſome old ones, that ſeemed leſs conſiſtent with the Chriſtian doctrines. Hale's Common Law of England.

Milton's Paradiſe Loſt is admirable. But cannot I admire the height of his invention, and the ſtrength of his expreſſion, without defending his antiquated words, and the perpetual harſhneſs of their ſound? Dryden.

Almighty Latium, with her cities crown'd,
Shall like an antiquated fable ſound. Addiſon.

A'NTIQUATEDNESS, ăn'-tў-kwă-tĕd-nĕs. n. ſ. [from antiquated.] The ſtate of being antiquated, worn out of uſe, or obſolete.

ANTI'QUE, ăn-tē'k. adj. [antique, Fr. antiquus, Lat.] It was formerly pronounced according to the Engliſh analogy, with the accent on the firſt ſyllable; but now after the French, with the accent on the laſt, at leaſt in proſe; the poets uſe it variouſly.]

1. Ancient; old; not modern.

Now, good Ceſario, but that piece of ſong,
That old and antique ſong, we heard laſt night. Shakeſpeare.

Such truth in love, as th' antique world did know;
In ſuch a ſtyle, as courts might boaſt of now. Waller.

2. Of genuine antiquity.

The ſeals which we have remaining of Julius Cæſar, which we know to be antique, have the ſtar of Venus over them. Dryden.

My copper lamps, at any rate,
For being true antique I bought;
Yet wiſely melted down my plate,
On modern models to be wrought;
And trifles I alike purſue,
Becauſe they're old, becauſe they're new. Prior.

3. Of old faſhion.

Forth came that ancient lord and aged queen,
Array'd in antique robes down to the ground,
And ſad habiliments right well beſeen. Fairy Queen.

Muſt he no more divert the tedious day?
Nor ſparkling thoughts in antique words convey? Smith to the Memory of Philips.

4. Odd; wild; antick.

Name not theſe living death-heads unto me;
For theſe not ancient but antique be. Donne.

And ſooner may a gulling weather-ſpy,
By drawing forth heav'n's ſcheme, tell certainly,
What faſhion'd hats, or ruffs, or ſuits, next year
Our giddy-headed antique youth will wear. Donne.

ANTI'QUE, ăn-tē'k. n. ſ. [from antique, adj.] An antiquity; a remain of ancient times; an ancient rarity.

I leave to Edward, now earl of Oxford, my ſeal of Julius Cæſar; as alſo another ſeal, ſuppoſed to be a young Hercules; both very choice antiques, and ſet in gold. Swift.

ANTI'QUENESS, ăn-tē'k-nĕs. n. ſ. [from antique.] The quality of being antique; an appearance of antiquity.

We may diſcover ſomething venerable in the antiqueneſs of the work; but we would ſee the deſign enlarged. Addiſon.

ANTI'QUITY, ăn-tĭk'-kwĭ-tў. n. ſ. [antiquitas, Lat.]

1. Old times; time paſt long ago.

I mention Ariſtotle, Polybius, and Cicero, the greateſt philoſopher, the moſt impartial hiſtorian, and the moſt conſummate ſtateſman, of all antiquity. Addiſon.

2. The people of old times; the ancients.

That ſuch pillars were raiſed by Seth, all antiquity has avowed. Raleigh.

3. The works or remains of old times.

As for the obſervation of Machiavel, traducing Gregory the Great, that he did what in him lay to extinguiſh all heathen antiquities: I do not find that thoſe zeals laſt long; as it appeared in the ſucceſſion of Sabinian, who did revive the former antiquities. Bacon.

4. Old age: a ludicrous ſenſe.

Is not your voice broken? your wind ſhort? your chin double? your wit ſingle? and every part about you blaſted with antiquity? and will you yet call yourſelf young? Shakeſpeare.

5. Ancientneſs; as, this ring is valuable for its antiquity.

ANTI'SCII, ăn-tў'-ſĭ-ī. n. ſ. It has no ſingular. [from ἀντὶ, and σκιὰ ſhadow.] In geography, the people who inhabit on different ſides of the equator, who conſequently at noon have their ſhadows projected oppoſite ways. Thus the people of the north are Antiſcii to thoſe of the ſouth; the one projecting their ſhadows at noon toward the north pole, and the other toward the ſouth pole. Chambers.

ANTISCORBU'TICAL, ăn-tў-ſkŏr-bŭ'-tў-kăl. adj. [from ἀντὶ againſt, and ſcorbutum the ſcurvy.] Good againſt the ſcurvy.

The warm antiſcorbutical plants, in quantities, will occaſion ſtinking breath, and corrupt the blood. Arbuthnot.

ANTISCORBU'TICK, ăn-tў-ſkŏr-bŭ'-tĭk. adj. [from ἀντὶ againſt, and ſcorbutum the ſcurvy.] Good againſt the ſcurvy.

The warm antiſcorbuticks, animal diet, and animal ſalts, are proper. Arbuthnot.

ANTI'SPASIS, ăn-tĭs'-pă-ſĭs. n. ſ. [from ἀντὶ againſt, and σπάω to draw.] The revulſion of any humour into another part.

ANTISPASMO'DICK, ăn-tў-ſpăz-mŏd'-ĭk. adj. [from ἀντὶ againſt, and σπασμὸς the cramp.] That, which has the power of relieving the cramp.

ANTISPA'STICK, ăn-tў-ſpăs'-tĭk. adj. [from ἀντὶ and σπαςικὸς.] Medicines, which cauſe a revulſion of the humours.

ANTISPLENE'TICK, ăn-tў-ſplĕn'-ĕ-tĭk. adj. [from ἀντὶ and ſplenetick.] Efficacious in diſeaſes of the ſpleen.

Antiſpleneticks open the obſtructions of the ſpleen. Floyer.

ANTI'STROPHE, ăn-tĭs'-trŏ-fē. n. ſ. [ἀντιςροφὴ, from ἀντὶ the contrary way, and ςροφὴ turning.] In an ode ſuppoſed to be ſung in parts, the ſecond ſtanza of every three, or ſometimes every ſecond ſtanza; ſo called becauſe the dance turns about.

ANTISTRUMA'TICK, ăn-tў-ſtrŏ-măt'-ĭk. adj. [from ἀντὶ, and ſtruma a ſcrophulous ſwelling.] Good againſt the king's evil.

I preſcribed him a diſtilled milk, with antiſtrumaticks, and purged him. Wiſeman.

ANTI'THESIS, ăn-tĭth'-ĕ-ſĭs. n. ſ. in the plural antitheſes. [ἀντίθεσις, placing in oppoſition.] Oppoſition of words or ſentiments; contraſt; as in theſe lines:

Though gentle, yet not dull;
Strong without rage; without o'erflowing, full. Denham.

I ſee a chief, who leads my choſen ſons,
All arm'd with points, antitheſes, and puns. Pope.

A'NTITYPE, ăn'-tў-tīpe. n. ſ. [ἀντίτυπος.] That, which is reſembled or ſhadowed out by the type; that, of which the type is the repreſentation. It is a term of theology. See TYPE.

When once upon the wing, he ſoars to an higher pitch, from the type to the antitype, to the days of the Meſſiah, the aſcenſion of our Saviour, and (at length) to his kingdom and dominion over all the earth. Burnet's Theory.

He brought forth bread and wine, and was the prieſt of the moſt high God; imitating the antitype, or the ſubſtance, Chriſt himſelf. Taylor.

ANTITY'PICAL, ăn-tў-tĭp'-ĭ-kăl. adj. [from antitype.] That, which relates to an antitype; that, which explains the type.

ANTIVENE'REAL, ăn-tў-vē-nē'-ryăl. adj. [from ἀντὶ and venereal.] Good againſt the venereal diſeaſe.

If the lues be joined with it, you will ſcarce cure your patient without exhibiting antivenereal remedies. Wiſeman.

A'NTLER, ănt'-lŭr. n. ſ. [andouillier, Fr.] Properly the firſt branches of a ſtag's horns; but, popularly and generally, any of his branches.

Grown old, they grow leſs branched, and firſt loſe their brow antlers, or loweſt furcations next to the head. Brown.

A well-grown ſtag, whoſe antlers riſe
High o'er his front, his beams invade the ſkies. Dryden.

Bright Diana
Brought hunted wild goats heads, and branching antlers
Of ſtags, the fruit and honour of her toil. Prior.

ANTOE'CI, ăn-tŏ-ĕ'-ſī. n. ſ. It has no ſingular. [Lat. from ἀντὶ, and οἰκέω, to inhabit.] In geography, thoſe inhabitants of the earth who live under the ſame meridian, and at the ſame diſtance from the equator; the one towards the north, and the other to the ſouth. Hence they have the ſame longitude; and their latitude is alſo the ſame, but of a different denomination. They are in the ſame ſemicircle of the meridian, but oppoſite parallels. They have preciſely the ſame hours of the day and night, but oppoſite ſeaſons; and the night of the one is always equal to the day of the other. Chambers.

ANTONOMA'SIA, ăn-tŏ-nŏ-mă'-ſyă. n. ſ. [from ἀντὶ, and ὄνομα a name.] A form of ſpeech, in which, for a proper name, is put the name of ſome dignity, office, profeſſion, ſcience, or trade; or when a proper name is put in the room of an appellative. Thus a king is called his majeſty; a nobleman, his lordſhip. We ſay the philoſopher inſtead of Ariſtotle, and the orator for Cicero: thus a man is called by the name of his country, a German, an Italian; and a grave man is called a Cato, and a wiſe man a Solomon. Smith's Rhetorick.

A'NTRE, ăn'-tŭr. n. ſ. [antre, Fr. antrum, Lat.] A cavern; a cave; a den: not in uſe.

With all my travels hiſtory:
Wherein of antres vaſt, and deſarts idle,
It was my hent to ſpeak. Shakeſpeare.

A'NVIL, ăn'-vĭl. n. ſ. [ænꝼille, Sax.]

1. The iron block on which the ſmith lays his metal to be forged.

I ſaw a ſmith ſtand with his hammer, thus,
The whilſt his iron did on his anvil cool. Shakeſp.

On their eternal anvils here he found
The brethren beating, and the blows go round. Dryden.

2. Any thing on which blows are laid.

Here I clip
The anvil of my ſword, and do conteſt
Hotly and nobly. Shakeſpeare.

3. Figuratively; to be upon the anvil, is to be in a ſtate of formation or preparation.

Several members of our houſe, knowing what was upon the anvil, went to the clergy, and deſired their judgment. Swift.

Anxi'ety, ånk-sı̊′-ė-tẙ. n. ſ. [anxietas, Lat.]

1. Trouble of mind, about ſome future event; ſuſpenſe, with uneaſineſs; perplexity; ſolicitude.

To be happy, is not only to be freed from the pains and diſeaſes of the body, but from anxiety and vexation of ſpirit; not only to enjoy the pleaſures of ſenſe, but peace of conſcience and tranquillity of mind. Tillotſon.

2. In the medical language; lowneſs of ſpirits, with uneaſineſs of the ſtomach.

In anxieties which attend fevers, when the cold fit is over, a warmer regimen may be allowed; and, becauſe anxieties often happen by ſpaſms from wind, ſpices are uſeful. Arbuthnot.

A'nxious, ånk′-syůs. adj. [anxius, Lat.]

1. Diſturbed, about ſome uncertain event; ſolicitous; being in painful ſuſpenſe; painfully uncertain.

His penſive cheek upon his hand reclin'd,
And anxious thoughts revolving in his mind. Dryden.

With beating hearts the dire event they wait,
Anxious and trembling for the birth of fate. Pope.

2. Careful; full of inquietude; unquiet.

In youth alone, unhappy mortals live;
But, ah! the mighty bliſs is fugitive:
Diſcolour'd ſickneſs, anxious labour come,
And age, and death's inexorable doom. Dryden.

3. Careful, as of a thing of great importance.

No writings we need to be ſolicitous about the meaning of, but thoſe that contain truths we are to believe, or laws we are to obey; we may be leſs anxious about the ſenſe of other authors. Locke.

4. It has generally for or about, before the object; but ſometimes of, leſs properly.

Anxious of neglect, ſuſpecting change. Granville.

A'nxiously, ånk′-syůs-lẙ. adv. [from anxious.] In an anxious manner; ſolicitouſly; unquietly; carefully; with painful uncertainty.

But, where the loſs is temporal, every probability of it needs not put us ſo anxiouſly to prevent it, ſince it might be repaired again. South.

Thou, what befits the new lord mayor,
And what the Gallick arms will do,
Art anxiouſly inquiſitive to know. Dryden.

A'nxiousness, ånk′-syůs-nės. n. ſ. [from anxious.] The quality, of being anxious; ſuſceptibility of anxiety.

A'ny, ån′nẙ. adj. [ænıȝ, enıȝ, Sax.].

1. Every; whoever he be; whatever it be. It is, in all its ſenſes, applied indifferently to perſons or things.

I know, you are now (Sir) a gentleman born;
Ay, and have been ſo, any time theſe four hours. Shakeſpeare.

You contented yourſelf with being capable, as much as any whoſoever, of defending your country with your ſword. Dryden.

How fit is this retreat, for uninterrupted ſtudy! Any one that ſees it will own, I could not have choſen a more likely place to converſe with the dead in. Pope.

2. Whoſoever; whatſoever; as diſtinguiſhed from ſome other.

What warmth is there in your affection towards any of theſe princely ſuitors, that are already come? Shakeſpeare.

An inverted motion, being begun any where below, continues itſelf all the whole length. Locke.

3. It is uſed, in oppoſition to none.

I wound, and I heal: neither is there any, that can deliver out of my hand. Deut. xxxii. 39.

A'orist, å′-ỏ-rıſt. n. ſ. [ἀόριϛος.] Indefinite; a term in the Greek grammar.

AO'RTA, å′-ỏr-tå. n. ſ. [ἀορτὴ.] The great artery, which riſes immediately out of the left ventricle of the heart. Quincy.

Apa'ce, å-på′-ſe. adv. [from a and pace; that is, with a great pace.]

1. Quick; ſpeedily: uſed of things in motion.

Or when the flying libbard ſhe did chace,
She could then nimbly move, and after fly apace. Spenſer.

Ay, quoth my uncle Glo'ſter,
Small herbs have grace, great weeds do grow apace:
And ſince, methinks, I would not grow ſo faſt,
Becauſe ſweet flow'rs are ſlow, and weeds make haſte. Shakeſpeare.

He promis'd in his eaſt a glorious race;
Now, ſunk from his meridian, ſets apace. Dryden.

Is not he imprudent; who, ſeeing the tide making haſte towards him apace, will ſleep till the ſea overwhelm him? Tillotſon.

2. With haſte; applied to ſome action.

The baron now his diamonds pours apace;
Th' embroider'd king, who ſhows but half his face,
And his refulgent queen. Pope's Rape of the Lock.

3. Haſtily; with ſpeed: ſpoken of any kind of progreſſion, from one ſtate to another.

This ſecond courſe of men,
With ſome regard to what is juſt and right,
Shall lead their lives, and multiply apace. Milton.

The life and power of religion decays apace here and at home, while we are ſpreading the honour of our arms far and wide through foreign nations. Atterbury.

If ſenſible pleaſure, or real grandeur, be our end, we ſhall proceed apace to real miſery. Watts.

Apago'gical, å-på-gỏ′-jẙ-kål. adj. [from ἀπαγωγὴ, compounded of ἀπὸ from, and ἄγω to bring or draw.] An apagogical demonſtration is ſuch, as does not prove the thing directly; but ſhews the impoſſibility or abſurdity, which ariſes from denying it; and is alſo called reductio ad impoſſibile, or ad abſurdum. Chambers.

Apa'rt, å-på′rt. adv. [apart, Fr.]

1. Separately from the reſt, in place.

Since I enter into that queſtion, it behoveth me, to give reaſon for my opinion, with circumſpection; becauſe I walk aſide, and in a way apart from the multitude. Raleigh.

The party diſcerned, that the earl of Eſſex would never ſerve their turn; they reſolved to have another army apart, that ſhould be at their devotion. Clarendon.

2. In a ſtate of diſtinction; as, to ſet apart for any uſe.

He is ſo very figurative, that he requires a grammar apart, to conſtrue him. Dryden.

The tyrant ſhall demand yon ſacred load,
And gold and veſſels, ſet apart for God. Prior.

3. Diſtinctly.

Moſes firſt nameth heaven and earth, putting waters but in the third place, as comprehending waters in the word earth; but afterwards he nameth them apart. Raleigh.

4. At a diſtance; retired from the other company.

So pleaſe you, madam,
To put apart theſe your attendants. Shakeſp.

Apa'rtment, å-på′rt-měnt. n. ſ. [apartement, Fr.] A part of the houſe, allotted to the uſe of any particular perſon; a room; a ſet of rooms.

A private gallery 'twixt th' apartments led,
Not to the foe yet known. Sir J. Denham.

He, pale as death, deſpoil'd of his array,
Into the queen's apartment takes his way. Dryd.

The moſt conſiderable ruin is that on the eaſtern promontory, where are ſtill ſome apartments left, very high and arched at top. Addiſon.

A'pathy, åp′-å-thẙ. n. ſ. [ἀ not, and πάθος feeling.] The quality of not feeling; exemption from paſſion; freedom from mental perturbation.

Of good and evil much they argued then,
Paſſion and apathy, glory and ſhame. Milton.

To remain inſenſible of ſuch provocation, is not conſtancy, but apathy. South.

In lazy apathy let Stoicks boaſt
Their virtue fix'd; 'tis fixed as in froſt,
Contracted all, retiring to the breaſt;
But ſtrength of mind is exerciſe, not reſt. Pope.

APE, å′pe. n. ſ. [ape, Icelandiſh.]

1. A kind of monkey, remarkable for imitating what he ſees.

I will be more newfangled, than an ape; more giddy in my deſires, than a monkey. Shakeſp.

Writers report, that the heart of an ape, worn near the heart, comforteth the heart, and increaſeth audacity. It is true, that the ape is a merry and bold beaſt. Bacon.

With glittering gold and ſparkling gems they ſhine;
But apes and monkeys are the gods within. Granville.

Celeſtial Beings, when of late they ſaw
A mortal man unfold all Nature's law,
Admir'd ſuch knowledge in a human ſhape,
And ſhow'd a Newton, as we ſhow an ape. Pope.

2. An imitator; uſed generally in the bad ſenſe.

Julio Romano, who, had he himſelf eternity, and could put breath into his work, would beguile Nature of her cuſtom: ſo perfectly is he her ape. Shakeſpeare.

To Ape, å′pe. v. a. [from ape.] To imitate, as an ape imitates human actions.

Aping the foreigners in every dreſs;
Which, bought at greater coſt, becomes him leſs. Dryden.

Curſe on the ſtripling! how he apes his ſire!
Ambitiouſly ſententious! Addiſon.

Ape'ak, or Ape'ek, å-pě′ke. adv. [probably from à pique.] In a poſture to pierce; formed with a point.

Ape'rtion, å-pěr′-ſhůn. n. ſ. [from apertus, Lat.]

1. An opening; a paſſage through any thing; a gap.

The next now in order are the apertions; under which term I do comprehend doors, windows, ſtair-caſes, chimneys, or other conduits; in ſhort, all inlets or outlets. Wotton.

2. The act of opening; or ſtate of being opened.

The plenitude of veſſels, otherwiſe called the plethora, when it happens, cauſeth an extravaſation of blood, either by ruption or apertion of them. Wiſeman.

Ape'rtly, åp′-ěrt-lẙ. adv. [apertè, Lat.] Openly; without covert.

Ape'rtness, åp′-ěrt-něs. n. ſ. [from apert.] Openneſs.

The freedom or apertneſs, and vigour of pronouncing, and the cloſeneſs of muffling, and lazineſs of ſpeaking, render the ſound different. Holder.

A′PERTURE, ảp′-ẻr-tůre. n. ſ. [from apertus, open.]

1. The act of opening.

Hence ariſeth the facility of joining a conſonant to a vowel; becauſe, from an appulſe to an aperture is eaſier, than from one appulſe to another. Holder.

2. An open place.

If memory be made by the eaſy motion of the ſpirits through the opened paſſages, images (without doubt) paſs through the ſame apertures. Glanville.

3. The hole next the object glaſs of a teleſcope or microſcope.

The concave metal bore an aperture of an inch; but the aperture was limited by an opaque circle, perforated in the middle. Newton's Opticks.

4. Enlargement; explanation; a ſenſe ſeldom found.

It is too much untwiſted by the doctors, and, (like philoſophy) made intricate by explications, and difficult by the aperture and diſſolution of diſtinctions. Taylor.

APHE′LION, ả-fẻ′-lyỏn. n. ſ. aphelia, plur. [from ἀπὸ, and ἥλιος the ſun.] That part of the orbit of a planet, in which it is at the point remoteſt from the ſun.

The reaſon, why the comets move not in the zodiack, is that, in their aphelia they may be at the greateſt diſtances from one another, and conſequently diſturb one another's motions the leaſt that may be. Cheyne.

APHE′TA, ả-fẻ′-tả. n. ſ. [with aſtrologers.] The name of the planet, which is imagined to be the giver or diſpoſer of life in a nativity. Dict.

APHE′TICAL, ả-fẻ′-tỷ-kảl. adj. [from apheta.] Relating to the apheta.

APHILA′NTHROPY, ả-fỷ-lản′-thrỏ-pỷ. n. ſ. [ἀ without, and φιλανθρωπία love of mankind.] Want of love to mankind.

A′PHONY, ảf′-ỏ-nỷ. n. ſ. [ἀ without, and φωνὴ ſpeech.] A loſs of ſpeech. Quincy.

A′PHORISM, ảf′-ỏ-rỉzm. n. ſ. [ἀφορισμὸς.] A maxim; a precept, contracted in a ſhort ſentence; an unconnected poſition.

He will eaſily diſcern, how little of truth there is in the multitude; and, though ſometimes they are flattered with that aphoriſm, will hardly believe the voice of the people to be the voice of God. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

I ſhall at preſent conſider the aphoriſm, that a man of religion and virtue is a more uſeful, and conſequently a more valuable, member of a community. Rogers.

APHORI′STICAL, ảf-ỏ-rỉs′-tỉ-kảl. adj. [from aphoriſm.] In the form of an aphoriſm; in ſeparate and unconnected ſentences.

APHORI′STICALLY, ảf-ỏ-rỉs′-tỉ-kảl-lỷ. adv. [from aphoriſtical.] In the form of an aphoriſm.

Theſe, being carried down, ſeldom miſs a cure; as Hippocrates doth likeways aphoriſtically tell us. Harvey.

APHRODISI′ACAL, ả-frỏ-dỷ-sỉ′-ả-kảl. } adj.
APHRODISI′ACK, ả-frỏ-dỷ-sỉ′-ảk. } [from Ἀφροδίτη, Venus.] Relating to the venereal diſeaſe.

A′PIARY, ả′-pyả-rỷ. n. ſ. [from apis, Lat. a bee.] The place, where bees are kept.

Thoſe, who are ſkilled in bees, when they ſee a foreign ſwarm approaching to plunder their hives, have a trick to divert them into ſome neighbouring apiary, there to make what havock they pleaſe. Swift.

A′PICES, ảp′-ỉ-sẻs of a flower. [Lat. from apex, the top.] Little knobs, that grow on the tops of the ſtamina, in the middle of a flower: they are commonly of a dark purpliſh colour. By the microſcope they have been diſcovered to be a ſort of capſulæ ſeminales, or ſeed veſſels; containing in them ſmall globular (and often oval) particles, of various colours, and exquiſitely formed. Quincy.

API′ECE, ả-pẻ′ſe. adv. [from a for each, and piece or ſhare.] To the part or ſhare of each.

Men, in whoſe mouths at firſt ſounded nothing but mortification, were come to think that, they might lawfully have ſix or ſeven wives apiece. Hooker.

I have to-night diſpatched ſixteen buſineſſes, a month's length apiece, by an abſtract of ſucceſs. Shakeſpeare.

One copy of this paper may ſerve a dozen of you, which will be leſs than a farthing apiece. Swift.

A′PISH, ả′-pỉſh. adj. [from ape.]

1. Having the qualities of an ape; imitative.

Report of faſhions in proud Italy;
Whoſe manners ſtill our tardy apiſh nation
Limps after, in baſe aukward imitation. Shakeſp.

2. Foppiſh; affected.

Becauſe I cannot flatter and look fair,
Duck with French nods and apiſh courteſy;
I muſt be held a rancorous enemy. Shakeſpeare.

3. Silly; trifling; inſignificant.

All this is but apiſh ſophiſtry; and, to give it a name divine and excellent, is abuſive and unjuſt. Glanville.

4. Wanton; playful.

Gloomy ſits the queen,
Till happy chance reverts the cruel ſcene;
And apiſh folly, with her wild reſort
Of wit and jeſt, diſturbs the ſolemn court. Prior.

A′PISHLY, ả′-pỉſh-lỷ. adv. [from apiſh.] In an apiſh manner; foppiſhly; conceitedly.

A′PISHNESS, ả′-pỉſh-nẻs. n. ſ. [from apiſh.] Mimickry; foppery; inſignificance; playfulneſs.

API′TPAT, ả-pỉt-pảt. adv. [a word formed from the motion.] With quick palpitation.

O, there he comes.—Welcome, my bully, my back! Agad, my heart has gone apitpat for you. Congreve.

APLU′STRE, ả-plůs′-tůr. n. ſ. [Lat.] The ancient enſign, carried in ſea veſſels.

The one holds a ſword in her hand, to repreſent the Iliad; as the other has an apluſtre, to repreſent the Odyſſey, or voyage of Ulyſſes. Addiſon.

APO′CALYPSE, ả-pỏk′-ả-lỉps. n. ſ. [from ἀποκαλύπτω.] Revelation; diſcovery: a word, uſed only of the ſacred writings.

O, for that warning voice, which he, who ſaw
Th' apocalypſe, heard cry in heav'n aloud. Milton.

With this throne, of the glory of the Father, compare the throne of the Son of God, as ſeen in the apocalypſe. Burnet's Theory of the Earth.

APOCALY′PTICAL, ả-pỏk-ả-lỉp′-tỷ-kảl. adj. [from apocalypſe.] Concerning revelation; containing revelation.

If we could underſtand that ſcene, at the opening of this apocalyptical theatre, we ſhould find it a repreſentation of the majeſty of our Saviour. Burnet's Theory of the Earth.

APOCALY′PTICALLY, ả-pok-ả-lỉp′-tỷ-kảl-lỷ. adv. [from apocalyptical.] In ſuch a manner, as to reveal ſomething ſecret.

APO′COPE, ả-pỏk′-ỏ-pẻ. n. ſ. [ἀποκοπὴ.] A figure in grammar, when the laſt letter or ſyllable of a word is taken away; as, ingeni, for ingenii; apoplex, for apoplexy.

APOCRU′STICK, ả-pỏ-krůs′-tỉk. adj. [ἀποκρουστικὰ, from ἀποκρούω to drive away.] Remedies, endued with a repelling and aſtringent power, by which they prevent the too great afflux of humours. Chambers.

APO′CRYPHA, ả-pỏk′-rỷ-fả. n. ſ. [from ἀποκρύπτω to put out of ſight.] Books, not publickly communicated; books, whoſe authors are not known. It is uſed for the books, appended to the ſacred writings; which, being of doubtful authors, are leſs regarded.

We hold not the apocrypha for ſacred, as we do the holy ſcripture; but, for human compoſitions. Hooker.

APO′CRYPHAL, ả-pỏk′-rỷ-fảl. adj. [from apocrypha.]

1. Not canonical; of uncertain authority.

Jerom (who ſaith that, all writings not canonical, are apocryphal) uſes not the title apocryphal, as the reſt of the fathers ordinarily have done; whoſe cuſtom is, ſo to name (for the moſt part) only ſuch, as might not publickly be read or divulged. Hooker.

2. Contained in the apocrypha.

To ſpeak of her in the words of the apocryphal writers, wiſdom is glorious, and never fadeth away. Addiſon.

3. It is ſometimes uſed, for an account of uncertain credit.

APO′CRYPHALLY, ả-pỏk′-rỷ-fảl-lỷ. adv. [from apocryphal.] Uncertainly; not indiſputably.

APO′CRYPHALNESS, ả-pỏk′-rỷ-fảl-nẻs. n. ſ. from apocryphal.] Uncertainty; doubtfulneſs of credit.

APODI′CTICAL, ảp-ỏ-dỉk′-tỷ-kảl. adj. [from ἀπόδειξις evident truth; demonſtration.] Demonſtrative; evident, beyond contradiction.

Holding an apodictical knowledge, and an aſſured knowledge of it; verily, to perſuade their apprehenſions otherwiſe, were to make an Euclid believe, that there were more than one centre in a circle. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

'We can ſay all, at the number three; therefore 'the world is perfect.' 'Tobit went, and his 'dog followed him; therefore there is a world 'in the moon,' were an argument as apodictical. Glanville.

APODI′XIS, ảp-ỏ-dỉk′-sỉs. n. ſ. [ἀπόδειξις.] Demonſtration. Dict.

APOGÆ′ON, ảp-ỏ-jẻ′-ỏn. } n. ſ. [from ἀπὸ
A′POGEE, ảp-ỏ-jẻ. } from, and γῆ the APOGE′UM, ảp′-ỏ-jẻ-ům. } earth.] A point in the heavens, in which the ſun, or a planet, is at the greateſt diſtance poſſible from the earth in its whole revolution. The antient aſtronomers, regarding the earth as the centre of the ſyſtem, chiefly regarded the apogæon and perigæon; which the moderns, making the ſun the centre, change for the aphelion and perihelion. Chambers.

Thy ſin is in his apogæon placed;
And, when it moveth next, muſt needs deſcend. Fairfax.

It is yet not agreed, in what time (preciſely) the apogeum abſolveth one degree. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

APOLOGE′TICAL, ả-pỏl-ỏ-jẻt′-ỷ-kảl. } adj.
APOLOGE′TICK, ả-pỏl-ỏ-jẻt′-ỉk. } [from ἀπολογέω to defend.] That, which is ſaid in defence of any thing or perſon.

I deſign to publiſh an eſſay, the greater part of which is apologetical, for one ſort of chymiſts. Boyle.

APOLOGE′TICALLY, ả-pỏl-ỏ-jẻt′-ỷ-kảl-lỷ. adj. [from apologetical.] In the way of defence or excuſe.

Apo′logist, å-pôl′-lô-jiſt. n. ſ. [from To apologize.] He, that makes an apology; a pleader in favour of another.

To Apo′logize, å-pôl′-lô-jize. v. n. [from apology.]

1. To plead in favour of any perſon or thing.

It will be much more ſeaſonable, to reform, than apologize or rhetoricate; and therefore it imports thoſe, who dwell ſecure, to look about them. Decay of Piety.

2. It has the particle for, before the ſubject of apology.

I ought to apologize, for my indiſcretion in the whole undertaking. Wake's Preparation for Death.

The tranſlator needs not apologize, for his choice of this piece, which was made in his childhood. Pope's Preface to Statius.

A′pologue, åp′-ô-lôg. n. ſ. [ἀπόλογος.] Fable; ſtory, contrived to teach ſome moral truth.

An apologue of Æſop is beyond a ſyllogiſm; and proverbs more powerful, than demonſtration. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

Some men are remarked, for pleaſantneſs in raillery; others, for apologues and appoſite diverting ſtories. Locke.

APO′LOGY, å-pôl′-ô-jŷ. n. ſ. [apologia, Lat. ἀπολογία.]

1. Defence; excuſe. Apology generally ſignifies, rather excuſe, than vindication; and tends, rather to extenuate the fault, than prove innocence. This is, however, ſometimes unregarded by writers.

In her face excuſe
Came prologue, and apology too prompt;
Which, with bland words at will, ſhe thus addreſs'd. Milton.

2. It has for, before the object of excuſe.

It is not my intention, to make an apology for my poem: ſome will think, it needs no excuſe; and others will receive none. Dryden.

I ſhall neither trouble the reader nor myſelf, with any apology for publiſhing of theſe ſermons: for, if they be (in any meaſure) truly ſerviceable to the end, for which they are deſigned, I do not ſee what apology is neceſſary; and, if they be not ſo, I am ſure none can be ſufficient. Tillotſon.

Apomeco′metry, å-pô-mê-kôm′-mê-trŷ. n. ſ. [ἀπὸ from, μῆκος diſtance, and μετρέω to meaſure.] The art of meaſuring things at a diſtance. Dict.

APONEURO′SIS, å-pô-nû-rô′-sîs. n. ſ. [from ἀπὸ from, and νεῦρον a nerve.] An expanſion of a nerve into a membrane.

When a cyſt riſes near the orifice of the artery, it is formed by the aponeuroſis that runs over the veſſel, which becomes exceſſively expanded. Sharp's Surgery.

APO′PHASIS, å-pôf′-å-sîs. n. ſ. [Lat. ἀπόφασις a denying.] A figure in rhetorick; by which the orator, ſpeaking ironically, ſeems to wave, what he would plainly inſinuate; as, Neither will I mention thoſe things, which if I ſhould, you notwithſtanding could neither confute or ſpeak againſt them. Smith's Rhetorick.

Apophle′gmatick, å-pô-flêg′-må-tîk. n. ſ. [ἀπὸ and φλέγμα.] That, which has the quality of drawing away phlegm.

Apophle′gmatism, å-pô-flêg′-må-tîzm. n. ſ. [ἀπὸ and φλέγμα.] A medicine, of which the intention is, to draw phlegm from the blood.

And ſo it is in apophlegmatiſms and gargariſms, that draw the rheum down by the palate. Bacon.

Apophlegma′tizant, å-pô-flêg′-må-tî″-zånt. n. ſ. [ἀπὸ and φλέγμα.] Any remedy, which cauſes an evacuation of ſerous or mucous humour by the noſtrils, as particular kinds of ſternutatories. Quincy.

A′pophthegm, å′-pô-thêm. n. ſ. [ἀπόφθεγμα.] A remarkable ſaying; a valuable maxim, uttered on ſome ſudden occaſion.

We may magnify the apophthegms, or reputed replies of wiſdom, whereof many are to be ſeen in Laertius and Lycoſthenes. Brown's Vulg. Err.

I had a mind, to collect and digeſt ſuch obſervations and apophthegms, as tend to the proof of that great aſſertion, 'All is vanity.' Prior.

APO′PHYGE, å-pôf′-ŷ-jê. n. ſ. [ἀποφυγὴ flight or eſcape.] Is, in architecture, that part of a column, where it begins to ſpring out of its baſe; and was originally no more, than the ring or ferrel, which anciently bound the extremities of wooden pillars, to keep them from ſplitting, and were afterwards imitated in ſtone work. We ſometimes call it the ſpring of the column. Chambers.

APO′PHYSIS, å-pôf′-ŷ-sîs. n. ſ. [ἀπόφυσις.] The prominent parts of ſome bones; the ſame, as proceſs. It differs from an epiphyſis, as it is a continuance of the bone itſelf; whereas the latter is ſomewhat adhering to a bone, and of which it is not properly a part. Quincy.

It is the apophyſis (or head) of the os tibiæ, which makes the knee. Wiſeman's Surgery.

Apople′ctical, å-pô-plêk′-tŷ-kål. adj. [from apoplexy.] Relating to an apoplexy.

We meet with the ſame complaints of gravity in living bodies, when the faculty locomotive ſeems aboliſhed; as may be obſerved in ſupporting perſons inebriated, apoplectical, or in lipothymies and ſwoonings. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

In an apoplectical caſe, he found extravaſated blood, making way from the ventricles of the brain. Derham.

Apople′ctick, å-pô-plêk′-tîk. adj. [from apoplexy.] Relating to an apoplexy.

A lady was ſeized with an apoplectick fit, which afterwards terminated in ſome kind of lethargy. Wiſeman.

A′poplex, åp′-ô-plêks. n. ſ. [See Apoplexy.] Apoplexy. The laſt ſyllable is cut away; but this is only in poetry.

Preſent puniſhment purſues his maw;
When, ſurfeited and ſwell'd, the peacock raw
He bears into the bath; whence want of breath,
Repletions, apoplex, inteſtate death. Dryden.

A′poplexed, åp′-ô-plêk-sêd. adj. [from apoplex.] Seized with an apoplexy.

Senſe (ſure) you have,
Elſe could you not have motion: but (ſure) that ſenſe
Is apoplex'd. Shakeſpeare.

A′POPLEXY, åp′-ô-plêk-sŷ. n. ſ. [ἀπόπληξις.] A ſudden deprivation of all internal and external ſenſation, and of all motion, unleſs of the heart and thorax. The cauſe is generally a repletion; and indicates evacuation, joined with ſtimuli. Quincy.

Apoplexy is a ſudden abolition of all the ſenſes, external and internal, and of all voluntary motion, by the ſtoppage of the flux and reflux of the animal ſpirits through the nerves, deſtined for thoſe motions. Arbuthnot on Diet.

Peace is a very apoplexy; lethargy, mulled, deaf, ſleepy, inſenſible. Shakeſpeare's Coriolanus.

A fever may take away my reaſon or memory, and an apoplexy leave neither ſenſe nor underſtanding. Locke.

APO′RIA, å-pô′-rŷ-a. n. ſ. [ἀπορία.] Is a figure in rhetorick; by which the ſpeaker ſhews, that he doubts, where to begin for the multitude of matter; or what to ſay, in ſome ſtrange and ambiguous thing; and doth, as it were, argue the caſe with himſelf. Thus Cicero ſays, Whether he took them from his fellows more impudently, gave them to a harlot more laſciviouſly, removed them from the Roman people more wickedly, or altered them more preſumptuouſly, I cannot well declare. Smith's Rhetorick.

APORRHOE′A, å-pôr-rê′-å. n. ſ. [ἀπορρόη.] Effluvium; emanation; ſomething emitted by another: not in uſe.

The reaſon of this he endeavours to make out, by atomical aporrhœas; which, paſſing from the cruentate weapon to the wound, and being incorporated with the particles of the ſalve, carry them to the affected part. Glanville's Scepſis.

APOSIOPE′SIS, å′-pôs-ŷ-ô-pê″-sîs. n. ſ. [ἀποσιώπησις, from ἀπὸ after, and σιωπάω to be ſilent.] A form of ſpeech, by which the ſpeaker, through ſome affection (as ſorrow, baſhfulneſs, fear, anger) or vehemency, breaks off his ſpeech before it be all ended. A figure; when, ſpeaking of a thing, we yet ſeem to conceal it, though indeed we aggravate it; or when the courſe of the ſentence begun is ſo ſtayed, as thereby ſome part of the ſentence, not being uttered, may be underſtood. Smith's Rhetorick.

Apo′stasy, å-pôs′-tå-sŷ. n. ſ. [ἀπόστασις.] Departure from what a man has profeſſed: it is generally applied to religion; ſometimes with the particle from.

The canon law defines apoſtaſy to be a wilful departure from that ſtate of faith, which any perſon has profeſſed himſelf to hold in the Chriſtian church. Ayliffe's Parergon.

The affable archangel had forewarn'd
Adam, by due example, to beware
Apoſtaſy; by what befel in heav'n,
To thoſe apoſtates. Milton.

Vice in us were not only wickedneſs, but apoſtaſy, degenerate wickedneſs. Sprat.

Whoever do give different worſhips, muſt bring in more gods; which is an apoſtaſy from one God. Stillingfleet.

APO′STATE, å-pôs′-tâte. n. ſ. [apoſtata, Lat. ἀποστάτης.] One, that has forſaken his profeſſion; generally applied to one, that has left his religion.

The angels, for diſobedience, thou haſt reſerved to a miſerable immortality; but unto man, equally rebellious, equally apoſtate from thee and goodneſs, thou haſt given a Saviour. Rogers's Sermons.

Apoſtates in point of faith are, according to the civil law, ſubject unto all puniſhments ordained againſt hereticks. Ayliffe.

Aposta′tical, å-pôs-tåt′-ŷ-kål. adj. [from apoſtate.] After the manner of an apoſtate.

To wear turbants, is an apoſtatical conformity. Sandys.

To Apo′statize, å-pôs′-tå-tîze. v. n. [from apoſtate.] To forſake one's profeſſion: it is commonly uſed of one, who departs from his religion.

None revolt from the faith, becauſe they muſt not look upon a woman to luſt after her; but, becauſe they are reſtrained, from the perpetration of their luſts. If wanton glances and libidinous thoughts had been permitted by the goſpel, they would have apoſtatized nevertheleſs. Bentley.

To Apo′stemate, å-pôs′-tê-mâte. v. n. [from apoſteme.] To become an apoſteme; to ſwell and corrupt into matter.

There is care to be taken in abſceſſes of the breaſt and belly, in danger of breaking inwards; yet, by opening theſe too ſoon, they ſometimes apoſtemate again, and become crude. Wiſeman.

Apostema′tion, å-pôs′-tê-må″-ſhûn. n. ſ. [from apoſtemate.] The formation of an apoſteme; the gathering of a hollow purulent tumour.

Nothing can be more admirable, than the many ways nature hath provided for preventing or curing of fevers; as, vomitings, apoſtemations, ſalivations, &c. Grew.

A′posteme, åp′-ô-ſtême. }
A′postume, åp′-ô-ſtûme. } n. ſ. [ἀπόστημα.] A hollow ſwelling, filled with purulent matter; an abſceſs.

With equal propriety we may affirm, that ulcers of the lungs, or apoſtemes of the brain, do happen only in the left ſide.
Brown's Vulgar Errours.

The opening of apoſtemes, before the ſuppuration be perfected, weakeneth the heat, and renders them crude. Wiſeman.

APOSTLE, å-pôs'tl. n. ſ. [apoſtolus, Lat. ἀπόςολος.] A perſon, ſent with mandates by another. It is particularly applied to them, whom our Saviour deputed to preach the goſpel.

But all his mind is bent to holineſs;
His champions are the prophets and apoſtles.
Shakeſpeare.

I am far from pretending infallibility; that would be, to erect myſelf into an apoſtle: a preſumption in any one, that cannot confirm what he ſays by miracles. Locke.

We know but a ſmall part of the notion of an apoſtle, by knowing barely that he is ſent forth.
Watts's Logick.

Apo'stleship, å-pôs'tl-ſhîp. n. ſ. [from apoſtle.] The office or dignity of an apoſtle.

Where, becauſe faith is in too low degree,
I thought it ſome apoſtleſhip in me,
To ſpeak things, which by faith alone I ſee.
Donne.

God hath ordered it, that St. Paul hath writ epiſtles; which are all confined within the buſineſs of his apoſtleſhip, and ſo contain nothing but points of Chriſtian inſtruction. Locke.

Aposto'lical, å-pôs-tôl'-ŷ-kål. adj. [from apoſtolick.] Delivered or taught by the apoſtles; belonging to the apoſtles.

They acknowledge not, that the church keeps any thing as apoſtolical, which is not found in the apoſtles' writings, in what other records ſoever it be found. Hooker.

Declare yourſelf for that church, which is founded upon ſcripture, reaſon, apoſtolical practice, and antiquity. Hooker.

Aposto'lically, å-pôs-tol'-ŷ-kål-lŷ. adv. [from apoſtolical.] In the manner of the apoſtles.

Aposto'licalness, å-pôs-tôl'-ŷ-kål-nês. n. ſ. [from apoſtolical.] The quality, of relating to the apoſtles; apoſtolical authority.

Aposto'lick, å-pôs-tôl'-lîk. adj. [from apoſtle. The accent is placed by Dryden on the antipenult.] Taught by the apoſtles; belonging to an apoſtle.

Their oppoſitions, in maintenance of publick ſuperſtition againſt apoſtolick endeavours, were vain and frivolous. Hooker.

Or where did I at ſure tradition ſtrike,
Provided ſtill it were apoſtolick? Dryden.

APO'STROPHE, å-pôs'-trô-fê. n. ſ. [ἀποςϱοφὴ, from ἀπὸ from, and ςρέφω to turn.]

1. In rhetorick; a diverſion of ſpeech to another perſon, than the ſpeech appointed did intend or require; or, it is a turning of the ſpeech, from one perſon to another, many times abruptly. A figure, when we break-off the courſe of our ſpeech, and ſpeak to ſome new perſon, preſent or abſent; as, to the people or witneſſes, when it was before directed to the judges or opponent.
Smith's Rhetorick.

2. In grammar; the contraction of a word, by the uſe of a comma; as, tho', for though; rep', for reputation.

Many laudable attempts have been made, by abbreviating words with apoſtrophes; and by lopping polyſyllables, leaving one or two ſyllables at moſt. Swift.

To Apo'strophize, å-pôs'-trô-fîze. v. n. [from apoſtrophe.] To addreſs by an apoſtrophe.

There is a peculiarity in Homer's manner of apoſtrophizing Eumæus, and ſpeaking of him in the ſecond perſon: it is generally applied only to men of account. Pope.

A'postume, åp'-ôs-tûme. n. ſ. See Aposteme. [This word is properly apoſteme.] A hollow tumour, filled with purulent matter.

How an apoſtume in the meſentery, breaking, cauſes a conſumption in the parts, is apparent.
Harvey.

To A'postume, åp'-ôs-tûme. v. n. [from apoſtume.] To apoſtemate. Dict.

Apo'thecary, å-pôth'-ê-kå-rŷ. n. ſ. [apotheca, Lat. a repoſitory.] A man, whoſe employment is to keep medicines for ſale.

Give me an ounce of civet, good apothecary, to ſweeten my imagination. Shakeſp. King Lear.

They have no other doctor, but the ſun and the freſh air; and that, ſuch an one, as never ſends them to the apothecary. South.

Wand'ring in the dark,
Phyſicians, for the tree, have found the bark;
They, lab'ring for relief of human kind,
With ſharpen'd ſight ſome remedies may find;
Th' apothecary-train is wholly blind. Dryden.

A'pothegm, åp'-ô-thêm. n. ſ. [properly apophthegm; which ſee.] A remarkable ſaying.

By frequent converſing with him, and ſcattering ſhort apothegms and little pleaſant ſtories, and making uſeful applications of them, his ſon was in his infancy taught, to abhor vanity and vice as monſters. Walton's Life of Sanderſon.

Apothe'osis, å-pô-thê'-ô-sîs. n. ſ. [ἀποθέωσις.] Deification; the rite, of adding any one to the number of gods.

As if it could be graved and painted omnipotent, or the nails and the hammer could give it an apotheoſis. South.

Allots the prince of his celeſtial line,
An apotheoſis, and rites divine. Garth.

Apo'tome, å-pôt'-ô-mê. n. ſ. [from ἀποτέμνω, to cut off.]

1. In mathematicks, the remainder or difference of two incommenſurable quantities.

2. In muſick, it is the part remaining of an entire tone, after a greater ſemitone has been taken from it. The proportion (in numbers) of the apotome, is that of 2048 to 2187. The Greeks thought that, the greater tone could not be divided into two equal parts; for which reaſon, they called the firſt part ἀπότομη, and the other λήμνα.
Chambers.

A'pozem, åp'-ô-zêm. n. ſ. [ἀπὸ from, ζέω to boil.] A decoction; an infuſion, made by boiling ingredients.

During this evacuation, he took opening broths and apozems. Wiſeman's Surgery.

And Squirts read Garth till apozems, grow cold.
Gay.

To APPA'L, åp-pål. v. a. [appalir, Fr. It might more properly have been written appale.] To fright; to ſtrike with ſudden fear; to depreſs; to diſcourage.

Whiſt ſhe ſpake, her great words did appal
My feeble courage, and my heart oppreſs,
That yet I quake and tremble over all. Fairy Q.

Give with thy trumpet a loud note to Troy,
Thou dreadful Ajax; that th' appalled air
May pierce the head of thy great combatant.
Shakeſpeare.

The houſe of peers was ſomewhat appalled, at this alarum; but took time to conſider of it, till next day. Clarendon.

Does neither rage inflame, nor fear appal,
Nor the black fear of death, that ſaddens all? Pope.

The monſter curls
His flaming creſt, all other thirſt appall'd;
Or ſhiv'ring flies, or choak'd at diſtance ſtands.
Thomſon.

Appa'lement, åp-pål-mênt. n. ſ. [from appal.] Depreſſion; diſcouragement; impreſſion of fear.

As the furious ſlaughter of them was a great diſcouragement and appalement to the reſt.
Bacon's Henry VII.

A'ppanage, åp'-på-nåje. n. ſ. [appanagium, low Latin; probably from panis, bread.] Lands ſet apart by princes for the maintenance of their younger children.

He became ſuitor for the earldom of Cheſter, a kind of appanage to Wales, and uſing to go to the king's ſon. Bacon.

Had he thought it fit,
That wealth ſhould be the appanage of wit;
The God of light could ne'er have been ſo blind,
To deal it to the worſt of human kind. Swift.

Appara'tus, åp-på-rå'-tûs. n. ſ. [Latin.] Things provided, as means to any certain end; as, the tools of a trade, the furniture of a houſe, ammunition for war; equipage; ſhow.

There is an apparatus of things previous to be adjuſted, before I come to the calculation itſelf.
Woodward.

Ourſelves are eaſily provided for; it is nothing, but the circumſtantials (the apparatus or equipage) of human life, that coſts ſo much.
Pope's Letters to Gay.

APPA'REL, åp-pår'-êl. n. ſ. It has no plural. [appareil, Fr.]

1. Dreſs; veſture.

I cannot cog and ſay, that thou art this and that, like many of thoſe liſping hawthorn buds, that come like women in men's apparel, and ſmell like Bucklerſbury in ſimpling time.
Shakeſpeare's Merry Wives of Windſor.

2. External habiliments.

Our late burnt London, in apparel new,
Shook-off her aſhes, to have treated you. Waller.

At public devotion, his reſigned carriage made religion appear in the natural apparel of ſimplicity. Tatler.

To Appa'rel, åp-pår'-êl. v. a. [from apparel, the noun.]

1. To dreſs; to clothe.

With ſuch robes were the king's daughters, that were virgins, apparelled. 2 Sam. xiii. 18.

Both combatants were apparelled only in their doublets and hoſe. Hayward.

2. To adorn with dreſs.

She did apparel her apparel; and, with the precioufneſs of her body, made it moſt ſumptuous.
Sidney.

3. To cover, or deck, as with dreſs.

You may have trees apparelled with flowers, by boring holes in them, and putting into them earth, and ſetting ſeeds of violets. Bacon.

Shelves, and rocks, and precipices, and gulfs, being apparelled with a verdure of plants, would reſemble mountains and valleys. Bentley's Serm.

4. To fit-out; to furniſh: not in uſe.

It hath been agreed, that either of them ſhould ſend ſhips to ſea, well manned and apparelled to fight. Sir J. Hayward.

Appa'rent, åp-på'-rênt. adj. [apparent, Fr. apparens, Lat.]

1. Plain; indubitable; not doubtful.

The main principles of reaſon are in themſelves apparent. For, to make nothing evident of itſelf unto man's underſtanding, were to take away all poſſibility of knowing any thing. Hooker.

2. Seeming; in appearance; not real.

The perception intellective often corrects the report of phantaſy; as, in the apparent bigneſs of the ſun, in the apparent crookedneſs of the ſtaff in air and water. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

3. Viſible; in oppoſition to ſecret.

What ſecret imaginations we entertained, is known to God: this is apparent, that we have not behaved ourſelves, as if we preſerved a grateful remembrance of his mercies. Atterbury.

The outward and apparent ſanctity of actions ſhould flow from purity of heart. Rogers.

4. Open; evident; known; not merely ſuſpected.

As well the fear of harm, as harm apparent,
In my opinion ought to be prevented.
Shakeſp. Richard III.

5. Certain; not preſumptive.

He is the next of blood,
And heir apparent to the Engliſh crown.
Shakeſp. Henry VI.

Appa'rent, ap-pa'-rent. n. ſ. Elliptically uſed for heir apparent.

Draw thy ſword in right.——
—I'll draw it, as apparent to the crown;
And in that quarrel uſe it. Shakeſp. Henry VI.

Appa'rently, ap-pa'-rent-ly. [from apparent.] Evidently; openly.

Arreſt him, officer;
I would not ſpare my brother in this caſe,
If he ſhould ſcorn me ſo apparently.
Shakeſp. Comedy of Errours.

Vices apparently tend, to the impairing of men's health. Tillotſon.

Appari'tion, ap-pa-riſh'-un. n. ſ. [from appareo, Lat. to appear.]

1. Appearance; viſibility.

When ſuddenly ſtood at my head a dream,
Whoſe inward apparition gently mov'd
My fancy. Milton.

My retirement tempted me to divert thoſe melancholy thoughts, which the new apparitions of foreign invaſion and domeſtic diſcontent gave us. Denham.

2. The thing appearing; a form; a viſible object.

I have mark'd
A thouſand bluſhing apparitions
To ſtart into her face; a thouſand innocent ſhames
In angel whiteneſs bear away thoſe bluſhes. Shak.

A glorious apparition had (no doubt)
And carnal fear, that day, dimm'd Adam's eyes.
Milton.

Any thing beſides may take from me the ſenſe, of what appeared; which apparition, it ſeems, was you. Tatler.

3. A ſpectre; a walking ſpirit.

Horatio ſays, 'tis but our phantaſy,
Touching this dreaded ſight twice ſeen of us:
Therefore I have intreated him,
That, if again this apparition come,
He may approve our eyes, and ſpeak to it.
Shakeſp. Hamlet.

Tender minds ſhould not receive early impreſſions of goblins, ſpectres, and apparitions, wherewith maids fright them into compliance. Locke.

One of thoſe apparitions had his right hand filled with darts; which he brandiſhed in the face of all, who came-up that way. Tatler.

4. Something only apparent, not real.

Still there's ſomething,
That checks my joys:——
—Nor can I yet diſtinguiſh,
Which is an apparition, this or that. Den. Sophy.

5. Aſtronomically, the viſibility of ſome luminary; oppoſed to occultation.

A month of apparition is the ſpace, wherein the moon appeareth; deducting three days, wherein it commonly diſappeareth: and this containeth but twenty-ſix days and twelve hours.
Brown's Vulgar Errours.

Appa'ritor, ap-par'-y-tur. n. ſ. [from appareo, Lat. to be at hand.]

1. Such perſons, as are at hand, to execute the proper orders of the magiſtrate or judge of any court of judicature. Ayliffe.

2. The loweſt officer of the eccleſiaſtical court; a ſummoner.

They ſwallowed all the Roman hierarchy, from the pope to the apparitor. Ayliffe's Parergon.

To Appa'y, ap-pa'. v. a. [appayer, old Fr. to ſatisfy.]

1. To ſatisfy; to content: whence well appayed, is pleaſed; ill appayed, is uneaſy. It is now obſolete.

How well appaid ſhe was, her bird to find!
Sidney.

I am well appaid, that you had rather believe, than take the pain of a long pilgrimage. Camden.

So only can high juſtice reſt appaid. Milton.

2. The ſenſe is obſcure, in theſe lines:

Ay, Willy, when the heart is ill aſſay'd,
How can bagpipe or joints be well appaid? Spenſer.

To APPE'ACH, ap-petſh'. v. a.

1. To accuſe; to inform againſt any perſon.

He did, amongſt many others, appeach Sir William Stanley, the Lord chamberlain.
Bacon's Henry VII.

Were he twenty times
My ſon, I would appeach him. Shakeſp. Rich. II.

Diſcloſe
The ſtate of your affection; for your paſſions
Have to the full appeached. Shakeſp.

2. To cenſure; to reproach; to taint with accuſation.

For, when Cymochles ſaw the foul reproach,
Which them appeached; prick'd with guilty ſhame
And inward grief, he fiercely gen approach,
Reſolv'd to put away that lordly ſhame. Fairy Q.

Nor canſt, nor durſt thou, traitor, on thy pain,
Appeach my honour, or thine own maintain.
Dryden.

Appe'achment, ap-petſh'-ment. n. ſ. [from appeach.] Charge, exhibited againſt any man; accuſation.

A buſy-headed man gave firſt light to this appeachment; but the earl did avouch it. Hayward.

The duke's anſwers to his appeachments, in number thirteen, I find civilly couched. Wotton.

To APPE'AL, ap-pe'l. v. n. [appello, Lat.]

1. To transfer a cauſe, from one to another; with the particles to and from.

From the ordinary therefore they appeal to themſelves. Hooker.

2. To refer to another, as judge.

Force, or a declared ſign of force, upon the perſon of another, where there is no common ſuperior on earth to appeal to for relief, is the ſtate of war; and it is the want of ſuch an appeal, gives a man the right of war, even againſt an aggreſſor, though he be in ſociety, and a fellow ſubject. Locke.

They knew no foe, but in the open field;
And to their cauſe, and to the gods appeal'd.
Stepney.

3. To call another, as witneſs.

Whether this, that the ſoul always thinks, be a ſelf-evident propoſition, I appeal to mankind.
Locke.

4. To charge, with a crime; to accuſe: a term of law.

One but flatters us,
As well appeareth by the cauſe you come;
Namely, t' appeal each other of high treaſon.
Shakeſpeare.

Appe'al, ap-pe'l. n. ſ. [from the verb To appeal.]

1. An appeal is a provocation, from an inferior to a ſuperior judge; whereby the juriſdiction of the inferior judge is for a while ſuſpended, in reſpect of the cauſe; the cognizance being devolved to the ſuperior judge. Ayliffe's Parerg.

This ring
Deliver them; and your appeal to us,
There make before them. Shakeſp. Henry VIII.

Our reaſon prompts us to a future ſtate,
The laſt appeal from fortune and from fate,
Where God's all-righteous ways will be declar'd.
Dryden.

There are diſtributers of juſtice, from whom there lies an appeal to the prince. Addiſon.

2. In the common law.

An accuſation; which is a lawful declaration of another man's crime before a competent judge, by one that ſets his name to the declaration, and undertakes to prove it, upon the penalty that may enſue of the contrary: more commonly uſed for the private accuſation of a murderer, by a party who had intereſt in the party murdered; and of any felon, by one of his accomplices in the fact. Cowell.

The duke's unjuſt,
Thus to retort your manifeſt appeal,
And put your trial in the villain's mouth,
Which here you come to accuſe. Shakeſp.

Haſt thou, according to thy oath and bond,
Brought hither Henry Hereford, thy bold ſon;
Here to make good the boiſt'rous late appeal,
Againſt the duke of Norfolk? Shakeſp.

3. A ſummons, to anſwer a charge.

Nor ſhall the ſacred character of king
Be urg'd, to ſhield me from thy bold appeal:
If I have injur'd thee, that makes us equal. Dryd.

4. A call upon any as witneſs.

The caſting-up of the eyes, and lifting-up of the hands, is a kind of appeal to the Deity, the author of wonders. Bacon.

Appe'alant, ap-pel'-lant. n. ſ. [from appeal.] He, that appeals.

Lords appealants,
Your diff'rences ſhall all reſt under gage,
Till we aſſign you to your days of trial. Shakeſp.

Appe'aler, ap-pel'-ler. n. ſ. [from appeal.] One, who makes an appeal.

To APPE'AR, ap-pe'r. v. n. [appareo, Lat.]

1. To be in ſight; to be viſible.

As the leproſy appeareth in the ſkin of the fleſh.
Lev. xiii. 43.

And half her knee and half her breaſt appear,
By art, like negligence, diſclos'd and bare. Prior.

2. To become viſible, as a ſpirit.

For I have appeared unto thee for this purpoſe, to make thee a miniſter and a witneſs.
Acts, xxvi. 16.

3. To ſtand, in the preſence of another; generally uſed, of ſtanding before ſome ſuperiour: to offer himſelf, to the judgment of a tribunal.

When ſhall I come and appear before God?
Pſalm xlii. 2.

4. To be the object of obſervation.

Let thy work appear unto thy ſervants, and thy glory unto their children. Pſalm xc. 16.

5. To exhibit one's ſelf, before a court of juſtice.

Keep comfort to you; and this morning ſee,
You do appear before them. Shakeſp. Hen. VIII.

6. To be made clear by evidence.

Egfrid did utterly waſte and ſubdue it, as appears out of Beda's complaint againſt him; and Edgar brought it under his obedience, as appears by an antient record. Spenſer's Ireland.

7. To ſeem; in oppoſition to reality.

His firſt and principal care being, to appear unto his people ſuch, as he would have them be; and to be ſuch, as he appeared. Sidney.

My noble maſter will appear
Such, as he is; full of regard and honour. Shakeſp.

8. To be plain, beyond diſpute.

From experiments, uſeful indications may be taken; as will appear, by what follows. Arbuthnot.

Appe'arance, ap-pe'-rans. n. ſ. [from To appear.]

1. The act, of coming into ſight; as, they were ſurpriſed by the ſudden appearance of the enemy.

2. The thing ſeen; as, the remarkable appearances in the ſky.

3. A phœnomenon; that quality of any thing, which is viſible.

The advancing day of experimental knowledge diſcloſeth ſuch appearances, as will not lie even in any model extant. Glanville's Scepſis.

4. Semblance; not reality.

He encreaſed in eſtimation, whether by deſtiny, or whether by his virtues, or at leaſt by his appearances of virtues. Hayward.

Heroic virtue did his actions guide;
And he the ſubſtance, not th' appearance, choſe. Dryden.

The hypocrite would not put on the appearance of virtue, if it was not the moſt proper means to gain love. Addiſon.

5. Outſide ſhow.

Under a fair and beautiful appearance, there ſhould ever be the real ſubſtance of good. Rogers.

6. Entry into a place or company.

Do the ſame juſtice to one another, which will be done us hereafter by thoſe, who ſhall make their appearance in the world, when this generation is no more. Addiſon.

7. Apparition; ſupernatural viſibility.

I think a perſon, terrified with the imagination of ſpectres, more reaſonable than one, who thinks the appearance of ſpirits fabulous. Addiſon.

8. Exhibition of the perſon to a court.

I will not tarry; no, nor ever more
Upon this buſineſs my appearance make,
In any of their courts. Shakeſp. Henry VIII.

9. Open circumſtance of a caſe.

Or, grant her paſſion be ſincere,
How ſhall his innocence be clear?
Appearances were all ſo ſtrong,
The world muſt think him in the wrong. Swift.

10. Preſence; mien.

Health, wealth, victory, and honour, are introduced; wiſdom enters the laſt, and ſo captivates with her appearance, that he gives himſelf up to her. Addiſon.

11. Probability; ſeeming; likelihood.

There is that, which hath no appearance, that this prieſt, being utterly unacquainted with the true perſon, according to whoſe pattern he ſhould ſhape his counterfeit, ſhould think it poſſible for him to inſtruct his player. Bacon.

Appe′arer, åp-pè′-rûr. n. ſ. [from To appear.] The perſon, that appears.

That owls and ravens are ominous appearers, and preſignify unlucky events, was an augurial conception. Brown.

Appe′asable, åp-pè′-zåbl. adj. [from To appeaſe.] That may be pacified; reconcileable.

Appe′aseableness, åp-pè′-zåbl-nês. n. ſ. [from To appeaſe.] The quality, of being eaſily appeaſed; reconcileableneſs.

To APPE′ASE, åp-pè′z. v. a. [appaiſer, Fr.]

1. To quiet; to put in a ſtate of peace.

By his council he appeaſeth the deep, and planteth iſlands therein. Eccles. xliii. 23.

England had no leiſure, to think of reformation; till the civil wars were appeaſed, and peace ſettled. Davies on Ireland.

2. To pacify; to reconcile; to ſtill wrath.

So Simon was appeaſed towards them, and fought no more againſt them. 1 Mac. xiii. 47.

O God! if my deep prayers cannot appeaſe thee, yet execute thy wrath on me alone. Shakeſp. Richard III.

The reſt ſhall here me call, and oft' be warn'd
Their ſinful ſtate, and to appeaſe betimes
Th' incenſed Deity. Milton.

3. To ſtill; to quiet.

The reſt
They cut, in legs and fillets for the feaſt;
Which drawn and ſerv'd, their hunger they appeaſe. Dryden.

Appe′asement, åp-pè′z-mênt. n. ſ. [from To appeaſe.] A ſtate of peace.

Being neither in numbers nor in courage great, partly by authority, partly by entreaty, they were reduced to ſome good appeaſements. Hayward.

Appe′aser, åp-pè′-zûr. n. ſ. [from To appeaſe.] He, that pacifies others; he, that quiets diſturbances.

Appe′llant, åp-pêl′-lånt. n. ſ. [appello, Lat. to call.]

1. A challenger; one, that ſummons another to anſwer, either in the liſts, or in the court of juſtice.

In the devotion of a ſubject's love,
And free from other miſbegotten hate,
Come I appellant to this princely preſence. Shak.

This is the day, appointed for the combat;
And ready are th' appellant and defendant,
Th' armourer and his man, to enter the liſts. Shakeſpeare.

Theſe ſhifts refuted, anſwer thy appellant,
Though by his blindneſs maim'd for high attempts,
Who now defies thee thrice to ſingle fight. Milton.

2. One, that appeals, from a lower to a higher power.

An appeal transfers the cognizance of the cauſe, to the ſuperior judge; ſo that, pending the appeal, nothing can be attempted in prejudice of the appellant. Ayliffe's Parergon.

Appe′llate, åp-pêl′-låte. n. ſ. [appellatus, Lat.] The perſon, appealed againſt.

An appellatory libel ought to contain the name of the party appellant; the name of him, from whoſe ſentence it is appealed; the name of him, to whom it is appealed; from what ſentence it is appealed; the day of the ſentence pronounced, and appeal interpoſed; and the name of the party appellate, or perſon againſt whom the appeal is lodged. Ayliffe's Parergon.

Appella′tion, åp-pêl-lå′-ſhûn. n. ſ. [appellatio, Lat.] Name; word, by which any thing is called.

Nor are always the ſame plants delivered under the ſame name and appellation. Browne's Vulgar Errours.

Good and evil commonly operate upon the mind of man, by reſpective names or appellations, by which they are notified and conveyed to the mind. South.

Appe′llative, åp-pêl′-lå-tîv. n. ſ. [appellativum, Lat.]

Words and names are either common or proper. Common names are ſuch, as ſtand for univerſal ideas, or a whole rank of beings, whether general or ſpecial; theſe are called appellatives: ſo fiſh, bird, man, city, river, are common names; and ſo are trout, eel, lobſter; for they all agree to many individuals, and ſome to many ſpecies. Watts's Logick.

Appe′llatively, åp-pêl′-lå-tîv-lŷ. adv. [from appellative.] According to the manner of nouns appellative; as, this man is a Hercules. Hercules is uſed appellatively, to ſignify a ſtrong man.

Appe′llatory, åp-pêl′-lå-tûr-rŷ. adj. [from appeal.] That, which contains an appeal. See Appellate.

Appe′llee, åp-pêl-lè′. n. ſ. [from appeal.] One, who is appealed againſt, and accuſed. Dict.

To APPE′ND, åp-pênd′. v. a. [appendo, Lat. to hang to any thing.]

1. To hang any thing, upon another; as, 'the 'inſcription was appended to the column; 'the ſeal is appended to the record.'

2. To add to ſomething, as an acceſſory, not a principal part.

App′endage, åp-pên′-dåje. n. ſ. [French.] Something added to another thing, without being neceſſary to its eſſence; as, a portico, to the houſe.

Modeſty is the appendage of ſobriety; and is to chaſtity, to temperance, and to humility, as the fringes are to a garment. Taylor's Rule of living holy.

None of the laws of motion (now eſtabliſhed) will ſerve, to account for the production, motion, or number of bodies, nor their appendages; though they may help us a little, to conceive their appearances. Cheyne.

He was ſo far, from over-valuing any of the appendages of life, that the thoughts of life did not affect him. Atterbury.

Appe′ndant, åp-pên′-dånt. adj. [French.]

1. Hanging to ſomething elſe.

2. Belonging to; annexed; concomitant.

He, that deſpiſes the world, and all its appendant vanities, is the moſt ſecure. Taylor.

He, that looks for the bleſſings appendant to the ſacrament, muſt expect them upon no terms, but of a worthy communion. Taylor.

Riches, multiplied beyond the proportion of our character, and the wants appendant to it, naturally diſpoſe men to forget God. Rogers.

3. In law.

Appendant is any thing, belonging to another; as acceſſorium principali, with the civilians; or adjunctum ſubjecto, with the logicians. An hoſpital may be appendant to a manour; a common of fiſhing, appendant to a freehold. Cowell.

Appe′ndant, åp-pên′-dånt. n. ſ. That, which belongs to another thing, as an accidental or adventitious part.

Pliny gives an account of the inventors of the forms and appendants of ſhipping. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

A word, a look, a tread, will ſtrike, as they are appendants to external ſymmetry, or indications of the beauty of the mind. Grew.

To Appe′ndicate, åp-pên′-dŷ-kåte. v. a. [appendo, Lat.] To add to another thing.

In a palace there is the caſe or fabrick of the ſtructure, and there are certain additaments; as, various furniture, and curious motions of divers things appendicated to it. Hale.

Appe′ndix, åp-pên′-dîks. n. ſ. [appendices, plur. Lat.]

1. Something appended, or added, to another thing.

The cherubim were never intended, as an object of worſhip; becauſe they were only the appendices to another thing. But a thing is then propoſed, as an object of worſhip; when it is ſet up by itſelf, and not by way of addition or ornament to another thing. Stillingfleet.

Normandy became an appendix to England, the nobler dominion; and received a greater conformity of their laws, to the Engliſh, than they gave to it. Hale's Civil Law of England.

2. An adjunct or concomitant.

All concurrent appendices of the action ought to be ſurveyed, in order to pronounce with truth concerning it. Watts.

To APPERTA′IN, åp-pêr-tå′n. v. n. [appertenir, Fr.]

1. To belong to, as of right; with to.

The honour of deviſing this doctrine, that religion ought to be enforced by the ſword, would be found appertaining to Mahomed, the falſe prophet. Raleigh.

The Father t' whom (in heav'n ſupreme)
Kingdom, and power, and glory appertains,
Hath honour'd me according to his will. Par. Loſt.

2. To belong to, by nature or appointment.

If the ſoul of man did ſerve, only to give him being in this life; then things appertaining to this life would content him, as we ſee they do other creatures. Hooker.

And they roaſted the paſſover with fire, as appertaineth: as for the ſacrifices, they ſod them in braſs pots. 1 Eſdras.

Both of them ſeem not to generate any other effect, but ſuch as appertaineth to their proper objects and ſenſes. Bacon.

Is it expected, I ſhould know no ſecrets
That appertain to you? Shakeſp. Julius Cæſar.

Of luſtful appetence; to ſing, to dance,
To dreſs, to troule the tongue, and roll the eyes. Milton.

Appetibi′lity, ȧp-pė-tĭ-bĭl′-ĭ-tỳ. n. ſ. [from appetible.] The quality of being deſirable.

That elicitation, which the ſchools intend, is a deducing of the power of the will into act, merely from the appetibility of the object; as a man draws a child after him, with the ſight of a green bough. Bramhall againſt Hobbes.

A′ppetible, ȧp′-pė-tĭbl. adj. [appetibilis, Lat.] Deſirable; that, which may be the object of appetite.

Power, both to ſlight the moſt appetible objects, and to controul the moſt unruly paſſions. Bramhall againſt Hobbes.

A′PPETITE, ȧp′-pė-tite. n. ſ. [appetitus, Lat.]

1. The natural deſire of good; the inſtinct, by which we are led to ſeek pleaſure.

The will, properly and ſtrictly taken, as it is (of things, which are referred unto the end, that man deſireth) differeth greatly from that inferiour natural deſire, which we call appetite. The object of appetite is, whatſoever ſenſible good may be wiſhed for; the object of will is that good, which reaſon does lead us to ſeek. Hooker.

2. The deſire of ſenſual pleaſure.

Why, ſhe would hang on him,
As if increaſe of appetite had grown
By what it fed on. Shakeſp. Hamlet.

Urge his hateful luxury,
And beſtial appetite in change of luſt. Shakeſpeare's Richard III.

Each tree,
Loaden with faireſt fruit, that hung to th' eye
Tempting, ſtirr'd in me ſudden appetite
To pluck and eat. Milton's Paradiſe Loſt.

3. Violent longing; eagerneſs after anything.

No man could enjoy his life, his wife, or goods; if a mightier man had an appetite, to take the ſame from him. Davies.

Hopton had an extraordinary appetite, to engage Waller in a battle. Clarendon.

4. The thing eagerly deſired.

Power being the natural appetite of princes, a limited monarch cannot gratify it. Swift.

5. Keenneſs of ſtomach; hunger; deſire of food.

There be four principal cauſes of appetite; the refrigeration of the ſtomach, joined with ſome dryneſs; contraction, vellication, and abſterſion; beſides hunger, which is an emptineſs. Bacon's Natural Hiſtory.

There is continual abundance, which creates ſuch an appetite in your reader; that he is not cloyed with any thing, but ſatisfied with all. Dryd.

6. It has ſometimes of, before the object of deſire.

The new officer's nature needed ſome reſtraint to his immoderate appetite of power. Clarendon.

7. Sometimes to.

We have generally ſuch an appetite to praiſe, that we greedily ſuck it in. Government of the Tongue.

Appeti′tion, ȧp-pė-tĭſh′-un. n. ſ. [appetitio, Lat.] Deſire.

The actual appetition or faſtening our affections on him. Hammond's Practical Catechiſm.

We find in animals an eſtimative or judicial faculty, an appetition or averſation. Judge Hale.

A′ppetitive, ȧp′-pė-tĭt-ĭv. adj. [from appetite.] That, which deſires; that, which has the quality of deſiring.

The will is not a bare appetitive power, as that of the ſenſual appetite; but is a rational appetite. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

I find in myſelf an appetitive faculty always in exerciſe, in the very heat of activity and invigoration. Norris.

To APPLA′UD, ȧp-plȧ′d. v. a. [applaudo, Lat.]

I would applaud thee to the very echo,
That ſhould applaud again. Shakeſp. Macbeth.

2. To praiſe in general.

Nations unborn your mighty names ſhall ſound;
And worlds applaud, that muſt not yet be found! Pope.

Appla′uder, ȧp-plȧ′-dur. n. ſ. [from applaud.] He, that praiſes or commends.

I had the voice of my ſingle reaſon againſt it, drowned in the noiſe of a multitude of applauders. Glanville's Scepſis.

Appla′use, ȧp-plȧ′z. n. ſ. [applauſus, Lat.] Approbation, loudly expreſſed; praiſe: properly a clap.

This general applauſe, and chearful ſhout,
Argues your wiſdom and your love to Richard. Shakeſpeare.

Sylla wept,
And chid her barking waves into attention;
And fell Charybdis murmur'd ſoft applauſe. Milton.

Thoſe that are ſo fond of applauſe, how little do they taſte it, when they have it! South.

See their wide-ſtreaming wounds! They neither came,
For pride of empire, nor deſire of fame:
Kings fight for kingdoms, madmen for applauſe;
But love for love alone, that crowns the lover's cauſe. Dryden's Fables.

A′PPLE, ȧp′l. n. ſ. [æppel, Saxon.]

1. The fruit of the apple-tree.

Tall thriving trees confeſs'd the fruitful mold;
The redd'ning apple ripens here to gold. Pope's Od.

2. The pupil of the eye.

He inſtructed him; he kept him, as the apple of his eye. Deut. xxxii. 10.

A′pple, ȧp′l of Love.

Apples of love are of three ſorts; the moſt common having long trailing branches, with rough leaves and yellow joints, ſucceeded by apples, as they are called, at the joints; not round, but bunched; of a pale orange ſhining pulp, and ſeeds within. Mortimer's Huſbandry.

A′pple-gra′ft, ȧp′l-grȧf′t. n. ſ. [from apple and graft.] A twig of apple-tree, grafted upon the ſtock of another tree.

We have ſeen three and twenty ſorts of apple grafts, upon the ſame old plant; moſt of them, adorned with fruit. Boyle.

Apple-ta′rt, ȧp′l-tȧ′rt. n. ſ. [from apple and tart.] A tart, made of apples.

What, up and down carved like an apple-tart! Shakeſpeare.

A′pple-tree, ȧp′l-trė′. n. ſ. [from apple and tree.]

The fruit of this tree is (for the moſt part) hollowed about the foot ſtalk; the cells, incloſing the ſeed, are ſeparated by cartilaginous partitions; the juice of the fruit is ſouriſh, the tree large and ſpreading; the flowers conſiſt of five leaves, expanding in form of a roſe. It behoveth that the world ſhould be held in awe, not by a vain ſurmiſe, but a true apprehenſion of ſomewhat which no man may think himſelf able to withſtand. Hooker.

And he the future evil ſhall no leſs
In apprehenſion, than in ſubſtance, feel. Milton.

The apprehenſion of what was to come from an unknown, at leaſt unacknowledged ſucceſſour to the crown, clouded much of that proſperity. Clarendon.

As they have no apprehenſion of theſe things, ſo they need no comfort againſt them. Tillotſon.

After the death of his nephew Caligula, Claudius was in no ſmall apprehenſion for his own life. Addiſon.

5. Suſpicion of ſomething to happen, or be done.

I'll note you in my book of memory,
And ſcourge you for this apprehenſion. Shakeſp.

That he might take away the apprehenſion, that he meant ſuddenly to depart, he ſent out orders, which he was ſure would come into the enemies hands, to two or three villages, that they ſhould ſend proportions of corn into Baſinghouſe. Clarendon.

6. Seizure.

See that he be convey'd unto the Tower:
And go we, brothers, to the man that took him,
To queſtion of his apprehenſion. Shakeſp.

7. The power of ſeizing, catching, or holding.

A lobſter hath the chely or great claw of one ſide longer than the other, but this is not their leg, but a part of apprehenſion whereby they ſeize upon their prey. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

Apprehe'nsive, åp-prê-hěn'-sǐv. adj. [from apprehend.]

1. Quick to underſtand.

They are not at all apprehenſive of evils at a diſtance, nor tormented with the fearful proſpect of what may befal them hereafter. Tillotſon.

3. Perceptive feeling.

Thoughts, my tormentors, arm'd with deadly ſtings,
Mangle my apprehenſive tendereſt parts. Milton.

Apprehe'nsively, åp-prê-hěn'-sǐv-lý. adv. [from apprehenſive.] In an apprehenſive manner.

Apprehe'nsiveness, åp-prê-hěn'-sǐv-něs. n. ſ. [from apprehenſive.] The quality of being apprehenſive.

Whereas the vowels are much more difficult to be taught, you will find, by falling upon them laſt, great help by the apprehenſiveneſs already gained in learning the conſonants. Holder.

APPRE'NTICE, åp-prěn'-tǐs. n. ſ. [apprenti, Fr.] One that is bound by covenant to ſerve another man of trade, for a certain term of years, upon condition that the artificer, or tradeſman, ſhall, in the mean time, endeavour to inſtruct him in his art or myſtery. Cowell.

Love enjoined ſuch diligence, that no apprentice, no, no bond ſlave, could ever be more ready than that young princeſs was. Sidney.

He found him ſuch an apprentice, as knew well enough how to ſet up for himſelf. Wotton.

This rule ſets the painter at liberty; it teaches him, that he ought not to be ſubject himſelf ſervilely, and be bound like an apprentice to the rules of his art. Dryden's Dufreſnoy.

To Appre'ntice, åp-prěn'-tǐs. v. a. [from the noun] To put out to a maſter as an apprentice.

Him portion'd maids, apprentic'd orphans bleſt,
The young who labour, and the old who reſt. Pope.

Muſt I not ſerve a long apprenticehood
To foreign paſſages, and in the end,
Having my freedom, boaſt of nothing elſe
But that I was a journeyman to grief? Shakeſp.

Appre'nticeship, åp-prěn'-tǐs-shǐp. n. ſ. [from apprentice.] The years which an apprentice is to paſs under a maſter.

In every art, the ſimpleſt that is, there is an apprenticeſhip neceſſary, before it can be expected one ſhould work. Digby.

Many ruſhed into the miniſtry, as being the only calling that they could profeſs, without ſerving any apprenticeſhip. South.

To Appri'ze, åp-prî'ze. v. a. [apprendre; part. appris, Fr.] To inform; to give the knowledge of any thing.

He conſiders the tendency of ſuch a virtue or vice; he is well apprized, that the repreſentation of ſome of theſe things may convince the underſtanding, and ſome may terrify the conſcience. Watts.

It is fit he be apprized of a few things, that may prevent his miſtaking. Cheyne.

But if appriz'd of the ſevere attack,
The country be ſhut up, lur'd by the ſcent,
On church-yard drear (inhuman to relate)
The diſappointed prowlers fall. Thomſon.

To APPRO'ACH, åp-prô'tsh. v. n. [approcher, Fr.]

'Tis time to look about: the powers of the kingdom approach apace. Shakeſp.

We ſuppoſe Ulyſſes approaching toward Polypheme. Broome.

2. To draw near, as time.

Hark! I hear the ſound of coaches,
The hour of attack approaches. Gay.

3. To make a progreſs towards, in the figurative ſenſe, as mentally.

He ſhall approach unto me: for who is this that engaged his heart to approach unto me? Jer. xxx. 21.

To have knowledge in all the objects of contemplation, is what the mind can hardly attain unto; the inſtances are few of thoſe who have, in any meaſure, approached towards it. Locke.

4. To come near, by natural affinity, or reſemblance; as, the cat approaches to the tiger.

To Appro'ach, åp-prô'tsh. v. a.

1. To bring near to. This ſenſe is rather French than Engliſh.

This they will nimbly perform, if objected to the extremes; but ſlowly, and not at all, if approached unto their roots. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

By plunging paper thoroughly in weak ſpirit of wine, and approaching it to a candle, the ſpirituous parts will burn, without harming the paper. Boyle.

Approach'd, and looking underneath the ſun,
He ſaw proud Arcite. Dryden.

2. To come near to.

He was an admirable poet, and thought even to have approached Homer. Temple.

Appro'ach, åp-prô'tsh. n. ſ. [from the verb.]

1. The act of drawing near.

If I could bid the ſeventh welcome with ſo good a heart as I can bid the other five farewell, I ſhould be glad of his approach. Shakeſp. Merch. of Venice.

'Tis with our ſouls
As with our eyes, that after a long darkneſs
Are dazzled at th' approach of ſudden light. Denh.

2. Acceſs.

Honour hath in it the vantage ground to do good; the approach to kings and principal perſons; and the raiſing of a man's own fortunes. Bacon.

3. Hoſtile advance.

For England his approaches makes as fierce
As waters to the ſucking of a gulph. Shakeſp.

4. Means of advancing.

Againſt beleagur'd heav'n the giants move;
Hills pil'd on hills, on mountains mountains lie,
To make their mad approaches to the ſky. Dryd.

Appro'acher, åp-prỏ'-tshůr. n. ſ. [from approach.] The perſon that approaches or draws near.

Thou gav'ſt thine ears, like tapſters, that bid
welcome,
To knaves and all approachers. Shakeſpeare.

Appro'achment, åp-prỏ'tsh-mėnt. n. ſ. [from approach.] The act of coming near.

As for ice, it will not concrete but in the approachment of the air, as we have made trial in glaſſes of water, which will not eaſily freeze. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

Approba'tion, åp-prỏ-bå'-shůn. n. ſ. [approbatio, Lat.]

1. The act of approving, or expreſſing himſelf pleaſed or ſatisfied.

That not paſt me, but
By learned approbation of my judges. Shakeſp.

2. The liking of any thing.

There is no poſitive law of men, whether received by formal conſent, as in councils, or by ſecret approbation, as in cuſtoms, but may be taken away. Hooker.

The bare approbation of the worth and goodneſs of a thing, is not properly the willing of that thing; yet men do very commonly account it ſo. South.

3. Atteſtation; ſupport.

How many now in health
Shall drop their blood in approbation
Of what your reverence ſhall incite us to.
Shakeſpeare.

Appro'of, åp-prỏ'f. n. ſ. [from approve, as proof from prove.] Approbation; commendation: a word rightly derived, but old.

O moſt perilous mouths,
That bear in them one and the ſelf-ſame tongue
Either of condemnation or approof! Shakeſp.

To Appro'perate, åp-prỏ'-pẻr-åte. v. a. [appropero, Lat.] To haſten; to ſet forward. Dict.

To Appropi'nquate, åp-prỏ-pln'-kwåte. v. n. [appropinquo, Lat.] To draw nigh unto; to approach.

To Appropi'nque, åp-prỏ-plnk'. v. n. [appropinquo, Lat.] To approach; to draw near to. A ludicrous word.

The clotted blood within my hoſe,
That from my wounded body flows,
With mortal criſis doth portend
My days to appropinque an end. Hudibras.

Appro'priable, åp-prỏ'-prý-åbl. adj. [from appropriate.] That which may be appropriated; that which may be reſtrained to ſomething particular.

This conceit, applied unto the original of man, and the beginning of the world, is more juſtly appropriable unto its end. Brown's Vulg. Errours.

To APPRO'PRIATE, åp-prỏ'-prýåte. v. a. [approprier, Fr. approprio, low Lat.]

1. To conſign to ſome particular uſe or perſon.

Things ſanctified were thereby in ſuch ſort appropriated unto God, as that they might never afterwards again be made common. Hooker.

As for this ſpot of ground, this perſon, this thing, I have ſelected and appropriated, I have incloſed it to myſelf and my own uſe; and I will endure no ſharer, no rival, or companion in it. South.

Some they appropriated to the gods,
And ſome to publick, ſome to private ends.
Roſcommon.

Marks of honour are appropriated to the magiſtrate, that he might be invited to reverence himſelf. Atterbury.

2. To claim or exerciſe; to take to himſelf by an excluſive right.

To themſelves appropriating
The ſpirit of God, promis'd alike and giv'n
To all believers. Milton.

Why ſhould people engroſs and appropriate the common benefits of fire, air, and water, to themſelves? L'Eſtrange.

Every body elſe has an equal title to it; and therefore he cannot appropriate, he cannot incloſe, without the conſent of all his fellow commoners, all mankind. Locke.

3. To make peculiar to ſomething; to annex by combination.

He need but be furniſhed with verſes of ſacred ſcripture; and his ſyſtem, that has appropriated them to the orthodoxy of his church, makes them immediately irrefragable arguments. Locke.

We, by degrees, get ideas and names, and learn their appropriated connection one with another. Locke.

4. In law, to alienate a benefice. See Appropriation.

Before Richard II. it was lawful to appropriate the whole fruits of a benefice to any abbey, the houſe finding one to ſerve the cure; that king redreſſed that horrid evil. Ayliffe.

Appro'priate, åp-prỏ'-prýåte. adj. [from the verb.] Peculiar; conſigned to ſome particular uſe or perſon; belonging peculiarly.

He did inſtitute a band of fifty archers, by the name of yeomen of his guard; and that it might be thought to be rather a matter of dignity, than any matter of diffidence appropriate to his own caſe, he made an ordinance not temporary, but to hold in ſucceſſion for ever. Bacon.

The heathens themſelves had an apprehenſion of the neceſſity of ſome appropriate acts of divine worſhip. Stillingfleet.

Appropria'tion, åp-prỏ-prý-å'-shůn. n. ſ. [from appropriate.]

1. The application of ſomething to a particular purpoſe.

The mind ſhould have diſtinct ideas of the things, and retain the particular name, with its peculiar appropriation to that idea. Locke.

2. The claim of any thing as peculiar.

He doth nothing but talk of his horſe, and make a great appropriation to his good parts, that he can ſhoe him himſelf. Shakeſpeare.

3. The fixing a particular ſignification to a word.

The name of faculty may, by an appropriation that diſguiſes its true ſenſe, palliate the abſurdity. Locke.

4. In law, a ſevering of a benefice eccleſiaſtical to the proper and perpetual uſe of ſome religious houſe, or dean and chapter, biſhoprick, or college; becauſe, as perſons ordinarily have no right of fee ſimple, theſe, by reaſon of their perpetuity, are accounted owners of the fee ſimple; and therefore are called proprietors. To an appropriation, after the licence obtained of the king in chancery, the conſent of the dioceſan, patron, and incumbent, are neceſſary, if the church be full: but if the church be void, the dioceſan and the patron, upon the king's licence, may conclude. Cowell.

Appropria'tor, åp-prỏ-prý-å'-tůr. n. ſ. [from appropriate.] He that is poſſeſſed of an appropriated benefice.

Theſe appropriators, by reaſon of their perpetuities, are accounted owners of the fee ſimple; and therefore are called proprietors. Ayliffe's Parerg.

Appro'vable, åp-prỏ'-våbl. adj. [from approve.] That which merits approbation.

The ſolid reaſon, or confirmed experience, of any men, is very approvable in what profeſſion ſoever. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

Appro'val, åp-prỏ'-vål. n. ſ. [from approve.] Approbation; a word rarely found.

There is a cenſor of juſtice and manners, without whoſe approval no capital ſentences are to be executed. Temple.

Appro'vance, åp-prỏ'-våns. n. ſ. [from approve.] Approbation: a word not much uſed.

A man of his learning ſhould not ſo lightly have been carried away with old wives' tales from approvance of his own reaſon. Spenſer.

Should ſhe ſeem
Soft'ning the leaſt approvance to beſtow,
Their colours burniſh, and, by hope inſpir'd,
They briſk advance. Thomſon.

To Appro've, åp-prỏ'v. v. a. [approuver, Fr. approbo, Lat.]

1. To like; to be pleaſed with.

There can be nothing poſſibly evil which God approveth, and that he approveth much more than he doth command. Hooker.

What power was that, whereby Medea ſaw,
And well approv'd, and prais'd the better courſe,
When her rebellious ſenſe did ſo withdraw
Her feeble pow'rs, that ſhe purſu'd the worſe?
Davies.

2. To expreſs liking.

It is looked upon as inſolence for a man to ſet up his own opinion againſt that of ſome learned doctor, or otherwiſe approved writer. Locke.

3. To prove; to ſhow; to juſtify.

His meaning was not, that Archimedes could ſimply in nothing be deceived; but that he had in ſuch ſort approved his ſkill, that he ſeemed worthy of credit for ever after, in matters appertaining to the ſcience he was ſkilful in. Hooker.

In religion,
What damned errour, but ſome ſober brow
Will bleſs it, and approve it with a text? Shakeſp.

I am ſorry
That he approves the common liar, Fame,
Who ſpeaks him thus at Rome. Shakeſpeare.

Would'ſt thou approve thy conſtancy? Approve
Firſt thy obedience. Milton.

Refer all the actions of this ſhort life to that ſtate which will never end; and this will approve itſelf to be wiſdom at the laſt, whatever the world judge of it now. Tillotſon.

4. To experience: not in uſe.

Oh! 'tis the curſe in love, and ſtill approv'd,
When women cannot love, where they're belov'd.
Shakeſpeare.

5. To make, or ſhow, to be worthy of approbation.

The firſt care and concern muſt be to approve himſelf to God by righteouſneſs, holineſs, and purity. Rogers.

6. It has of before the object, when it ſignifies to be pleaſed, but may be uſed without a prepoſition; as, I approve your letter, or, of your letter.

I ſhewed you a piece of black and white ſtuff, juſt ſent from the dyer; which you were pleaſed to approve of, and be my cuſtomer for. Swift.

Appro'vement, åp-prỏ'v-mėnt. n. ſ. [from approve.] Approbation; liking.

It is certain that at the firſt you were all of my opinion, and that I did nothing without your approvement. Hayward.

Appro'ver, åp-prỏ'-vůr. n. ſ. [from approve.]

1. He, that approves.

2. He, that makes trial.

Their diſcipline,
Now mingled with their courages, will make known
To their approvers; they are people ſuch,
As mend upon the world. Shakeſpeare.

3. In our common law, one that, confeſſing felony of himſelf, appealeth or accuſeth another, one or more, to be guilty of the ſame: and he is called ſo, becauſe he muſt prove what he hath alleged in his appeal. Cowell.

Appro'ximate, ắp-prŏks'-ỷ-mắte. adj. [from ad to, and proximus next, Lat.] Approaching near to.

Approxima'tion, ắp-prŏks-ỷ-mắ'-ſhŭn. n. ſ. [from approximate.]

1. Approach to any thing.

Unto the latitude of Capricorn, or the winter ſolſtice, it had been a ſpring; for, unto that poſition, it had been in a middle point, and that of aſcent or approximation. Brown's Vulg. Errours.

The fiery region gains upon the inferiour elements; a neceſſary conſequent of the ſun's gradual approximation towards the earth. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

Quadrupeds are better placed according to the degrees of their approximation to the human ſhape. Grew's Muſæum.

2. In ſcience, a continual approach nearer ſtill, and nearer, to the quantity ſought, though perhaps without a poſſibility of ever arriving at it exactly.

Appu'lse, ắp'-pŭls. n. ſ. [appulſus, Lat.] The act of ſtriking againſt any thing.

An hectic fever is the innate heat kindled into a deſtructive fire, through the appulſe of ſaline ſteams. Harvey.

In vowels, the paſſage of the mouth is open and free, without any appulſe of an organ of ſpeech to another: but, in all conſonants, there is an appulſe of the organs. Holder.

To A'pricate, ắ'-prỷ-kắt. v. n. [apricor, Lat.] To baſk in the ſun. Dict.

[Latin.] A corroſive liquor, made by diſtilling purified nitre with calcined vitriol, or rectified oil of vitriol in a ſtrong heat: the liquor, which riſes in fumes red as blood, being collected, is the ſpirit of nitre, or aqua fortis; which ſerves as a menſtruum, for diſſolving of ſilver, and all other metals, except gold. But, if ſea ſalt or ſal ammoniack be added to aqua fortis, it commences aqua regia, and will then diſſolve no metal but gold. Chambers.

The diſſolving of ſilver in aqua fortis, and gold in aqua regia, and not vice verſâ, would not be difficult to know. Locke.

AQUA MARI'NA, ắ'-kwắ-mắ-rĭ''-nắ, of the Italian lapidaries, is of a ſea or bluiſh green. This ſtone ſeems to me, to be the beryllus of Pliny. Woodward.

AQUA MIRA'BILIS, ắ'-kwắ-mỷ-rắ''-bĭls. [Latin.] The wonderful water, is prepared of cloves, galangals, cubebs, mace, cardomums, nutmegs, ginger, and ſpirit of wine, digeſted twenty-four hours, then diſtilled.

AQUA RE'GIA, or AQUA REGA'LIS, ắ'-kwắ-rĕ''-jĭa. [Latin.] An acid water, ſo called becauſe it diſſolves gold, the king of metals. Its eſſential ingredient is common ſea ſalt, the only ſalt which will operate rate on gold. It is prepared by mixing common ſea ſalt, or ſal ammoniack, or the ſpirit of them, with ſpirit of nitre, or common aqua fortis. Chambers.

He adds to his complex idea of gold, that of fixedneſs or ſolubility in aqua regia. Locke.

AQUA-VITÆ, å'-kwå-vì''-tè. [Lat.] It is commonly underſtood of what is otherwiſe called brandy, or ſpirit of wine, either ſimple or prepared with aromaticks. But ſome appropriate the term brandy to what is procured from wine, or the grape; aqua-vitæ, to that drawn after the ſame manner from malt. Chambers.

I will rather truſt a Fleming with my butter, an Iriſhman with my aqua vitæ bottle, or a thief to walk with my ambling gelding, than my wife with herſelf. Shakeſp.

AQUA'TICK, å-kwåt'-ìk. adj. [aquaticus, Lat. from aqua, water.]

1. That, which inhabits the water.

The vaſt variety of worms found in animals, as well terreſtrial as aquatick, are taken into their bodies by meats and drinks. Ray on the Creation.

Brutes may be conſidered, as either aerial, terreſtrial, aquatick, or amphibious. Aquatick are thoſe whoſe conſtant abode is upon the water. Locke.

2. Applied to plants, that which grows in the water.

Flags, and ſuch like aquaticks, are beſt deſtroyed by draining. Mortimer's Huſbandry.

A'QUATILE, å'-kwå-tìle. adj. [aquatilis, Lat.] That, which inhabits the water.

We behold many millions of the aquatile or water frog, in ditches and ſtanding plaſhes. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

A'QUEDUCT, å'-kwè-dùct. n. ſ. [aquæductus, Lat.] A conveyance, made for carrying water from one place to another; made on uneven ground, to preſerve the level of the water, and convey it by a canal. Some aqueducts are under ground, and others above it, ſupported by arches.

Among the remains of old Rome, the grandeur of the commonwealth ſhews itſelf chiefly in temples, highways, aqueducts, walls, and bridges of the city. Addiſon.

Hither the rills of water are convey'd,
In curious aqueducts; by nature laid,
To carry all the humour. Blackmore.

A'QUEOUS, å'-kwè-ùs. adj. [from aqua, water, Lat.] Watery.

The vehement fire, requiſite to its fuſion, forced away all the aqueous and fugitive moiſture. Ray on the Creation.

A'QUEOUSNESS, å'-kwè-ùs-nès. n. ſ. [aquoſitas, Lat.] Wateriſhneſs.

A'QUILINE, åk'-wỳ-lìne. adj. [aquilinus, Lat. from aquila an eagle.] Reſembling an eagle; when applied to the noſe, hooked.

His noſe was aquiline, his eyes were blue,
Ruddy his lips, and freſh and fair his hue. Dryd.

Gryps ſignifies ſome kind of eagle or vulture; from whence the epithet grypus, for an hooked or aquiline noſe. Brown.

AQUO'SE, å-kwò'ſe. adj. [from aqua, Lat.] Watery; having the qualities of water. Dict.

AQUO'SITY, å-kwòs'-ìt-ỳ. n. ſ. [from aquoſe.] Waterineſs. Dict.

A. R. anno regni; that is, the year of the reign: as, A. R. G. R. 20. Anno regni Georgii regis vigeſimo, in the twentieth year of the reign of king George.

A'RABLE, år'-åbl. adj. [from aro, Lat. to plough.] Fit for the plough; fit for tillage; productive of corn.

His eyes he open'd, and beheld a field,
Part arable, and tilth; whereon were ſheaves
New reap'd. Milton.

'Tis good for arable; a glebe, that asks
Tough teams of oxen, and laborious taſks. Dryden.

Having but very little arable land, they are forced to fetch all their corn from foreign countries. Addiſon.

ARACHNOI'DES, å-rak''-nò-ì'-dès. n. ſ. [from ἀράχνη a ſpider's web, and εἶδος form.]

1. One of the tunicks of the eye, ſo called from its reſemblance to a cobweb.

As to the tunicks of the eye, many things might be taken notice of; the prodigious fineneſs of the arachnoides, the acute ſenſe of the retina. Derham.

2. It is alſo a fine thin tranſparent membrane; which, lying between the dura and the pia mater, is ſuppoſed to inveſt the whole ſubſtance of the brain. Chambers.

ARA'IGNEE, å-rayn-nè. n. ſ. [Fr.] A term in fortification, which ſometimes denotes a branch, return, or gallery of a mine. Dict.

ARA'NEOUS, å-rå'-nyùs. adj. [from aranea, Lat. a cobweb.] Reſembling a cobweb.

The curious araneous membrance of the eye conſtringeth and dilateth it, and ſo varieth its focus. Derham.

ARA'TORY, år'-å-tùr-rỳ. adj. [from aro, Lat. to plough.] That, which contributes to tillage. Dict.

A'RBALIST, å'r-bå-lìſt. n. ſ. [from arcus a bow, and baliſta an engine to throw ſtones. A croſs-bow.

It is reported by William Brito, that the arcubaliſta or arbaliſt was firſt ſhewed to the French, by our king Richard the firſt; who was ſhortly after ſlain by a quarrel thereof. Camden.

A'RBITER, å'r-bì-tùr. n. ſ. [Lat.]

1. A judge appointed by the parties, to whoſe determination they voluntarily ſubmit.

He would put himſelf into the king's hands, and make him arbiter of the peace. Bacon.

2. One, who has the power of deciſion or regulation; a judge.

Next him, high arbiter,
Chance governs all. Milton.

His majeſty, in this great conjuncture, ſeems to be generally allowed for the ſole arbiter of the affairs of Chriſtendom. Temple.

A'RBITRABLE, å'r-bì-tråbl. adj. [from arbitror, Lat.] Arbitrary; depending upon the will.

The ordinary revenue of a parſonage is in land, called the glebe; in tythe, a ſet part of our goods, rendered to God; in other offerings, beſtowed upon God by the people, either in ſuch arbitrable proportion, as their own devotion moveth them, or as the laws or cuſtoms of particular places do require them. Spelman.

ARBI'TRAMENT, år-bìt'-trå-mènt. n. ſ. [from arbitror, Lat.] Will; determination; choice. This ſhould be written arbitrement.

Stand faſt! to ſtand or fall,
Free in thine own arbitrament it ſtands:
Perfect within, no outward aid require,
And all temptation to tranſgreſs repel. Milton.

A'RBITRARILY, å'r-bì-trå-rì-lỳ. adv. [from arbitrary.] With no other rule, than the will; deſpotically; abſolutely.

He governed arbitrarily: he was expelled, and came to the deſerved end of all tyrants. Dryden.

ARBITRA'RIOUS, år-bì-trå'-ryùs. adj. [from arbitrarius, Lat.] Arbitrary; depending on the will.

Theſe are ſtanding and irrepealable truths; ſuch, as have no precarious exiſtence, or arbitrarious dependence upon any will or underſtanding whatſoever. Norris.

ARBITRA'RIOUSLY, år-bì-trå'-ryùs-lỳ. adv. [from arbitrarious.] Arbitrarily; according to mere will and pleaſure.

Where words are impoſed arbitrariouſly, diſtorted from their common uſe; the mind muſt be led into miſpriſion. Glanville.

A'RBITRARY, å'r-bì-trå-rỳ. adj. [arbitrarius, Lat.]

1. Deſpotick; abſolute; bound by no law; following the will without reſtraint. It is applied both to perſons and things.

In vain the Tyrian queen reſigns her life,
For the chaſte glory of a virtuous wife;
If lying bards may falſe amours rehearſe,
And blaſt her name with arbitrary verſe. Walſh.

Their regal tyrants ſhall with bluſhes hide
Their little luſts of arbitrary pride,
Nor bear to ſee their vaſſals ty'd. Prior.

2. Depending on no rule; capricious.

It may be perceived, with what inſecurity we aſcribe effects, depending on the natural period of time, unto arbitrary calculations, and ſuch as vary at pleaſure. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

To A'RBITRATE, å'r-bì-tràte. v. a. [arbitror, Lat.]

1. To decide; to determine.

This might have been prevented, and made whole,
With very eaſy arguments of love;
Which now, the manage of two kingdoms muſt,
With fearful bloody iſſue, arbitrate. Shakeſp.

2. To judge of.

Yet, where an equal poiſe of hope and fear
Does arbitrate th' event, my nature is,
That I incline to hope, rather than fear. Milton.

To A'RBITRATE, å'r-bì-tràte. v. n. To give judgment.

It did arbitrate upon the ſeveral reports of ſenſe, not like a drowſy judge, only hearing, but alſo directing their verdict. South.

A'RBITRARINESS, å'r-bì-trå-rì-nès. n. ſ. [from arbitrary.] Deſpoticalneſs; tyranny.

He, that by harſhneſs of nature, and arbitrarineſs of commands, uſes his children like ſervants, is what they mean by a tyrant. Temple.

ARBITRA'TION, år-bì-trå'-ſhùn. n. ſ. [from arbitror, Lat.] The determination of a cauſe, by a judge mutually agreed on by the parties contending.

ARBITRA'TOR, å'r-bì-trå'-tùr. n. ſ. [from arbitrate.]

1. An extraordinary judge between party and party, choſen by their mutual conſent. Cowell.

Be a good ſoldier, or upright truſtee,
An arbitrator from corruption free. Dryden.

2. A governor; a preſident.

Though heav'n be ſhut,
And heav'n's high arbitrator ſit ſecure
In his own ſtrength; this place may be expos'd. Milton.

3. He, that has the power of preſcribing to others without limit or controul.

Another Blenheim or Ramillies will make the confederates maſters of their own terms, and arbitrators of a peace. Addiſon on the State of the War.

4. The determiner; he, that puts an end to any affair.

But now the arbitrator of deſpairs,
Juſt death, kind umpire of man's miſeries,
With ſweet enlargement doth diſmiſs me hence. Shakeſp.

The end crowns all;
And that old common arbitrator, time,
Will one day end it. Shakeſp.

ARBI'TREMENT, år-bìt'-trè-mènt. n. ſ. [from arbitror, Lat.]

1. Deciſion; determination.

I know, the knight is incenſed againſt you, even to a mortal arbitrement; but nothing of the circumſtance more. Shakeſp.

We of the offending ſide
Muſt keep aloof from ſtrict arbitrement. Shakeſp.

Aid was granted, and the quarrel brought to the arbitrement of the ſword. Hayward.

2. Compromiſe.

Lukewarm perſons think, they may accommodate points of religion by middle ways and witty reconcilements; as if they would make an arbitrement between God and man. Bacon.

A'RBORARY, å'r-bô-rå-rŷ. adj. [arborarius, Lat.] Belonging to a tree. Dict.

A'RBORET, å'r-bô-rèt. n. ſ. [arbor, Lat. a tree.] A ſmall tree or ſhrub.

No arboret, with painted bloſſoms dreſt,
And ſmelling ſweet; but there it might be found,
To bud out fair, and her ſweet ſmells throw all around. Fairy Queen.

Now hid, now ſeen,
Among thick woven arborets, and flow'rs
Imbroider'd on each bank Milton.

ARBO'REOUS, år-bô'-ryůs. adj. [arboreus, Lat.]

1. Belonging to trees; conſtituting a tree.

A grain of muſtard becomes arboreous. Brown.

2. A term in botany, to diſtinguiſh ſuch funguſes or moſſes as grow upon trees, from thoſe that grow on the ground. Quincy.

They ſpeak properly, who make it an arboreous excreſcence, or rather a ſuperplant bred of a viſcous and ſuperfluous lopp, which the tree itſelf cannot aſſimulate. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

A'RBORIST, å'r-bô-rìſt. n. ſ. [arboriſte, Fr. from arbor a tree.] A naturaliſt, who makes trees his ſtudy.

The nature of the mulberry, which the arboriſts obſerve to be long in the begetting his buds; but, the cold ſeaſons being paſt, he ſhoots them all out in a night. Howel's Vocal Foreſt.

A'RBOROUS, å'r-bô-růs. adj. [from arbor, Lat.] Belonging to a tree.

From under ſhady arborous roof,
Soon as they forth were come to open ſight
Of day-ſpring and the ſun. Milton.

A'RBOUR, å'r-bůr. n. ſ. [from arbor a tree.] A bower; a place, covered with green branches of trees.

Nay, you ſhall ſee mine orchard; where, in an arbour, we will eat a laſt year's pippin of my own graffing. Shakeſp.

Let us divide our labours: thou, where choice
Leads thee, or where moſt needs; whether to wind
The woodbine round this arbour, or direct
The claſping ivy where to climb. Milton.

For noon-day's heat, are cloſer arbours made;
And, for freſh ev'ning air, the op'ner glade.
Dryden.

A'RBOUR VI'NE, å'r-bůr-vì'ne. n. ſ. A ſpecies of bind-weed; which ſee.

A'RBUTE, å'r-bůte. n. ſ. [arbutus, Lat.]

Arbute, or ſtrawberry tree, grows common in Ireland. It is difficult, to be raiſed from the ſeeds; but may be propagated by layers. It grows, to a goodly tree; endures our climate, unleſs the weather be very ſevere; and makes beautiful hedges. Mortimer's Huſbandry.

Rough arbute ſlips into a hazel bough
Are oft ingrafted; and good apples grow
Out of a plain tree ſtock. May's Virgil.

ARC, å'rk. n. ſ. [arcus, Lat.]

1. A ſegment; a part of a circle; not more than a ſemicircle.

Their ſegments or arcs, for the moſt part, exceeded not the third part of a circle.
Newton's Opticks.

2. An arch.

Load ſome vain church with old theatrick
ſtate;
Turn arcs of triumph to a garden gate. Pope.

Or call the winds, through long arcades to roar;
Proud, to catch cold at a Venetian door. Pope.

ARCA'NUM, å'r-kå'-nům. n. ſ. in the plural arca'na. A Latin word, ſignifying a ſecret.

ARCH, å'rtſh. n. ſ. [arcus, Lat.]

1. Part of a circle, not more than the half.

The mind perceives, that an arch of a circle is leſs than the whole circle, as clearly as it does the idea of a circle. Locke.

2. A building, open below and cloſed above, ſtanding by the form of its own curve; uſed, for bridges and other works.

Ne'er through an arch, ſo hurried the blown tide;
As the recomforted, through the gates. Shakeſp.

Let Rome in Tiber melt, and the wide arch
Of the rais'd empire fall! here is my ſpace.
Shakeſp.

The royal ſquadron marches;
Erect triumphal arches. Dryden's Albion.

3. The ſky, or vault of heaven.

Hath nature given them eyes,
To ſee this vaulted arch, and the rich cope
Of ſea and land? Shakeſpeare.

4. [from ἀρχὸς] A chief: obſolete.

The noble duke, my maſter,
My worthy arch and patron, comes to-night.
Shakeſp.

To ARCH, å'rtſh. v. a. [arcuo, Lat.]

1. To build arches.

The nations of the field and wood
Build on the wave, or arch beneath the ſand.
Pope.

2. To cover with arches.

Gates of monarchs
Are arch'd ſo high, that giants may get through.
Shakeſp.

The proud river, which makes her bed at her feet, is arched over with ſuch a curious pile of ſtones; that, conſidering the rapid courſe of the deep ſtream that roars under it, it may well take place among the wonders of the world. Howel.

3. To form into arches.

Fine devices of arching water without ſpilling, and making it riſe in ſeveral forms of feathers and drinking-glaſſes, be pretty things to look on, but nothing to health and ſweetneſs. Bacon.

ARCH, å'rtſh. adj. [from ἀρχὸς chief.]

1. Chief; of the firſt claſs.

The tyrannous and bloody act is done;
The moſt arch deed of piteous maſſacre,
That ever yet this land was guilty of. Shakeſp.

There is ſprung up
An heretick, an arch one, Cranmer. Shakeſp.

2. Waggiſh; mirthful; triflingly miſchievous. This ſignification it ſeems to have gained, by being frequently applied to the boy moſt remarkable for his pranks; as, the arch rogue: unleſs it be derived from Archy, the name of the jeſter to Charles I.

Eugenio ſet out from the univerſity; he had the reputation of an arch lad at ſchool. Swift.

ARCH, å'rtſh, in compoſition, ſignifies chief, or of the firſt claſs [from ἀρχὸς,]; as, archangel, archbiſhop. It is pronounced variouſly with regard to the ch, which before a conſonant ſound as in cheeſe, as archdeacon; before a vowel like k, as archangel.

ARCHA'NGEL, årk-å'n-jèl. n. ſ. [archangelus, Lat.] One of the higheſt order of angels.

His form had yet not loſt
All her original brightneſs, nor appear'd
Leſs than archangel ruin'd, and th' exceſs
Of glory obſcur'd. Milton.

'Tis ſure th' archangel's trump I hear,
Nature's great paſſing-bell; the only call
Of God's, that will be heard by all. Norris.

ARCHA'NGEL, årk-å'n-jèl. n. ſ. [lamium, Lat.] The name of a plant, called alſo Dead-nettle.

ARCHANGE'LICK, årk-ån-jèl'-lìk. adj. [from archangel.] Belonging to archangels.

He ceas'd; and th' archangelick pow'r prepar'd
For ſwift deſcent; with him the cohort bright
Of watchful cherubim. Milton.

ARCHBE'ACON, årtſh-bè'kn. n. ſ. [from arch and beacon.] The chief place of proſpect, or of ſignal.

You ſhall win the top of the Corniſh archbeacon Hainborough; which may, for proſpect, compare with Rama in Paleſtina. Carew.

ARCHBI'SHOP, årtſh-bìſh'-ůp. [from arch and biſhop.] A biſhop of the firſt claſs, who ſuperintends the conduct of other biſhops his ſuffragans.

Cranmer is return'd with welcome,
Inſtall'd lord archbiſhop of Canterbury. Shakeſp.

The archbiſhop was the known architect of this new fabrick. Clarendon.

ARCHBI'SHOPRICK, årtſh-bìſh-ůp-rìk. n. ſ. [from archbiſhop.] The ſtate or juriſdiction of an archbiſhop.

'Tis the cardinal;
And, merely to revenge him on the emperor,
For not beſtowing on him at his aſking
The archbiſhoprick of Toledo, this is purpos'd.
Shakeſp.

This excellent man, from the time of his promotion to the archbiſhoprick, underwent the envy and malice of men, who agreed in nothing elſe.
Clarendon.

ARCHCHA'NTER, årtſh-tſhån'-tůr. n. ſ. [from arch and chanter.] The chief chanter.

ARCHDE'ACON, årtſh-dè'kn. n. ſ. [archidiaconus, Lat.] One, that ſupplies the biſhop's place and office in ſuch matters, as do belong to the epiſcopal function. The law ſtyles him the biſhop's vicar, or vicegerent. Ayliffe's Parergon.

Leſt negligence might foiſt in abuſes, an archdeacon was appointed to take account of their doings. Carew's Survey.

ARCHDE'ACONRY, årtſh-dè'kn-rŷ. n. ſ. [archidiaconatus, Lat.] The office or juriſdiction of an archdeacon.

It oweth ſubjection to the metropolitan of Canterbury, and hath one only archdeaconry.
Carew's Survey.

ARCHDE'ACONSHIP, årtſh-dè'kn-ſhìp. n. ſ. [from archdeacon.] The office of an archdeacon.

ARCHDU'KE, årtſh-dů'ke. n. ſ. [archidux, Lat.] A title given to ſome ſovereign princes, as of Auſtria and Tuſcany.

Philip, archduke of Auſtria, during his voyage from the Netherlands towards Spain, was weather-driven into Weymouth. Carew's Survey.

ARCHDU'CHESS, årtſh-důtſh'-ès. n. ſ. [from arch and ducheſs.] A title given to the ſiſter or daughter of the archduke of Auſtria, or to the wife of an archduke of Tuſcany.

A'RCH-PHILO''SOPHER, årtſh-fìl-òs'-ô-fůr. n. ſ. [from arch and philoſopher.] Chief philoſopher.

It is no improbable opinion therefore, which the arch-philoſopher was of; that the chiefeſt perſon in every houſehold was always (as it were) a king. Hooker.

ARCH-PRE'LATE, årtſh-prèl'-åte. n. ſ. [from arch and prelate.] Chief prelate.

May we not wonder, that a man of St. Baſil's authority and quality, and arch-prelate in the houſe of God, ſhould have his name far and wide called in queſtion? Hooker.

ARCH-PRE'SBYTER, årtſh-près'-bì-tèr. n. ſ. [from arch and preſbyter.] Chief preſbyter.

As ſimple deacons are in ſubjection to preſbyters, according to the canon law; ſo are alſo preſbyters and arch-preſbyters in ſubjection to theſe archdeacons. Ayliffe's Parergon.

ARCH-PRI'EST, årtſh-prè'ſt. n. ſ. [from arch and prieſt.] Chief prieſt.

The word decanus was extended to an eccleſiaſtical dignity, which included the arch-prieſts. Ayliffe's Parergon.

A'rchaism, år'-kå-ĭſm. n. ſ. [ἀρχαισμὸς.] An ancient phraſe, or mode of expreſſion.

I ſhall never uſe archaiſms, like Milton. Watts.

A'rched, år'-tſhĕd. participial adj. [from To arch.] Bent in the form of an arch.

I ſee how thine eye would emulate the diamond; thou haſt the right arched bent of the brow. Shakeſp.

Let the arched knife,
Well ſharpen'd, now aſſail the ſpreading ſhades
Of vegetables. Philips.

A'rcher, år'-tſhŭr. n. ſ. [archer, Fr. from arcus, Lat. a bow.] He that ſhoots with a bow: he that carries a bow in battle.

Draw, archers, draw your arrows to the head. Shakeſp.

This Cupid is no longer an archer; his glory ſhall be our's; for we are the only love-gods. Shakeſp.

Thou frequent bring'ſt the ſmitten deer;
For ſeldom, archers ſay, thy arrows err. Prior.

A'rchery, år'-tſhĕ-rŷ. n. ſ. [from archer.]

1. The uſe of the bow.

Among the Engliſh artillery, archery challengeth the pre-eminence, as peculiar to our nation. Camden.

2. The act of ſhooting with the bow.

Flower of this purple dye,
Hit with Cupid's archery,
Sink in apple of his eye!
Shakeſp. Midſ. Night's Dream.

3. The art of an archer.

Bleſt ſeraphims ſhall leave their quire,
And turn love's ſoldiers upon thee,
To exerciſe their archery.
Craſhaw's Steps to Temple.

Say, from what golden quivers of the ſky
Do all thy winged arrows fly?
Swiftneſs and power by birth are thine.
'Tis (I believe) this archery to ſhew,
That ſo much coſt in colours thou,
And ſkill in painting, doſt beſtow
Upon thy ancient arms, the gaudy heavenly bow.
Cowley.

A'rches-court, år'-tſhĕz-kŏ'rt. n. ſ. [from arches and court.] The chief and moſt ancient conſiſtory, that belongs to the archbiſhop of Canterbury, for the debating of ſpiritual cauſes; ſo called from Bow-Church in London, where it is kept; whoſe top is raiſed of ſtone-pillars, built archwiſe. The judge of this court is termed the dean of the arches, or official of the arches-court: dean of the arches, becauſe with this office is commonly joined a peculiar juriſdiction of thirteen pariſhes in London, termed a deanery, being exempted from the authority of the biſhop of London, and belonging to the archbiſhop of Canterbury; of which the pariſh of Bow is one. Some others ſay, that he was firſt called dean of the arches, becauſe the official to the archbiſhop, the dean of the arches, was his ſubſtitute in his court; and by that means the names became confounded. The juriſdiction of this judge is ordinary, and extends through the whole province of Canterbury: ſo that, upon any appeal, he forthwith, and without any further examination of the cauſe, ſends out his citation to the party appealed; and his inhibition to the judge, from whom the appeal is made. Cowell.

A'rchetype, år'-kĕ-tīpe. n. ſ. [archetypum, Lat.] The original, of which any reſemblance is made.

Our ſouls, though they might have perceived images themſelves, by ſimple ſenſe; yet it ſeems inconceivable, how they ſhould apprehend their archetypes. Glanville's Scepſis.

As a man, a tree, are the outward objects of our perception, and the outward archetypes or patterns of our ideas; ſo our ſenſations of hunger, cold, are alſo inward archetypes or patterns of our ideas. But the notions or pictures of theſe things, as they are in the mind, are the ideas. Watts's Logick.

Arche'typal, år'-kĕ-tī-pål. adj. [archetypus, Lat.] Original; being a pattern, from which copies are made.

Through contemplation's opticks I have ſeen
Him, who is fairer than the ſons of men;
The ſource of good, the light archetypal. Norris.

ARCHE'US, år-kĕ'-ŭs. n. ſ. [probably from ἀρχὴ chief power.] A word by which Paracelſus ſeems to have meant a power, that preſides over the animal œconomy, diſtinct from the rational ſoul.

Archidia'conal, år-kŷ-dī-åk'-ŏ-nål. adj. [from archidiaconus, Lat. an archdeacon.] Belonging to an archdeacon; as, this offence is liable to be cenſured in an archidiaconal viſitation.

Archiepi'scopal, år-kŷ-ĕ-pĭs'-kŏ-pål. adj. [from archiepiſcopus, Lat. an archbiſhop.] Belonging to an archbiſhop; as, Canterbury is an archiepiſcopal ſee; the ſuffragans are ſubject to archiepiſcopal juriſdiction.

A'RCHITECT, å'r-kŷ-tĕkt. n. ſ. [architectus, Lat.]

1. A profeſſor of the art of building.

The architect's glory conſiſts, in the deſignment and idea of the work; his ambition ſhould be, to make the form triumph over the matter. Wotton.

2. A contriver of a building; a builder.

The haſty multitude
Admiring enter'd; and the work ſome praiſe,
And ſome the architect: his hand was known
In heav'n, by many a tow'red ſtructure high;
Where ſcepter'd angels held their reſidence,
And ſat as princes. Milton.

3. The contriver or former of any compound body.

This inconvenience the divine architect of the body obviated. Ray on the Creation.

4. The contriver of any thing.

An irreligious Moor,
Chief architect and plotter of theſe woes. Shakeſp.

Archite'ctive, år-kŷ-tĕk'-tĭv. adj. [from architect.] That performs the works of architecture.

How could the bodies of many of them, particularly the laſt mentioned, be furniſhed with architective materials? Derh. Phyſico-Theology.

Architecto'nick, år-kŷ-tĕk-tŏn'-nĭk. adj. [from ἀρχὴ chief, and τέκτων an artificer.] That, which has the power or ſkill of an architect; that, which can build or form any thing.

To ſay, that ſome more fine part of either, or all the hypoſtatical principle, is the architect of this elaborate ſtructure; is to give occaſion to demand, what proportion of the tria prima afforded this architectonick ſpirit, and what agent made ſo ſkilful and happy a mixture. Boyle.

Archite'cture, å'r-kŷ-tĕk-tſhŭr. n. ſ. [architectura, Lat.]

1. The art or ſcience of building.

Architecture is divided into civil architecture, called by way of eminence architecture; military architecture, or fortification; and naval architecture, which, beſides building of ſhips and veſſels, includes alſo ports, moles, docks, &c. Chambers.

Our fathers next, in architecture ſkill'd,
Cities for uſe, and forts for ſafety build:
Then palaces and lofty domes aroſe;
Theſe for devotion, and for pleaſure thoſe.
Blackmore.

2. The effect or performance of the ſcience of building.

The formation of the firſt earth being a piece of divine architecture, aſcribed to a particular providence. Burnet's Theory.

A'rchitrave, å'r-kŷ-tråv. n. ſ. [from ἀρχὴ chief, and trabs, Lat. a beam; becauſe it is ſuppoſed to repreſent the principal beam in timber buildings.] That part of a column, or order of a column, which lies immediately upon the capital, and is the loweſt member of the entablature. This member is different in the different orders; and, in building architrave doors and windows, the workman frequently follows his own fancy. The architrave is ſometimes called the reaſon-piece, or maſter-beam, in timber buildings; as porticos, cloyſters, &c. In chimnies, it is called the mantle-piece; and over jambs of doors, and lintels of windows, hyperthyron. Builder's Dict.

The materials, laid over this pillar, were of wood; through the lightneſs whereof, the architrave could not ſuffer, nor the column itſelf, being ſo ſubſtantial. Wotton's Architecture.

Weſtward a pompous frontiſpiece appear'd,
On Dorick pillars of white marble rear'd,
Crown'd with an architrave of antique mold,
And ſculpture riſing on the roughen'd gold. Pope.

A'rchives, å'r-kīvz. n. ſ. without a ſingular. [archiva, Lat.] The places, where records or ancient writings are kept. It is perhaps ſometimes uſed for the writings themſelves.

Though we think, our words vaniſh with the breath that utters them; yet they become records in God's court, and are laid up in his archives, as witneſſes either for or againſt us. Government of the Tongue.

I ſhall now only look a little into the Moſaic archives, to obſerve what they furniſh us with, upon this ſubject. Woodward.

A'rchwise, å'rtſh-wīze. adv. [from arch and wiſe.] In the form of an arch.

The court of arches, ſo called ab arcuata eccleſia, or from Bow church, by reaſon of the ſteeple or clochier thereof, raiſed at the top with ſtone pillars, in faſhion of a bow bent archwiſe. Ayliffe's Parergon.

Arci'tenent, år-sĭ'-tĕn'-ĕnt. adj. [arcitenens, Lat.] Bow-bearing. Dict.

Arcta'tion, årk-tå'-ſhŭn. n. ſ. [from arcto to ſtraiten.] Straitening; confinement to a narrower compaſs.

A'rctick, å'rk-tĭk. n. ſ. [from ἄρκτος a bear, the northern conſtellation.] Northern; lying under the Arctos, or bear. See Artick.

Ever-during ſnows, perpetual ſhades
Of darkneſs, would congeal their livid blood;
Did not the arctick tract ſpontaneous yield
A cheering purple berry, big with wine. Philips.

A'rctick Ci'rcle, å'rk-tĭk. The circle, at which the northern frigid zone begins.

A'rcuate, å'r-kŭ-åte. adj. [arcuatus, Lat.] Bent in the form of an arch.

The cauſe of the confuſion in ſounds, and the inconfuſion of ſpecies viſible, is for that, the ſight worketh in right lines; but ſounds, that move in oblique and arcuate lines, muſt needs encounter and diſturb the one the other. Bacon's Natural Hiſtory.

In the gullet, where it perforateth the midriff, the carneous fibres are inflected and arcuate.
Ray on the Creation.

A'rcuatile, å'r-ků-å-tîl. adj. [from arcuate.] Bent; inflected. Dict.

Arcua'tion, år-ků-å'-ſhůn. n. ſ. [from arcuate.]

1. The act of bending any thing; incurvation.
2. The ſtate of being bent; curvity, or crookedneſs.
3. [In gardening.] The method of raiſing by layers ſuch trees, as cannot be raiſed from ſeed, or that bear no ſeed; as the elm, lime, alder, willow: and is ſo called, from bending down to the ground the branches, which ſpring from the off-ſets or ſtools after they are planted. Chambers.

A'rcuature, å'r-ků-å-tůr. n. ſ. [arcuatura, low Lat.] The bending or curvature of an arch. Dict.

Arcuba'lister, år-ků-bål'-îs-tůr. n. ſ. [from arcus a bow, and baliſta an engine.] A croſsbow-man.

King John was eſpied, by a very good arcubaliſter; who ſaid, that he would ſoon diſpatch the cruel tyrant. God forbid, vile varlet, quoth the earl, that we ſhould procure the death of the holy one of God. Camden's Remains.

Ard, å'rd. [Saxon.] Signifies natural diſpoſition; as, Goddard, is a divine temper; Reinard, a ſincere temper; Giffard, a bountiful and liberal diſpoſition; Bernard, filial affection. Gibſon's Camden.

A'rdency, å'r-dên-ſŷ. n. ſ. [from ardent.] Ardour; eagerneſs; warmth of affection.

Accepted our prayers ſhall be, if qualified with humility, and ardency, and perſeverance, ſo far as concerns the end immediate to them.
Hammond's Pract. Catechiſm.

The ineffable happineſs of our dear Redeemer muſt needs bring an increaſe to ours, commenſurate to the ardency of our love for him. Boyle.

A'RDENT, å'r-dênt. adj. [ardens, Lat. burning.]

1. Hot; burning; fiery.

Chymiſts obſerve, that vegetables (as lavender, rue, marjoram, &c.) diſtilled before fermentation, yield oils without any burning ſpirits; but, after fermentation, yield ardent ſpirits without oils: which ſhews, that their oil is, by fermentation, converted into ſpirit. Newton's Opticks.

2. Fierce; vehement; having the appearance or quality of fire.

A knight of ſwarthy face,
High on a cole-black ſteed, purſued the chace;
With flaſhing flames his ardent eyes were fill'd.
Dryden.

3. Paſſionate; affectionate: uſed generally of deſire.

Another nymph with fatal pow'r may riſe,
To damp the ſinking beams of Cælia's eyes;
With haughty pride may hear her charms confeſt,
And ſcorn the ardent vows that I have bleſt. Prior.

A'rdently, å'r-dênt-lŷ. adv. [from ardent.] Eagerly; affectionately.

With true zeal may our hearts be moſt ardently inflamed to our religion. Spratt's Sermons.

A'rdour, å'r-důr. n. ſ. [ardor, Lat. heat.]

1. Heat.

Joy, like a ray of the ſun, reflects with a greater ardour and quickneſs, when it rebounds upon a man from the breaſt of his friend. South.

2. Heat of affection; as, love, deſire, courage.

The ſoldiers ſhout around with gen'rous rage;
He prais'd their ardour, inly pleas'd to ſee.
His hoſt. Dryden.

Unmov'd the mind of Ithacus remain'd,
And the vain ardours of our love reſtrain'd. Pope.

3. The perſon ardent or bright. This is only uſed by Milton.

Nor delay'd the winged ſaint,
After his charge receiv'd; but, from among
Thouſand celeſtial ardours, where he ſtood
Veil'd with his gorgeous wings, up-ſpringing light,
Flew thro' the midſt of heav'n. Paradiſe Loſt.

Ardu'ity, år-dů'-î-tŷ. n. ſ. [from arduous.] Height; difficulty. Dict.

A'RDUOUS, å'r-dů-ůs. adj. [arduus, Lat.]

1. Lofty; hard to climb.

High on Parnaſſus' top her ſons ſhe ſhow'd,
And pointed out thoſe arduous paths they trod.
Pope.

2. Difficult.

It was a means, to bring him up in the ſchool of arts and policy; and ſo to fit him for that great and arduous employment, that God deſigned him to. South.

A'rduousness, å'r-dů-ůs-nês. n. ſ. [from arduous.] Height; difficulty.

Are, år'. The plural of the preſent tenſe of the verb to be; as, young men are raſh, old are cautious.

A'RE, å'-rê, or Alamire. The loweſt note but one in Guido's ſcale of muſick.

Gamut I am, the ground of all accord,
Are to plead Hortenſio's paſſion;
B mi Bianca take him for thy lord,
C faut, that loves with all affection. Shakeſp.

A'rea, å'-ryå. n. ſ. [Latin.]

1. The ſurface, contained between any lines or boundaries.

The area of a triangle is found, by knowing the height and the baſe. Watts's Logick.

2. Any open ſurface, as, the floor of a room; the open part of a church; the vacant part or ſtage of an amphitheatre. An incloſed place, as liſts, or a bowling-green, or graſs-plot.

Let us conceive a floor or area of goodly length, with the breadth ſomewhat more than half the longitude. Wotton.

The Alban lake is of an oval figure; and, by reaſon of the high mountains that encompaſs it, looks like the area of ſome vaſt amphitheatre.
Addiſon.

In areas vary'd with Moſaick art,
Some whirl the diſk, and ſome the jav'lin dart.
Pope.

To Are'ad, or Are'ed, å-rê'd. v. a. [aꞃeꝺan, Sax. to counſel.] To adviſe; to direct.

Knights and ladies gentle deeds;
Whoſe praiſes having ſlept in ſilence long,
Me, all too meane, the ſacred muſe areeds
To blazon broad. Fairy Queen.

But mark, what I aread thee now. Avant!
Fly thither, whence thou fled'ſt! If from this hour
Within theſe hallow'd limits thou appear,
Back to th' infernal pit I drag thee chain'd.
Paradiſe Loſt.

Arefa'ction, år-rê-fåk'-ſhůn. n. ſ. [arefacio, Lat. to dry.] The ſtate of growing dry; the act of drying.

From them, and their motions, principally proceed arefaction, and moſt of the effects of nature.
Bacon.

To A'refy, år'-rê-fŷ. v. a. [arefacio, Lat to dry.] To dry; to exhauſt of moiſture.

Heat drieth bodies, that do eaſily expire, as parchment, leaves, roots, clay, &c. and ſo doth time or age arefy, as in the ſame bodies, &c.
Bacon's Natural Hiſtory.

Arena'ceous, å-rê-nå'-ſhůs. adj. [arena, Lat. ſand.] Sandy; having the qualities of ſand.

A piece of the ſtone of the ſame mines, of a yellowiſh brown colour, an arenaceous friable ſubſtance, and with ſome white ſpar mixed with it.
Woodward on Foſſils.

Arena'tion, å-rê-nå'-ſhůn. n. ſ. [from arena, Lat. ſand.] Is uſed by ſome phyſicians for a ſort of dry bath, when the patient ſits with his feet upon hot ſand. Dict.

A'rgent, å'r-jênt. adj. [from argentum, Lat. ſilver.]

1. The white colour, uſed in the coats of gentlemen, knights, and baronets; ſuppoſed, to be the repreſentation of that metal.

Rinaldo flings
As ſwift, as fiery lightning kindled new:
His argent eagle, with her ſilver wings
In field of azure, fair Erminia knew. Fairfax.

In an argent field, the god of war
Was drawn triumphant on his iron car. Dryden.

2. Silver; bright like ſilver.

Thoſe argent fields more likely habitants,
Tranſlated ſaints, or middle ſpirits, hold,
Betwixt th' angelical and human kind. Milton.

Or aſk of yonder argent fields above,
Why Jove's ſatellites are leſs than Jove? Pope.

Argenta'tion, år-jên-tå'-ſhůn. n. ſ. [from argentum, Lat. ſilver.] An overlaying with ſilver. Dict.

A'rgentine, å'r-jên-tîn. adj. [argentin, Fr.] Sounding like ſilver. Dict.

Albuquerque derives this redneſs, from the ſand and argillous earth at the bottom.
Brown's Vulgar Errours.

A'rgosy, å'r-gô-ſŷ. n. ſ. [derived by Pope from Argo, the name of Jaſon's ſhip; ſuppoſed by others to be a veſſel of Raguſa or Ragoſa, a Ragozine, corrupted.] A large veſſel for merchandize; a carrack.

Your mind is toſſing on the ocean;
There, where your argoſies with portly ſail,
Like ſigniors and rich burghers on the flood,
Do overpeer the petty traffickers.
Shakeſp. Merchant of Venice.

To A'RGUE, å'r-gů. v. n. [arguo, Lat.]

1. To reaſon; to offer reaſons.

I know, your majeſty has always lov'd her
So dear in heart, not to deny her, what
A woman of leſs place might aſk by law;
Scholars, allow'd freely to argue for her.
Shakeſp. Henry VIII.

Publick arguing oft ſerves not only to exaſperate the minds, but to whet the wits of hereticks.
Decay of Piety.

An idea of motion, not paſſing on, would perplex any one, who ſhould argue from ſuch an idea.
Locke.

2. To perſuade by argument.

It is a ſort of poetical logick, which I would make uſe of, to argue you into a protection of this play. Congreve's Ded. to Old Batchelor.

3. To diſpute; with the particles with or againſt before the opponent, and againſt before the thing oppoſed.

Why do Chriſtians, of ſeveral perſuaſions, ſo fiercely argue againſt the ſalvability of each other? Decay of Piety.

He, that by often arguing againſt his own ſenſe, impoſes falſehoods on others, is not far from believing himſelf. Locke.

I do not ſee, how they can argue with any one, without ſetting down ſtrict boundaries. Locke.

To A'RGUE, å'r-gů. v. a.

1. To prove any thing by argument.

If the world's age and death be argued well,
By the ſun's fall, which now towards earth doth bend;
Then we might fear, that virtue (ſince ſhe fell
So low as woman) ſhould be near her end. Donne.

2. To debate any queſtion; as, to argue a cauſe.

3. To prove, as an argument.

So many laws argue ſo many ſins
Among them: how can God with ſuch reſide? Milton.

It argues diſtemper of the mind, as well as of the body, when a man is continually toſſing from one ſide to the other. South.

This argues a virtue and diſpoſition in thoſe ſides of the rays, which anſwers to that virtue and diſpoſition of the chryſtal. Newton's Opticks.

4. To charge with, as a crime: with of.

I have pleaded guilty, to all thoughts and expreſſions of mine, which can be truly argued of obſcenity, profaneneſs, or immorality; and retract them. Dryden's Fables.

The accidents are not the ſame, which would have argued him of a ſervile copying, and total barrenneſs of invention; yet the ſeas were the ſame. Dryden's Fables.

A'RGUER, å'r-gů-ůr. n. ſ. [from argue.] A reaſoner; a diſputer; a controvertiſt.

Men are aſhamed, to be proſelytes to a weak arguer, as thinking, they muſt part with their reputation as well as their ſin. Decay of Piety.

Neither good Chriſtians, nor good arguers. Atterbury.

A'RGUMENT, å'r-gů-mėnt. n. ſ. [argumentum, Lat.]

1. A reaſon alleged, for or againſt any thing.

We ſometimes ſee, on our theatres, vice rewarded, at leaſt unpuniſhed; yet it ought not to be an argument againſt the art. Dryden.

When any thing is proved by as good arguments, as that thing is capable of, ſuppoſing it were; we ought not in reaſon, to make any doubt of the exiſtence of that thing. Tillotſon.

Our author's two great and only arguments to prove, that heirs are lords over their brethren. Locke.

2. The ſubject of any diſcourſe or writing.

That ſhe, who ev'n but now was your beſt object,
Your praiſe's argument, balm of your age,
Deareſt and beſt. Shakeſp. King Lear.

To the height of this great argument,
I may aſſert eternal providence,
And juſtify the ways of God to man. Milton.

Sad taſk! yet argument
Not leſs, but more heroick, than the wrath
Of ſtern Achilles. Milton.

A much longer diſcourſe, my argument requires; your merciful diſpoſitions, a much ſhorter. Spratt's Sermons.

3. The contents of any work, ſummed up by way of abſtract.

The argument of the work, that is, its principal action, the œconomy and diſpoſition of it, are the things, which diſtinguiſh copies from originals. Dryden.

4. A controverſy.

This day, in argument upon a caſe,
Some words there grew 'twixt Somerſet and me. Shakeſpeare.

An argument, that fell out laſt night, where each of us fell in praiſe of our country miſtreſſes. Shakeſp. Cymbeline.

If the idea be not agreed on, betwixt the ſpeaker and hearer; the argument is not about things, but names. Locke.

5. It has ſometimes the particle to before the thing to be proved, but generally for.

The beſt moral argument to patience, in my opinion, is the advantage of patience itſelf. Tillotſon.

This, before that revelation had enlightened the world, was the very beſt argument for a future ſtate. Atterbury.

6. [In aſtronomy.] An arch, by which we ſeek another unknown arch, proportional to the firſt. Chambers.

ARGUME'NTAL, år-gů-mėn'-tål. adj. [from argument.] Belonging to argument; reaſoning.

Afflicted ſenſe thou kindly doſt ſet free,
Oppreſs'd with argumental tyranny;
And routed reaſon finds a ſafe retreat in thee. Pope.

ARGUMENTA'TION, år-gů-mėn-tå'-shůn. n. ſ. [from argument.] Reaſoning; the act of reaſoning.

Argumentation is that operation of the mind, whereby we infer one propoſition, from two or more propoſitions premiſed: or it is the drawing a concluſion, which before was unknown or doubtful, from ſome propoſitions more known and evident; ſo, when we have judged, that matter cannot think, and that the mind of man doth think; we conclude, that therefore the mind of man is not matter. Watts's Logick.

I ſuppoſe, it is no ill topick of argumentation, to ſhew the prevalence of contempt, by the contrary influences of reſpect. South.

His thoughts muſt be maſculine, full of argumentation, and that ſufficiently warm. Dryden.

The whole courſe of his argumentation comes to nothing. Addiſon.

ARGUME'NTATIVE, år-gů-mėn'-tå-tiv. adj. [from argument.]

1. Conſiſting of argument; containing argument.

This omiſſion (conſidering the bounds, within which the argumentative part of my diſcourſe was confined) I could not avoid. Atterbury's Pref. to his Sermons.

2. Sometimes with of, but rarely.

Another thing, argumentative of Providence, is that pappous plumage, growing upon the tops of ſome ſeeds; whereby they are wafted with the wind, and diſſeminated far and wide. Ray.

3. Applied to perſons, diſputatious; diſpoſed to controverſy.

Could not ſuſtain thy proweſs. Milton.

A gen'ral ſets his army in array
In vain, unleſs he fight and win the day. Denham.

2. Dreſs.

A rich throne, as bright as ſunny day;
On which there ſat moſt brave, embelliſhed
With royal robes and gorgeous array,
A maiden queen. Fairy Queen.

In this remembrance, Emily ere day
Aroſe, and dreſs'd herſelf in rich array. Dryden.

3. In law. Array. [of the Fr. arroy, i. e. ordo.] The ranking or ſetting forth of a jury or inqueſt of men, impannelled upon a cauſe. Thence is the verb, to array a pannel; that is, to ſet forth one by another the men impannelled. Cowell.

To ARRA'Y, år-rå'. v. a. [arroyer, old Fr.]

1. To put in order.
2. To deck; to dreſs; to adorn the perſon: with the particle with or in.

Deck thyſelf now with majeſty and excellency, and array thyſelf with glory and beauty. Job, xl. 10.

Now went forth the morn,
Such as in higheſt heav'n, array'd in gold
Empyreal. Milton.

One veſt array'd the corpſe; and one they ſpread
O'er his clos'd eyes, and wrapp'd around his head. Dryden.

3. In law. See Array in law.

Arra'yers, år-rå'-ůrs. n. ſ. [from array.] Officers who anciently had the care of ſeeing the ſoldiers duly appointed in their armour. Cowell.

ARRE'AR, år-rè'r. adv. [arriere, Fr. behind.] Behind. This is the primitive ſignification of the word, which, though not now in uſe, ſeems to be retained by Spenſer. See Rear.

To leave with ſpeed Atlanta ſwift, arrear;
Through foreſts wild and unfrequented land,
To chaſe the lion, boar, or rugged bear. Fairy Queen.

Arre'ar, år-rè'r. n. ſ. That, which remains behind unpaid, though due. See Arrearage.

His boon is giv'n; his knight has gain'd the day,
But loſt the prize; th' arrears are yet to pay. Dryden.

If a tenant run away in arrear of ſome rent, the land remains; that cannot be carried away, or loſt. Locke.

It will comfort our grand-children, when they ſee a few rags hung up in Weſtminſter-hall; which coſt an hundred millions, whereof they are paying the arrears; and boaſting, as beggars do, that their grandfathers were rich. Swift.

Arre'arage, år-rè'-råje. n. ſ. a word now little uſed. [from arriere, Fr. behind.]

Arrearage is the remainder of an account, or a ſum of money remaining in the hands of an accountant; or, more generally, any money unpaid at the due time, as arrearage of rent. Cowell.

Paget ſet forth the king of England's title, to his debts and penſion from the French king; with all arrearages. Hayward.

He'll grant the tribute, ſend the arrearages. Shakeſpeare.

The old arrearages, under which that crown had long groaned, being defrayed; he hath brought Lurana, to uphold and maintain herſelf. Howel's Vocal Foreſt.

Arre'arance, år-rè'-råns. n. ſ. The ſame with arrear. See Arrear. Dict.

Arrenta'tion, år-rèn-tå'-ſhůn. n. ſ. [from arrendar, Span. to farm.] Is, in the foreſt law, the licenſing an owner of lands in the foreſt, to incloſe them with a low hedge and ſmall ditch, in conſideration of a yearly rent. Dict.

Arrepti'tious, år-rèp-tìſh'-ůs. adj. [arreptus, Lat.]

1. Snatched away.
2. [from ad and repo.] Crept in privily.

Arre'st, år-rèſt'. n. ſ. [from arreſter, Fr. to ſtop.]

1. In law.

A ſtop or ſtay; as, a man apprehended for debt, is ſaid to be arreſted. To plead in arreſt of judgment, is to ſhew cauſe, why judgment ſhould be ſtayed, though the verdict of the twelve be paſſed. To plead in arreſt of taking the inqueſt upon the former iſſue, is to ſhew cauſe, why an inqueſt ſhould not be taken. An arreſt is a certain reſtraint of a man's perſon, depriving him of his own will, and binding it to become obedient to the will of the law; and may be called the beginning of impriſonment. Cowell.

If I could ſpeak ſo wiſely under an arreſt, I would ſend for my creditors; yet I had as lief have the foppery of freedom, as the morality of impriſonment. Shakeſp.

2. Any caption, ſeizure of the perſon.

To the rich man, who had promiſed himſelf eaſe for many years, it was a ſad arreſt, that his ſoul was ſurpriſed the firſt night. Taylor.

3. A ſtop.

The ſtop and arreſt of the air ſheweth, that the air hath little appetite of aſcending. Bacon.

To ARRE'ST, år-rèſt'. v. a. [arreſter, Fr. to ſtop.]

1. To ſeize by a mandate from a court or officer of juſtice. See Arrest.

Good tidings, my lord Haſtings; for the which I do arreſt thee, traitor, of high treaſon. Shakeſp.

There's one yonder arreſted, and carried to priſon, was worth five thouſand of you all. Shakeſp.

2. To ſeize any thing by law.

He hath enjoyed nothing of Ford's, but twenty pounds of money, which muſt be paid to maſter Brook: his horſes are arreſted for it. Shakeſp.

3. To ſeize; to lay hands on; to detain by power.

But, when as Morpheus had with leaden maze
Arreſted all that goodly company. Fairy Queen.

Age itſelf, (which, of all things in the world, will not be baffled or defied) ſhall begin to arreſt, ſeize, and remind us of our mortality. South.

4. To withhold; to hinder.

This defect of the Engliſh juſtice was the main impediment, that did arreſt and ſtop the courſe of the conqueſt. Davies.

As often, as my dogs with better ſpeed
Arreſt her flight, is ſhe to death decreed. Dryden.

Nor could her virtues, nor repeated vows
Of thouſand lovers, the relentleſs hand
Of death arreſt. Philips.

5. To ſtop motion.

To manifeſt the coagulative power, we have arreſted the fluidity of new milk, and turned it into a curdled ſubſtance. Boyle.

6. To obſtruct; to ſtop.

Aſcribing the cauſes of things to ſecret proprieties, hath arreſted and laid aſleep all true enquiry. Bacon.

Arre'st, år-rêst'. n. ſ. [In horſemanſhip.] A mangey humour between the ham and paſtern of the hinder legs of a horſe. Dict.

A'rreted, år-rêt-îd. adj. [arrectatus, low Lat.] He, that is convened before a judge, and charged with a crime. It is uſed ſometimes for imputed or laid unto; as, no folly may be arreted to one under age. Cowell.

To Arri'de, år-rî'de. v. a. [arrideo, Lat.]

1. To laugh at.
2. To ſmile; to look pleaſantly upon one.

Arri'ere, år-ryê're. n. ſ. [French.] The laſt body of an army, for which we now uſe rear.

The horſemen might iſſue forth without diſturbance of the foot, and the avant-guard without ſhuffling with the battail or arriere. Hayw.

Arri'ere ban, år-ryê're-bån'. n. ſ. [Caſſeneuve derives this word from arriere and ban: Ban denotes the convening of the nobleſſe or vaſſals, who hold fees immediately of the crown; and arriere, thoſe who only hold of the king mediately.] A general proclamation, by which the king of France ſummons to the war, all that hold of him; both his own vaſſals or the nobleſſe, and the vaſſals of his vaſſals.

Arri'ere fee, or fief, år-ryê're-fê'. Is a fee, dependant on a ſuperiour one. Theſe fees commenced, when dukes and counts, rendering their governments hereditary, diſtributed to their officers parts of the domains, and permitted thoſe officers to gratify the ſoldiers under them in the ſame manner.

Arri'ere va'ssal, år-ryê're-vås'-sål. The vaſſal of a vaſſal. Trevoux.

Arri'sion, år-rîzh'-ûn. n. ſ. [arriſio, Lat.] A ſmiling upon. Dict.

Arri'val, år-rî'-vål. n. ſ. [from arrive.] The act of coming to any place; and, figuratively, the attainment of any purpoſe.

How are we chang'd, ſince we firſt ſaw the queen!
She, like the ſun, does ſtill the ſame appear;
Bright, as ſhe was at her arrival here. Waller.

The unravelling is the arrival of Ulyſſes upon his own iſland. Broome's View of Epic Poetry.

Arri'vance, år-rî'-våns. n. ſ. [from arrive.] Company coming: not in uſe.

Every minute is expectancy
Of more arrivance. Shakeſp.

To ARRI'VE, år-rî've. v. n. [arriver, Fr. to come on ſhore.]

1. To come to any place by water.

At length arriving on the banks of Nile,
Wearied with length of ways, and worn with toil,
She laid her down. Dryden.

2. To reach any place by travelling.

When we were arrived, upon the verge of his eſtate; we ſtopped at a little inn, to reſt ourſelves and our horſes. Sidney.

3. To reach any point.

The bounds of all body, we have no difficulty to arrive at; but, when the mind is there, it finds nothing to hinder its progreſs. Locke.

4. To gain any thing by progreſſive approach.

It is the higheſt wiſdom, by deſpiſing the world to arrive at heaven; they are bleſſed, who converſe with God. Taylor.

The virtuous may know in ſpeculation, what they could never arrive at by practice; and avoid the ſnares of the crafty. Addiſon.

5. The thing, at which we arrive, is always ſuppoſed to be good.

6. To happen: with to before the perſon. This ſenſe ſeems not proper.

Happy! to whom this glorious death arrives;
More to be valued, than a thouſand lives. Waller.

To Arro'de, år-rô'de. v. a. [arrodo, Lat.] To gnaw or nibble. Dict.

A'rrogance, år'-rô-gåns. } n. ſ. [arrogantia, Lat.]
A'rrogancy, år'-rô-gån-sŷ. }

The act or quality of taking much upon one's ſelf; that ſpecies of pride, which conſiſts in exorbitant claims.

Stanley, notwithſtanding ſhe's your wife,
And loves not me; be you, good lord, aſſur'd,
I hate not you for her proud arrogance. Shakeſp.

Pride hath no other glaſs
To ſhew itſelf, but pride; for ſupple knees
Feed arrogance, and are the proud man's fees. Shakeſp.

Pride and arrogance, and the evil way, and the froward mouth, do I hate. Prov. viii. 13.

Diſcourſing of matters dubious, and on any controvertible truths, we cannot, without arrogancy, entreat a credulity. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

Humility it expreſſes by the ſtooping and bending of the head; arrogance, when it is lifted, or (as we ſay) toſſed up. Dryden's Dufreſnoy,

A'rrogant, år'-rô-gånt. adj. [arrogans, Lat.] Given to make exorbitant claims; haughty; proud.

Feagh's right unto that country, which he claims, or the ſigniory therein, muſt be vain and arrogant. Spenſer on Ireland.

An arrogant way of treating with other princes and ſtates, is natural to popular governments. Temple.

A'rrogantly, år'-rô-gånt-lŷ. adv. [from arrogant.] In an arrogant manner.

Our poet may
Himſelf admire the fortune of his play;
And arrogantly, as his fellows do,
Think he writes well, becauſe he pleaſes you. Dryden.

Another, warm'd
With high ambition, and conceit of proweſs
Inherent, arrogantly thus preſum'd;
What if this ſword, full often drench'd in blood,
Should now cleave ſheer the execrable head
Of Churchill. Philips.

A'rrogantness, år'-rô-gånt-nês. n. ſ. [from arrogant.] The ſame with arrogance; which ſee. Dict.

To A'RROGATE, år'-rô-gåte. v. a. [arrogo, Lat.] To claim vainly; to exhibit unjuſt claims, prompted only by pride.

I intend, to deſcribe this battle fully, not to derogate any thing from one nation, or to arrogate to the other. Hayward.

The popes arrogated unto themſelves, that the empire was held of them in homage. Sir Walter Raleigh.

Who, not content
With fair equality, fraternal ſtate,
Will arrogate dominion undeſerv'd
Over his brethren. Milton.

Rome never arrogated to herſelf any infallibility, but what ſhe pretended to be founded upon Chriſt's promiſe. Tillotſon.

Arroga'tion, år'-rô-gå-shûn. n. ſ. [from arrogate.] A claiming in a proud unjuſt manner. Dict.

Arro'sion, år-rô'-zhûn. n. ſ. [from arroſus, Lat.] A gnawing. Dict.

A'rrow, år'-rô. n. ſ. [aꞃeƿe, Sax.] The pointed weapon, which is ſhot from a bow. Darts are thrown by the hand: but, in poetry, they are confounded.

I ſwear to thee by Cupid's ſtrongeſt bow,
By his beſt arrow with the golden head. Shakeſp.

Here were boys ſo deſperately reſolved, as to pull arrows out of their fleſh; and deliver them, to be ſhot again, by the archers on their ſide. Hayward.

A'rrowhead, år'-rô-hêd. n. ſ. [from arrow and head.] A water plant; ſo called, from the reſemblance of its leaves to the head of an arrow. Dict.

A'rrowy, år'-rô-ŷ. adj. [from arrow.] Conſiſting of arrows.

He ſaw them, in their forms of battle rang'd;
How quick they wheel'd, and flying behind them ſhot
Sharp fleet of arrowy ſhow'r againſt the face
Of their purſuers, and o'ercame by flight. Milton.

A'rse, år'se. n. ſ. [eaꞃꞅe, Sax.] The buttocks, or hind part of an animal.

To hang an A'rse, år'se. A vulgar phraſe, ſignifying to be tardy, ſluggiſh, or dilatory.

For Hudibras wore but one ſpur;
As wiſely knowing, could he ſtir
To active trot one ſide of 's horſe,
The other would not hang an arſe. Hudibras.

A'rse-foot, å'rs-fût. n. ſ. A kind of water fowl, called alſo a didapper. Dict.

A'rse-smart, år's-må'rt. n. ſ. [perſicaria, Lat.] An herb.

A'rsenal, å'rs-nål. n. ſ. [arſenale, Ital.] A repoſitory of things requiſite to war; a magazine of military ſtores.

I would have a room, for the old Roman inſtruments of war; where you might ſee all the ancient military furniture, as it might have been in an arſenal of old Rome. Addiſon.

Arse'nical, år-sên'-î-kål. adj. [from arſenick.] Containing arſenick; conſiſting of arſenick.

An hereditary conſumption, or one engendered by arſenical fumes under ground, is incapable of cure. Harvey.

There are arſenical, or other like noxious minerals, lodged underneath. Woodward.

A'rsenick, å'rs-nîk. n. ſ. [ἀρσενικον.] A ponderous mineral ſubſtance, volatile and uninflammable; which gives a whiteneſs to metals in fuſion, and proves a violent corroſive poiſon; of which there are three ſorts. Native or yellow arſenick, called alſo auripigmentum or orpiment, is chiefly found in copper mines. White or cryſtalline arſenick is extracted from the native kind, by ſubliming it with a proportion of ſea ſalt: the ſmalleſt quantity of cryſtalline arſenick, being mixed with any metal, abſolutely deſtroys its malleability; and a ſingle grain will turn a pound of copper into a beautiful ſeeming ſilver, but without ductility. Red arſenick is a preparation of the white, made by adding to it a mineral ſulphur. Chambers.

Arſenick is a very deadly poiſon; held to the fire, it emits fumes, but liquates very little. Woodward on Foſſils.

ART, å'rt. n. ſ. [arte, Fr. ars, Lat.]

1. The power of doing ſomething not taught by nature and inſtinct; as, to walk is natural, to dance is an art.

Art is properly an habitual knowledge of certain rules and maxims, by which a man is governed and directed in his actions. South.

Bleſt with each grace of nature and of art. Pope.

Ev'n copious Dryden wanted or forgot
The laſt and greateſt art, the art to blot. Pope.

2. A ſcience; as, the liberal arts.

Arts, that reſpect the mind, were ever reputed nobler, than thoſe that ſerve the body. Ben Jonſon.

When did his pen on learning fix a brand,
Or rail at arts he did not underſtand? Dryden.

3. A trade.

This obſervation is afforded us by the art of making ſugar. Boyle.

4. Artfulneſs; ſkill; dexterity.

The art of our neceſſities is ſtrange,
That can make vile things precious. Shakeſp.

5. Cunning.

More matter, with leſs art. Shakeſp.

6. Speculation.

I have as much of this in art, as you;
But yet my nature could not bear it ſo. Shakeſp.

Arte'rial, år-tê'-ryål. adj. [from artery.] That, which relates to the artery; that, which is contained in the artery.

Had not the Maker wrought the ſpringy frame;
The blood, defrauded of its nitrous food,
Had cool'd and languiſh'd in the arterial road. Blackmore.

As this mixture of blood and chyle paſſeth through the arterial tube, it is preſſed by two contrary forces; that of the heart, driving it forward againſt the ſides of the tube; and the elaſtick force of the air, preſſing it on the oppoſite ſides of thoſe air-bladders, along the ſurface of which this arterial tube creeps. Arbuthnot.

Arterio'tomy, år-tê-rî-ôt'-tô-mŷ. n. ſ. [from ἀρτηρία, and τέμνω to cut.] The operation of letting blood from the artery: a practice much in uſe among the French.

A'rtery, å'r-te-rŷ. n. ſ. [arteria, Lat.] An artery is a conical canal, conveying the blood from the heart to all parts of the body. Each artery is compoſed of three coats; of which the firſt ſeems to be a thread of fine blood veſſels and nerves, for nouriſhing the coats of the artery; the ſecond is made up of circular, or rather ſpiral fibres, of which there are more or fewer ſtrata, according to the bigneſs of the artery: theſe fibres have a ſtrong elaſticity, by which they contract themſelves with ſome force, when the power by which they have been ſtretched out ceaſes. The third and inmoſt coat is a fine tranſparent membrane, which keeps the blood within its canal; that otherwiſe, upon the dilatation of an artery, would eaſily ſeparate the ſpiral fibres from one another. As the arteries grow ſmaller, theſe coats grow thinner, and the coats of the veins ſeem only to be continuations of the capillary arteries. Quincy.

The arteries are elaſtic tubes, endued with a contractile force, by which they drive the blood ſtill forward; it being hindered from going backward by the valves of the heart. Arbuthnot.

A'rtful, å'rt-fûl. adj. [from art and full.]

1. Performed with art.

The laſt of theſe was certainly the moſt eaſy; but, for the ſame reaſon, the leaſt artful. Dryden.

2. Artificial; not natural.

3. Cunning; ſkilful; dexterous.

O ſtill the ſame, Ulyſſes, ſhe rejoin'd;
In uſeful craft, ſucceſsfully refin'd;
Artful in ſpeech, in action, and in mind. Pope.

A'rtfully, å'rt-fûl-lŷ. adv. [from artful.] With art; ſkilfully; dexterouſly.

The reſt in rank: Honoria, chief in place,
Was artfully contriv'd to ſet her face,
To front the thicket, and behold the chace. Dryden.

Vice is the natural growth of our corruption. How irreſiſtibly muſt it prevail, when the ſeeds of it are artfully ſown, and induſtriouſly cultivated! Rogers.

A'rtfulness, å'rt-fûl-nês. n. ſ. [from artful.]

1. Skill.

Conſider, with how much artfulneſs his bulk and ſituation is contrived; to have juſt matter, to draw round him theſe maſſy bodies. Cheyne.

2. Cunning.

Arthri'tical, år-thrît'-î-kål. } adj. [from
Arthri'tick, år-thrît'-ik. } arthritis.]

1. Gouty; relating to the gout.

Frequent changes produce all the arthritick diſeaſes. Arbuthnot.

2. Relating to joints.

Serpents, worms, and leaches, though ſome want bones, and all extended articulations; yet have they arthritical analogies; and, by the motion of fibrous and muſculous parts, are able to make progreſſion. Brown's Vulg. Errours.

ARTHRI'TIS, år-thrît'-îs. n. ſ. [ἀρθρῖτις, from ἄρθρον a joint.] Any diſtemper, that affects the joints; but the gout particularly. Quincy.

A'rtichoke, å'r-tŷ-tshôke. n. ſ. [artichault, Fr.]

This plant is very like the thiſtle; but hath large ſcaly heads, ſhaped like the cone of the pine tree: the bottom of each ſcale, as alſo at the bottom of the florets, is a thick fleſhy eatable ſubſtance. Miller.

No herbs have curled leaves, but cabbage and cabbage lettuce; none have double leaves, one belonging to the ſtalk, another to the fruit or ſeed, but the artichoke. Bacon.

Artichokes contain a rich, nutritious, ſtimulating juice. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

A'rtichoke of Jeruſalem, å'r-tŷ-tshôke. A ſpecies of ſun flower.

A'rtick, å'r-tîk. adj. [it ſhould be written arctick, from ἀρκτικὸς.] Northern; under the Bear. See Arctick.

But they would have winters, like thoſe beyond the artick circle; for the ſun would be 80 degrees from them. Brown.

In the following example it is, contrary to cuſtom, ſpelt after the French manner, and accented on the laſt ſyllable.

To you, who live in chill degree,
As map informs, of fifty-three;
And do not much for cold atone,
By bringing thither fifty-one;
Methinks all climes ſhould be alike,
From tropick e'en to pole artique. Dryden.

A'RTICLE, å'r-tîkl. n. ſ. [articulus, Lat.]

1. A part of ſpeech, as, the, an; the man, an ox.

2. A ſingle clauſe of an account; a particular part of any complex thing.

Laws, touching matters of order, are changeable by the power of the church; articles concerning doctrine, not ſo. Hooker.

Have the ſummary of all our griefs,
When time ſhall ſerve to ſhew in articles. Shakeſp.

Many believe the article of remiſſion of ſins, but believe it without the condition of repentance. We believe the article otherwiſe, than God intended it. Taylor's Holy Living.

All the precepts, promiſes, and threatenings of the goſpel, will riſe up in judgment againſt us; and the articles of our faith will be ſo many articles of accuſation: and the great weight of our charge will be this, That we did not obey the goſpel, which we profeſſed to believe; that we made confeſſion of the Chriſtian faith, but lived like Heathens. Tillotſon.

You have ſmall reaſon to repine upon that article of life. Swift.

3. Terms; ſtipulations.

I embrace theſe conditions; let us have articles between us. Shakeſp.

It would have gall'd his ſurly nature,
Which eaſily endures not article,
Tying him to aught. Shakeſp.

4. Point of time; exact time.

If Cansfield had not, in that article of time, given them that briſk charge, by which other troops were ready; the king himſelf had been in danger. Clarendon.

To A'rticle, å'r-tîkl. v. n. [from the noun article.] To ſtipulate; to make terms.

Such, in love's warfare, is my caſe;
I may not article for grace,
Having put love at laſt to ſhow this face. Donne.

He had not infringed the leaſt tittle of what was articled, that they aimed at one mark, and their ends were concentrick. Howel's Vocal Foreſt.

If it be ſaid, God choſe the ſucceſſor; that is manifeſtly not ſo in the ſtory of Jephtha, where he articled with the people, and they made him judge over them. Locke.

To Arti'cle, år'-tîkl. v. a. To draw up in particular articles.

He, whoſe life ſeems fair; yet, if all his errours and follies were articled againſt him, the man would ſeem vicious and miſerable. Taylor's Rule of living holy.

Arti'cular, år-tîk'-û-lår. adj. [articularis, Lat.] Belonging to the joints. In medicine, an epithet applied to a diſeaſe, which more immediately infeſts the joints. Thus the gout is called morbus articularis.

Arti'culate, år-tîk'-û-låte. adj. [from articulus, Lat.]

1. Diſtinct; divided, as the parts of a limb are divided by joints; not continued in one tone, as articulate ſounds; that is, ſounds varied and changed at proper pauſes, in oppoſition to the voice of animals, which admit no ſuch variety. An articulate pronunciation, a manner of ſpeaking clear and diſtinct, in which one ſound is not confounded with another.

In ſpeaking under water, when the voice is reduced to an extreme exility, yet the articulate ſounds, the words, are not confounded. Bacon.

The firſt, at leaſt, of theſe I thought deny'd
To beaſts; whom God, on their creation-day,
Created mute to all articulate ſound. Milton.

Antiquity expreſſed numbers by the fingers on either hand. On the left, they accounted their digits and articulate numbers unto an hundred; on the right hand, hundreds and thouſands. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

2. Branched out into articles. This is a meaning little in uſe.

Henry's inſtructions were extreme curious and articulate; and, in them, more articles touching inquiſition, than negotiation; requiring an anſwer in diſtinct articles to his queſtions. Bacon.

To Arti'culate, år-tîk'-û-låte. v. a. [from article.]

1. To form words; to utter diſtinct ſyllables; to ſpeak as a man.

The dogmatiſt knows not, by what art he directs his tongue, in articulating ſounds into voices. Glanville.

Pariſian academiſts, in their anatomy of apes, tell us; that the muſcles of the tongue, which ſo moſt ſerve to articulate a word, were wholly like thoſe of man. Ray on the Creation.

They would advance in knowledge, and not deceive themſelves with a little articulated air. Locke.

2. To draw up in articles.

These things indeed, you have articulated,
Proclaim'd at market-croſſes, read in churches,
To face the garment of rebellion
With ſome fine colour. Shakeſp.

3. To make terms; to treat. Theſe two latter ſignifications are unuſual.

Send us to Rome
The beſt, with whom we may articulate
For their own good and ours. Shakeſp.

To Arti'culate, år-tîk′-ů-låte. v. n. To ſpeak diſtinctly.

Arti'culately, år-tîk′-ů-låte-lŷ. adv. [from articulate.] In an articulate voice.

The ſecret purpoſe of our heart, no leſs articulately ſpoken to God, who needs not our words to diſcern our meaning. Decay of Piety.

Arti'culateness, år-tîk′-ů-låte-nês. n. ſ. [from articulate.] The quality of being articulate.

Articula'tion, år-tîk-ů-lå′-shůn. n. ſ. [from articulate.]

1. The juncture, or joint of bones.

With relation to the motion of the bones in their articulations, there is a twofold liquor prepared for the inunction and lubrification of their heads; an oily one, and a mucilaginous, ſupplied by certain glandules ſeated in the articulations. Ray.

2. The act of forming words.

I conceive, that an extreme ſmall, or an extreme great ſound, cannot be articulate; but that the articulation requireth a mediocrity of ſound. Bacon.

By articulation I mean a peculiar motion and figure of ſome parts belonging to the mouth, between the throat and lips. Holder.

Conduct and beauteous diſpoſition find. Blackmore.

Well haſt thou ſpoke, the blue-eyed maid replies;
Thou good old man, benevolent as wiſe. Pope's Od.

8. As if; according to the manner that would be, if.

The ſquire began nigher to approach,
And wind his horn under the caſtle-wall;
That, with the noiſe it ſhook, as it would fall.
Fairy Queen.

They all contended, to creep into his humour; and to do that, as of themſelves, which they conceived he deſired they ſhould do. Hayward.

Contented, in a neſt of ſnow
He lies, as he his bliſs did know;
And to the wood no more would go. Waller.

So hot th' aſſault, ſo high the tumult roſe,
As all the Dardan and Argolick race
Had been contracted in that narrow ſpace. Dryd.

Can miſery no place of ſafety know?
The noiſe purſues me, whereſoe'er I go,
As fate ſought only me. Dryd. Aurengzebe.

9. According to what.

Who then is Paul, and who is Apollos; but miniſters, by whom ye believed, even as the Lord gave to every man? 1 Cor.

Their figure being printed,
As juſt before (I think) I hinted;
Alma inform'd can try the caſe. Prior.

The republick is ſhut up in the great duke's dominions, who at preſent is very much incenſed againſt it. The occaſion is, as follows.
Addiſon on Italy.

10. As it were; in ſome ſort.

As for the daughters of king Edward IV. they thought, king Richard had ſaid enough for them; and took them to be but as of the king's party, becauſe they were in his power, and at his diſpoſal. Bacon's Henry VII.

11. While; at the ſame time that.

At either end, it whiſtled as it flew;
And, as the brands were green, ſo dropp'd the dew;
Infected, as it fell, with ſweat of ſanguine hue.
Dryden.

Theſe haughty words Alecto's rage provoke;
And frighted Turnus trembled, as ſhe ſpoke.
Dryden.

So the pure limpid ſtream, when foul with ſtains
Of ruſhing torrents and deſcending rains,
Works itſelf clear; and, as it runs, refines.
Addiſon's Cato.

Becauſe.

He, that commanded the injury to be done, is firſt bound; then he, that did it: and they alſo are obliged, who did ſo aſſiſt, as without them the thing could not have been done. Taylor.

Becauſe it is; becauſe they are.

The kernels draw out of the earth juice, fit to nouriſh the tree; as thoſe, that would be trees themſelves. Bacon.

Equally.

Before the place
A hundred doors a hundred entries grace;
As many voices iſſue, and the ſound
Of Sybil's words as many times rebound. Dryden,

How; in what manner.

Men are generally permitted to publiſh books, and contradict others, and even themſelves, as they pleaſe, with as little danger of being confuted, as of being underſtood. Boyle.

With; anſwering to like or ſame.

Siſter, well met! whither away ſo faſt?—
—Upon the like devotion, as yourſelves;
To gratulate the gentle princes there.
Shakeſp. Richard III.

In a reciprocal ſenſe, anſwering to as.

Every offence, committed in the ſtate of nature, may in the ſtate of nature be alſo puniſhed; and as far forth, as it may in a commonwealth.
Locke.

As ſure, as it is good, that human nature ſhould exiſt; ſo certain it is, that the circular revolutions of the earth and planets (rather than other motions, which might as poſſibly have been) do declare God. Bentley.

18. Going before as, in a comparative ſenſe; the firſt as, being ſometimes underſtood.

Sempronius is as brave a man, as Cato. Addiſon.

Bright as the ſun, and like the morning fair.
Granville.

19. Anſwering to ſuch.

20. Having ſo to anſwer it; in a conditional ſenſe.

As far, as they carry light and conviction to any other man's underſtanding; ſo far, I hope, my labours may be of uſe to him. Locke.

21. So is ſometimes underſtood.

As in my ſpeculations I have endeavoured, to extinguiſh paſſion and prejudice; I am ſtill deſirous of doing ſome good, in this particular.
Spectator.

22. Anſwering to ſo conditionally.

So may th' auſpicious queen of love
To thee, O ſacred ſhip, be kind;
As thou, to whom the muſe commends
The beſt of poets and of friends,
Doſt thy committed pledge reſtore. Dryden.

23. Before how, it is ſometimes redundant; but this is in low language.

As how, dear Syphax? Addiſon's Cato.

24. It ſeems to be redundant before yet; to this time.

Though that war continued nine years, and this hath as yet laſted but ſix; yet there hath been much more action in the preſent war. Addiſon.

25. In a ſenſe of compariſon, followed by ſo.

As when a dab-chick waddles through the copſe,
On feet and wings; and flies, and wades, and hops;
So lab'ring on, with ſhoulders, hands, and head,
Wide as a windmill all his figure ſpread. Pope.

26. As for; with reſpect to.

As for the reſt of thoſe, who have written againſt me, they deſerve not the leaſt notice.
Dryden's Fables, Preface.

27. As if; in the ſame manner that it would be, if.

Anſwering their queſtions, as if it were a matter that needed it. Locke.

28. As to; with reſpect to.

I pray thee, ſpeak to me, as to thy thinkings,
As thou doſt ruminate; and give thy worſt of thoughts
The worſt of words. Shakeſp. Othello.

They pretend (in general) to great refinements, as to what regards Chriſtianity.
Addiſon on Italy.

I was miſtaken, as to the day; placing that accident about thirty-ſix hours ſooner, than it happened. Swift.

29. As well as; equally with.

Each man's mind has ſome peculiarity, as well as his face; that diſtinguiſhes him from all others.
Locke.

It is adorned with admirable pieces of ſculpture, as well modern, as ancient. Addiſon on Italy.

Let him ſtudy the conſtellation of Pegaſus, which is about that time aſcendant.
Brown's Vulg. Err.

Asce'ndency, às-sèn'-dèn-sỳ. n. ſ. [from aſcend.] Influence; power.

Cuſtom has ſome aſcendency over underſtanding; and, what at one time ſeemed decent, appears diſagreeable afterwards. Watts.

Asce'nsion, as-sen'-shun. n. ſ. [aſcenſio, Lat.]

1. The act of aſcending or riſing; frequently applied to the viſible elevation of our Saviour to heaven.

> Then, riſing from his grave,
> Spoil'd principalities and pow'rs; triumph'd,
> In open ſhew; and, with aſcenſion bright,
> Captivity led captive through the air. Parad. Loſt.

2. The thing riſing, or mounting.

> Men err, in the theory of inebriation; conceiving, the brain doth only ſuffer from vaporous aſcenſions from the ſtomach. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

Asce'nsion, as-sen'-shun, in aſtronomy, is either right or oblique. Right aſcenſion of the ſun, or a ſtar, is that degree of the equinoctial, counted from the beginning of Aries, which riſes with the ſun or ſtar in a right ſphere. Oblique aſcenſion is an arch of the equator, intercepted between the firſt point of Aries, and that point of the equator, which riſes together with a ſtar in an oblique ſphere.

Asce'nsion-day, as-sen''-shun-da'. The day, on which the aſcenſion of our Saviour is commemorated, commonly called Holy Thurſday; the Thurſday but one, before Whitſuntide.

Asce'nsional Difference, as-sen'-shun-al, is the difference, between the right and oblique aſcenſion of the ſame point to the ſurface of the ſphere. Chambers.

Asce'nsive, as-sen'-siv. adj. [from aſcend.] In a ſtate of aſcent: not in uſe.

> The cold augments, when the days begin to increaſe; though the ſun be then aſcenſive, and returning from the winter tropick. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

Asce'nt, as-sent'. n. ſ. [aſcenſus, Lat.]

1. Riſe; the act of riſing; the act of mounting.

> To him with ſwift aſcent he up return'd,
> Into his bliſsful boſom reaſſum'd
> In glory, as of old. Milton.

2. The way, by which one aſcends.

> The temple, and the ſeveral degrees of aſcent, whereby men did climb up to the ſame, as if it had been a ſcala cœli, be all poetical and fabulous. Bacon.

> It was a rock,
> Conſpicuous far, winding with one aſcent,
> Acceſſible from earth, one entrance high. Milton.

3. An eminence, or high place.

> No land like Italy erects the ſight
> By ſuch a vaſt aſcent, or ſwells to ſuch a height. Addiſon.

> A wide flat cannot be pleaſant in the Elyſian fields, unleſs it be diverſified with depreſſed valleys and ſwelling aſcents. Bentley.

To ASCERTA'IN, as-ser-ta'ne. v. a. [acertener, Fr.]

> One would have thought, ſhe would have ſtirr'd; but ſtrove
> With modeſty, and was aſham'd to move. Dryden.

> This I have ſhadowed, that you may not be aſham'd of that hero, whoſe protection you undertake. Dryden.

Ash-coloured, ash'-kul-urd. adj. [from aſh and colour.] Coloured between brown and grey, like the bark of an aſhen branch.

> Clay, aſh-coloured, was part of a ſtratum, which lay above the ſtrata of ſtone. Woodward on Foſſils.

A'shen, ash'n. adj. [from aſh.] Made of aſh wood.

> At once he ſaid, and threw
> His aſhen ſpear; which quiver'd, as it flew. Dryden.

A'shes, ash'-iz. n. ſ. wants the ſingular. [aſce, Sax. aſche, Dutch.]

1. The remains of any thing burnt.

> Some relicks would be left of it, as when aſhes remain of burned bodies. Digby on Bodies.

> This late diſſenſion, grown between the peers,
> Burns under feigned aſhes of forg'd love,
> And will at laſt break out into a flame. Shakeſp. Henry VI.

> Aſhes contain a very fertile ſalt, and are the beſt manure for cold lands, if kept dry, that the rain doth not waſh away their ſalt. Mortimer's Huſb.

2. The remains of the body; often uſed in poetry for the carcaſe, from the ancient practice of burning the dead.

> Poor key-cold figure of a holy king!
> Pale aſhes of the houſe of Lancaſter!
> Thou bloodleſs remnant of that royal blood! Shakeſpeare.

> To great Laërtes I bequeath
> A taſk of grief, his ornaments of death;
> Leſt, when the fates his royal aſhes claim,
> The Grecian matrons taint my ſpotleſs name. Pope.

A'shlar, ash'-lar. n. ſ. [with maſons.] Free ſtones, as they come out of the quarry, of different lengths, breadths, and thickneſſes.

A'shleering, ash'-le-ring. n. ſ. [with builders.] Quartering in garrets, about two foot and a half or three foot high, perpendicular to the floor, and reaching to the under ſide of the rafters. Builder's Dict.

Asho're, a-sho're. adv. [from a and ſhore.]

1. On ſhore; on the land.

> The poor Engliſhman riding in the road, having all that he brought thither aſhore, would have been undone. Raleigh.

2. To the ſhore; to the land.

We may as bootleſs ſpend our vain command,
As ſend our precepts to the leviathan
To come aſhore. Shakeſp. Henry V.

May thy billows rowl aſhore
The beryl, and the golden ore. Milton's Comus.

Moor'd in a Chian creek, aſhore I went,
And all the following night in Chios ſpent.
Addiſon's Ovid.

Ash-we'dnesday, åsh-wênz'-då. n. ſ. The firſt day of Lent; ſo called, from the ancient cuſtom of ſprinkling aſhes on the head.

A'shweed, åsh'-wêd. n. ſ. [from aſh and weed.] An herb.

A'shy, åsh'-ŷ. adj. [from aſh.] Aſh-coloured; pale; inclining to a whitiſh grey.

Oft have I ſeen a timely parted ghoſt
Of aſhy ſemblance, meagre, pale, and bloodleſs.
Shakeſp.

Asi'de, å-sî'de. adv. [from a and ſide.]

1. To one ſide; out of the perpendicular direction.

The ſtorm ruſh'd in, and Arcite ſtood aghaſt:
The flames were blown aſide; yet ſhone they bright,
Fann'd by the wind; and gave a ruffled light.
Dryden.

2. To another part; out of the true direction.

He had no brother; which, though it be a comfortable thing for kings, to have; yet it draweth the ſubjects eyes a little aſide. Bacon.

3. From the company; as, to ſpeak aſide.

He took him aſide from the multitude.
Mark, vii. 33.

A'sinary, às'-sî-nå-rŷ. adj. [aſinarius, Lat.] Belonging to an aſs. Dict.

A'sinine, às'-sî-nîne. adj. [from aſinus, Lat.] Belonging to an aſs.

You ſhall have more ado, to drive our dulleſt youth, our ſtocks and ſtubs, from ſuch nurture; than we have now, to hale our choiceſt and hopefulleſt wits, to that aſinine feaſt of ſow-thiſtles and brambles. Milton.

To Ask, åsk'. v. a. [aſcian, Saxon.]

1. To petition; to beg; ſometimes with an accuſative only; ſometimes with for.

When thou doſt aſk me bleſſing, I'll kneel down,
And aſk of thee forgiveneſs. Shakeſp.

We have nothing elſe to aſk; but that,
Which you deny already: yet will aſk;
That, if we fail in our requeſt, the blame
May hang upon your hardneſs. Shakeſp.

In long journies, aſk your maſter leave to give ale to the horſes. Swift.

2. To demand; to claim: as, to aſk a price for goods.

Aſk me never ſo much dowry and gift; and I will give, according as ye ſhall ſay unto me: but give me the damſel to wife. Geneſis, xxxiv. 12.

He ſaw his friends; who, whelm'd beneath the waves,
Their funeral honours claim'd, and aſk'd their quiet graves. Dryden's Æneid.

3. To queſtion.

O inhabitant of Aroer, ſtand by the way, and eſpy! aſk him that flieth, and her that eſcapeth; and ſay, what is done. Jeremiah, xlviii. 19.

4. To enquire; with after before the thing.

He ſaid, wherefore is it, that thou doſt aſk after my name? And he bleſſed him there.
Geneſis, xxxii. 29.

5. To require; as phyſically neceſſary.

As it is a great point of art, when our matter requires it, to enlarge and veer out all ſail; ſo to take it in and contract it, is no leſs praiſe, when the argument doth aſk it. Ben Jonſon.

A lump of ore, in the bottom of a mine, will be ſtirred by two men's ſtrength; which, if you bring it to the top of the earth, will aſk ſix men to ſtir it. Bacon.

The adminiſtration paſſes into different hands, at the end of two months; which contributes to diſpatch: but any exigence of ſtate aſks a much longer time, to conduct any deſign to its maturity. Addiſon.

To Ask, åsk'. v. n.

1. To petition; to beg: with for before the thing.

My ſon, haſt thou ſinned? do ſo no more; but aſk pardon for thy former ſins. Ecclus. xxi. 1.

If he aſk for bread, will he give him a ſtone?
Matt. vii. 9.

2. To make enquiry; with for or of before the thing. To enquire.

Stand ye in the ways, and ſee; and aſk for the old paths, where is the good way; and walk therein, and ye ſhall find reſt for your ſouls.
Jerem. vi. 16.

For aſk now, of the days that are paſt, which were before thee; ſince the day, that God created man upon the earth; and aſk, from the one ſide of heaven unto the other; whether there hath been any ſuch thing, as this great thing is, or hath been heard like it? Deut. iv. 32.

Ask, Ash, As, åsk', às'h, åz', do all come from the Saxon æſc, an aſh tree.
Gibſon's Camden.

Aska'nce, } å-skåns'. { adv. Sideways;
Aska'unce, } obliquely.

Zelmane, keeping a countenance aſkance, as ſhe underſtood him not, told him, it became her evil.
Sidney.

His wanniſh eyes upon them bent aſkance;
And when he ſaw their labours well ſucceed,
He wept for rage, and threaten'd dire miſchance.
Fairfax.

Some ſay, he bid his angels turn aſkance
The poles of earth, twice ten degrees and more,
From the ſun's axle: they with labour puſh'd
Oblique the centrick globe. Milton.

Aska'unt, å-skånt'. adv. Obliquely; on one ſide.

At this Achilles roll'd his furious eyes,
Fix'd on the king aſkaunt; and thus replies,
O, impudent. Dryden.

Since the ſpace, that lies on either ſide
The ſolar orb, is without limits wide;
Grant, that the ſun had happen'd to prefer
A ſeat aſkaunt, but one diameter:
Loſt to the light by that unhappy place,
This globe had lain a frozen loanſome maſs.
Blackmore.

A'sker, åsk'-ůr. n. ſ. [from aſk.]

1. Petitioner.

Have you
Ere now denied the aſker? and now again
On him, that did not aſk but mock, beſtow.
Shakeſp.

The greatneſs of the aſker, and the ſmallneſs of the thing aſked, had been ſufficient to enforce his requeſt. South.

2. Enquirer.

Every aſker being ſatisfied, we may conclude, that all their conceptions of being in a place are the ſame. Digby of Bodies.

A'sker, åsk'-ůr. n. ſ. A water newt.

Aske'w, å-skû'. adv. [from a and ſkew.] Aſide; with contempt.

For, when ye mildly look with lovely hue,
Then is my ſoul with life and love inſpir'd:
But, when ye lowre, or look on me aſkew,
Then do I die. Spenſer.

Then take it, Sir, as it was writ;
Nor look aſkew, at what it ſaith:
There's no petition in it. Prior.

To Asla'ke, å-slå'ke. v. a. [from a, and ſlake or ſlack.] To remit; to mitigate; to ſlacken. Obſolete.

But this continual, cruel, civil war
No ſkill can ſtint, nor reaſon can aſlake. Spenſer.

Whilſt, ſeeking to aſlake thy raging fire,
Thou in me kind leſt much more great deſire.
Spenſer.

Asla'nt, å-slånt'. adv. [from a and ſlant.] Obliquely; on one ſide; not perpendicularly.

There is a willow grows aſlant a brook,
That ſhews his hoar leaves in the glaſſy ſtream.
Shakeſp. Hamlet.

He fell; the ſhaft
Drove thro' his neck, aſlant: he ſpurns the ground;
And the ſoul iſſues, through the weazon's wound.
Dryden.

Asle'ep, å-slê'p. adv. [from a and ſleep.]

1. Sleeping; at reſt.

How many thouſands of my pooreſt ſubjects
Are at this hour aſleep! O gentle ſleep,
Nature's ſoft nurſe, how have I frighted thee!
Shakeſp.

The diligence of trade, and noiſeful gain,
And luxury, more late aſleep were laid:
All was the night's; and, in her ſilent reign,
No ſound the reſt of nature did invade. Dryden.

There is no difference, between a perſon aſleep, and in an apoplexy; but that the one can be awaked, and the other cannot. Arbuthnot on Diet.

2. To ſleep.

If a man watch too long, it is odds but he will fall aſleep. Bacon's Eſſays.

Thus done the tales, to bed they creep,
By whiſpering winds ſoon lull'd aſleep. Milton.

Aslo'pe, å-slô'pe. adv. [from a and ſlope.] With declivity; obliquely; not perpendicularly.

Set them not upright, but aſlope, a reaſonable depth under the ground. Bacon.

The curſe aſlope
Glanc'd on the ground; with labour I muſt earn
My bread! what harm? Idleneſs had been worſe;
My labour will ſuſtain me. Milton.

The knight did ſtoop,
And ſate on further ſide aſlope. Hudibras.

Aso'matous, å-sô'-måt-ůs. adj. [from a priv. and σῶμα a body.] Incorporeal, or without a body.

Asp, åsp'. } n. ſ. [aſpis, Lat.] A kind
A'spick, ås-pîck. } of ſerpent, whoſe poiſon kills without a poſſibility of applying any remedy. It is ſaid to be very ſmall, and peculiar to Egypt and Lybia. Thoſe, that are bitten by it, die within three hours; and, the manner of their dying being by ſleep without any pain, Cleopatra choſe it. Calmet.

High-minded Cleopatra, that with ſtroke
Of aſp's ſting herſelf did kill. —Fairy Queen.

Scorpion, and aſp, and amphiſbæna dire,
And dipſas. Milton.

Asp, åsp'. n. ſ. A tree. See Aspen.

ASPA'LATHUS, ås-pål'-å-thůs. n. ſ. [Latin.]

1. A plant, called the roſe of Jeruſalem, or our lady's roſe.

2. The wood of a prickly tree, heavy, oleaginous, ſomewhat ſharp and bitter to the taſte. Aſpalathus affords an oil of admirable ſcent, reputed one of the beſt perfumes. Chambers.

I gave a ſweet ſmell, like cinnamon and aſpalathus; and I yielded a pleaſant odour, like the beſt myrrh. Ecclus. xxiv.

Aspa'ragus, ås-pår'-å-gůs. n. ſ. [Lat.] The name of a plant. It has a roſaceous flower of ſix leaves, placed orbicularly; out of whoſe centre riſes the pointal, which turns to a ſoft globular berry, full of hard ſeeds.
Miller.

Aſparagus affects the urine with a fetid ſmell, eſpecially if cut when they are white; and therefore have been ſuſpected by ſome phyſicians, as not friendly to the kidneys: when they are older, and begin to ramify, they loſe this quality; but then they are not ſo agreeable. Arbuth. on Aliments.

A'SPECT, ås'-pêkt. n. ſ. [aſpectus, Lat. It appears anciently to have been pronounced with the accent on the laſt ſyllable, which is now placed on the firſt.]

1. Look; air; appearance.

I have preſented the tongue under a double aſpect, ſuch as may juſtify the definition, that it is the beſt and worſt part. Government of the Tongue.

They are, in my judgment, the image or picture of a great ruin; and have the true aſpect of a world, lying in its rubbiſh. Burnet's Theory.

2. Countenance; look.

Thoſe eyes of thine from mine have drawn ſalt tears,
Sham'd their aſpects with ſtore of childiſh drops.
Shakeſp. Richard III.

I am fearful: wherefore frowns he thus?
'Tis his aſpect of terrour. All's not well. Shakeſp.

Yet had his aſpect nothing of ſevere,
But ſuch a face as promis'd him ſincere. Dryden.

Then ſhall thy Craggs (and let me call him mine)
On the caſt ore another Pollio ſhine;
With aſpect open ſhall erect his head. Pope.

3. Glance; view; act of beholding.

Fairer than faireſt, in his faining eye,
Whoſe ſole aſpect he counts felicity. Spenſer.

When an envious or an amorous aſpect doth infect the ſpirits of another, there is joined both affection and imagination. Bacon's Nat. Hiſt.

4. Direction towards any point; view; poſition.

The ſetting ſun
Slowly deſcended; and, with right aſpect,
Againſt the eaſtern gate of Paradiſe
Levell'd his ev'ning rays. Paradiſe Loſt.

I have built a ſtrong wall, faced to the ſouth aſpect with brick. Swift.

5. Diſpoſition of any thing to ſomething elſe; relation.

The light got from the oppoſite arguings of men of parts, ſhewing the different ſides of things, and their various aſpects and probabilities, would be quite loſt, if every one were obliged to ſay after the ſpeaker. Locke.

6. Diſpoſition of a planet to other planets.

There's ſome ill planet reigns:
I muſt be patient, till the heavens look
With an aſpect more favourable.
Shakeſp. Winter's Tale.

Not unlike that, which aſtrologers call a conjunction of planets, of no very benign aſpect the one to the other. Wotton.

To the blank moon,
Her office they preſcrib'd; to th' other five,
Their planetary motions and aſpects,
In ſextile, ſquare, and trine, and oppoſite.
Paradiſe Loſt.

Why does not every ſingle ſtar ſhed a ſeparate influence, and have aſpects with other ſtars of their own conſtellation? Bentley's Sermons.

To Aspe'ct, ås-pėk't. v. a. [aſpicio, Lat.] To behold: not uſed.

Happy in their miſtake, thoſe people, whom
The northern pole aſpects; whom fear of death
(The greateſt of all human fears) ne'er moves.
Temple.

Aspe'ctable, ås-pėk'-tåbl. adj. [aſpectabilis, Lat.] Viſible; being the object of ſight.

He was the ſole cauſe of this aſpectable and perceivable univerſal. Raleigh.

To this uſe, of informing us what is in this aſpectable world, we ſhall find the eye well fitted. Ray on the Creation.

Aspe'ction, ås-pėk'-shůn. n. ſ. [from aſpect.] Beholding; view.

A Mooriſh queen, upon aſpection of the picture of Andromeda, conceived and brought forth a fair one. Brown.

A'spen, or Asp, ås'-pîn. n. ſ. [eſpe, Dutch; aſp, Dan. epſe, trembling, Sax. Somner. See Poplar, of which it is a ſpecies. The leaves of this tree always tremble.]

The aſpen or aſp tree hath leaves much the ſame with the poplar, only much ſmaller, and not ſo white. Mortimer.

The builder, oak ſole king of foreſts all;
The aſpen, good for ſtatues; the cypreſs funeral.
Spenſer.

A'spen, ås'-pîn. adj. [from aſp or aſpen.]

1. Belonging to the aſp tree.

Oh! had the monſter ſeen thoſe lily hands
Tremble like aſpen leaves upon a lute. Shakeſp.

No gale diſturbs the trees;
Nor aſpen leaves confeſs the gentleſt breeze. Gay.

2. Made of aſpen wood.

A'SPER, ås'-pėr. adj. [Lat.] Rough; rugged. This word I have found only in the following paſſage.

All baſe notes, or very treble notes, give an aſper ſound; for that the baſe ſtriketh more air, than it can well ſtrike equally. Bacon.

To A'SPERATE, ås'-pė-råte. v. a. [aſpero, Lat.] To roughen; to make rough or uneven.

Thoſe corpuſcles of colour, inſinuating themſelves into all the pores of the body to be dyed, may aſperate its ſuperficies, according to the bigneſs and texture of the corpuſcles. Boyle.

Aspera'tion, ås-pė-rå'-shůn. n. ſ. [from aſperate.] A making rough. Dict.

Asperifo'lious, ås-pėr-ŷ-fô''-lyůs. adj. [from aſper rough, and folium a leaf, Lat.] One of the diviſions of plants; ſo called, from the roughneſs of their leaves.

Aspe'rity, ås-pėr'-ŷ-tŷ. n. ſ. [aſperitas, Lat

1. Unevenneſs; roughneſs of ſurface.

Sometimes the pores and aſperities of dry bodies are ſo incommenſurate to the particles of the liquor, that they glide over the ſurface. Boyle.

2. Roughneſs of ſound; harſhneſs of pronunciation.

3. Roughneſs or ruggedneſs of temper; moroſeneſs; ſourneſs; crabbedneſs.

The charity of the one, like kindly exhalations, will deſcend in ſhowers of bleſſings; but the rigour and aſperity of the other, in a ſevere doom upon ourſelves. Government of the Tongue.

Avoid all unſeemlineſs and aſperity of carriage; do nothing that may argue a peeviſh or froward ſpirit. Rogers.

Asperna'tion, ås-pėr-nå'-shůn. n. ſ. [aſpernatio, Lat.] Neglect; diſregard. Dict.

A'sperous, ås'-pė-růs. adj. [aſper, Lat.] Rough; uneven.

Black and white are the moſt aſperous and unequal of colours; ſo like, that it is hard to diſtinguiſh them: black is the moſt rough. Boyle.

To ASPE'RSE, ås-pėrs'e. v. a. [aſpergo, Lat.] To beſpatter with cenſure or calumny.

In the buſineſs of Ireland, beſides the opportunity to aſperſe the king, they were ſafe enough. Clarendon.

Curb that impetuous tongue; nor raſhly vain,
And ſingly mad, aſperſe the ſov'reign reign. Pope.

Unjuſtly poets we aſperſe;
Truth ſhines the brighter, clad in verſe. Swift.

Aspe'rsion, ås-pėr'-shůn. n. ſ. [aſperſio, Lat.]

1. A ſprinkling.

If thou doſt break her virgin knot, before
All ſanctimonious ceremonies;
No ſweet aſperſions ſhall the heav'ns let fall,
To make this contract grow. Shakeſp.

It exhibits a mixture of new conceits and old; whereas the inſtauration gives the new unmixed, otherwiſe than with ſome little aſperſion of the old, for taſte's ſake. Bacon.

2. Calumny; cenſure.

The ſame aſperſions of the king, and the ſame grounds of a rebellion. Dryden.

Aspha'ltick, ås-fål'-tîk. adj. [from aſphaltos.] Gummy; bituminous.

And with aſphaltick ſlime, broad as the gate,
Deep to the roots of hell, the gather'd beach
They faſten'd. Milton.

ASPHA'LTOS, ås-fål'-tôs. n. ſ. [ἄσφαλτος, bitumen.] A ſolid, brittle, black, bituminous, inflammable ſubſtance; reſembling pitch, and chiefly found ſwimming on the ſurface of the Lacus Aſphaltites, or Dead Sea, where anciently ſtood the cities of Sodom and Gomorrah. It is caſt up, in the nature of liquid pitch, from the bottom of this ſea; and, being thrown upon the water, ſwims like other fat bodies, and condenſes gradually.

ASPHA'LTUM, ås'-fål-tům. n. ſ. [Lat.] A bituminous ſtone found near the ancient Babylon, and lately in the province of Neufchâtel; which, mixed with other matters, makes an excellent cement, incorruptible by air, and impenetrable by water; ſuppoſed to be the mortar, ſo much celebrated among the ancients, with which the walls of Babylon were laid. Chambers.

A'sphodel, ås'-fô-dėl. n. ſ. [lilio-aſphodelus, Lat.] Day-lily. Aſphodels were by the ancients planted near burying-places, in order to ſupply the manes of the dead with nouriſhment.

By thoſe happy ſouls, who dwell
In yellow meads of aſphodel. Pope.

A'spick, ås'-pîk. n. ſ. [See Asp.] The name of a ſerpent.

Why did I 'ſcape th' invenom'd aſpick's rage,
And all the fiery monſters of the deſart,
To ſee this day? Addiſon.

To A'SPIRATE, ås'-pî-råte. v. a. [aſpiro, Lat.] To pronounce with aſpiration, or full breath; as we aſpirate horſe, houſe, and hog.

To A'spirate, ås'-pî-råte. v. n. [aſpiro, Lat.] To be pronounced with full breath.

Where a vowel ends a word, the next begins either with a conſonant, or what is its equivalent; for our w and h aſpirate. Dryden.

A'spirate, ås'-pî-råte. adj. [aſpiratus, Lat.] Pronounced with full breath.

For their being pervious, you may call them (if you pleaſe) perſpirate; but yet they are not aſpirate, i. e. with ſuch an aſpiration as h. Holder.

Aspira'tion, ås-pî-rå'-shůn. n. ſ. [aſpiratio, Lat.]

1. A breathing after; an ardent wiſh: uſed generally, of a wiſh for ſpiritual bleſſings.

A ſoul inſpired with the warmeſt aſpirations after celeſtial beatitude, keeps its powers attentive. Watts.

2. The act, of aſpiring, or deſiring ſomething high and great.

'Tis he; I ken the manner of his gait:
He riſes on his toe; that ſpirit of his
In aſpiration lifts him from the earth. Shakeſp.

3. The pronunciation of a vowel with full breath.

H is only a guttural aſpiration, i. e. a more forcible impulſe of the breath from the lungs. Holder.

To ASPI'RE, ås-pîre. v. n. [aſpiro, Lat.]

1. To deſire with eagerneſs; to pant after ſomething higher: ſometimes, with the particle to.

Moſt excellent lady! no expectation in others, nor hope in himſelf, could aſpire to a higher mark, than to be thought worthy to be praiſed by you. Sidney.

His father's grave counſellors, by whoſe means he had aſpir'd to the kingdom, he cruelly tortured. Knolles.

Hence ſprings that univerſal ſtrong deſire,
Which all men have of immortality:
Not ſome few ſpirits unto this thought aſpire;
But all men's minds in this united be. Davies.

Horace did ne'er aſpire to epic bays;
Nor lofty Maro ſtoop to lyrick lays. Roſcommon.

Till then a helpleſs, hopeleſs, homely ſwain;
I ſought not freedom, nor aſpir'd to gain. Dryden.

Aſpiring to be gods, if angels fell,
Aſpiring to be angels, men rebel. Pope.

2. Sometimes, with after.

Thoſe are raiſed above ſenſe, and aſpire after immortality, who believe the perpetual duration of their ſouls. Tillotſon.

There is none of us, but who would be thought, throughout the whole courſe of his life, to aſpire after immortality. Atterbury.

3. To riſe; to tower.

There is, betwixt that ſmile we would aſpire to,
That ſweet aſpect of princes, and our ruin,
More pangs and fears, than war or women have. Shakeſpeare.

My own breath ſtill foments the fire;
Which flames as high, as fancy can aſpire. Waller.

Aspi'rer, ås-pì'-růr. n. ſ. [from aſpire.] One, that ambitiouſly ſtrives to be greater than he is.

They ween'd,
To win the mount of God; and, on his throne
To ſet the envier of his ſtate, the proud
Aſpirer! but their thoughts prov'd fond and vain. Milton.

1. The ſum, levied on certain property.

2. The act of aſſeſſing.

What greater immunity and happineſs can there be to a people, than to be liable to no laws, but what they make themſelves? To be ſubject to no contribution, aſſeſſment, or any pecuniary levy whatſoever; but what they vote, and voluntarily yield unto themſelves? Howel.

Asse'ssor, ås-sĕs'-sŭr. n. ſ. [aſſeſſor, Lat.]

1. The perſon, that ſits by another; generally uſed of thoſe, who aſſiſt the judge.

Minos, the ſtrict inquiſitor, appears;
And lives and crimes, with his aſſeſſors, hears:
Round, in his urn, the blended balls he rowls;
Abſolves the juſt, and dooms the guilty ſouls.
Dryden.

2. He, that ſits by another, as next in dignity.

To his Son,
Th' aſſeſſor of his throne, he thus began. Milton.

Twice ſtronger than his ſire, who ſat above,
Aſſeſſor to the throne of thund'ring Jove. Dryd.

3. He that lays taxes; derived from aſſeſs.

A'ssets, ås'-sĕts. n. ſ. without the ſingular. [aſſez, Fr.] Goods ſufficient to diſcharge that burden, which is caſt upon the executor or heir, in ſatisfying the teſtators or anceſtors debts or legacies. Whoever pleads aſſets, ſayeth nothing; but that the perſon, againſt whom he pleads, hath enough come to his hands, to diſcharge what is in demand. Cowell.

To ASSE'VER, ås-sĕv'-ĕr. } v. a. [aſſevero, Lat.]
To Asse'verate, ås-sĕv'-ĕ-råte. }
To affirm with great ſolemnity, as upon oath.

Assevera'tion, ås-sĕv-ĕ-rå'-shŭn. n. ſ. [from aſſeverate.] Solemn affirmation, as upon oath.

That which you are perſuaded of, ye have it no otherwiſe than by your own only probable collection; and therefore ſuch bold aſſeverations, as in him were admirable, ſhould, in your mouths, but argue raſhneſs. Hooker.

Another abuſe of the tongue I might add; vehement aſſeverations upon ſlight and trivial occaſions. Ray on the Creation.

The repetition gives a greater emphaſis to the words, and agrees better with the vehemence of the ſpeaker in making his aſſeveration.
Broome's Notes on the Odyſſey.

A'sshead, ås'-hĕd. n. ſ. [from aſs and head.] One ſlow of apprehenſion; a blockhead.

I have, with much pains and aſſiduity, qualified myſelf for a nomenclator. Addiſon.

Can he, who has undertaken this, want conviction of the neceſſity of his utmoſt vigour and aſſiduity to acquit himſelf of it? Rogers.

We obſerve the addreſs and aſſiduity they will uſe to corrupt us. Rogers.

ASSI'DUOUS, ås-sĭd'-dŭ-ŭs. adj. [aſſiduus, Lat.] Conſtant in application.

And if by pray'r
Inceſſant I could hope to change the will
Of him who all things can, I would not ceaſe
To weary him with my aſſiduous cries. Milton.

The moſt aſſiduous talebearers, and bittereſt revilers, are often half-witted people.
Government of the Tongue.

In ſummer, you ſee the hen giving herſelf greater freedoms, and quitting her care for above two hours together; but in winter, when the rigour of the ſeaſon would chill the principles of life, and deſtroy the young one, ſhe grows more aſſiduous in her attendance, and ſtays away but half the time. Addiſon.

Each ſtill renews her little labour,
Nor juſtles her aſſiduous neighbour. Prior.

Assi'duously, as-sid'-u-us-ly. adv. [from aſſiduous.] Diligently; continually.

The trade, that obliges artificers to be aſſiduouſly converſant with their materials, is that of glaſs-men. Boyle.

Converſation, when they come into the world, will add to their knowledge and aſſurance. Locke.

7. Ground of confidence; ſecurity; ſufficient reaſon for truſt or belief.

The nature of deſire itſelf is no eaſier to receive belief, than it is hard to ground belief; for as deſire is glad to embrace the firſt ſhew of comfort, ſo is deſire deſirous of perfect aſſurance. Sidney.

As the conqueſt was but ſlight and ſuperficial, ſo the pope's donation to the Iriſh ſubmiſſions were but weak and fickle aſſurances. Davies on Ireland.

None, of woman born,
Shall harm Macbeth.——
—Then live, Macduff! what need I fear of thee?
But yet I'll make aſſurance double ſure,
And take a bond of fate: thou ſhalt not live. Shakeſp.

I muſt confeſs, your offer is the beſt;
And, let your father make her the aſſurance,
She is your own, elſe you muſt pardon me;
If you ſhould die before him, where's her dower? Shakeſp.

An aſſurance, being paſſed through for a competent fine, hath come back again by reaſon of ſome overſight. Bacon.

8. Spirit; intrepidity.

They, like reſolute men, ſtood in the face of the breach, with more aſſurance, than the wall itſelf. Knolles.

With all th' aſſurance, innocence can bring;
Fearleſs without, becauſe ſecure within:
Arm'd with my courage, unconcern'd I ſee
This pomp; a ſhame to you, a pride to me. Dryden.

9. Sanguineneſs; readineſs to hope.

This is not the grace of hope, but a good natural aſſurance or confidence; which, Ariſtotle obſerves young men to be full of, and old men not ſo inclined to. Hammond.

10. Teſtimony of credit.

I am a gentleman, of blood and breeding;
And, from ſome knowledge and aſſurance of you,
Offer this office. Shakeſp. King Lear.

We have as great aſſurance, that there is a God; as we could expect to have, ſuppoſing that he were. Tillotſon.

11. Conviction.

Such an aſſurance of things, as will make men careful to avoid a leſſer danger, ought to awaken men to avoid a greater. Tillotſon.

12. [In theology.] Security, with reſpect to a future ſtate; certainty of acceptance with God.

13. The ſame with inſurance. See INSURANCE.

Astri'ction, ås-trik'-ſhûn. n. ſ. [aſtrictio, Lat.] The act or power of contracting the parts of the body by applications.

Aſtriction is in a ſubſtance, that hath a virtual cold; and it worketh, partly by the ſame means, that cold doth. Bacon.

This virtue requireth an aſtriction; but ſuch an aſtriction, as is not grateful to the body: for a pleaſing aſtriction doth rather bind in the nerves, than expel them; and therefore ſuch aſtriction is found in things of a harſh taſte. Bacon.

Lenitive ſubſtances are proper, for dry atrabilarian conſtitutions; who are ſubject to aſtriction of the belly, and the piles. Arbuthnot on Diet.

Astri'ctive, ås-trik'-tiv. adj. [from aſtrict.] Stiptick; of a binding quality. Dict.

Astri'ctory, ås-trik'-tûr-rŷ. adj. [aſtrictorius, Lat.] Aſtringent; apt to bind. Dict.

Astri'de, å-stri'de. adv. [from a and ſtride.] With the legs open.

To lay their native arms aſide,
Their modeſty; and ride aſtride. Hudibras.

I ſaw a place, where the Rhone is ſo ſtraitened between two rocks, that a man may ſtand aſtride upon both at once. Boyle.

Astri'ferous, ås-trif'-ê-rûs. adj. [aſtrifer, Lat.] Bearing or having ſtars. Dict.

Astri'gerous, ås-tri'-jê-rûs. adj. [aſtriger, Lat.] Carrying ſtars. Dict.

To ASTRI'NGE, ås-trin'je. v. a. [aſtringo, Lat.] To preſs by contraction; to make the parts draw together.

Tears are cauſed by a contraction of the ſpirits of the brain; which contraction, by conſequence, aſtringeth the moiſture of the brain, and thereby ſendeth tears into the eyes. Bacon.

Astri'ngency, ås-trin'-jên-ſŷ. n. ſ. [from aſtringe.] The power of contracting the parts of the body; oppoſed to the power of relaxation.

Aſtriction prohibiteth diſſolution; as, in medicines, aſtringents inhibit putrefaction: and, by aſtringency, ſome ſmall quantity of oil of vitriol will keep freſh water long from putrefying. Bacon's Natural Hiſtory.

Acid, acrid, auſtere, and bitter ſubſtances, by their aſtringency, create horrour; that is, ſtimulate the fibres. Arbuthnot.

Astri'ngent, ås-trin'-jênt. adj. [aſtringens, Lat.] Binding; contracting; oppoſed to laxative: it is uſed ſometimes of taſtes, which ſeem to contract the mouth.

Aſtringent medicines are binding, which act by the aſperity of their particles; whereby they corrugate the membranes, and make them draw up cloſer. Quincy.

The myrobalan hath parts of contrary natures; for it is ſweet, and yet aſtringent. Bacon.

The juice is very aſtringent, and therefore of ſlow motion. Bacon's Natural Hiſtory.

What diminiſheth ſenſible perſpiration, encreaſeth the inſenſible; for that reaſon, a ſtrengthening and aſtringent diet often conduceth to this purpoſe. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

A'strography, ås-trôg'-rå-fŷ. n. ſ. [from ἄςρον and γράφω.] The ſcience of deſcribing the ſtars. Dict.

A'strolabe, ås'-trô-låb. n. ſ. [of ἄςρον, and λαβεῖν to take.]

1. An inſtrument, chiefly uſed for taking the altitude of the pole, the ſun, or ſtars, at ſea.

2. A ſtereographick projection of the circles of the ſphere, upon the plain of ſome great circle. Chambers.

Astro'loger, ås-trôl'-ô-jêr. n. ſ. [aſtrologus, Lat. from ἄςρον and λόγος.]

1. One, that (ſuppoſing the influences of the ſtars to have a cauſal power) profeſſes to foretel or diſcover events, depending on thoſe influences.

Not unlike that, which aſtrologers call a conjunction of planets, of no very benign aſpect the one to the other. Wotton.

A happy genius is the gift of nature: it depends, on the influence of the ſtars, ſay the aſtrologers; on the organs of the body, ſay the naturaliſts; it is the particular gift of heaven, ſay the divines, both chriſtians and heathens. Dryden.

Aſtrologers, that future fates foreſhew. Pope.

I never heard a finer ſatire againſt lawyers, than that of aſtrologers; when they pretend, by rules of art, to tell when a ſuit will end, and whether to the advantage of the plaintiff or defendant. Swift.

2. It was anciently uſed for one, that underſtood or explained the motions of the planets, without including prediction.

A worthy aſtrologer, by perſpective glaſſes, hath found in the ſtars many things, unknown to the ancients. Raleigh.

Astrolo'gian, ås-trô-lô'-jån. n. ſ. [from aſtrology.] The ſame with aſtrologer.

The twelve houſes of heaven, in the form which aſtrologians uſe. Camden.

The ſtars (they ſay) cannot diſpoſe,
No more than can the aſtrologian. Hudibras.

Astrolo'gical, ås-trô-lôdzh-ŷ'-kål. }
Astrolo'gick, ås-trô-lôdzh'-ik. } adj.
[from aſtrology.]

1. Profeſſing aſtrology.

Some ſeem a little aſtrological; as, when they warn us from places of malign influence. Wotton.

No aſtrologick wizard honour gains,
Who has not oft been baniſh'd, or in chains. Dryden.

2. Relating to aſtrology.

Aſtrological prayers ſeem to me, to be built on as good reaſon, as the predictions. Stillingfleet.

The poetical fables are more ancient, than the aſtrological influences; that were not known to the Greeks, till after Alexander the Great. Bentley.

Astrolo'gically, ås-trô-lôdzh'-ŷ-kål-lŷ. adv. [from aſtrology.] In an aſtrological manner.

To Astro'logize, ås-trôl-ô-ji'ze. v. n. [from aſtrology.] To practiſe aſtrology.

ASTRO'LOGY, ås-trôl'-ô-jŷ. n. ſ. [aſtrologia, Lat.] The practice of foretelling things, by the knowledge of the ſtars; an art now generally exploded, as irrational and falſe.

I know, the learned think of the art of aſtrology, that the ſtars do not force the actions or wills of men. Swift.

Astro'nomer, ås-trôn'-nô-mûr. n. ſ. [from ἄςρον a ſtar, and νόμος a rule or law.] One, that ſtudies the celeſtial motions, and the rules by which they are governed.

The motions of factions under kings ought to be like the motions (as the aſtronomers ſpeak of) in the inferiour orbs. Bacon.

Aſtronomers no longer doubt, of the motion of the planets about the ſun. Locke.

The old and new aſtronomers in vain
Attempt, the heav'nly motions to explain. Blackmore.

Astrono'mical, ås-trô-nôm'-ŷ-kål. }
Astrono'mick, ås-trô-nôm'-ik. } adj.
[from aſtronomy.] Belonging to aſtronomy.

Our forefathers, marking certain mutations to happen in the ſun's progreſs through the zodiack, they regiſtrate and ſet them down in their aſtronomical canons. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

Can he not paſs an aſtronomick line,
Or dreads the ſun th' imaginary ſign;
That he ſhould ne'er advance, to either pole? Blackmore.

Astrono'mically, ås-trô-nôm'-ŷ-kål-lŷ. adv. [from aſtronomical.] In an aſtronomical manner.

ASTRO'NOMY, ås-trôn'-nô-mŷ. n. ſ. [ἀςρονομία, from ἄςρον a ſtar, and νόμος a law or rule.] A mixed mathematical ſcience; teaching the knowledge of the celeſtial bodies, their magnitudes, motions, diſtances, periods, eclipſes, and order. Pythagoras taught, that the earth and planets turn round the ſun, which ſtands immoveable in the centre. From the time of Pythagoras, aſtronomy ſunk into neglect; till it was revived by the Ptolemys, kings of Egypt; and the Saracens brought it from Africa to Spain, and reſtored this ſcience to Europe. Chambers.

To this muſt be added the underſtanding of the globes, and the principles of geometry and aſtronomy. Cowley.

A'stroscopy, ås-trô-skô'-pŷ. n. ſ. [ἄςρον a ſtar, and σκοπέω to view.] Obſervation of the ſtars. Dict.

Astro-theology, ås'-trô-thê-ôl''-ô-jŷ. n. ſ. [from aſtrum a ſtar, and theologia divinity.] Divinity founded on the obſervation of the celeſtial bodies.

That the diurnal and annual revolutions are the motions of the terraqueous globe, not of the ſun, I ſhew in the preface of my Aſtro-Theology. Derham's Phyſico-Theology.

Asu'nder, å-ſûn'-dûr. adv. [aſundran, Sax.] Apart; ſeparately; not together.

Two indirect lines; the further that they are drawn out, the further they go aſunder. Spenſer on Ireland.

Senſe thinks the planets ſpheres not much aſunder;
What tells us then, their diſtance is ſo far? Davies.

Greedy hope, to find
His wiſh and beſt advantage, us aſunder. Paradiſe Loſt.

The fall'n archangel, envious of our ſtate,
Seeks hid advantage to betray us worſe;
Which, when aſunder, will not prove too hard;
For both together are each other's guard. Dryden.

Borne far aſunder by the tides of men,
Like adamant and ſteel they meet again. Dryden's Fables.

All this metallick matter (both that, which continued aſunder and in ſingle corpuſcles; and that, which was amaſſed and concreted into nodules) ſubſided. Woodward's Natural Hiſtory.

Asy'lum, å-ſŷ'-lûm. n. ſ. [Lat. ἄσυλον, from a not, and σύλον pillage.] A place, out of which he that has fled to it, may not be taken; a ſanctuary; a refuge; a place of retreat and ſecurity.

So ſacred was the church to ſome, that it had the right of an aſylum or ſanctuary. Ayliffe's Parergon.

Asy'mmetry, å-ſim'-mê-trŷ. n. ſ. [from a without, and συμμετρία ſymmetry.]

1. Contrariety to ſymmetry; diſproportion.

The aſymmetries of the brain, as well as the deformities of the legs or face, may be rectified in time. Grew.

2. This term is ſometimes uſed in mathematicks, for what is more uſually called incommenſurability; when between two quantities there is no common meaſure.

A'symptote, å-ſimp'-tôte. n. ſ. [from a, priv. συν with, and πτόω to fall; which never meet; incoincident.] Aſymptotes are right lines, which approach nearer and nearer to ſome curve; but which, though they and their curve were infinitely continued, would never meet; and may be conceived as tangents to their curves at an infinite diſtance. Chambers.

Aſymptote lines, though they may approach ſtill nearer together, till they are nearer than the leaſt aſſignable diſtance, yet, being ſtill produced infinitely, will never meet. Grew.

Asympto'tical, å-sìmp'-tòt-ì-kål. adj. [from aſymptote.] Curves are ſaid to be aſymptotical, when they continually approach, without a poſſibility of meeting.

ASY'NDETON, å-sìn'-dè-tòn. n. ſ. [ἀσύνδετον, of α, priv. and συνδέω to bind together.] A figure in grammar, when a conjunction copulative is omitted in a ſentence; as, in veni, vidi, vici, & is left out.

At, åt'. prep. [æt, Saxon.]

1. At, before a place, notes the nearneſs of the place; as, a man is at the houſe, before he is in it.

This cuſtom continued among many, to ſay their prayers at fountains. Stillingfleet.

2. At, before a word ſignifying time, notes the coexiſtence of the time with the event; the word time is ſometimes included in the adjective; we commonly ſay at a minute, at an hour, on a day, in a month.

We thought it, at the very firſt, a ſign of cold affection. Hooker.

How frequent to deſert him, and at laſt
To heap ingratitude on worthieſt deeds. Milton.

At the ſame time, that the ſtorm beats upon the whole ſpecies, we are falling foul upon one another. Addiſon.

We made no efforts at all, where we could have moſt weakened the common enemy; and, at the ſame time, enriched ourſelves. Swift.

3. At, before a cauſal word, ſignifies nearly the ſame as with; noting, that the event accompanies, or immediately ſucceeds, the action of the cauſe.

At his touch,
Such ſanctity hath Heav'n giv'n his hand,
They preſently amend. Shakeſpeare's Macbeth.

O, ſir, when he ſhall hear of your approach,
If that young Arthur be not gone already;
Ev'n at this news, he dies. Shakeſp. King John.

Much at the ſight was Adam in his heart
Diſmay'd. Milton's Paradiſe Loſt.

High o'er their heads, a mould'ring rock is plac'd;
That promiſes a fall, and ſhakes at ev'ry blaſt. Dryden.

4. At, before a ſuperlative adjective, implies in the ſtate; as, at beſt, in the ſtate of moſt perfection, &c.

Conſider any man, as to his perſonal powers; they are not great: for, at greateſt, they muſt ſtill be limited. South.

We bring into the world with us a poor, needy, uncertain life, ſhort at the longeſt, and unquiet at the beſt. Temple.

5. At, before a perſon, is ſeldom uſed otherwiſe than ludicrouſly; as, he longed to be at him; that is, to attack him.

6. At, before a ſubſtantive, ſometimes ſignifies the particular condition or circumſtances of the perſon; as, at peace, in a ſtate of peace.

Under pardon,
You are much more at taſk, for want of wiſdom;
Than prais'd, for harmleſs mildneſs. Shakeſp.

It bringeth the treaſure of a realm into a few hands: for, the uſurer being at certainties, and others at uncertainties; at the end of the game, moſt of the money will be in the box. Bacon.

Hence walk'd the fiend at large, in ſpacious field. Milton.

The reſt, for whom no lot is yet decreed,
May run in paſtures, and at pleaſure feed. Dryden's Virgil.

Deſerted, at his utmoſt need,
By thoſe his former bounty fed. Dryd. St. Cæcilia.

What hinder'd either, in their native ſoil
At eaſe to reap the harveſt of their toil. Dryden's Fab.

Wiſe men are ſometimes over-borne, when they are taken at a diſadvantage. Collier of Confidence.

Theſe have been the maxims, they have been guided by: take theſe from them, and they are perfectly at a loſs; their compaſs and pole-ſtar then are gone, and their underſtanding is perfectly at a nonplus. Locke.

One man manages four horſes at once, and leaps from the back of another at full ſpeed. Pope's Eſſay on Homer's Battles.

They will not let me be at quiet, in my bed; but purſue me, to my very dreams. Swift.

7. At, before a ſubſtantive, ſometimes marks employment or attention.

We find ſome arrived to that ſottiſhneſs, as to own roundly, what they would be at. South.

How d'ye find yourſelf? ſays the doctor to his patient. A little while after, he is at it again; with a Pray, how d'ye find your body? L'Eſtrange.

But ſhe (who well enough knew what,
Before he ſpoke, he would be at)
Pretended, not to apprehend. Hudibras.

The creature 's at his dirty work again. Pope.

8. At is ſometimes the ſame, with furniſhed with; after the French a.

Infuſe his breaſt with magnanimity;
And make him, naked, foil a man at arms. Shakeſpeare.

9. At ſometimes notes the place, where any thing is or acts.

Your huſband is at hand; I hear his trumpet. Shakeſpeare.

He, that in tracing the veſſels began at the heart, though he thought not at all of a circulation, yet made he the firſt true ſtep towards the diſcovery. Grew.

To all you ladies now at land,
We men at ſea indite. Buckhurſt.

Their various news I heard, of love and ſtrife,
Of ſtorms at ſea, and travels on the ſhore. Pope.

10. At ſometimes ſignifies in immediate conſequence of.

Impeachments, at the proſecution of the houſe of commons, have received their determinations in the houſe of lords. Hale.

11. At marks ſometimes the effect, proceeding from an act.

Reſt in this tomb, rais'd at thy huſband's coſt. Dryden.

Tom has been at the charge of a penny, upon this occaſion. Addiſon.

Thoſe may be of uſe; to confirm by authority, what they will not be at the trouble to deduce by reaſoning. Arbuthnot.

12. At ſometimes is nearly the ſame as in, noting ſituation; as, he was at the bottom, or top, of the hill.

She hath been known, to come at the head of theſe raſcals, and beat her lover. Swift.

13. At ſometimes marks the occaſion, like on.

Others, with more helpful care,
Cry'd out aloud, 'Beware, brave youth, beware!'
At this he turn'd; and, as the bull drew near,
Shunn'd, and receiv'd him on his pointed ſpear. Dryden.

14. At ſometimes ſeems to ſignify, in the power of, or obedient to.

But thou of all the kings, Jove's care below,
Art leaſt at my command, and moſt my foe. Dryden.

15. At ſometimes notes the relation of a man to an action.

He, who makes pleaſure the vehicle of health, is a doctor at it in good earneſt. Collier of Friendſhip.

16. At ſometimes imports the manner of an action.

One warms you by degrees; the other ſets you on fire all at once, and never intermits his heat. Dryden's Fables.

Not with leſs ruin, than the Bajan mole,
At once comes tumbling down. Dryden's Æneid.

17. At, like the French chez, means ſometimes application to, or dependence on.

The worſt authors might endeavour, to pleaſe us; and, in that endeavour, deſerve ſomething at our hands. Pope.

18. At all. In any manner; in any degree.

Nothing more true, than what you once let fall;
Moſt women have no characters at all. Pope.

A'tabal, åt'-å-bål. n. ſ. A kind of tabour uſed by the Moors.

Children ſhall beat our atabals and drums;
And all the noiſy trades of war no more
Shall wake the peaceful morn. Dryd. Don Sebaſt.

ATARA'XIA, åt'-tå-råk-ſyå. } n. ſ. [ἀταραξία.]
A'taraxy, åt'-tå-råk-ſỳ. } Exemption from vexation; tranquillity.

The ſcepticks affected an indifferent equiponderous neutrality, as the only means to their ataraxia, and freedom from paſſionate diſturbances. Glanville's Scepſis.

Ate, å'te. The preterite of eat. See To Eat.

And, by his ſide, his ſteed the graſſy forage ate. Spenſer.

Even our firſt parents ate themſelves out of Paradiſe; and Job's children junketted and feaſted together often. South.

ATHA'NOR, åth'-å-nòr. n. ſ. [a chymical term, borrowed from ἀθάνατος; or, as others think, תנור.] A digeſting furnace, to keep heat for ſome time; ſo that it may be augmented or diminiſhed at pleaſure, by opening or ſhutting ſome apertures, made on purpoſe with ſliders over them, called regiſters. Quincy.

A'theism, å'-thè-ìſm. n. ſ. [from atheiſt. It is only of two ſyllables in poetry.] The diſbelief of a God.

God never wrought miracles to convince atheiſm, becauſe his ordinary works convince it. Bacon.

It is the common intereſt of mankind, to puniſh all thoſe, who would ſeduce men to atheiſm. Tillotſon.

A'THEIST, å'-thè-ìſt. n. ſ. [ἄθεος without God.] One, that denies the exiſtence of God.

To theſe, that ſober race of men, whoſe lives
Religious titled them the ſons of God,
Shall yield up all their virtue, all their fame,
(Ignobly!) to the trains, and to the ſmiles,
Of theſe fair atheiſts. Milton's Paradiſe Loſt.

Though he were really a ſpeculative atheiſt; yet, if he would but proceed rationally, he could not however be a practical atheiſt, nor live without God in this world. South.

Atheiſt, uſe thine eyes;
And, having view'd the order of the ſkies,
Think (if thou canſt) that matter, blindly hurl'd
Without a guide, ſhould frame this wond'rous world. Creech.

No atheiſt, as ſuch, can be a true friend, an affectionate relation, or a loyal ſubject. Bentley.

A'theist, å'-thè-ìſt. adj. Atheiſtical; denying God.

Nor ſtood unmindful Abdiel, to annoy.
The atheiſt crew. Milton's Paradiſe Loſt.

Athei'stical, å-thè-ìs'-tì-kål. adj. [from atheiſt.] Given to atheiſm; impious.

Men are atheiſtical, becauſe they are firſt vicious; and queſtion the truth of chriſtianity, becauſe they hate the practice. South.

Athei'stically, å-thè-ìs'-tì-kål-lỳ. adv. [from atheiſtical.] In an atheiſtical manner.

Is it not enormous, that a divine, hearing a great ſinner talk atheiſtically, and ſcoff profanely at religion, ſhould, inſtead of vindicating the truth, tacitly approve the ſcoffer? South.

I entreat ſuch, as are atheiſtically inclined, to conſider theſe things. Tillotſon.

Athei'sticalness, å-thê-ìs'-tì-kål-nês. n. ſ. [from atheiſtical.] The quality of being atheiſtical.

Lord, purge out of all hearts profaneneſs and atheiſticalneſs. Hammond's Fundamentals.

Athei'stick, å-thê-ìs'-tìk. adj. [from atheiſt.] Given to atheiſm.

This argument demonſtrated the exiſtence of a Deity, and convinced all atheiſtick gainſayers. Ray on the Creation.

A'thel, A'theling, A'del, and Æ'thel, å'-thêl, å'-thêl-ìng, å'-dêl, å'-thêl, from adel noble, Germ. So Æthelred is noble for counſel; Æthelard, a noble genius; Æthelbert, eminently noble; Æthelward, a noble protector. Gibſon's Camden.

A'theous, å'-thê-ùs. adj. [ἄθεος.] Atheiſtick; godleſs.

> Thy Father, who is holy, wiſe, and pure,
> Suffers the hypocrite, or atheous prieſt,
> To tread his ſacred courts. Paradiſe Regained.

ATHERO'MA, å-thê-rô'-må. n. ſ. [ἀθέρωμα, from ἀθερα pap or pulſe.] A ſpecies of wen, which neither cauſes pain, diſcolours the ſkin, nor yields eaſily to the touch.

If the matter, forming them, reſembles milk curds, the tumour is called atheroma; if it be like honey, meliceris; and, if compoſed of fat, or a ſuety ſubſtance, ſteatoma. Sharp.

Athero'matous, å-thê-ròm'-å-tùs. adj. [from atheroma.] Having the qualities of an atheroma, or curdy wen.

Feeling the matter fluctuating, I thought it atheromatous. Wiſeman's Surgery.

Athi'rst, å-thùr'st. adv. [from a and thirſt.] Thirſty; in want of drink.

> With ſcanty meaſure then ſupply their food;
> And, when athirſt, reſtrain 'em from the flood. Dryden.

> Goes all decorum. Shakeſp. Meaſure for Meaſure.

Ati'lt, å-tìlt'. adv, [from a and tilt.]

1. In the manner of a tilter; with the action of a man, making a thruſt at an antagoniſt.

> In the city Tours
> Thou ran'ſt atilt, in honour of my love;
> And ſtol'ſt away the ladies hearts from France. Shakeſpeare.

> To run atilt at men, and wield
> Their naked tools in open field. Hudibras.

2. In the poſture of a barrel, raiſed or tilted behind, to make it run out.

Such a man is always atilt; his favours come hardly from him. Spectator.

A'tlas, åt'-lås. n. ſ.

1. A collection of maps; ſo called, probably, from a picture of Atlas ſupporting the heavens, prefixed to ſome collections.
2. A large ſquare folio; ſo called from theſe folios, which, containing maps, were made large and ſquare.
3. Sometimes the ſupporters of a building.
4. A rich kind of ſilk or ſtuff, made for women's clothes.

I have the conveniency of buying Dutch atlaſſes, with gold and ſilver, or without. Spectator.

A'tmosphere, åt'-mô-ſfêre. n. ſ. [ἀτμὸς vapour, and σφαῖρα a ſphere.]

The exteriour part of this our habitable world is the air, or atmoſphere; a light, thin, fluid, or ſpringy body, that encompaſſes the ſolid earth on all ſides. Locke.

> Immenſe the whole excited atmoſphere
> Impetuous ruſhes o'er the ſounding world. Thomſon.

Atmosphe'rical, åt-mô-ſfêr'-ì-kål. adj. [from atmoſphere.] Conſiſting of the atmoſphere; belonging to the atmoſphere.

We did not mention the weight of the incumbent atmoſpherical cylinder, as a part of the weight reſiſted. Boyle.

A'TOM, åt'-tùm. n. ſ. [atomus, Lat. ἄτομος.]

1. Such a ſmall particle, as cannot be phyſically divided: and theſe are the firſt rudiments, or the component parts, of all bodies. Quincy.

Innumerable minute bodies are called atoms; becauſe, by reaſon of their perfect ſolidity, they were really indiviſible. Ray.

> See plaſtick nature, working to this end!
> The ſingle atoms, each to other tend;
> Attract, attracted to, the next in place,
> Form'd and impell'd its neighbour to embrace. Pope.

2. Any thing, extremely ſmall.

It is as eaſy to count atoms, as to reſolve the propoſitions of a lover. Shakeſp. As you like it.

Ato'mical, å-tòm'-ì-kål. adj. [from atom.]

1. Conſiſting of atoms.

Vitrified and pellucid bodies are clearer, in their continuities, than in powders and atomical diviſions. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

2. Relating to atoms.

Vacuum is another principal doctrine of the atomical philoſophy. Bentley's Sermons.

A'tomist, åt'-tô-mìſt. n. ſ. [from atom.] One, that holds the atomical philoſophy, or doctrine of atoms.

The atomiſts (who define motion, to be a paſſage from one place to another) what do they more, than put one ſynonymous word for another? Locke.

> Now can judicious atomiſts conceive,
> Chance to the ſun could his juſt impulſe give? Blackmore.

A'tomy, åt'-ô-mỳ. n. ſ. An obſolete word for atom.

> Drawn with a team of little atomies,
> Athwart men's noſes, as they be aſleep. Shakeſp.

To ATO'NE, å-tô'ne. v. n. [from at one; as the etymologiſts remark, to be at one, is the ſame as to be in concord. This derivation is much confirmed, by the following paſſage of Shakeſpeare; and appears to be the ſenſe, ſtill retained in Scotland.]

1. To agree; to accord.

> He and Aufidus can no more atone,
> Than violenteſt contrariety. Shakeſp. Coriolanus.

2. To ſtand, as an equivalent for ſomething; and particularly uſed of expiatory ſacrifices, with the particle for before the thing, for which ſomething elſe is given.

> From a mean ſtock, the pious Decii came;
> Yet ſuch their virtues, that their loſs alone,
> For Rome and all our legions, did atone. Dryden's Juvenal.

The good intention of a man of weight and worth, or a real friend, ſeldom atones for the uneaſineſs, produced by his grave repreſentations. Locke.

> Let thy ſublime meridian courſe,
> For Mary's ſetting rays, atone:
> Our luſtre, with redoubled force,
> Muſt now proceed from thee alone. Prior.
> His virgin ſword Ægyſthus' veins imbrued;
> The murd'rer fell, and blood aton'd for blood. Pope.

To Ato'ne, å-tô'ne. v. a.

1. To reduce to concord.

If any contention aroſe, he knew none fitter to be their judge, to atone and take up their quarrels, but himſelf. Drumm.

2. To expiate; to anſwer for.

> Soon ſhould yon boaſters ceaſe their haughty ſtrife;
> Or each atone his guilty love, with life. Pope.

Ato'nement, å-tô'ne-mênt. n. ſ. [from atone.]

1. Agreement; concord.

> He ſeeks, to make atonement,
> Between the duke of Glo'ſter and your brothers. Shakeſp.

2. Expiation; expiatory equivalent: with for.

And the Levites were purified; and Aaron made an atonement for them, to cleanſe them. Numbers.

Surely it is not a ſufficient atonement, for the writers; that they profeſs loyalty to the government, and ſprinkle ſome arguments in favour of the diſſenters; and, under the ſhelter of popular politicks and religion, undermine the foundations of all piety and virtue. Swift.

Ato'p, å-tòp'. adv. [from a and top.] On the top; at the top.

> Atop whereof, but far more rich, appear'd
> The work, as of a kingly palace-gate. Paradiſe Loſt.

What is extracted by water from coffee is the oil, which often ſwims atop of the decoction, Arbuthnot on Aliments.

Atrabila'rian, å'-trå-bì-lå''-ryån. adj. [from atra bilis black choler.] Melancholy; replete with black choler.

The atrabilarian conſtitution (or a black, viſcous, pitchy conſiſtence of the fluids) makes all ſecretions difficult and ſparing. Arbuthnot on Diet.

Atrabila'rious, å'-trå-bì-lå''-ryùs. adj. [from atra bilis black choler.] Melancholick.

The blood, deprived of its due proportion of ſerum, or finer and more volatile parts, is atrabilarious; whereby it is rendered groſs, black, unctuous, and earthy. Quincy.

From this black aduſt ſtate of the blood, they are atrabilarious. Arbuthnot on Air.

Atrabila'riousness, å'-trå-bì-lå''-ryùs-nês. n. ſ. [from atrabilarious.] The ſtate, of being melancholy; repletion with melancholy.

Atrame'ntal, å-trå-mên'-tål. adj. [from atramentum ink, Lat.] Inky; black.

If we enquire, in what part of vitriol this atramental and denigrating condition lodgeth; it will ſeem, eſpecially to lie in the more fixed ſalt thereof. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

Atrame'ntous, å-trå-mên'-tůs. adj. [from atramentum ink, Lat.] Inky; black.

I am not ſatisfied, that thoſe black and atramentous ſpots, which ſeem to repreſent them, are ocular. Brown.

ATRO'CIOUS, å-trô'-ſhůs. adj. [atrox, Lat.] Wicked, in a high degree; enormous; horribly criminal.

An advocate is neceſſary; and therefore audience ought not to be denied him in defending cauſes, unleſs it be an atrocious offence. Ayliffe's Parergon.

Atro'ciously, å-trô'-ſhůs-lý. adv. [from atrocious.] In an atrocious manner; with great wickedneſs.

Atro'ciousness, å-trô'-ſhůs-nês. n. ſ. [from atrocious.] The quality of being enormouſly criminal.

Atro'city, å-trôs'-sî-tý. n. ſ. [atrocitas, Lat.] Horrible wickedneſs; exceſs of wickedneſs.

I never recal it to mind, without a deep aſtoniſhment of the very horrour and atrocity of the fact in a Chriſtian court. Wotton.

They deſired juſtice might be done upon offenders, as the atrocity of their crimes deſerved. Clarendon.

A'trophy, ât'-trô-fý. n. ſ. [ἀτροφια.] Want of nouriſhment; a diſeaſe, in which, what is taken at the mouth, cannot contribute to the ſupport of the body.

Pining atrophy,
Maraſmus, and wide-waſting peſtilence. Milton.

The mouths of the lacteals may be ſhut up, by a viſcid mucus; in which caſe, the chyle paſſeth by ſtool, and the perſon falleth into an atrophy. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

To ATTA'CH, ât-tâtſh'. v. a. [attacher, Fr.]

1. To arreſt; to take or apprehend, by commandment or writ. Cowell.

Eftſoons the guards, which on his ſtate did wait,
Attach'd that traitor falſe, and bound him ſtrait. Spenſer.

The Tower was choſen; that, if Clifford ſhould accuſe great ones, they might (without ſuſpicion or noiſe) be preſently attached. Bacon's Henry VII.

Bohemia greets you:
Deſires you to attach his ſon, who has
His dignity and duty both caſt off. Shakeſp.

2. Sometimes with the particle of, but not in preſent uſe.

You, lord archbiſhop! and you, lord Mowbray!
Of capital treaſon, I attach you both. Shakeſp.

3. To ſeize, in a judicial manner.

France hath flaw'd the league, and hath attach'd
Our merchants goods at Bourdeaux. Shakeſp.

4. To lay hold on, as by power.

Our attainments are mean, compared with the perfection of the univerſe. Grew.

2. The act or power of attaining.

The Scripture muſt be ſufficient, to imprint in us the character of all things neceſſary for the attainment of eternal life. Hooker.

Education, in extent more large, of time ſhorter, and of attainment more certain. Milton.

Government is an art, above the attainment of an ordinary genius. South.

If the ſame actions be the inſtruments, both of acquiring fame, and procuring this happineſs; they would nevertheleſs fail in the attainment of this laſt end, if they proceeded from a deſire of the firſt. Addiſon.

The great care of God for our ſalvation muſt appear in the concern he expreſſed for our attainment of it. Rogers.

To Atta'int, ât-tå'nt. v. a. [attenter, Fr.]

1. To diſgrace; to cloud with ignominy.

His warlike ſhield
Was all of diamond, perfect, pure, and clean;
For, ſo exceeding ſhone his gliſtering ray,
That Phœbus' golden face it did attaint;
As, when a cloud his beams doth overlay. Fairy Queen.

2. To attaint, is particularly uſed for ſuch, as are found guilty of ſome crime or offence; and eſpecially, of felony or treaſon. A man is attainted two ways; by appearance, or by proceſs. Attainder by appearance is, by confeſſion, battle, or verdict. Confeſſion is double: one at the bar, before the judges; when the priſoner, upon his indictment read, being aſked guilty or not guilty, anſwers Guilty; never putting himſelf, upon the verdict of the jury: the other is before the coroner, or ſanctuary; where he, upon his confeſſion, was (in former times) conſtrained to abjure the realm; which kind is called attainder by abjuration. Attainder by battle is, when the party appealed; and, chooſing to try the truth by combat rather than by jury, is vanquiſhed. Attainder by verdict is, when the priſoner at the bar, anſwering to the indictment Not guilty, hath an inqueſt of life and death paſſing upon him, and is by the verdict pronounced guilty. Attainder by proceſs is, where a party flies; and is not found, till five times called publickly in the county, and at laſt outlawed upon his default. Cowell.

Were it not an endleſs trouble, that no traitor or felon ſhould be attainted, but a parliament muſt be called? Spenſer.

I muſt offend, before I be attainted. Shakeſp.

—The reaſon is, your ſpirits are attentive.
Shakeſpeare's Merch. of Venice.

I ſaw moſt of them attentive to three Sirens, diſtinguiſhed by the names of Sloth, Ignorance, and Pleaſure. Tatler.

A critick is a man, who, on all occaſions, is more attentive, to what is wanting, than what is preſent. Addiſon.

Muſick's force can tame the furious beaſt;
Can make the wolf or foaming boar reſtrain
His rage; the lion, drop his creſted main,
Attentive to the ſong. Prior.

ATTE'NTIVELY, ảt-tẻn'-tỉv-lỷ. adv. [from attentive.] Heedfully; carefully.

If a man look ſharply and attentively, he ſhall ſee Fortune; for though ſhe be blind, ſhe is not inviſible. Bacon.

The cauſe of cold is a quick ſpirit in a cold body; as will appear to any, that ſhall attentively conſider nature. Bacon.

ATTE'NTIVENESS, ảt-tẻn'-tỉv-nẻs. n. ſ. [from attentive.] The ſtate of being attentive; heedfulneſs; attention.

At the relation of the queen's death, bravely confeſſed and lamented by the king, how attentiveneſs wounded his daughter. Shakeſpeare's Winter's Tale.

ATTE'NUANT, ảt-tẻn'-ủ-ảnt. adj. [attenuans, Lat.] What has the power of making thin, or diluting.

To ATTE'NUATE, ảt-tẻn'-ủ-ảte. v. a. [attenuo, Lat.] To make thin, or ſlender: oppoſed to condenſe, or incraſſate, or thicken.

The finer part, belonging to the juice of grapes, being attenuated and ſubtilized, was changed into an ardent ſpirit. Boyle.

Vinegar curd, put upon an egg, not only diſſolves the ſhell; but alſo attenuates the white contained in it, into a limpid water. Wiſeman's Surgery.

It is of the nature of acids, to diſſolve or attenuate; and of alkalies, to precipitate or incraſſate. Newton's Opticks.

The ingredients are digeſted and attenuated by heat; they are ſtirred and conſtantly agitated by winds. Arbuthnot.

ATTE'NUATE, ảt-tẻn'-ủ-ảte. adj. [from the verb.] Made thin, or ſlender.

Vivification ever conſiſteth in ſpirits attenuate, which the cold doth congeal and coagulate. Bacon.

ATTENUA'TION, ảt-tẻn-ủ-ả'-ſhủn. n. ſ. [from attenuate.] The act of making any thing thin or ſlender; leſſening.

Chiming with a hammer upon the outſide of a bell, the ſound will be according to the inward concave of the bell; whereas the eliſion, or attenuation of the air, can be only between the hammer and the outſide of the bell. Bacon.

A'TTER, ả't-tủr. n. ſ. [aτeꞃ, Sax. venom.] Corrupt matter. A word, much uſed in Lincolnſhire. Skinner.

To ATTE'ST, ảt-tẻſt'. v. a. [atteſtor, Lat.]

1. To bear witneſs of; to witneſs.

Many particular facts are recorded in holy writ, atteſted by particular pagan authors. Addiſon.

2. To call to witneſs; to invoke as conſcious.

The ſacred ſtreams, which heav'n's imperial ſtate
Atteſts in oaths, and fears to violate. Dryden.

ATTE'ST, ảt-tẻſt'. n. ſ. [from the verb.] Witneſs; teſtimony; atteſtation.

The atteſt of eyes and ears. Shakeſp.

With the voice divine
Nigh thunderſtruck, th' exalted man, to whom
Such high atteſt was giv'n, a while ſurvey'd
With wonder. Paradiſe Regained.

ATTESTA'TION, ảt-tẻs-tả'-ſhủn. n. ſ. [from atteſt.] Teſtimony; witneſs; evidence.

There remains a ſecond kind of peremptorineſs; of thoſe, who can make no relation, without an atteſtation of its certainty. Gov. of the Tongue.

The next coal-pit, mine, quarry, or chalk-pit, will give atteſtation, to what I write: theſe are ſo obvious, that I need not ſeek for a compurgator. Woodward's Natural Hiſtory.

We may derive a probability, from the atteſtation of wiſe and honeſt men, by word or writing; or the concurring witneſs of multitudes, who have ſeen and known, what they relate. Watts.

To ATTI'NGE, ảt-tỉn'je. v. a. [attingo, Lat.] To touch lightly or gently. Dict.

To ATTI'RE, ảt-tỉ're. v. a. [attirer, Fr.] To dreſs; to habit; to array.

Let it likewiſe your gentle breaſt inſpire,
With ſweet infuſion; and put you in mind
Of that proud maid, whom now thoſe leaves attire,
Proud Daphne. Spenſer.

My Nan ſhall be the queen of all the fairies;
Finely attired in a robe of white.
Shakeſp. Merry Wives of Windſor.

With the linen mitre ſhall he be attired. Lev. xvi. 4.

Now the ſappy boughs
Attire themſelves with blooms. Philips.

ATTI'RE, ảt-tỉ're. n. ſ. [from the verb.]

1. Clothes; dreſs; habit.

It is no more diſgrace to Scripture, to have left things free, to be ordered by the church; than for Nature, to have left it to the wit of man, to deviſe his own attire. Hooker.

After that, the Roman attire grew to be in account, and the gown to be in uſe among them, Davies on Ireland.

Thy ſumptuous buildings, and thy wife's attire,
Hath coſt a maſs of publick treaſury.
Shakeſp. Henry VI. p. ii.

And, in this coarſe attire, which I now wear,
With God and with the Muſes I confer. Donne.

When laviſh nature, with her beſt attire,
Clothes the gay ſpring, the ſeaſon of deſire.
Waller.

I paſs their form, and ev'ry charming grace;
But their attire, like liveries of a kind,
All rich and rare, is freſh within my mind.
Dryden.

2. [In hunting.] The horns of a buck or ſtag.

3. [In botany.] The flower of a plant is divided into three parts; the empalement, the foliation, and the attire, which is either florid or ſemiform. Florid attire, called thrums or ſuits, as in the flowers of marigold and tanſey, conſiſts ſometimes of two, but commonly of three, parts: the outer part is the floret; the body of which is divided at the top, like the cowſlip flower, into five diſtinct parts. Semiform attire conſiſts of two parts, the chives and apices; one upon each attire. Dict.

ATTI'RER, ảt-tỉ'-rủr. n. ſ. [from attire.] One, that attires another; a dreſſer.

A'TTITUDE, ả't-tỷ-tủde. n. ſ. [attitude, Fr. from atto, Ital.] The poſture or action, in which a ſtatue or painted figure is placed.

Bernini would have taken his opinion, upon the beauty and attitude of a figure. Prior's Dedication.

They were famous originals, that gave riſe to ſtatues, with the ſame air, poſture, and attitudes. Addiſon.

ATTO'LLENT, ảt-tỏl'-lẻnt. adj. [attollens, Lat.] That, which raiſes or lifts up.

I ſhall farther take notice, of the exquiſite libration of the attollent and depriment muſcles. Derham's Phyſico-Theology.

ATTO'RNEY, ảt-tủr'-nỷ. n. ſ. [attornatus, low Lat. from tour, Fr. Celui, qui vient à tour d'autrui; qui alterius vices ſubit.]

1. Such a perſon, as (by conſent, commandment, or requeſt) takes heed, ſees, and takes upon him the charge of other men's buſineſs, in their abſence. Attorney is either general or ſpecial. Attorney general is he, that by general authority is appointed to all our affairs or ſuits; as the attorney general of the king, which is nearly the ſame with Procurator Cæſaris in the Roman empire: Attorneys general are made, either by the king's letters patent; or by our appointment before juſtices in Eyre, in open court. Attorney ſpecial or particular is he, that is employed in one or more cauſes, particularly ſpecified. There are alſo, in reſpect of the divers courts, attorneys at large, and attorneys ſpecial, belonging to this or that court only. Cowell.

Attorneys, in common law, are nearly the ſame with proctors in the civil law, and ſolicitors in courts of equity. Attorneys ſue out writs or proceſs; or commence, carry on, and defend actions, or other proceedings, in the names of other perſons, in the courts of common law. None are admitted to act, without having ſerved a clerkſhip for five years, taking the proper oath, being enrolled, and examined by the judges. The attorney general pleads within the bar. To him come warrants for making out patents, pardons, &c. and he is the principal manager of all law affairs of the crown. Chambers.

I am a ſubject,
And challenge law: attorneys are deny'd me;
And therefore perſonally I lay my claim,
To mine inheritance. Shakeſp.

The king's attorney, on the contrary,
Urg'd on examinations, proofs, confeſſions. Shakeſp.

Deſpairing quacks with curſes fled the place;
And vile attorneys, now an uſeleſs race. Pope.

2. It was anciently uſed for thoſe, who did any buſineſs for another; now, only in law.

I will attend my huſband; it is my office;
And will have no attorney, but myſelf;
And therefore let me have him home. Shakeſp.

To ATTO'RNEY, åt-tůr'-nẙ. v. a. [from the noun; the verb is now not in uſe.]

1. To perform by proxy.

Their encounters, though not perſonal, have been royally attornied with interchange of gifts. Shakeſp.

2. To employ, as a proxy.

As I was then,
Advertiſing and holy to your buſineſs,
Nor changing heart with habit; I am ſtill
Attornied to your ſervice. Shakeſp.

ATTO'RNEYSHIP, åt-tůr'-nẙ-ſhi̊p. n. ſ. [from attorney.] The office of an attorney; proxy; vicarious agency.

But marriage is a matter of more worth,
Than to be dealt in by attorneyſhip. Shakeſp.

ATTO'URNMENT, åt-tůrn'-me̊nt. n. ſ. [attournement, Fr.] A yielding of the tenant to a new lord, or acknowledgment of him to be his lord: for, otherwiſe, he that buyeth or obtaineth any lands or tenements of another, which are in the occupation of a third, cannot get poſſeſſion. Cowell.

To ATTRA'CT, åt-tråk't. v. a. [attraho, attractum, Lat.]

1. To draw to ſomething.

A man ſhould ſcarce perſuade the affections of the loadſtone, or that jet and amber attracteth ſtraws and light bodies. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

The ſingle atoms, each to other tend;
Attract, attracted to, the next in place,
Form'd and impell'd its neighbour to embrace. Pope.

2. To allure; to invite.

Adorn'd
She was indeed, and lovely, to attract
Thy love; not thy ſubjection. Milton.

Shew the care of approving all actions ſo, as may moſt effectually attract all to this profeſſion. Hammond.

Deign to be lov'd, and ev'ry heart ſubdue!
What nymph could e'er attract ſuch crowds, as you? Pope.

ATTRA'CT, åt-tråk't. n. ſ. [from To attract.] Attraction; the power of drawing: not in uſe.

Feel darts and charms, attracts and flames,
And woo and contract in their names. Hudibras.

ATTRA'CTICAL, åt-tråk'-ti̊-kål. adj. [from attract.] Having the power to draw to it.

Some ſtones are endued with an electrical or attractical virtue. Ray on the Creation.

ATTRA'CTION, åt-tråk'-ſhůn. n. ſ. [from attract.]

1. The power of drawing any thing.

The drawing of amber and jet, and other electrick bodies; and the attraction in gold, of the ſpirit of quickſilver at diſtance; and the attraction of heat, at diſtance; and that of fire, to naphtha; and that of ſome herbs to water, though at diſtance; and divers others, we ſhall handle. Bacon.

Loadſtones and touched needles, laid long in quickſilver, have not amitted their attraction. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

Attraction may be performed by impulſe, or ſome other means; I uſe that word, to ſignify any force, by which bodies tend towards one another. Newton's Opticks.

2. The power of alluring or enticing.

Setting the attraction of my good parts aſide, I have no other charms. Shakeſp.

ATTRA'CTIVE, åt-tråk'-ti̊v. adj. [from attract.]

1. Having the power to draw any thing.

What, if the ſun
Be centre to the world; and other ſtars,
By his attractive virtue and their own
Incited, dance about him various rounds? Milton.

Some, the round earth's coheſion to ſecure,
For that hard taſk employ magnetick power:
Remark, ſay they, the globe; with wonder own
Its nature, like the fam'd attractive ſtone. Blackmore.

Bodies act by the attractions of gravity, magnetiſm, and electricity; and theſe inſtances make it not improbable, but there may be more attractive powers than theſe. Newton.

2. Inviting; alluring; enticing.

Happy is Hermia, whereſoe'er ſhe lies;
For ſhe hath bleſſed and attractive eyes. Shakeſp

I pleas'd, and with attractive graces won,
The moſt averſe, thee chiefly. Milton.

ATTRA'CTIVE, åt-tråk'-ti̊v. n. ſ. [from attract.] That, which draws or incites; allurement: except that, attractive is of a good or indifferent ſenſe, and allurement generally bad.

The condition of a ſervant ſtaves him off to a diſtance; but the goſpel ſpeaks nothing, but attractives and invitation. South.

ATTRA'CTIVELY, åt-tråk'-ti̊v-lẙ. adv. [from attractive.] With the power of attracting or drawing.

ATTRA'CTIVENESS, åt-tråk'-ti̊v-ne̊s. n. ſ. [from attractive.] The quality of being attractive.

ATTRA'CTOR, åt-tråk'-tůr. n. ſ. [from attract.] The agent, that attracts; a drawer.

If the ſtraws be in oil, amber draweth them not; oil makes the ſtraws to adhere ſo, that they cannot riſe unto the attractor. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

ATTRA'HENT, åt'-trå-he̊nt. n. ſ. [attrahens, Lat.] That, which draws.

Our eyes will inform us, of the motion of the ſteel to its attrahent. Glanville's Scepſis.

ATTRECTA'TION, åt-tre̊k-tå'-ſhůn. n. ſ. [attrectatio, Lat.] Frequent handling. Dict.

ATTRI'BUTABLE, åt-tri̊b'-ů-tåbl. adj. [attribuo, Lat.] That, which may be aſcribed or attributed; aſcribable; imputable.

Much of the origination of the Americans ſeems to be attributable to the migrations of the Seres. Hale.

To ATTRI'BUTE, åt-tri̊b'-ůte. v. a. [attribuo, Lat.]

1. To aſcribe; to give; to yield as due.

To their very bare judgment, ſomewhat a reaſonable man would attribute; notwithſtanding the common imbecilities, which are incident unto our nature. Hooker.

We attribute nothing to God, that hath any repugnancy or contradiction in it. Power and wiſdom have no repugnancy in them. Tillotſon.

2. To impute, as to a cauſe.

I have obſerved a campania determine, contrary to appearances, by the caution and conduct of a general, which were attributed to his infirmities. Temple.

The imperfection of teleſcopes is attributed to ſpherical glaſſes; and mathematicians have propounded, to figure them by the conical ſections. Newton's Opticks.

A'TTRIBUTE, åt'-tri̊b-ůte. n. ſ. [from To attribute.]

1. The thing, attributed to another; as perfection, to the Supreme Being.

Power, light, virtue, wiſdom, and goodneſs, being all but attributes of one ſimple eſſence, and of one God; we in all admire, and in part diſcern. Raleigh.

Your vain poets after did miſtake,
Who ev'ry attribute a god did make. Dryden.

All the perfections of God are called his attributes; for he cannot be without them. Watts's Logick.

2. Quality; characteriſtic diſpoſition.

They muſt have theſe three attributes; they muſt be men of courage, fearing God, and hating covetouſneſs. Bacon.

3. A thing, belonging to another; an appendant; adherent.

His ſceptre ſhews the force of temporal pow'r,
The attribute to awe and majeſty:
But mercy, is above this ſcepter'd ſway;
It is an attribute to God himſelf. Shakeſp.

The ſculptor, to diſtinguiſh him, gave him what the medalliſts call his proper attributes, a ſpear and a ſhield. Addiſon.

4. Reputation; honour.

It takes
From our achievements, tho' perform'd at height,
The pith and marrow of our attribute. Shakeſp.

ATTRIBU'TION, åt-tri̊-bů'-ſhůn. n. ſ. [from To attribute.] Commendation; qualities aſcribed.

If ſpeaking truth,
In this fine age, were not thought flattery;
Such attribution ſhould the Douglaſs have,
As not a ſoldier of this ſeaſon's ſtamp
Should go ſo general current through the world. Shakeſp.

We ſuffer him, to perſuade us we are as gods; and never ſuſpect, theſe glorious attributions may be no more than flattery. Decay of Piety.

ATTRI'TE, åt-tri̊'te. adj. [attritus, Lat.] Ground; worn by rubbing.

Or, by colliſion of two bodies, grind
The air attrite to fire. Milton.

ATTRI'TENESS, åt-tri̊'te-ne̊s. n. ſ. [from attrite.] The being much worn.

ATTRI'TION, åt-tri̊ſh'-ůn. n. ſ. [attritio, Lat.]

1. The act of wearing things, by rubbing one againſt another.

This vapour, aſcending inceſſantly out of the abyſs, and pervading the ſtrata of gravel and the reſt, decays the bones and vegetables lodged in thoſe ſtrata; this fluid, by its continual attrition, fretting the ſaid bodies. Woodward.

The change of the aliment is effected, by attrition of the inward ſtomach, and diſſolvent liquor, aſſiſted with heat. Arbuthnot.

2. The ſtate of being worn.

3. [With divines.] Grief for ſin, ariſing only from the fear of puniſhment; the loweſt degree of repentance.

To ATTU'NE, åt-tů'ne. v. a. [from tune.]

1. To make any thing muſical.

Airs, vernal airs,
Breathing the ſmell of field and grove, attune
The trembling leaves. Milton.

2. To tune one thing to another; as, he attunes his voice to his harp.

Attu'rney, åt-tůr'-nỳ. n. ſ. See Attorney.

Atwe'en, å-twe̊'n. adv. or prep. [See Between.] Betwixt; between; in the midſt of two things: obſolete.

Her looſe long yellow locks (like golden wire,
Sprinkled with pearl, and perling flowers atween)
Do, like a golden mantle, her attire. Spenſer.

Atwi'xt, å-twlkst'. prep. [See Betwixt.] In the middle of two things: obſolete.

But, with outrageous ſtrokes, did him reſtrain;
And, with his body, barr'd the way atwixt them twain. Fairy Queen.

To AVA'IL, å-vå'l. v. a. [from valoir, Fr.; to avail; being nearly the ſame thing, with faire valoir.]

1. To profit; to turn to profit: with of, before the thing uſed.

Then ſhall they ſeek t' avail themſelves of names,
Places, and titles; and with theſe to join
Secular pow'r. Milton.

Both of them avail themſelves of thoſe licences, which Apollo has equally beſtowed on them. Dryd.

2. To promote; to proſper; to aſſiſt.

Mean time he voyag'd, to explore the will
Of Jove, on high Dodona's holy hill;
What means might beſt his ſafe return avail. Pope.

To Ava'il, å-vå'l. v. n. To be of uſe; to be of advantage.

Nor can my ſtrength avail; unleſs, by thee
Endu'd with force, I gain the victory. Dryden.

When real merit is wanting; it avails nothing, to have been encouraged by the great.
Pope's Preface to his Works.

Ava'il, å-vå'l. n. ſ. [from To avail.] Profit; advantage; benefit.

For all that elſe did come, were ſure to fail;
Yet would he further none, but for avail. Spenſer.

I charge thee,
As heav'n ſhall work in me for thine avail,
To tell me truly. Shakeſp.

Truth, light upon this way, is of no more avail to us than errour. Locke.

Ava'ilable, å-vå'-låbl. adj. [from avail.]

1. Profitable; advantageous.

Mighty is the efficacy of ſuch interceſſions, to avert judgments; how much more available then may they be, to ſecure the continuance of bleſſings? Atterbury.

All things ſubject to action, the will does ſo far incline unto; as reaſon judges them, more available to our bliſs. Hooker.

2. Powerful; in force; valid.

Laws human are available by conſent. Hooker.

Drake put one of his men to death, having no authority nor commiſſion available. Raleigh.

The ſeat of audience, old Latinus ſate. Dryden.

AU'DIENCE Cou'rt, å'-dyèns. A court, belonging to the archbiſhop of Canterbury, of equal authority with the arches court; though inferiour, both in dignity and antiquity. The original of this court was, becauſe the archbiſhop of Canterbury heard ſeveral cauſes extrajudicially at home in his own palace; which he uſually committed to be diſcuſſed by men learned in the civil and canon laws, whom he called his auditors: and ſo in time, it became the power of the man, who is called cauſarum negotiorumque audientiæ Cantuarienſis auditor, ſeu officialis. Cowell.

A'UDIT, å'-dît. n. ſ. [from audit he hears, Lat.] A final account.

If they, which are accuſtomed to weigh all things, ſhall here ſit down to receive our audit; the ſum, which truth amounteth to, will appear to be but this. Hooker.

He took my father groſsly, full of bread;
With all his crimes broadblown, and fluſh as May:
And, how his audit ſtands, who knows ſave heav'n? Hamlet.

I can make my audit up; that all
From me do back receive the flow'r of all,
And leave me but the bran. Shakeſp.

To A'UDIT, å'-dît. v. a. [from audit.] To take an account finally.

Biſhops ordinaries, auditing all accounts, take twelve pence. Ayliffe's Parergon.

I'll never
Be ſuch a goſling to obey inſtinct; but ſtand
As if a man was author of himſelf,
And knew no other kin. Shakeſp. Coriolanus.

Thou art my father, thou my author, thou
My being gav'ſt me; whom ſhould I obey
But thee? Milton's Paradiſe Loſt.

But Faunus came from Picus, Picus drew
His birth from Saturn, if records be true.
Thus king Latinus, in the third degree,
Had Saturn author of his family. Dryden.

If the worſhip of falſe gods had not blinded the heathen, inſtead of teaching to worſhip the ſun, and dead heroes, they would have taught us to worſhip our true Author and benefactor, as their anceſtors did under the government of Noah and his ſons, before they corrupted themſelves. Newton.

2. The efficient; he that effects or produces any thing.

That which is the ſtrength of their amity, ſhall prove the immediate author of their variance. Shakeſpeare.

Now while the tortur'd ſavage turns around,
And flings about his foam, impatient of the wound;
The wound's great author cloſe at hand provokes
His rage. Dryden's Fables.

From his loins
New authors of diſſention ſpring; from him
Two branches, that in hoſting long contend
For ſov'reign ſway. Philips.

The blue of the firſt order, though very faint and little, may be the colour of ſome ſubſtance; and the azure colour of the ſkies ſeems to be this order. Newton.

Thus replies
Minerva, graceful with her azure eyes. Pope.

The ſea,
Far through his azure turbulent domain
Your empire owns. Thomſon.

B.

B, THE ſecond letter of the Engliſh alphabet, is pronounced as in moſt other European languages, by preſſing the whole length of the lips together, and forcing them open with a ſtrong breath. It has a near affinity, with the other labial letters; and is confounded by the Germans with P, and by the Gaſcons with V; from which an epigrammatiſt remarks, that bibere and vivere are in Gaſcony the ſame. The Spaniards, in moſt words, uſe B or V indifferently.

BAA, bå'. n. ſ. [See the verb.] The cry of a ſheep.

—Therefore thou art a ſheep.———
Such another proof would make me cry baa. Shakeſpeare.

To BAA, bå'. v. n. [balo, Lat.] To cry, like a ſheep.

Or like a lamb, whoſe dam away is ſet,
He treble baas for help, but none can get. Sidney.

To BA'BBLE, båb'l. v. n. [babbelen, Germ. babiller, Fr.]

1. To prattle, like a child; to prate imperfectly.

My babbling praiſes I repeat no more;
But hear, rejoice, ſtand ſilent, and adore. Prior.

2. To talk idly, or irrationally.

John had conned over a catalogue of hard words; theſe, he uſed to babble indifferently, in all companies. Arbuthnot.

Let the ſilent ſanctuary ſhow,
What from the babbling ſchools we may not know. Prior.

3. To talk thoughtleſsly; to tell ſecrets.

There is more danger, in a reſerved and ſilent friend, than in a noiſy babbling enemy. L'Eſtrange.

4. To talk much.

The babbling echo mocks the hounds,
Replying ſhrilly to the well-tun'd horns;
As, if a double hunt were heard at once. Shakeſpeare.

And had I pow'r, to give that knowledge birth,
In all the ſpeeches of the babbling earth. Prior.

The babbling echo had deſcry'd his face;
She, who in other's words her ſilence breaks. Addiſon.

BA'BBLE, båb'l. n. ſ. [babil, Fr.] Idle talk; ſenſeleſs prattle.

This babble ſhall not henceforth trouble me:
Here is a coil with proteſtation. Shakeſp.

Come, no more!
This is meer moral babble. Milton.

With volleys of eternal babble,
And clamour more unanſwerable. Hudibras.

The babble, impertinence, and folly, I have taken notice of in diſputes. Glanville.

BA'BBLEMENT, båb'l-mênt. n. ſ. [from babble.] Senſeleſs prate; empty words.

Deluded all this while, with ragged notions and babblements; while they expected worthy and delightful knowledge. Milton.

BA'BBLER, båb'-blůr. n. ſ. [from babble.]

1. An idle talker; an irrational prattler.

We hold our time too precious, to be ſpent
With ſuch a babbler. Shakeſpeare.

The apoſtle had no ſooner propoſed it, to the maſters at Athens; but he himſelf was ridiculed, as a babbler. Rogers.

2. A teller of ſecrets.

Utterers of ſecrets he from thence debarr'd;
Babblers of folly, and blazers of crime. Fairy Queen.

Great babblers, or talkers, are not fit for truſt. L'Eſtrange.

BABE, bå'be. n. ſ. [baban, Welſh: babbaerd, Dutch; bambino, Italian.] An infant; a child of either ſex.

Thoſe, that do teach your babes,
Do it with gentle means, and eaſy taſks:
He might have chid me ſo; for, in good faith,
I am a child to chiding. Shakeſpeare.

Nor ſhall Sebaſtian's formidable name
Be longer us'd, to lull the crying babe. Dryden.

The babe had all, that infant care beguiles;
And early knew his mother, in her ſmiles. Dryden.

BA'BERY, bå'-bê-rŷ. n. ſ. [from babe.] Finery, to pleaſe a babe or child.

So have I ſeen trim books in velvet dight,
With golden leaves and painted babery
Of ſeely boys, pleaſe unacquainted ſight. Sidney.

BA'BISH, bå'-bîsh. adj. [from babe.] Childiſh.

If he be baſhful, and will ſoon bluſh; they call him a babiſh and ill brought up thing. Aſcham.

BABO'ON, bå-bô'n. n. ſ. [babouin, Fr. It is ſuppoſed by Skinner, to be the augmentation of babe, and to import a great babe.] A monkey of the largeſt kind.

You had looked through the grate, like a geminy of baboons. Shakeſpeare.

He caſt every human feature out of his countenance, and became a baboon. Addiſon.

BA'BY, bå'-bŷ. n. ſ. [See BABE.]

1. A child; an infant.

The baby beats the nurſe, and quite athwart
Goes all decorum. Shakeſpeare.

The child muſt have ſugar-plums, rather than make the poor baby cry. Locke.

He muſt marry, and propagate: the father cannot ſtay, for the portion; nor the mother, for babes to play with. Locke.

2. A ſmall image, in imitation of a child, which girls play with.

The archduke ſaw, that Perkin would prove a runnagate; and it was the part of children, to fall out about babies. Bacon.

Since no image can repreſent the great Creator; never think to honour him, by your fooliſh puppets, and babies of dirt and clay. Stillingfleet.

BA'CCATED, båk'-kå-têd. adj. [baccatus, Lat.] Beſet with pearls; having many berries. Dict.

BACCHANA'LIAN, båk-kå-nå'-lŷ-ån. n. ſ. [from bacchanalia, Lat.] A riotous perſon; a drunkard.

BA'CCHANALS, båk'-kå-nålz. n. ſ. [bacchanalia, Lat.] The drunken feaſts and revels of Bacchus, the god of wine.

Ha, my brave emperor! ſhall we dance now the Egyptian bacchanals, and celebrate our drink? Shakeſpeare.

What wild fury was there, in the heathen bacchanals, which we have not ſeen equalled? Decay of Piety.

Both extremes were baniſh'd, from their walls;
Carthuſian faſts, and fulſome bacchanals. Pope.

BA'CCHUS BO'LE, båk"-kůs-bô'le. n. ſ. A flower, not tall, but very full and broad-leaved. Mortimer.

BACCI'FEROUS, båk-sîf'-ê-růs. adj. [from bacca a berry, and fero to bear, Lat.] Berry-bearing.

Bacciferous trees are of four kinds.

1. Such, as bear a caliculate or naked berry; the flower and calix, both falling off together, and leaving the berry bare; as the ſaſſafras tree.

2. Such, as have a naked monoſpermous fruit; that is, containing in it only one ſeed; as the arbutes.

3. Such, as have but polyſpermous fruit; that is, containing two or more kernels or ſeeds within it; as the jeſminum, liguſtrum.

4. Such, as have their fruit compoſed of many acini, or round ſoft balls, ſet cloſe together like a bunch of grapes; as the uva marina. Ray.

BACCI'VOROUS, båk-sîv'-vô-růs. adj. [from bacca a berry, and voro to devour, Lat.] Devouring berries. [Dict.

BA'CHELOR, båtsh'-ê-lůr. n. ſ. [This is a word of very uncertain etymology; it not being well known, what was its original ſenſe. Junius derives it from βάκηλος fooliſh; Menage, from bas chevalier a knight of the loweſt rank; Spelman, from baculus a ſtaff; Cujas, from buccella an allowance of proviſion. The moſt probable derivation ſeems to be, from bacca laurûs, the berry of a laurel or bay; bachelors being young, are of good hopes, like laurels in the berry. Dr. Lawrence obſerved, that Menage's etymology is much confirmed by the practice in our univerſities of calling a Bachelor, Sir. In Latin, baccalaureus.]

1. A man unmarried.

Such ſeparation
Becomes a virtuous bachelor and a maid. Shakeſp.

The haunting of diſſolute places, or reſort to courteſans, are no more puniſhed in married men, than in bachelors. Bacon.

A true painter naturally delights in the liberty, which belongs to the bachelor's eſtate. Dryden.

Let ſinful bachelors their woes deplore;
Full well they merit all they feel, and more. Pope.

2. A man, who takes his firſt degrees at the univerſity, in any profeſſion.

Being a boy, new bachelor of arts, I chanced to ſpeak againſt the pope. Aſcham.

I appear before your honour, in behalf of Martinus Scriblerus, bachelor of phyſic. Mart. Scriblerus.

Ba'gpipe, bảg'-pìpe. n. ſ. [from bag and pipe; the wind being received in a bag.] A muſical inſtrument, conſiſting of a leathern bag, which blows up like a foot-ball, by means of a port-vent or little tube fixed to it, and ſtopped by a valve and three pipes or flutes; the firſt called the great pipe or drone, and the ſecond the little one, which paſs the wind out only at the bottom; the third has a reed, and is played on by compreſſing the bag under the arm, when full; and opening or ſtopping the holes, which are eight, with the fingers. The bagpipe takes in the compaſs of three octaves. Chambers.

No banners but ſhirts, with ſome bad bagpipes inſtead of drum and fiſe. Sidney.

He heard a bagpipe, and ſaw a general animated with the ſound. Addiſon's Freeholder.

Bagpi'per, bảg'-pì-pủr. n. ſ. [from bagpipe.] One that plays on a bagpipe.

Some that will evermore peep thro' their eyes,
And laugh, like parrots, at a bagpiper. Shakeſp.

BAGUE'TTE, bả-gẻt'. n. ſ. [Fr. a term of architecture.] A little round moulding, leſs than an aſtragal; ſometimes carved and enriched.

To Baigne, bả'n. v. a. [bagner, Fr.] To drench; to ſoak: a word out of uſe.

The women forſlow not to baigne them, unleſs they plead their heels, with a worſe perfume than Jugurth found in the dungeon. Carew's Survey of Cornwall.

Bail, bả'l. n. ſ. [Of this word the etymologiſts give many derivations; it ſeems to come from the French bailler, to put into the hand; to deliver up, as a man delivers himſelf up in ſurety.]

Bail is the freeing or ſetting at liberty one arreſted or impriſoned upon action either civil or criminal, under ſecurity taken for his appearance. There is both common and ſpecial bail; common bail is in actions of ſmall prejudice, or ſlight proof, called common, becauſe any ſureties in that caſe are taken: whereas, upon cauſes of greater weight, or apparent ſpeciality, ſpecial bail or ſurety, muſt be taken. There is a difference between bail and mainpriſe; for he that is mainpriſed is at large, until the day of his appearance: but where a man is bailed, he is always accounted by the law to be in their ward and cuſtody for the time: and they may, if they will, keep him in ward or in priſon at that time, or otherwiſe at their will. Cowell.

Worry'd with debts, and paſt all hopes of bail,
Th' unpity'd wretch lies rotting in a jail. Roſcommon.

And bribe with preſents, or, when preſents fail,
They ſend their proſtituted wives for bail. Dryden.

To Bail, bả'l. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To give bail for another.

Let me be their bail——
They ſhall be ready at your highneſs' will,
To anſwer their ſuſpicion——
Thou ſhalt not bail them. Shakeſp. Titus Andron.

2. To admit to bail.

When they had bailed the twelve biſhops who were in the Tower, the houſe of Commons, in great indignation, cauſed them immediately to be recommitted to the Tower. Clarendon.

Ba'ilable, bả'-lảbl. adj. [from bail.] That may be ſet at liberty by bail or ſureties.

Ba'iliff, bả'-lìf. n. ſ. [a word of doubtful etymology in itſelf, but borrowed by us from baillie, Fr.]

1. A ſubordinate officer.

Lauſanne is under the canton of Berne, governed by a bailiff ſent every three years from the ſenate of Berne. Addiſon.

2. An officer whoſe buſineſs it is to execute arreſts.

It many times happeneth, that, by the underſheriffs and their bailiffs, the owner hath incurred the forfeiture, before he cometh to the knowledge of the proceſs that runneth againſt him. Bacon.

A bailiff, by miſtake, ſeized you for a debtor, and kept you the whole evening in a ſpunging-houſe. Swift.

Swift as a bard the bailiff leaves behind. Pope.

3. An under-ſteward of a manor.

Ba'iliwick, bả'-lỳ-wìk. n. ſ. [of baillie, Fr. and ƿic, Sax.] The place of the juriſdiction of a bailiff within his hundred, or the lord's franchiſe. It is that liberty which is exempted from the ſheriff of the county, over which the lord of the liberty appointeth a bailiff. Cowell.

A proper officer is to walk up and down his bailiwicks. Spenſer.

There iſſued writs to the ſheriffs, to return the names of the ſeveral land-owners in their ſeveral bailiwicks. Hal.

To Bait, bả't. v. a. [batan, Sax. baitzen, Germ.]

1. To put meat upon a hook, in ſome place, to tempt fiſh, or other animals.

Oh cunning enemy, that, to catch a ſaint,
With ſaints doſt bait thy hook! moſt dangerous
Is that temptation that doth goad us on
To ſin in loving virtue. Shak. Meaſ. for Meaſ.

Let's be revenged on him; let's appoint him a meeting, give him a ſhow of comfort in his ſuit, and lead him on with a ſure baited delay, till he hath pawned his horſes to mine hoſt of the garter. Shakeſpeare's Merry Wives of Windſor.

Many ſorts of fiſhes feed upon inſects, as is well known to anglers, who bait their hooks with them. Ray.

How are the ſex improv'd in am'rous arts!
What new-found ſnares they bait for human hearts! Gay.

2. To give meat to one's ſelf, or horſes, on the road.

What ſo ſtrong,
But, wanting reſt, will alſo want of might?
The ſun, that meaſures heaven all day long,
At night doth bait his ſteeds the ocean waves among. Spenſer.

To Bait, bả't. v. a. [from battre, Fr. to beat.]

1. To attack with violence.

Who ſeeming ſorely chaffed at his band,
As chained bear, whom cruel dogs do bait,
With idle force did fain them to withſtand. Fairy Queen.

I will not yield
To kiſs the ground before young Malcolm's feet,
And to be baited with the rabble's curſe. Shakeſpeare's Macbeth.

2. To haraſs by the help of others; as, we bait a boar with maſtiffs, but a bull with bull-dogs.

To Bait, bả't. v. n. To ſtop at any place for refreſhment: perhaps this word is more properly bate, to abate ſpeed.

But our deſires tyrannical extortion
Doth force us there to ſet our chief delightfulneſs,
Where but a baiting place is all our portion. Sidney.

As one who on his journey baits at noon,
Tho' bent on ſpeed: ſo here th' archangel paus'd. Milton.

In all our journey from London to his houſe, we did not ſo much as bait at a whig inn. Addiſon, Spectator.

To Bait, bả't. v. n. [as an hawk.] To clap the wings; to make an offer of flying; to flutter.

All plum'd like eſtridges, that with the wind
Baited like eagles having lately bath'd;
Glittering in golden coats like images. Shakeſp.

Hood my unman'd blood baiting in my cheeks
With thy black mantle; till ſtrange love, grown bold,
Thinks true love acted ſimple modeſty. Shakeſp.

Another way I have to man my haggard,
To make her come, and know her keeper's call;
That is, to watch her as we watch thoſe kites
That bait and beat, and will not be obedient. Shakeſpeare.

Bait, bå't. n. ſ. [from the verb.]

1. Meat ſet to allure fiſh, or other animals, to a ſnare.

The pleaſant'ſt angling is to ſee the fiſh
Cut with her golden oars the ſilver ſtream,
And greedily devour the treacherous bait. Shakeſpeare.

2. A temptation; an enticement; allurement.

And that ſame glorious beauty's idle boaſt
Is but a bait ſuch wretches to beguile. Spenſer.

Taketh therewith the ſouls of men, as with the baits. Hooker.

Sweet words, I grant, baits and allurements
ſweet,
But greateſt hopes with greateſt croſſes meet. Fairfax.

Fruit, like that
Which grew in Paradiſe, the bait of Eve
Us'd by the tempter. Milton.

Secure from fooliſh pride's affected ſtate,
And ſpecious flattery's more pernicious bait. Roſcommon.

Her head was bare,
But for her native ornament of hair,
Which in a ſimple knot was tied above:
Sweet negligence! unheeded bait of love! Dryden.

Grant that others could with equal glory
Look down on pleaſures, and the baits of ſenſe. Addiſon.

3. A refreſhment on a journey.

Baize, bå'z. n. ſ. A kind of coarſe open cloth ſtuff, having a long nap; ſometimes frized on one ſide, and ſometimes not frized. This ſtuff is without wale, being wrought on a loom with two treddles, like flannel. Chambers.

To Bake, bå'ke. v. a. participle paſſive, baked or baken. [bæcan, Sax. becken, Germ. ſuppoſed by Wachter to come from bec, which, in the Phrygian language, ſignified bread.]

1. To heat any thing in a cloſe place; generally in an oven.

He will take thereof, and warm himſelf; yea, he kindleth it, and baketh bread. Iſaiah.

The difference of prices of bread proceeded from their delicacy in bread, and perhaps ſomething in their manner of baking. Arbuthnot.

2. To harden in the fire.

The work of the fire is a kind of baking; and whatſoever the fire baketh, time doth, in ſome degree, diſſolve. Bacon.

3. To harden with heat.

With vehement ſuns
When duſty ſummer bakes the crumbling clods,
How pleaſant is 't, beneath the twiſted arch,
To ply the ſweet carouſe! Philips.

1. One of the ſix ſimple powers in mechanicks, uſed principally for determining the difference of weight in heavy bodies. It is of ſeveral forms. Chambers.

2. A pair of ſcales.

A balance of power, either without or within a ſtate, is beſt conceived by conſidering what the nature of a balance is. It ſuppoſes three things; firſt, the part which is held, together with the hand that holds it; and then the two ſcales, with whatever is weighed therein. Swift.

For when on ground the burden balance lies,
The empty part is lifted up the higher. Sir J. Davies.

3. A metaphorical balance, or the mind employed in comparing one thing with another.

I have in equal balance juſtly weigh'd
What wrong our arms may do, what wrongs we ſuffer:
Griefs heavier than our offences. Shakeſ. Hen. IV.

4. The act of comparing two things, as by the balance.

Comfort ariſes not from others being miſerable, but from this inference upon the balance, that we ſuffer only the lot of nature. L'Eſtrange.

Upon a fair balance of the advantages on either ſide, it will appear, that the rules of the goſpel are more powerful means of conviction than ſuch meſſage. Atterbury.

5. The overplus of weight; that quantity by which, of two things weighed together, one exceeds the other.

Care being taken, that the exportation exceed in value the importation; and then the balance of trade muſt of neceſſity be returned in coin or bullion. Bacon's Advice to Villiers.

6. That which is wanting to make two parts of an account even; as, he ſtated the account with his correſpondent, and paid the balance.

7. Equipoiſe; as, balance of power. See the ſecond ſenſe.

Love, hope, and joy, fair pleaſure's ſmiling
train;
Hate, fear, and grief, the family of pain;
Theſe mix'd with art, and to due bounds confin'd,
Make and maintain the balance of the mind. Pope.

8. The beating part of a watch.

It is but ſuppoſing that all watches, whilſt the balance beats, think; and it is ſufficiently proved, that my watch thought all laſt night. Locke.

9. [In aſtronomy.] One of the twelve ſigns of the zodiack, commonly called Libra.

Or wilt thou warm our ſummers with thy rays,
And ſeated near the balance poiſe the days? Dryd.

Boiling choler chokes,
By ſight of theſe, our baleful enemies. Shakeſp.

Unſeen, unfelt, the fiery ſerpent ſkims
Betwixt her linen and her naked limbs,
His baleful breath inſpiring as he glides. Dryden.

Happy Ièrne, whoſe moſt wholeſome air
Poiſons envenom'd ſpiders, and forbids
The baleful toad and vipers from her ſhore. Philips.

BA'LEFULLY, bå'le-fûl-lŷ. adv. [from baleful.] Sorrowfully; miſchievouſly.

BALK, bå'k. n. ſ. [balk, Dut. and Germ.] A great beam, ſuch as is uſed in building; a rafter over an out-houſe or barn.

BALK, bå'k. n. ſ. [derived by Skinner from valicare, Ital. to paſs over.] A ridge of land left unploughed between the furrows, or at the end of the field.

To BALK, bå'k. v. a. [See the noun.]

1. To diſappoint; to fruſtrate; to elude.

Another thing in the grammar ſchools I ſee no uſe of, unleſs it be to balk young lads in learning languages. Locke.

Every one has a deſire to keep up the vigour of his faculties, and not to balk his underſtanding by what is too hard for it. Locke.

But one may balk his good intent,
And take things otherwiſe than meant. Prior.

The prices muſt have been high; for a people ſo rich would not balk their fancy. Arbuthnot.

Balk'd of his prey, the yelling monſter flies,
And fills the city with his hideous cries. Pope.

Is there a variance? enter but his door,
Balk'd are the courts, and conteſt is no more. Pope.

2. To miſs any thing; to leave untouched.

By griſly Pluto he doth ſwear,
He rent his clothes, and tore his hair;
And as he runneth here and there,
An acorn cup he greeteth;
Which ſoon he taketh by the ſtalk,
About his head he lets it walk,
Nor doth he any creature balk,
But lays on all he meeteth. Drayton's Nimphid.

3. To omit, or refuſe, any thing.

This was looked for at your hand, and this was balkt. Shakeſpeare.

4. To heap, as on a ridge. This, or ſomething like this, ſeems to be intended here.

Ten thouſand bold Scots, three and twenty knights,
Balk'd in their own blood, did Sir Walter ſee
On Holmedon's plains. Shakeſp.

BA'LKERS, bå'-kûrz. n. ſ. [In fiſhery.] Men who ſtand on a cliff, or high place on the ſhore, and give a ſign to the men in the fiſhing-boats, which way the paſſage or ſhole of herrings is. Cowell.

The pilchards are purſued by a bigger fiſh, called a pluſher, who leapeth above water, and bewrayeth them to the balker. Carew's Sur. of Corn.

BALL, bå'l. n. ſ. [bol, Dan. bol, Dutch.]

Bal, diminutively Belin, the ſun, or Apollo, of the Celtæ, was called by the ancient Gauls Abellio. Whatever was round, and in particular the head, was called by the ancients either Bâl, or Bel, and likewiſe Bôl and Biil. Among the modern Perſians, the head is called Pole; and the Flemings ſtill call the head Boile. Πόλος is the head or poll; and πολεῖν is to turn. Βολος likewiſe ſignifies a round ball, whence bowl, and bell, and ball, which the Welch term bêl. By the Scotch alſo the head is named bhêl; whence the Engliſh bill is derived, ſignifying the beak of a bird. Figuratively, the Phrygians and Thurians by βαλλην underſtood a king. Hence alſo, in the Syriack dialects, βαάλ, βὴλ, and likewiſe βῶλ, ſignifies lord, and by this name alſo the ſun; and, in ſome dialects, Ἡλ and Ἰλ, whence Ἶλος and Ἥλιος, Γήλιος and Βήλιος, and alſo, in the Celtick diminutive way of expreſſion, Ἕλενος, Γέλενος, and Βέλενος, ſignified the ſun; and Ἑλένη, Γελένη, and Βελένη, the moon. Among the Teutonicks, bol and beil have the ſame meaning; whence the adjective bolig, or beilig, is derived, and ſignifies divine or holy; and the aſpiration being changed into ſ, the Romans form their Sol. Baxter.

1. Any thing made in a round form, or approaching to round.

Worms with many feet round themſelves into balls under logs of timber, but not in the timber.
Bacon.

Nor arms they wear, nor ſwords and bucklers
wield,
But whirl from leathern ſtrings huge balls of lead. Dryden.

Like a ball of ſnow tumbling down a hill, he gathered ſtrength as he paſſed. Howell.

Still unripen'd in the dewy mines,
Within the ball a trembling water ſhines,
That through the cryſtal darts. Addiſon.

Such of thoſe corpuſcles as happened to combine into one maſs, formed the metallick and mineral balls, or nodules, which we find.
Woodward.

2. A round thing to play with, either with the hand or foot, or a racket.

Balls to the ſtars, and thralls to fortune's reign,
Turn'd from themſelves, infected with their cage,
Where death is fear'd, and life is held with pain.
Sidney.

Thoſe I have ſeen play at ball, grow extremely earneſt who ſhould have the ball. Sidney.

3. A ſmall round thing, with ſome particular mark, by which votes are given, or lots caſt.

Let lots decide it.
For every number'd captive put a ball
Into an urn; three only black be there,
The reſt, all white, are ſafe. Dryden.

Minos, the ſtrict inquiſitor, appears;
Round in his urn the blended balls he rowls,
Abſolves the juſt, and dooms the guilty ſouls.
Dryden.

4. A globe; as, the ball of the earth.

Julius and Antony, thoſe lords of all,
Low at her feet preſent the conquer'd ball.
Granville.

Ye gods, what juſtice rules the ball?
Freedom and arts together fall. Pope.

5. A globe borne as an enſign of ſovereignty.

Hear the tragedy of a young man, that by right ought to hold the ball of a kingdom: but, by fortune, is made himſelf a ball, toſſed from miſery to miſery, from place to place. Bacon.

6. Any part of the body that approaches to roundneſs; as, the lower and ſwelling part of the thumb; the apple of the eye.

Be ſubject to no ſight but mine; inviſible
To every eye ball elſe. Shakeſpeare.

To make a ſtern countenance, let your brow bend ſo, that it may almoſt touch the ball of the eye. Peacham.

7. The ſkin ſpread over a hollow piece of wood, ſtuffed with hair or wool, which the printers dip in ink, to ſpread it on the letters.

BALL, bå'l. n. ſ. [bal, Fr. from balare, low Lat. from βαλλίζειν to dance.] An entertainment of dancing, at which the preparations are made at the expence of ſome particular perſon.

If golden ſconces hang not on the walls,
To light the coſtly ſuppers and the balls. Dryd.

He would make no extraordinary figure at a ball; but I can aſſure the ladies, for their conſolation, that he has writ better verſes on the ſex than any man. Swift.

BA'LLAD, bå'l-låd. n. ſ. [balade, Fr.] A ſong.

Ballad once ſignified a ſolemn and ſacred ſong, as well as trivial, when Solomon's Song was called the ballad of ballads; but now it is applied to nothing but trifling verſe. Watts.

An' I have not ballads made on you all, and ſung to filthy tunes, may a cup of ſack be my poiſon. Shakeſpeare.

Like the ſweet ballad, this amuſing lay
Too long detains the lover on his way. Gay.

To BA'LLAD, bål'-låd. v. n. [from the noun.] To make or ſing ballads.

Saucy lictors
Will catch at us like ſtrumpets, and ſcall'd rhimers
Ballad us out o' tune. Shakeſpeare.

BA'LLAD-SINGER, bål'-låd-sìng-ůr. n. ſ. [from ballad and ſing.] One whoſe employment is to ſing ballads in the ſtreets.

No ſooner 'gan he raiſe his tuneful ſong,
But lads and laſſes round about him throng.
Not ballad-ſinger, plac'd above the crowd,
Sings with a note ſo ſhrilling, ſweet, and loud. Gay.

BA'LLAST, bål'-låſt. n. ſ. [ballaſte, Dutch.]

1. Something put at the bottom of the ſhip, to keep it ſteady to the centre of gravity.

There muſt be middle counſellors to keep things ſteady; for, without that ballaſt, the ſhip will roul too much. Bacon.

As for the aſcent of a ſubmarine veſſel, this may be eaſily contrived, if there be ſome great weight at the bottom of the ſhip, being part of its ballaſt; which, by ſome cord within, may be looſened from it. Wilkins.

As, when empty barks on billows float,
With ſandy ballaſt ſailors trim the boat;
So bees bear gravel ſtones, whoſe poiſing weight
Steers through the whiſtling winds their ſteddy flight. Dryden.

2. That which is uſed to make any thing ſteady.

Why ſhould he ſink where nothing ſeem'd to preſs?
His lading little, and his ballaſt leſs. Swift.

To BA'LLAST, bål'-låſt. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To put weight at the bottom of a ſhip, in order to keep her ſteady.

If this be ſo ballaſted, as to be of equal weight with the like magnitude of water, it will be moveable. Wilkins.

2. To keep any thing ſteady.

While thus to ballaſt love I thought,
And ſo more ſteddily t' have gone,
I ſaw I had love's pinnace overfraught. Donne.

Now you have given me virtue for my guide,
And with true honour ballaſted my pride. Dryden.

BALLE'TTE, bål'-lėt. n. ſ. [ballette, Fr.] A dance in which ſome hiſtory is repreſented.

BA'LLIARDS, bål'-lyėrdz. n. ſ. [from ball, and yard, or ſtick to puſh it with.] A play at which a ball is driven by the end of a ſtick: now corruptly called billiards.

With dice, with cards, with balliards, far unfit,
With ſhuttlecocks miſſeeming manly wit. Spenſer.

BA'LLISTER, bål'-ůs-tůr. See BALUSTRE.

BALLO'N, } BALLO'ON, } bål'-lỏ'n. n. ſ. [ballon, Fr.]

Thy place is fill'd, thy ſceptre wrung from thee;
Thy balm waſh'd off wherewith thou waſt anointed. Shakeſp.

3. Any thing that ſooths or mitigates pain.

You were conducted to a gentle bath,
And balms apply'd to you. Shakeſpeare.

Your praiſe's argument, balm of your age;
Deareſt and beſt. Shakeſpeare.

A tender ſmile, our ſorrow's only balm. Young.

BALM, bå'm. } n. ſ. [meliſſa, Lat.] The BALM Mint, bå'm. } name of a plant.

The ſpecies are, 1. Garden balm. 2. Garden balm, with yellow variegated flowers. 3. Stinking Roman balm, with ſofter hairy leaves. Miller.

BALM of Gilead, bå'm of gìl'-yåd.

1. The juice drawn from the balſam tree, by making inciſions in its bark. Its colour is firſt white, ſoon after green; but, when it comes to be old, it is of the colour of honey. The ſmell of it is agreeable, and very penetrating; the taſte of it bitter, ſharp, and aſtringent. As little iſſues from the plant by inciſion, the balm ſold by the merchants is made of the wood and green branches of the tree, diſtilled by fire, which is generally adulterated with turpentine. Calmet.

It ſeems to me, that the zori of Gilead, which we render in our Bible by the word balm, was not the ſame with the balſam of Mecca, but only a better ſort of turpentine, then in uſe for the cure of wounds and other diſeaſes. Prideaux's Connections.

2. A plant remarkable for the ſtrong balſamick ſcent which its leaves emit, upon being bruiſed; whence ſome have ſuppoſed, erroneouſly, that the balm of Gilead was taken from this plant. Miller.

To BALM, bå'm. v. a. [from balm.]

1. To anoint with balm, or with any thing medicinal.

Balm his foul head with warm diſtilled waters,
And burn ſweet wood. Shakeſpeare.

There are a ſet of fellows they call banterers and bamboozlers, that play ſuch tricks. Arbuthnot.

BAN, bằn'. n. ſ. [ban, Teut. a publick proclamation, as of proſcription, interdiction, excommunication, publick ſale.]

1. Publick notice given of any thing, whereby any thing is publickly commanded or forbidden. This word we uſe eſpecially in the publiſhing matrimonial contracts in the church, before marriage, to the end that if any man can ſay againſt the intention of the parties, either in reſpect of kindred or otherwiſe, they may take their exception in time. And, in the canon law, banna ſunt proclamationes ſponſi & ſponſæ in eccleſiis fieri ſolitæ. Cowell.

I bar it in the intereſt of my wife;
'Tis ſhe is ſubcontracted to this lord,
And I her huſband contradict your bans.
Shakeſpeare.

To draw her neck into the bans. Hudibras.

2. A curſe; excommunication.

Thou mixture rank of midnight weeds collected,
With Hecate's ban thrice blaſted, thrice infected.
Shakeſp. Hamlet.

A great overſight it was of St. Peter that he did not accurſe Nero, whereby the pope might have got all; yet what need of ſuch a ban, ſince friar Vincent could tell Atabalipa, that kingdoms were the pope's? Raleigh.

3. Interdiction.

Bold deed to eye
The ſacred fruit, ſacred to abſtinence,
Much more to taſte it, under ban to touch. Milt.

4. Ban of the Empire; a publick cenſure by which the privileges of any German prince are ſuſpended.

He proceeded ſo far by treaty, that he was proffered to have the imperial ban taken off Altapinus, upon ſubmiſſion. Howell.

To BAN, bằn'. v. a. [bannen, Dutch, to curſe.] To curſe; to execrate.

Shall we think that it baneth the work which they leave behind them, or taketh away the uſe thereof? Hooker.

It is uncertain whether this word, in the foregoing ſenſe, is to be deduced from ban to curſe, or bane to poiſon.

In thy cloſet pent up, rue my ſhame,
And ban our enemies, both mine and thine.
Shakeſp.

Before theſe Moors went a Numidian prieſt, bellowing out charms, and caſting ſcrowls of paper on each ſide, wherein he curſed and banned the Chriſtians. Knolles.

BANA'NA Tree, bằ-nằ'-nằ-trè. A ſpecies of plantain.

BAND, bằnd'. n. ſ. [bende, Dutch; band, Saxon.]

Shakeſp.

The queen, in white array before her band,
Saluting took her rival by the hand. Dryden.

On a ſudden, methought, this ſelect band ſprang forward, with a reſolution to climb the aſcent, and follow the call of that heavenly muſick. Tatler.

Strait the three bands prepare in arms to join,
Each band the number of the ſacred Nine. Pope.

To BAND, bằnd'. v. a. [from band.]

1. To unite together into one body or troop.

The biſhop, and the duke of Glo'ſter's men,
Have fill'd their pockets full of pebble ſtones,
And banding themſelves in contrary parts,
Do pelt at one another's pates. Shakeſp.

Some of the boys banded themſelves as for the major, and others for the king, who, after ſix days ſkirmiſhing, at laſt made a compoſition, and departed. Carew.

They, to live exempt
From Heav'n's high juriſdiction, in new league
Banded againſt his throne. Milton.

2. To bind over with a band.

And by his mother ſtood an infant lover,
With wings unfledg'd, his eyes were banded over.
Dryden.

BANDS of a Saddle, bằnds, are two pieces of iron nailed upon the bows of the ſaddle, to hold the bows in the right ſituation.

BA'NDAGE, bằn'-dǐdzh. n. ſ. [bandage, Fr.]

1. Something bound over another.
